Sleep all day, play games all night, this is the life of a psyche major! Psyche major!

pisces Feb. 19 - Mar. 20
Smokey the Bear wants you to get your "smokey" on.

aries Mar. 21 - Apr. 19
You're too close, man! Nobody touches the Shaq-tus!

taurus Apr. 20 - May. 20
Why can't there be any more songs with real heartfelt titles, like "Lawsuits Over Lovers?"

gemini May. 21 - Jun. 21
"Full House's" Uncle Jesse has been a victim of an extortionist plot, No one is safe!

cancer Jun. 22 - Jul. 22
It's time to pack your bags! Because you're gonna live with your auntie and uncle in Bel Air.

leo Jul. 23 - Aug. 22
Appreciate Ricky Martin for the treasure that he is.

virgo Aug. 23 - Sept. 22
Stay tuned next time to this horoscope sequel, "Virgo 2: Ultimatum."

libra Sept. 23 - Oct. 22
Your time could be better spent. Naruto isn't going to leave you for another television.

scorpio Oct. 23 - Nov. 21
The Burger King is going to be making you his Queen very soon.

sagittarius Nov. 22 - Dec. 21
Can't find your keys? Maybe they're hanging out with Christina Aguilera's waist.

capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 19
Some people eat food to function on a regular basis and not that small torch you call "siggy." Wow.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSWEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 9, 2009 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Conditions set for shoot-out

Catamounts' shooting could challenge UM

By Neil Carroll
Collegian Staff

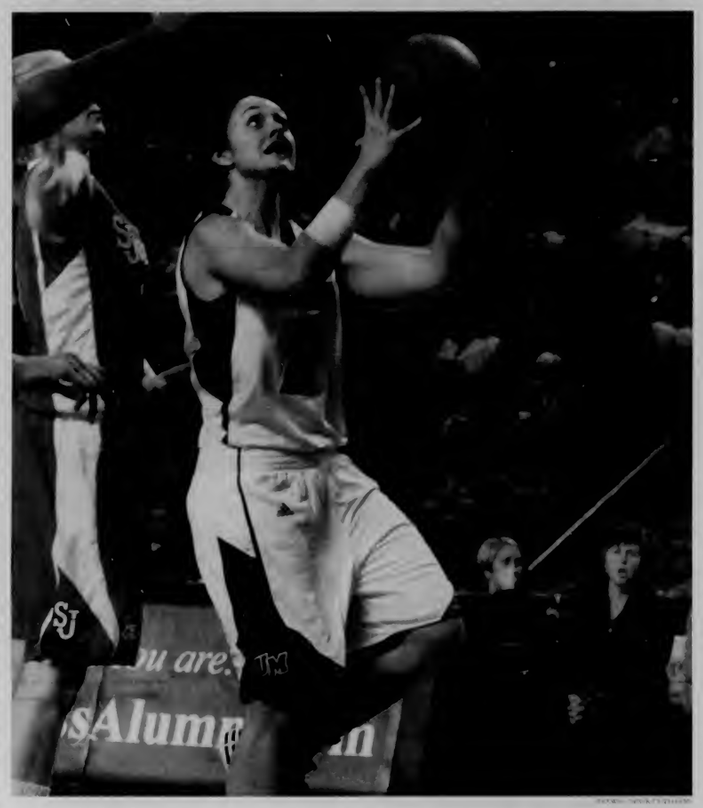
The Massachusetts women's basketball team will face one of its toughest opponents this season tonight as it will host Vermont, a team that comes into the game with a 7-1 record and poses a formidable threat with leading scorers Courtnay Pilypaitis and May Kotsopoulos.

Pilypaitis is a 6-foot-1 guard who can shoot the ball just as well as she can drive to the basket. The senior is averaging 19.1 points, 5.6 rebounds and 5.8 assists per game.

She is also shooting 43 percent from the 3-point range and 86 percent from the foul line in 36 attempts. However, Pilypaitis is not the Catamounts' only option on offense.

Kotsopoulos (18.8 ppg) has also proven she is a scorer this season by coming off of a 29-point performance in a win against Holy Cross. The Catamounts won, 78-56, on Monday night.

For UMass, this will be the first home game in more than two weeks, dating back to a 55-47 win over Villanova on Nov 12.



"It's challenging," UMass coach Marnie Dacko said of the early season schedule. "But we really didn't set up this pre-conference schedule for the weary. [The losses to Northeastern and New Hampshire] are going to come back to haunt us, and I have that in my pocket."

The Minutewomen come into the game with two straight wins in the Brown Bear Classic, where they beat both opponents by double-digit margins. In the last win, UMass cruised to an 82-66 victory in the championship game against Quinnipiac.

Against Quinnipiac, senior guard Danierra Hill enjoyed the first double-double of her career with 21 points and 14 rebounds. Megan Zullo also had a solid performance by converting 6-of-8 3-point attempts on the way to her first 20-point effort in a UMass uniform.

Hill and UMass sophomore Kristina Danella garnered All-Tournament hon-

See W HOOP on page 8

Guard Emilie Teuscher drives to the lane against St. John's on Nov. 18. The Minutewomen have won games with their 3-point shooting for much of the season, but now have to face another hot shooting team in Vermont tonight.

Minutewomen winning games beyond the arc

By Mike Mastone
Collegian Staff

After struggling with its long-range shooting in a one-point win over Villanova, the Massachusetts women's basketball team made great strides in its perimeter game and now uses the 3-pointer as one of its primary weapons.

Throughout the season, the Minutewomen made 3-pointers in several key situations to either gain or expand the lead. Over their last five games, the Minutewomen scored 35 percent of their points from beyond the arc, with long-range shooting playing a huge role in the team's victories in the Brown Bear Classic. UMass totaled 21 3-pointers in the tournament's two games.

"In the first game we got a lot of open looks ... where the lids squared up," UMass coach Marnie Dacko said. "And in the second game we got a lot of open shots early from Cene [Mosgrove] and [Zullo]. We have been running the break well and Kim [Benton] and Diarierra [Hill] have been able to find people open on the perimeter."

Redshirt junior Megan Zullo made eight 3-pointers over the weekend, and has been the team's deadliest shooter this season. In nine games she finished with 19 3-pointers on 42 percent shooting from long range. Her best efforts came against New Hampshire and Quinnipiac, where she shot 4-of-7 and 6-of-8 on 3-point attempts.

Over the weekend, Zullo provided timely 3's to ignite runs of 10-0 and 11-0 for the Minutewomen, which ultimately gave them the lead at the end of each period against Quinnipiac.

Dacko credits Zullo's success to a recent position change.

"We changed her position to more of a shooter's spot as opposed to a ball handler," Dacko said. "We have taken away her ball handling and opened her up offensively. She stepped up and has been a great spark off the bench. She does it every day in practice, so it's good to see her do it in a game."

In addition to Zullo, sophomore

See 3-POINT on page 8

UMass playing competitive break schedule

By Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

Massachusetts men's basketball coach Derek Kellogg wanted most of his team's games in neutral sites or on the road during winter break so the Minutemen would get to play at the Mullins Center plenty of times once students came back.

In the meantime, Kellogg hopes to use the break to show UMass to the rest of the state with three in-state games outside of Amherst. The Minutemen will start their Atlantic 10 schedule on Jan. 6.

Here is a preview of the teams UMass will face while students aren't in classes.

Dec. 19 vs. Memphis

The Tigers' first and only loss was against No. 1 Kansas in Missouri, and it was only by two points. Besides that, Memphis (5-1) is ripping every opponent it faces by an average of 29.2 points per game.

Its last win came at home against Arkansas State. Despite beating almost all of their opponents handily, the Tigers have built a reputation on slow starts.

Memphis trailed the Red Wolves by four points at half time, but it received a boost from Duke transfer Elliot Williams (20 points) and got the win. Williams (20.5 points per game) often has been the go-to player in helping the Tigers get out of holes early and will get plenty of possessions against the Minutemen in a large venue.

Dec. 23 vs. Boston College,

The Battle for the Commonwealth left off with as much drama as anyone could ask for last year at the Mullins Center.

Tony Gaffney tipped in Chris Lowe's missed free-throw shot to bring the game into overtime after UMass was down five points with 46 seconds to go. However, the Eagles pulled out an 85-81 victory in the final minute.

This year, BC (6-2) will play the Minutemen at the Conte Forum in the middle of an eight-game home stretch.

The last win for the Eagles came in a last-second effort to beat Miami by one point right after they narrowly defeated Michigan, 62-58.

Dec. 30 vs. Davidson

UMass rounds out the non-conference part of winter break against a team that might've been in the NCAA Tournament if former Davidson guard Stephen Curry still played.

But those days are long gone for the Wildcats (2-6), who are trying to build a program without the No. 7 NBA draft pick, and it hasn't been easy.

They started the season 0-4, and both of Davidson's wins were against mid-major schools. The Wildcats also average 64.9 points per game.

Like the Minutemen, they also face inexperience issues with a majority of the team being sophomores, but they have yet to make any sort of steps toward becoming a competitive team this year.

Jan. 6 vs. Fordham

It's not often that the 36-year-old Kellogg in his second season sounds old. But when a team starts the year 1-4, there's not much a team can do besides firing a head coach.

The Rams did just that when they promoted 29-year-old assistant Jared Grasso to take over for Dereck Whittenberg. It didn't help much as Fordham (1-5) lost its last game on Dec. 5 against Bowling Green in Grasso's debut.

The Rams have four seniors, but seven freshmen.

Their last win came in a 10-point victory over Sacred Heart on Nov. 18, but since then lost two of their last three games by at least 20 points.

Jan. 10 vs. La Salle

Kellogg will bring his team to the largest venue in western Massachusetts against a team picked to finish near the top with four starters and a top-50 recruit in Aaric Murray.

The Explorers are coming off a two-game winning streak with wins over Lafayette and Hartford at home.

Before La Salle faces the Minutemen, they will first get to play against Kellogg's predecessor, Travis Ford. The game against Oklahoma State will be on the road Dec. 21.

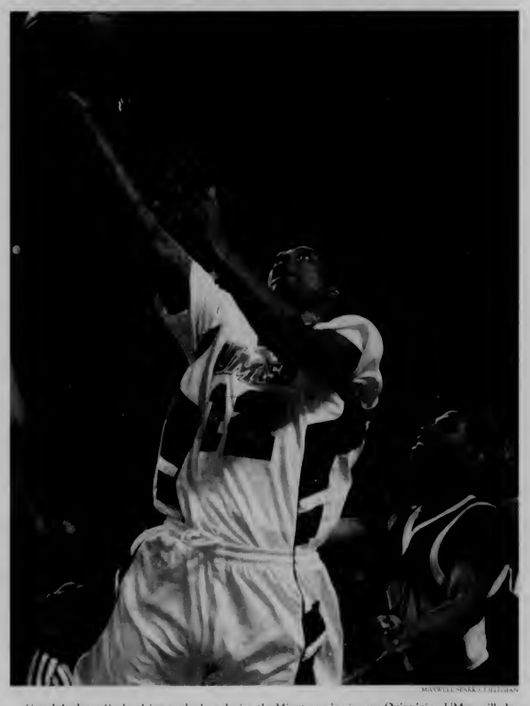
Overall, the Explorers (5-2) can't be too upset with their play during the non-conference schedule. Their only losses were to Villanova and South Carolina on the road.

Jan. 13 vs. Richmond

By the time this game rolls around, the Spiders will already have experience playing teams like Wake Forest, Florida and Missouri.

Richmond (7-1) is looking like it can fulfill the expectations of being one of the A-10's best teams after a 59-52 win over Missouri on Nov. 28. Currently, it is on a five-game winning streak dating back to Nov. 22, starting with a 75-49 thumping of Chattanooga.

The Spiders' record is now their second-best start since the 1954-55 season, and they're now starting to get recognition for their success. Richmond picked up 17 votes in the Associated Press Top 25 Poll with guard Kevin Anderson (17.3 ppg) leading the way.



Jan. 16 vs. Temple

The Minutemen play their final game of winter break at the Liacouras Center, where the Owls have yet to lose a game.

Temple (6-2) so far looks to be a team that hasn't been hurt too badly after losing Dionte Christmas with its only losses coming in a one-point loss to No. 20 Georgetown and St. John's.

The Owls will also play two more ranked opponents (No. 3 Villanova and the Jayhawks) before squaring off against the Minutemen. Even without Christmas, they still have plenty of returning players with experience coming from last year's loss to Arizona State in the NCAA Tournament.

Adam Miller can be reached at amiller@dailycollegian.com

Guard Anthony Gurley drives to the lane during the Minutemen's win over Quinnipiac. UMass will play two games in neutral sites over winter break, including a game at the TD Garden against Memphis on Dec.

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

HIGH: 34 LOW: 15 www.DailyCollegian.com THURSDAY, DECEMBER 10, 2009

SGA settles issues in semester finale

Judiciary to meet Friday to discuss online voting, training requirement to remain in place

By Bobby Hitt
Collegian Staff

The Student Government Association has had some heated debate over the past semester. Central to the controversy this semester was the second referendum question that appeared on the ballot in September concerning implementing online voting.

A November 17 Collegian article described in depth the handing over of the second referendum question regarding online voting to the Student Judiciary. An addendum accompanying the referendum has changed several things in the bylaws that some senators found questionable.

A concern of those opposed to the addendum is that it has changed how elections are funded.

"My concern is that private funding gives unequal advantage to students with higher incomes; they are able to outspend those who do not have those types of resources available to them," said Sen. Patrick Kenney.

Sen. Derek Khanna, who introduced the referendum and subsequent addendum, has another interpretation of these changes to campaign finance. In his interpretation, the addendum allowed for small quantities of money to be used for candidates to create websites.

"The judiciary hearing is a joke," said Khanna, "a bunch of individuals against the online voting system constructed it."

Additionally the addendum reworked the definition of a senator and eliminates any ALANA seats on the senate.

"The ALANA group represents a portion of campus that needs to be represented and should be represented if not legally, morally," said Sen. Andy Berg.

Supporters of the online voting initiative argue that conducting voting online will generate more participation.

"Currently only 12 percent of the student population votes in elections," said Sen. Khana. "There is no downside to online voting," he went on. "The petitioners are asking that the all-online voting system be invalidated and we will start all over again working for the online elections," Khanna said.

A forthcoming decision by the SGA Judiciary will either establish online voting for the SGA on the University of Massachusetts campus or force those who support the referendum to start their work again.

According to Chief Justice Robert Weed, the Student Judiciary will come to a final decision on the referendum Friday, December 12.

Aside from the online voting controversy there have been other important motions discussed in the SGA senate this semester.

A motion to train new senators was discussed in the December 2 meeting of the SGA and at the December 9 meeting. The motion was at first passed December 2, and subsequently vetoed by President Ngozi Mbauwike. The motion to override the veto did not pass on December 9.

President Mbauwike also vetoed a motion to protect free speech on campus, on the grounds that the picketing laws already in place did just that.

"The picketing laws simply aren't doing enough," said Senator Khanna, "this new legislation would have gotten the student's foot in the door and give students input on the student code of conduct."

"We want to create a system that allows any campus group to bring anyone they want to speak," continued Khanna on the free speech initiative.

There has been plenty of back and forth between members of the SGA, as was embodied by Senator Khanna's self described

Student Government Association President Ngozi Mbauwike speaks at an SGA meeting last month. The SGA concluded its legislative sessions last night with a meeting in the Campus Center.

"mini-state of the union address."

"I have waited for a Legislative Agenda from the SGA President, she is required to give one upon taking office and one in the fall, but she has failed to do so," said Khanna in his address.

Khanna continued to go on the offensive in his address stating that "I have never seen such an incompetent administration at UMass," and that "I propose by next meeting any member of the cabinet who fails to provide a report shall have their pay frozen."

Khanna then outlined the issues he feels are important to address by the senate next semester which included regulating the UMPD, enhancing Student Legal Services, rewriting a Student Code of Conduct, and re-writing the SGA bylaws.

Senator Kenney remarked that Khanna used "disgusting" language in his address, and felt that it was an uncalled for personal

See SGA on page 4

Miller a high note for the music department

By Michael Phillis
Collegian Staff

The picture of James Patrick Miller on the University of Massachusetts music department's website is misleading. In the picture, Miller's haircut makes him look younger and his demeanor is casual. The broad smile across his face is much like the permanent kind that might be seen on a politician – except this one doesn't have a rehearsed feel to it, instead, a touch of naïveté is present.

Miller is different than his portrait indicates. When engaging in a conversation, Miller is energetic and speaks with emotion albeit that emotion is well controlled and directed. When he is in front of his ensembles, his intensity peaks, his emotions roll with the music and he can be both intimidating and astute through instructing those he is coaching.

Miller started as wind ensemble director at UMass this past fall and he has taken many of the department's initiatives of dedication, student recruitment and individual improvement to host in an attempt to reinvigorate the wind ensembles. He has taken over the job after a number of years where the spot was occupied by an interim conductor that, according to students and alumni, was not particularly effective.

Previous to this year, Laura Rexroth instructed the wind ensembles. During her tenure, students had a problem concentrating and dedicating themselves to their performance.

Nicholas Gleason, a 2007 UMass music alumnus, was a part of the ensemble before Miller took over.

"People who talk to me say 'they actually work, they actually try hard,' which hadn't happened for a long time," said Gleason of the ensemble's new look.

Less than stellar dedication of the players, small crowds at ensemble concerts and a lack of enthusiasm were persistent issues before Miller's arrival. After a number of years, the department was finally able to conduct a tenure track search for the position, attracting a variety of candidates.

The department hired Miller, who received his masters' degree from Ithaca College, before earning a doctorate of musical arts in conducting from the University of Minnesota.

"The success of any program is measured based upon who is participating in it and those who are observing," said Miller. "Right now, being the four-month veteran that I am, the people that are participating in [the ensembles] are seeing great success."

From interviews with Miller, much of the way he teaches appears to be through long hours taken up by, intermittently, attending various concerts, studying music scores and getting to know the individuals in his ensembles.

"I call [the students'] section teachers on the phone and we talk about what might be best for each individual so that everybody is getting the exper ence they need."

There are two ensembles under Miller's jurisdiction. The wind ensemble – which is only open to music majors and is more selective – and symphony band, which is open to the general public. Music students are required to participate in ensembles as a

James Patrick Miller took over as director of the wind ensemble in the music department this fall. He hopes to boost the group's profile.

See MILLER on page 2

Town gets A for brains

Amherst ranked among smartest college towns

Give yourself a pat on the back if you live in Amherst, you live in one of the 10 smartest college towns in the country – at least according to online news source The Daily Beast.

With one of the highest percentages of adult residents with graduate level degrees, clocking in at 43 percent, Amherst falls into the top echelon of highly educated locales.

The Beast lauded Amherst and the Pioneer Valley at large for its heavy student presence, creating a student-dominated setting conducive to, well, students.

While the Beast's review gives Chapel Hill, NC and Ann Arbor, Mich., top ranks for their high proportion of educated professors and livability, Amherst does not clock in too far behind, and in fact boasts a higher percentage of residents with graduate degrees, although its population is less than those two cities.

Other municipalities which scored high marks on The Daily Beast review included Boulder, Colo., Cambridge, Mass., Berkeley, Calif., Madison, Wisc., East Lansing, Mich., State College, Pa. and Ames, Iowa.

The site praises Amherst, which checked in at number 10 and scored a grade of B, for having "one of the most significant student populations."

The site praises Amherst, which checked in at number 10 and scored a grade of B, for having "one of the most significant student populations."

Other hot spots on the Beast's list included Ithaca, New York at 11, Columbia, Mo. at 12, Charlottesville, Va. at 13, Davis, Calif. at 14, Corvallis, Ore., and College Station, Texas at the 15 spot.

Checking in near the bottom of the list were Athens, Ga., Kent, Ohio, South Bend, In., Norman, Ok., Champaign-Urbana Ill., Lawrence, Ks., College Park, Md., Auburn, Al., and Gainesville, Fl.

The Daily Beast is a news and opinion site published by Tina Brown.

– Collegian News Staff

Wed. accident results in OUI

The Amherst Police Department announced Wednesday that an early morning crash at the intersection of Grantwood Dr. and East Pleasant St. had resulted in the second OUI arrest for a 26-year-old Holyoke woman, among other charges.

Johanna Favaro, of 84 Brown Ave. in Holyoke, was arrested resulting from the crash. An APD release said was the result of Favaro failing to stop her car at the end of Grantwood Dr., traveling across East Pleasant St. and into the house across the road at 846 East Pleasant St. Favaro was transported to Cooley-Dickinson Hospital in Northampton after sustaining minor injuries. The home her car hit sustained structural damage.

In addition to her second OUI offense, Favaro was charged with failure to stop at a stop sign, a marked lanes violation, wanton destruction of property over $250 for careening into the house and reckless operation of a motor vehicle. She was held overnight at the Hampshire County House of Correction in lieu of $500 cash bail and, according to the release, was set to be arraigned Wednesday at Eastern Hampshire District Court. The case remains under investigation.

– Collegian News Staff

The Amherst Police announced the arrest of Johanna Favaro, 26, of Holyoke, for OUI and other charges after a Wednesday morning crash.

ARTS & LIVING

Everybody's Fine

Kirk Jones' latest film, "Everybody's Fine," features a stellar cast, including Rober DeNiro, Drew Barrymore and Kate Beckinsale, among others.

SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS

Mass Attack looks to get back

After enduring a three game losing streak, the Minutemen host Merrimack this weekend before a tough stretch over Winter break.

SEE PAGE 8

EDITORIAL & OPINION

Collegian columnist Nick Milano writes an open letter to Tiger Woods, telling him that his legacy has been shattered.

SEE PAGE 3

DailyCollegian.com

Connect with the past. Check out the Daily Collegian's interactive slideshow of the University of Massachusetts' historical buildings.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIX
ISSUE 63

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
413-545-3500
Fax 413-545-3699
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF William McGuinness
MANAGING EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
BUSINESS MANAGER Daniel Jette
PRODUCTION MANAGER Michael Sarkes
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Kirsten Swenson
ADVERTISING MANAGER Michael Tortorici
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Max Detmer
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Shayna Murphy
COMICS EDITOR Annie Keithline
EDITORIAL EDITOR Nick O'Malley
NEWS EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS EDITOR Jeffrey R. Larnard
WEB EDITOR Brian Wood
PHOTO EDITOR Matthew Harrison
IT MANAGER Victor Jack
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Matt Zolnierz
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Nicole Jacinto
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Norman Provost
CLASSIFIED MANAGER Katelyn Tamilio
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Justin Gagnon
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Elise Horowitz
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Cal Scannell
ASSISTANT COMICS Andrew Witt
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Michael Phillis
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Matthew M. Robare
ASSISTANT NEWS Samuel Butterfield
ASSISTANT NEWS Alyssa Creamer
ASSISTANT NEWS Jenn Heshion
ASSISTANT SPORTS David Brinch
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jay Asser
ASSISTANT SPORTS Adam Miller
ASSISTANT PHOTO Maxwell Sparr
ASSISTANT PHOTO Samantha Webber
ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA Sara Cody
ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA Chris Shores

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1916 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1996. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

PRODUCTION CREW
on staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Nick Bush

COPY EDITOR
Chelsea Dugan

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Nick Guarino

UMass alum start vocab site

2004 graduates promise better test scores for users of VerbaLearn.com

By Michelle Williams
Collegian Staff

Looking to sound like a Rhodes Scholar but don't want to crack a dictionary?

Two recent University of Massachusetts graduates may have an answer.

Last March, 2004 alum turned Boston engineers James Potter and Nathan Barr launched a website that aims to help improve vocabulary called Verbal.eam.com.

The website offers courses designed to help users prepare for the ACT, ESL, GRE and the SAT exams in addition to general courses at reading levels between grades 7 and 12. Students can increase their vocabulary through video and print flashcards, downloadable mp3 files, online games and crossword puzzles.

The idea came from one of the founder's personal experiences, explained co-founder James Potter.

"My best friend, who was my roommate in college, and I started this company together," he said.

"He was an engineering major studying for the GRE and found it time consuming to make new note cards everyday," continued Potter.

"He started to record his notes on his mp3 player and had the same issue with it," Potter said.

Co-founder Barr, now an engi-

See VERB on page 3

COURTESY JAMES POTTER

University of Massachusetts alumni James Potter and Nathan Barr developed VerbaLearn.com, an online vocabulary building site that promises to improve its users standardized test scores.

Miller plays to tune of success

MILLER from page 1

part of their major. Along with the wind ensembles, there is an orchestra and two main choirs that students can be a part of, in addition to the marching band and the jazz groups.

One of Miller's more ambitious plans involves traveling with his students to areas outside the Pioneer Valley. There are two main reasons Miller wants to do this: one is to recruit potential applicants and the other is to give his musicians the opportunity to teach K-12 students in public schools. Music education is one of the most popular majors in the department, and allowing students to interact with pupils in public schools provides them with a better understanding of what teaching will be like after they graduate and enter the work force.

"[Miller] hopes to one day get us to play in Russia and Italy and all these amazing places," said Jill Gilfoil, a UMass clarinet player and music education major. "The first steps are playing in local places and getting UMass' name out there, the fact that we have a music department," she continued.

The outreach has helped the UMass ensembles gain visibility in the region. For Miller to show off UMass' ensembles, however, he must first get them to a level that will allow them to garner a stronger reputation for the school's music program.

"You can tell there is a difference in the way we play," said Gilfoil. "He pushes us harder and holds us accountable, he brings to both ensembles education aspects, he talks about why you work certain pieces a certain way," she went on. "Anytime he messes up, he says he owes us a beat, he holds himself accountable as well," Gilfoil said.

The day before the wind ensemble was set to hold their end of the semester concert, Miller's method of holding students accountable was on display. The ensemble was practicing a piece by Johann Sebastian Bach entitled Mein Jesu, was fur Seelenweh.

When conducting, Miller's face becomes intense and a vein often throbs on the right side of his neck. His usually friendly demeanor turns businesslike and intense.

"This needs every ounce of everything you've got," he said before swaying with the ensemble to the beginning measures of Bach.

Quickly it became clear that the rehearsal of Bach was not up to Miller's standards. After restarting the piece, Miller told his ensemble that "they don't pay me to coddle you." As the band began playing for a second time, he called for the ensemble to "sacrifice everything to be sharp." Apparently, they were not successful; as Miller cut the band off again. To an untrained ear, there was nothing wrong with the piece. Everything sounded together, in tune and moving. Miller's ear told him something different.

"It's just not together and it's not my fault," he said. The blame he placed at the feet of his ensemble was in sharp contrast to a pre-

See MILLER on page 4

The University of Massachusetts music department is looking to James Patrick Miller to increase the prestige of the wind ensemble.

Berkshire hosts Battle of the Chefs with top college cuisine

COURTESY UMASS ETM

UMass executive director of dining Ken Toong said the school's showcase of top college chefs shows how far the world of college dining has come.

By Sam Butterfield
Collegian Staff

Six chefs from universities around the country known for their food set their sights on the University of Massachusetts Wednesday, in an Ultimate Chef Showdown sponsored by UMass Dining Services.

The chefs, who came from the University of Missouri, San Diego State, the University of Richmond duked it out against UMass at Berkshire Dining Commons from 5 to 9 p.m. as part of the Visiting College Chef Series Special.

According to a University Media Relations release, the chefs were to prepare 16 dishes highlighting student favorites from the four schools. Each school had its own station, where they prepared two entrees, one starch and a vegetable.

Mizzou's executive chef, Eric Cartwright, went for a heartland theme, cooking up some pulled pork and grilled chicken with skillet vegetables and sweet potato gratin.

San Diego State's chief chef, Dave Hughs, served some specials with Southern California flavor, like carne asada beef and seafood service, with south of the border Mexican rice and hot carrots.

Atlantic 10 rival Richmond's executive chef Glenn Pruden served some southern hospitality, cooking guests beef bistro tender, collard greens with ham hocks and shrimp and grits.

Meanwhile, UMass' own Tony Jung of Berkshire went with some traditional New England fare, seared cod with corn chowder sauce, traditional chicken pot pie, spinach pilaf and grilled asparagus.

Ken Toong, executive director of dining and retail services, said in the media relations release that the event should show students some flavors other schools serve.

"This should be a fun event," he said, "our UMass students will be in for a treat and it will be a great way to create excitement before finals."

"I believe there is so much talent among our chefs in colleges and universities, and many schools are working hard to change the perception of college dining collectively," he went on.

Toong said he believes college dining services have an undeserved bad reputation, and noted that campus dining has improved.

"Things aren't what they used to be," he said, "they are far more delicious!"

Sam Butterfield can be reached at sbutterfield@dailycollegian.com.

FROM THE EDITORS:

A large number of readers took issue with a comic that ran in yesterday's Daily Collegian, and rightfully so.

The comic in question made a joke about rape. It goes without saying that rape is not funny, and by extension, the comic certainly was not either. We can only regret that it made into the paper.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian has the responsibility of reporting on acts of sexual violence on this campus, including one instance this semester, which already is once too many. These people are our readers, our neighbors, our classmates, our co-workers and our friends. The comic disrespected victims and all of those who are working to combat sexual violence in our community. We can offer few excuses, but on behalf of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian, we offer our sincerest apologies and a promise to prevent this from happening again.

In the coming weeks, the Collegian will be reaching out to groups in the community to figure out how we can use this mistake to raise awareness about sexual violence.

S.P. Sullivan
Managing Editor

William McGuinness
Editor-in-Chief

The Office of Jewish Affairs and the Center for Student Development extend our holiday greetings to Jewish students, faculty and staff

Happy Hanukkah!

The Hebrew word chanukah means dedication." This eight-day "Festival of Lights" commemorates the victory of the Maccabees, who fought against the religious persecution of the Jews, and their rededication of the Temple in Jerusalem.

It is customary to eat fried foods such as potato pancakes (latkes) or doughnuts, to remind us of the miracle of the oil which burned for eight days.

Hanukkah begins Friday evening, December 11th and ends at sunset on Saturday, December 19th

UMASS AMHERST

For more information about Jewish holidays, and the University's policy regarding class absence for religious observance, visit umass.edu/jewish or call 413.545.9642

Car crash on East Pleasant St.

A car crashed through the fence of 846 East Pleasant St. early Wednesday morning, causing structural damage to the home. See page one for more details.

Deterred by words? UM alum have answer

VERB from page 2

neer, said in a release that he would be perusing flashcards in the evening but wished he had a way to use the time during his commute to Boston.

"I recorded my voice reading the flashcards aloud," he said, "that way, I could listen to the same vocabulary flashcards while I drove to work, saving my evenings for more important things, like watching TV," he joked.

After graduation in 2004, the two decided to create their own company. After mulling over various ideas, Potter's memory of his friend's note card nightmare came to mind.

With a plan that didn't need large financial backing, the two pooled funds and launched the upstart Verbal.eam.com in 2008. After gaining popularity, the website introduced a new version last March. Currently, the website has 16,000 registered users worldwide.

Potter was not hesitant to discuss his users' feelings on the site.

"People tend to love the website," he said.

He explained that with new public relations backing, he hopes the site will see even further success.

"We just recently started our PR campaign, so not that many people has e heard of the site, but those who use it send us great feedback," he explained.

Verbal.eam.com has a Twitter account that offers a different vocabulary word-of-the-day for each of the site's different tests. In each Tweet, the word, its pronunciation and definition are given, as well as how the word is used in a sentence.

Potter touted the value of utilizing Twitter's capabilities.

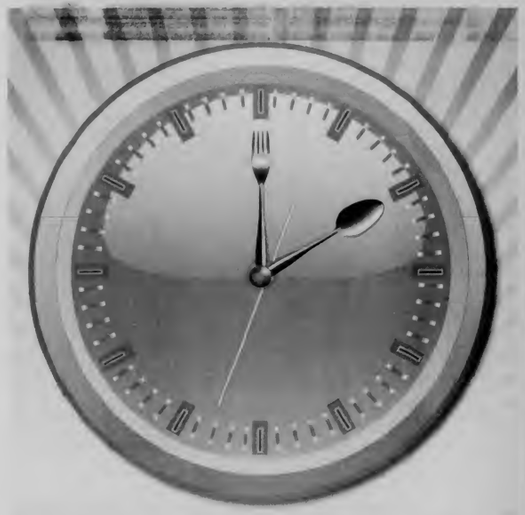
"[Twitter] is a great way to reach a larger market," he said. "We learned that parents often check Twitter at work during the day and we feel our Twitter account can notify both parents and students about our services," he went on.

One of the benefits of Verbal.eam is that users create a study list, from which they learn through online quizzes, games, or virtual flashcards. With each study list, Verbal.eam generates a different set of words to be used each session. After viewing a list of words in their study list, users never see a word they have learned again, allowing users to learn a word and move on.

The website guarantees users it can help improve SAT exam and GRE verbal test scores by 100 points or ACT verbal scores by at least two points, with a money-back guarantee.

For users studying for the GRE, the program promises to teach more than 1000 of the most commonly used vocabulary words on the test. For others who use the site's courses to learn English through the English as a Second Language program, the website offers both intermediate and advanced levels. The program promises to teach its users 550 words commonly used in newspapers, magazines and discussion used in the workplace, as well.

With the different features come different price tags. One version of the program, Verbal.eam Basic, is free to registered users. The basic version offers a study list builder and a sentence completion game to learn vocabulary content. The most popular version is Verbal.eam Plus, which offers all of the new features such as mp3 study lists playable on iPods and computers and flashcards for $19.95. The company also offers discounted rates to teachers, schools and libraries.



Michelle Williams can be reached at mrwilliat@student.umass.edu

VerbaLearn

VerbaLearn.com, founded by UMass alums, aims to help its users improve their vocabulary skills through online games, activities, and mp3 recordings.

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
Insurance Replacement Rates
FREE PICK-UP
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair & Glass Replacement
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.pottersauto.com
(One mile North of UMass - on bus route)

Winter-session Housing
Taking a class this winter?
Need a place to stay?
Great rates available!
Howard Johnson EXPRESS INN
401 Russell Street, Hadley
413-586-0114
Free breakfast, fitness room, wireless, great location!

Another reason to ♥ the DC
We have extended the hours of operation during Finals. Join us for late night brunch and a study break!

Sunday December 13 ..... Worcester DC and Berkshire DC ..... Closes at 2:00 am
Monday, December 14 ..... Worcester DC and Berkshire DC ..... Closes at 2:00 am Tuesday, December 15 ..... Worcester DC and Berkshire DC ..... Closes at 2:00 am
Wednesday, December 16 ..... Worcester DC and Berkshire DC ..... Closes at 2:00 am

LOCAL HERO buy locally grown
RESTAURANTS & INSTITUTIONS ivy
UMASS DINING UMassAmherst
umassdining.com

Join Us for Holiday Festivities
Starry, Starry Night
Menu:
Roasted Free Range Turkey Local Cranberry Chutney
Seafood Newburg
Stuffed Acorn Squash Local
Roasted Root Vegetables Local Butternut Squash Local DESSERT:
• Bread Pudding with Jack Daniels Sauce •
Hot Mulled Cider Local
Worcester, Franklin & Hampshire DCs
THURSDAY, DECEMBER 10 • 5 - 9pm
LOCAL HERO buy locally grown
RESTAURANTS & INSTITUTIONS ivy
UMASS DINING UMassAmherst
umassdining.com

Miller not blowing wind about future of ensemble: new director has high standards

MILLER from page 2

wous piece in which he admitted that he had "failed the music" at a particular section. The feel inside the practice room was that of a child who had just been told by a favorite relative that he had done something disappointing and that he was going to have to shape up in order to redeem himself.

Miller replaces interim conductor Laura Rexroth.

The ensemble restarted and the result was still not up to Miller's liking. After dissecting the way a particular section played a subdivision of note patterns, he talked to the flutes about being out of tune and how the band wasn't living up the standard of Bach.

After only a few minutes of rehearsing the Bach piece, Miller concluded that it just wasn't worth "wounding the music" any longer. "I'm not mad, sometimes you don't earn the right to play Bach," he concluded.

Miller's ability to pick music apart coupled with his intense countenance and acknowledgement of his own mistakes allowed the band to move onto the next piece without allowing the not-quite-there Bach rehearsal to bother them.

When the concert came the next evening, Miller acted much of the way he had in rehearsal. His face taught with emotion while his baton repeatedly struck the front tip of his hair. Miller gave the distinct impression of being heavily emotionally involved in the moment and the music.

"We are playing in a different way," said Gilfoil. "We are coming prepared; he holds you accountable, he holds himself accountable."

Later estimates put the number of people at the wand ensemble's performance that evening at about 400. According to Gilfoil, the crowd was another indication of rising attendance of the performances put on by the department.

Erin Laman is a music major in Miller's ensemble.

"The first concert [with Miller], there were so many more people there than there have been in the past, it was nice," said Laman.

According to Miller, he and his wife moved to town with the intention to stay and develop the ensembles. He is the product of a number of new faces in the department as a result of retirements and an effort by Jeff Cox, the chair of the music and dance departments to hire new tenure track faculty.

This year, Cox hopes a search for a piano performer, a choral conductor and a member of the jazz faculty will bring even more enthusiasm to the department.

Michael Phillis can be reached at mphillis@student.umass.edu.

A revamped UMass wind ensemble led by new director James Patrick Miller hopes to gain increased recognition and prominence in the world of wood music.

SGA holds last meeting of the semester Wed.

SGA from page 1

attack

An address by President Mbauwike on why she vetoed the bill to modify the way freedom of speech is protected on campus was followed by argument between those for and against the bill.

The back and forth between the two sides was stopped by Speaker Modesto Montero.

"I am not kidding around! This is getting ridiculous," said Montero.

The meeting continued with civility and cooperation between senators.

"This semester of SGA has been marked by internal struggle," said Kenney. "Personally I think that both sides of opinion should be represented and that hasn't happened," he said.

Kenney remarked on some of the collateral impact the SGA has had on the UMass campus.

"The SGA student and federal organizing committee have been very visible on campus," said Kenney, "they helped to register students to vote in the federal senate special election."

"Overall the SGA has been more active than in past years," said Speaker Montero, "the amount of work done has doubled the amount of work we put in last year."

According to Montero, the SGA is currently working on making records more available which could include the introduction of a new cabinet member in charge of maintaining an SGA website.

"The motion that was passed demands that these documents be made available on the website, but it has to be passed by the president," said Montero.

"A motion was passed recently to open public records, for some reason people were waiting months to get requested records," said Senator Andy Berg. "This motion provides stronger remedies against those who violate making records public knowledge," Berg went on.

"This semester was full of adventure and it was entertaining," said Montero.

President Mbauwike was not available for comment after Wednesday's meeting and reportedly had taken ill.

Bobby Hitt rhitt@student.umass.edu.

SGA Senator Azeen Khanmalek addresses fellow SGA members during a meeting held in November. The SGA held its last meeting of the semester Wednesday.

FOUR Seasons
WINE • LIQUOR • CIGARS
BUY 6 BOTTLES OF WINE WITH YOUR REUSABLE FOUR SEASON WINE BAG AND RECEIVE 10% OFF
'TIS THE SEASONAL SPECIALS!

BEER		LIQUOR		WINE (All wine 750 ml except where noted)
Heineken & Heineken Light 24 pk btl	$22.99*	Grand Marnier 750 ml	$32.99*	Black Box 3.0 lt Alt Varietes	$19.99*
Corona & Corona Light 24 pk btl	$21.99*	Crown Royal Canadian Whiskey 750 ml	$24.99*	Bogle Vinyards Phantom Red Blend	$18.99*
Sierra Nevada Pale Ale 12 pk btl	$12.99*	Grant's Scotch 1.75 lt	$23.99*	Toasted Head Untamed Red Red Blend	$12.99*
Bud & Bud Light 24 pk btl	$16.99*	Dewar's White Label Scotch 750 ml	$19.99*	Plungerhead Zinfandel	$12.99*
Sam Adams Octoberfest 12 pk btl	$10.99*	Sobieski Vodka 80° 1.75 lt	$19.99*	The Velvet Devil Merlot	$10.99*
Busch & Busch Light 20 pk btl	$10.99*	Harlem Herbal Liqueur 750 ml	$18.99*	The Crusher Cabernet Sauvignon	$10.99*
Pabst Blue Ribbon 18 pk can	$9.99*	UV Flavored Vodka 1.75 lt	$16.99*	Mark West Pinot Noir	$10.99*
Molson 12 pk btl	$9.99*	Captain Morgan Lime Bite 750 ml	$17.99*	Kris Pinot Grigio	$10.99*
Miller High Life 18 pk btl	$9.99*	Ansac Cognac V.S. 750 ml	$16.99*	Kung Fu Girl Riesling	$10.99*
Rolling Rock 18 pk btl	$9.99*	Tequila Agavales Gold 1 lt	$12.99*	Castle Rock Pinot Noir	$9.99*
Narragansett 18 pk can	$9.99*	Admiral Nelson Spiced Rum 1 lt	$10.99*	Callia Alta Malbec	$8.99*
Dogfish Head 6 pk btl	$9.99*	Popov Flavored Vodka 750 ml	$5.99*	Red Tree Pinot Noir	$7.99*

SALE 12/3 - 12/16 333 Russell St., Rte. 9, Hadley, MA
584-8174 • Mon.-Sat. 9AM-11PM • Sun. Noon-11PM

Get ahead with PCE

A great opportunity to catch up on a course or two and improve your GPA.

ANYTIME, ANYWHERE.
ONLINE OR FACE-TO FACE.

Register now.
UMass Dartmouth
Enrollment Center
285 Old Westport Road
Dartmouth, MA 02747-2300

Credit Card Registration:
508.999.9129 / 508.999.8857

UMass Dartmouth Intersession '10

January 4 – 22 / 3-week session

▶ More than 50 courses total; more than 30 online

▶ Courses are viewable online at umassd.edu/pce/brochure/

Questions?
Write, call, or click continuinged@umassd.edu
508.999.8071
www.umassd.edu/pce

UMass | Dartmouth
World Class. Within Reach.

www.umassd.edu/pce

SPRING BREAK
JAMAICA
Once you go you know.

Spring Break comes to life...
Live Concerts
Awesome VIP Parties
Beautiful Beaches
Scenic Cliff Jumping
Spectacular Sunsets

Book Your Trip Today! Contact:

Sun Splash Tours
www.sunsplashtours.com
1.800.426.7710

STS Student Travel Services
1.800.648.4849
www.ststravel.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

Need to spread the word?

Reach more than 18,000 readers every day!

IT'S CHEAPER THAN YOU THINK!

On-Campus & Local Business Ads for $10 per column inch

R.S.O. Ads for $6.70 per column inch

CONTACT PAMELA:
thecollegian@gmail.com
413.545.3500
or stop by our office in the Campus Center basement

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 10, 2009 EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

An open letter to Tiger

Nick Milano

Dear Tiger Woods,

On Sept. 7, 2009, my cousin Mike and I drove from Amherst to Norton, Mass. for the Deutsche Bank Championship. We drove to see you, Phil Mickelson, Padraig Harrington and golf's other top players score on a relatively easy course.

We decided to stick to a spot on the seventh hole, where we could catch you on your second shot on the par-5. We watched in the distance as you nailed your drive on the sixth – again, Tiger is coming.

You approached your second shot. We'd know how it went by the sound of the crowd, those around us said. From that far, we couldn't see your swing or hear the head of the club strike the ball as pure as it must have, but we could see the reaction.

Gradually, the roar got louder, the clapping was universal, then an entire row of people leapt out of their shoes and the noise was unnatural. Of course, you had knocked it into the pin for an eagle.

Obviously, we followed the rest of your round and though it did not end as well as it began, it was some of the most exciting golf we had ever seen. There is nothing like standing 10 feet away from the Greatest Golfer Ever and seeing him deliver a ball with such force and skill as you did – TV does not compare.

See Tiger, you became all that we had hoped you would. When you beat the field by 12 shots at the 1997 Master's, at the age of 21, as an African American, all firsts in the record book, you announced the arrival of golf's Jordan.

When you won the 2000 U.S. Open, you broke six records. You won by 15 strokes – 15! If there were any doubts that you were one of the best, they were wiped away with that singular conquest. When we watched you meticulously measure an impossible shot on the 16th green at the 2005 Masters, gauge the slope of the putting surface, and aim your shot, we no longer had any doubts about your chance of sinking it. Signed. Sealed. Delivered.

Now, Tiger, you are the greatest golfer walking the planet. You have inspired many to take up the game, including myself. Would I have had the desire to play once a week when I was younger with my father if I could not imitate your celebratory punch, if I could not imagine hitting it as far as you or getting the crowd to cheer as loudly as they do for you?

But, now, Tiger, you have become the punch 'ine for jokes around the world. How many different times has a different comedian made a joke about Dick Cheney shooting the guy? Well Tiger, you have replaced him.

Regardless of what you have accomplished and will continue to accomplish on the golf course, you will be remembered for your indiscretions more than your miracle shots. Your remarkable tenacity and drive to win will fall to the footnotes. You have lost control of this story, Tiger. And now you have lost your legacy.

There are many who have said, "He's Tiger Woods, we should have seen this coming." They have said that the past few weeks have shown that you are a human and just as liable as the rest of us to make mistakes.

I disagree, Tiger, you have built a wall around yourself, thanks to an army of publicists and image consultants. The one incredible moment that we saw the Real Tiger Woods shine through was the 2006 British Open. We felt the same sorrow and joy that you expressed through joy. Then, we felt we could relate to a son in tears over the loss of his father. Now, we see that there is more to Tiger than golf, a beautiful family and loving parents.

Often, many, including myself, are willing to excuse a mistake. But this, Tiger, has not been a mistake, your actions 'have been exposed a second life. Your father once said that you were going to change the world. What would he say now?

As unfortunate as it may be, you will no longer be solely remembered as the greatest golfer ever, but as someone who abandoned his family again and again and again. It is our celebrity-driven society's fault that we hold you to a higher standard, but for someone as image conscious as yourself, you must have understood the possible repercussions.

You must break your silence. You must explain – if it is possible – what has happened. Ignoring the story will not make it go away. Fix your marriage, Tiger and we can continue to enjoy watching you stake your claim as the Greatest Golfer Ever.

Sincerely,
An avid golfer

Nick Milano is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at nmilano@student.umass.edu.

Reforming education

Daniel Madsen

We all have interests and needs, intellectual and otherwise, that we are compelled to ignore or censor every day we attend the University of Massachusetts. Can't the difference between getting a B and D+, be the difference between doing your homework and engaging in something relevant to one's own life? How about deciding whether to make a practice of reading the newspaper?

To give you an example from my life, I'd like to allocate more time to preventing a big box store from moving into my community. Implicitly, our educational system discourages this type of activity. After all, shouldn't you be studying?

When you're told as a student that you must take some irrelevant class as part of your education, the medium becomes the message. In other words, you the student, for the next four years, are to unquestioningly subordinate yourself to an institution.

Imagine how much more productive learning becomes when you discover, free from domination, how much you want to be engaged in classroom material, rather than a teacher telling you how you will (meaning how and how often) be engaged.

Don't you love it when teachers proclaim how surprised they are when students don't hand in assignments: "Oh my gosh, surely the material was as interesting to you as it was me. We're the same people, right?"

As U.S. citizens, we are compelled to accept – in the educational arena as in the political one – that we simply don't know what is good for ourselves. This is the moral justification for the discrepancy between public opinion polls and government action (the war in Afghanistan, single-payer healthcare).

How is this thinking implied in the educational arena?

We don't know what to know, so we must be told. We are told what an education is, what a subject is, what classes teach that subject, how we will learn and when we have "learned" enough, enter the diploma.

For anyone interested in politicizing the U.S. public, I think it is logical we examine the educational system which reaffirms daily, the masses are asses.

The message that the educational establishment is sending students is truly sickening and can help to explain the amount of alcohol abuse, depression and suicides among college students. It should be considered a spit in the face when the answer to these institution woes is increased counseling services and police action.

Another institutional policy more specific to UMass – and indicative of this democracy deficit of which I have been writing – is the new reactionary turn-it-in technology that automatically checks for plagiarism. This technology doesn't just imply that an increasing number of people are plagiarizing. It implies that people don't care about what's being assigned. UMass is again deciding to fight the alienating nature of the education establishment with disciplinary action.

We all know that a democratic society is impossible without education. But when education becomes so far removed from citizenship, that is, student engagement in decision-making (democracy), one is moving from a program of education to indoctrination.

Neil Postman, in his book "Technopoly" refered to "grades" as a technology to judge behavior. Like every technology in a democratic society, one must ask whether it serves everyone equitably or is wielded by the establishment as a form of oppression.

How do grades serve students when they are told that the quality of their learning is poor (D+)? Grades then are a tool of the institution, an ideological weapon that presupposes a quantitative value should be assigned to human thought, and that thoughts, once quantified, should be arranged.

Do students desire this degree of objectification?

If the reader is still unsure of the ideological implications of grades, consider for a moment the justification for the Holocaust, the eugenics movement, the belief that numbers and statistics could prove the superiority of the Arian race.

I'm not saying that, in the future, D students will get the gas chamber. I'm only saying numbers that claim to measure intelligence and superiority are the enemy of anyone wanting to live in a free society.

We will all be receiving our final grades soon and some of our teachers are kind enough to convey via a histogram how our grades relate to everyone else's.

It seems an appropriate time to ask the question, what's needed more, education reform or denazification?

Daniel Madsen is a UMass student and works with the University of Massachusetts Amherst chapter of Students for a Democratic Society (SDS). He can be reached at dfmadsen@student.umass.edu.

LETTERS to the EDITOR

Editorial@DailyCollegian.com

COMICS CROSSING THE LINE

Dear Editor,

I was deeply offended by a cartoon from today, December 9th. "Office Doodles", by Sam Kennedy, depicts an intoxicated Snow White and several dwarves, apparently about to rape her ("Who's first?"). This cartoon makes light of rape, and this is completely unacceptable. With hundreds of thousands of people raped and sexually assaulted every year*, it is a disgusting cartoon that deserves serious consequences for the cartoonist and the editor that printed it.

Stephanie Luke
UMass student

STUDENT NUTRITION NOT SO SWEET

Dear Editor,

I was waiting at the bus stop a few days ago when I heard two students discussing the merits of a bottle of juice. One of the ingredients was cane juice, and they didn't realize it was another name for sugar.

Many Americans don't know what goes into their food, especially when it comes to sweeteners. High-fructose corn syrup is an extremely prevalent sweetener, and it may be a cause of Type-2 diabetes. Many Americans satiate their cravings with candy, which is bad enough, but some turn to artificial sweeteners. Sucralose and Aspartame are two popular substances that may not be safe for consumption in large quantities. The FDA cannot always be trusted to deliver honest information to Americans. People should read the labels of the foods they consume; but some ingredients seem to require a PhD in nutrition to decipher. More importantly, they should know that stores pay attention to trends involving customers' purchases. Each purchase is like a vote, and every vote counts.

Casey Nathan
UMass student

OFFICE-DOODLE OUTRAGE

Dear Editor,

I would like a chance to articulate my extreme anger over the "Office Doodles" comic printed in the Massachusetts Daily Collegian on Wednesday, Dec. 9. The comic portrays four inebriated dwarves surrounding an intoxicated Snow White, merry at the prospect of sexually abusing her. This is absolutely unacceptable.

The Collegian is supposed to be a fair depiction of students' voices at the University of Massachusetts. Although there is fault to be found in the printing of the article, the greater problem lies in the gross misrepresentation of the student body's opinions.

We, as students, need the Collegian to be our advocate. With the distribution of the Collegian reaching far outside the campus, our reputation is at stake. This comic implies that rape is not taken seriously at the university. It shows the student body feels rape is a casual occurrence and a part of daily life. It creates fear and minimizes the trauma and recovery process of rape survivors. The comic also reflects an attitude of apathy among our male student body. When four dwarves were prepared to rape Snow White, where were the other three dwarves to stand up for her? I, for one, absolutely refuse to have this silence be my voice.

It is my understanding that a letter of apology is to be printed in the newspaper. I believe this is necessary to keep the legitimacy of the paper, and is an appropriate step. However, this is not enough. How can an apology confirm that something like this will never happen again? I demand further action be taken.

I believe the persons responsible for the release of this derogatory image should be held accountable for their oversight. Every small decision made by the Collegian staff becomes amplified and heard throughout the Pioneer Valley as the voice of twenty-two thousand students. These persons must have time to reflect upon their decisions and have the chance to understand the power they possess. I do not believe resignation is necessarily the answer. This action shows we do not allow room for mistakes on this campus, nor do we have the room in our hearts to forgive. It is after much consideration that I request these persons be placed on probation.

Please restore my faith in the Collegian.

Tracy Gebhart
Jillian Smith
Gwen Spalding
UMass students

ECONOMY A CASUALTY

Dear Editor,

The war in Iraq started in 2001. The United States has invested more money in this war than any other. The U.S. economy has been rapidly declining since the country's involvement in the war. The government has been taking money from citizens by raising taxes and spending it on the war efforts. The money is going towards planes, weapons and vehicles being used in Iraq.

With all the money invested in the war soldiers still don't have weapons that work. In a report from the New York Times, a soldier's gun stopped working during a raid. Not only are insane amounts of money being spent, but they are being spent unwisely on ineffective weapons.

Increased taxes and decreased wages are preventing U.S. citizens from spending money on clothes and toys for their children, causing many businesses to close down. Millions of Americans have become unemployed because businesses lack resources to pay them. This is disheartening because the government still hasn't realized that the reason the country's economy is in a recession today is because of the war in Iraq. If spending on war efforts was decreased, the U.S. economy would gradually come out of its current recession.

Tim Brandt
UMass Student

A MYTH THAT COSTS LIVES

Dear Editor,

Repeat a lie several times and it'll seem to be true. According to Nature magazine, 125,000 years ago, the sea level was five meters up and the temperature was six degrees Celsius higher. This happened when there were no significant carbon dioxide emissions from humans.

Nowadays, we're being violently warned against this alleged global warming, that is to happen in a couple of centuries based on studies from 60 years back, while meteorological predictions for the next day can't even be accurate.

What's the point? The United Nations Population Found wants to spread the so-called "reproductive rights" (contraception, sterilization and abortion) in order to reduce the world's population for the sake of fighting global warming. For them, the world is on the brink of climatic disaster.

Says Peter C. Smith, from the International Right to Life Federation: "The real and imminent danger is the demographic reduction of the developed world, that's being stopped only by the immigrant flow from the Third World." The UN's report praises the drop on birth rate in Japan and Europe and criticizes its raise in the United States.

Eva Ferraz
Barcelona, Spain

DEFINING WHAT'S WRONG

Dear Editor,

Most students associate plagiarism with the inappropriate copying of another's work without proper citations. But then again, to most, the specific constituents of the definition for plagiarism seem muddled. The fundamental question boils down to why students commit plagiarism even though they are aware of its dire consequences.

During a Secondary Academy workshop on Plagiarism and Copyright Issues held on March 29, 2003, Bob Hempel and Paul Denise collected statistical and theoretical data on plagiarism and concluded that students are in fact "unaware of what constitutes actual plagiarism."

Interestingly, it seems like neither does the world of literature. I believe that the literary world's failure to come up with an accorded definition of plagiarism singles everyone to be plagiarizing because of the diverse acceptance of practices considered as plagiaristic in our community.

Although some of the blame does fall on the student's deliberate dishonesty in upholding academic integrity, as part of a bigger literacy community we have failed to concur upon a consensus in the definition of plagiarism. Is it not important as a community to consent on a universal definition before pointing fingers? Self-plagiarism is an example of such "textual practice" that evidences the fact that some think this controversial element of plagiarism should be a guilty act of literary theft while others think otherwise.

Self-plagiarism is the unlawful copyrighting of one's own work without citation. Through my personal experience, I can tell you that some of my own high school teachers considered copying from previous works created by myself as an illegal act of literary theft but here in college, professors seem more lenient. Now, I ask you, where do you draw the line? I cannot use a part of the work that I myself created? So then, what is plagiarism?

Sneha Suresh
UMass Student

GET HUMANE HORMONES

Dear Editor,

The Pregnant Mare Urine industry in the United States and Canada has been a problem for 50 years and, unbelievably, most Americans are completely unaware.

Pregnant Mare Urine is collected to obtain hormones for hormone replacement therapy. However, the method for collection, and what happens to the resulting baby horses, is unacceptable. The collection method is so stressful that mares exhibit severely abnormal psychological behaviors in order to cope with their abhorrent conditions. The foals, a byproduct of this industry, are sent straight to slaughter.

Most women who take the medication, Premarin, only see the pill, and not the suffering. Few people know about the industry and its horrors, so few know of the many alternatives to PMU ranching.

There are medications that use plant-based hormones instead of hormones from Pregnant Mare Urine, and other methods of urine collection that are more humane. The U.S. and Canada do not need to use inhumane methods of collection, and women do not need to choose a pill that results in death and suffering. With some simple information, women can choose to boycott the pills and the industry, and thousands of innocent lives can be saved. We just need to be made aware.

Sara Suzanne Lovotti
UMass Student

GIVING A GIFT WITH VALUE

Dear Editor,

Christmas is right around the corner, and people are rushing around stores to buy stocking stuffers for friends and family. Many of these gifts will be Disney toys for children, but other than the fun movies and catchy songs, do we even know much about Disney?

Well, this Christmas I would like people to be more enlightened about the messages their gifts are sending. People need to know that Disney acts as an agent of socialization for children. Because children are exposed to Disney at young ages, they learn through Disney. Disney shows children that it's okay for Cinderella to scrub floors all day and take abuse, because one day Prince Charming will come to her rescue. Consequently, when people buy Disney products for kids, they are reinforcing the values present in their films.

I'm not saying that Disney is bad, just that the times have changed, and we need to make it clear to young girls that they should take charge of their own lives, rather than wait for a man to pick them up off the floor. Perhaps a nice stuffed Mulan or Pocahontas toy would serve as a better example.

WANT TO WRITE TO US?

Letters to the editor should be no longer than 550 words and can be sent to editorial@dailycollegian.com or submitted online at dailycollegian.com. We regret that, due to space constraints, not all letters will be printed, but can be found online.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS LIVING

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 10, 2009

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

No holiday cheer, but "Everybody's Fine" here

By Kate MacDonald
Collegian Staff

Kirk Jones and company definitely did something right when they made this season's newest family film, "Everybody's Fine." The director, known for "Nanny McPhee," adapted his new film from 1990's Italian flick "Stanno Tutti Bene" by Giuseppe Tornatore. The biggest difference, disregarding the obvious language disparity, is the all-star cast Jones has put together.

Robert De Niro stars as Frank Goode, a recent widower who wants to reconnect with his four children, all of whom are spread around the nation. When the kids were younger, Frank worked a lot, so it was his wife who was close with the children. He realizes after they all cancel on him for Christmas dinner plans that he really doesn't know anything about their lives. So he decides to embark on a tour of cities in the United States, yet in so doing, his worst fears are confirmed. Despite a shiny exterior, he knows nothing about the deeper, darker lives of his own offspring.

De Niro shines as Goode, a character unlike the other greats he's played in the past. He comes off as a soft yet strong father who has always tried to do the right thing by his family. De Niro proves his acting prowess, bringing heart and emotion to a storyline that no one can deny is extremely predictable.

Big name actors Kate Beckinsale, Drew Barrymore and Sam Rockwell were cast as Goode's secretive children. They each bring depth and insight into the private lives children try to hide from their parents, children that—despite being advanced in years – continue to crave parental approval. The three really shine as, albeit supporting actors, but stars in their own right in "Everybody's Fine." Beckinsale's type-A character, Amy, whose marriage isn't as perfect as it seems, Barrymore's Rosie, a "Daddy's girl," and Rockwell's Robert, a musician constantly seeking approval band together and try to shield the very dark, criminal life of the final son, David.

The chemistry between the characters is palpable. The children are believable, playing close siblings who maintain constant contact after De Niro leaves the home of each one. Their relationships with their father, while different for each sibling, is just like any kid might have. Unfortunately, this makes many of the scenes in between the emotional father-child scenes very unremarkable.

COURTESY MIRAMAX FILM/EVERETT COLLECTION

Kirk Jones' latest film, "Everybody's Fine" features a knock-out cast including Robert DeNiro, Drew Barrymore and Kate Beckinsale, among others. Together the ensemble saves what might otherwise be a trite and sentimental holiday flick.

However, this is where "Everybody's Fine" meets one of its only pitfalls—cornyness. At the introduction of each of Frank's kids, he sees flashbacks of them as young children. It gets a tad repetitive, and reaches a pinnacle when, after the secrets begin unraveling, questions and shouts at their childish forms.

Despite the season in which it was released and the trailers showing holiday scenes, a holiday film it is not. Quite the opposite. "Everybody's Fine" is a film that will illicit emotion and only a few laughs. A cast of great dramatic actors and a few comedic ones sprinkled in here and there, "Everybody's Fine" is certainly not the happy go lucky film it comes off as being in trailers. Movie goers will follow Frank with some trepidation, and end up feeling sorry for him. The questions on everyone's minds throughout the film will be, "Where is David?" and "When will the kids come clean and tell their father about their real lives?" Will it be too late?

Don't make the mistake of heading to the theater to see "Everybody's Fine" to get into the 2009 holiday spirit. Chances are audience members will leave the theater feeling sad, but satiated. The film is, at the very least, a genuinely good movie. It has great characters, a decent plotline, and real life problems. It just happens to be in a winter setting. With any other cast, this film could easily be a flop, but thanks to great casting, "Everybody's Fine" is a pretty good flick to wrap up the year.

Kate MacDonald can be reached at kaitlynm@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY MIRAMAX FILM/EVERETT COLLECTION

Despite the Christmastime release date, "Everybody's Fine" is not the kind of feel good holiday film one might expect from the trailers. The film examines parent-child relationships and will leave audiences feeling sympathetic and sad but satiated.

This holiday take the Handmade Pledge

By Ellie Rulon-Miller
Collegian Staff

A big part of the Do-It-Yourself movement lies in anti-consumerism ideals. For a lot of DIYers, it's the main reason they choose to change their buying habits. The holidays are often seen as a crafter's greatest challenge: they take on the task of making gifts for all of their loved ones by hand. It's an arduous mission that must often begin months before the holidays roll around.

For those of you who are less inclined to create than these hardcore crafters, but would still like to give someone a special gift this holiday season, have no fear. There are a lot of websites where you can buy handmade gifts at reasonable prices and even more websites that offer easy-to-follow tutorials for small gifts that are inexpensive to make.

One of my favorite DIY websites, Instructables, is loaded with unique, kitschy gift ideas. Most of them are easy to personalize and even easier to make. My personal favorite is the "Personalized Guess Who" game. All you have to do is purchase Guess Who from almost any toy store and get photos of 24 people (two photos of each person means you will need 48 photos). If you don't have Photoshop like the instructions suggest, you can take the easy way out and simply cut out your friends' faces and glue them over the images on the actual game cards. To make your project a little neater, try gluing your faces (very carefully!) to pieces of different colored card stock cut down to the same size as the game cards and laminating them.

Among the most common holiday gifts is perhaps the most truly divine creation ever to grace humankind: chocolate. Instead of running to CVS at the last minute and buying the same overpriced sampler box of chocolate that so many others have, you can find simple recipes for chocolate treats to make at home (and for you vegans, there are also a lot of equally-delicious, milk-and-egg-free dessert recipes out there).

"The Tamra Davis Cooking Show," a Web show released weekly on the website Hungry Nation, offers a lot of kid-friendly recipes for the holidays. This week's episode features a simple recipe for gingerbread men and simple decorations. Although the recipe is geared towards young children, it can be easily altered to cater to the older crowd. It's also fun for when you get into one of those five-year-old moods. You can use any cookie cutter shape for the cookie and almost anything as a topping. Any craft store will sell different shaped cookie cutters. Decorate cookies to resemble your friends and family members for a really unique take on a traditional recipe.

The first thing that your family and friends will see when you give them their gifts is yet another chance to be creative this season: the wrapping paper. Whenever my family runs out of wrapping paper, my parents will typically resort to newspaper. Last year, I spread two layers of newspaper out on my floor and splatter painted on it, a la Andy Warhol, and used that instead of generic wrapping paper. For small gifts, you can use pages from a magazine as wrapping. You can use any kind of paper – road maps, book covers or the pages of a textbook. Or you can buy a roll of plain white paper and design your own.

If you're looking to buy quality, handmade gifts online, your first stop should be Etsy. There, you can find not only handmade goods, but also antique and vintage toys and clothing. There is also ArtFire, which was built on the same foundations as Etsy but seems to be comprised of only the highest quality handmade items (keep in mind, though, that ArtFire's prices are significantly steeper than Etsy's).

Buying gifts from independent sellers is a great way to support the crafting movement that has been spreading like wildfire in the last few years. If you're really interested in those handcrafting gifts, take the Handmade Pledge at buyhandmade.org.

To all of the DIYers, happy crafting! And to the Pioneer Valley, have a great holiday season. Even if you don't buy your gifts handmade.

Ellie Rulon-Miller can be reached at erulonmi@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY KATE MACDONALD/ETSY.COM

Handmade holiday gifts such as these earrings using text from a vintage poetry book are available on Etsy.com.

Rubblebucket blows faces at Pearl Street

By Dave Mansfield
Collegian Correspondent

Jamaica Plain's own Rubblebucket brought its spirited live act and hip grooves to the Pearl Street Clubroom last Thursday night, and gave the audience a memorable performance that had spectators young and old dancing.

Opening act Giant Panda Guerilla Dub Squad (GPGDS), a reggae-dub band from Rochester, NY, gave a relatively sparse crowd a solid, tight performance. Although the group did an admirable job of capturing a nice reggae feel, many of their songs went on for far too long with no real variety to keep things interesting. The set, which lasted for over an hour, probably could have been compressed to thirty or forty minutes.

Nonetheless, GPGDS certainly had a small core of loyal hipster fans who swayed back and forth for the entire set. Some of them appeared to be a tad inebriated, and a few were escorted by security personnel for the use of a certain recreational drug. The band played feel-good songs such as "In These Times" and "Easy Way Out" that were musically redundant but had a pleasant, relaxing effect on the crowd. The four band members were all skilled musicians; the keyboardist in particular was impressive and was able to spice things up with some licks and solos.

As the opening set neared its conclusion, the crowd began to fill out in eager anticipation of one of the best locally-based live acts around. Rubblebucket certainly did not disappoint, as the octet of highly skilled musicians unleashed a musical onslaught of interesting grooves, harmonies and melodies. Rubblebucket, which includes a three piece horn section and a robust rhythm section including two percussionists, is as entertaining visually as it is musically, as the members are constantly dancing, even employing some choreographed moves.

The group opened with material from their new self-titled release, including the tracks "Bad Mr. Kurtz" and "Bikes". Lead singer Kalmia Traver, who sings and plays saxophone with equal skill, laments over a troubled relationship in the first number, over eerily catchy horn parts that get progressively louder as the song reaches conclusion. "Bikes", a new single, features Traver singing along to the horn licks of Alex Toth on trumpet and Adam Dotson on trombone. Dotson unleashes a mean solo on this number, just one of many taken by the band members throughout the set.

One aspect that distinguishes this band from others is their meshing of genres. Craig Myers, who plays auxiliary percussion as well as the n'goni, an African harp-like instrument, traveled to Africa to study music. It is easy to hear some Afro-Cuban grooves, some jazz elements (especially with the improvisation) and some straight-ahead hard rock feeling in his performance.

Highlighting the set was the performance of "November," off the group's new album. Dotson and Toth showed off their versatility on this number, mimicking bird sounds with whistling and singing. Dotson once again took a solo, while guitarist John Hersey was most impressive with his intricate and repeating guitar line. "Kuma" was also a crowd favorite, with Meyer showing some serious skill on the n'goni. Traver was at her best vocally on this song, backed by some nice, bouncy melodies and bright horn parts.

During "Rivers", a Latin sounding number off of their debut album "Rose's Dream", Dotson, Toth, and Traver all took to the crowd, making their way through the audience and playing simultaneously. This certainly excited everyone, although some may have been a little wary of Dotson's slide trombone.

Between songs, Toth announced that they had been awarded Best Live Act of the Year at the Boston Music Awards the previous night. The award was certainly justified, as their skill as musicians was only exceeded by their spirit and joy for performing. Rubblebucket's concert certainly showed them to be an act to keep a keen eye on in the future.

Dave Mansfield can be reached at dmansfie@student.umass.edu.

TIM BRADY

Band members Kalmia Traver and Alex Toth received the Best Live Act award alongside other Rubblebucket musicians at the Boston Music Awards.

'Shameless Self-Promotion' of MFA students

By Lisa Linsley
Collegian Staff

"Shameless Self Promotion" is currently on view at the University Gallery in the Fine Arts Center. It consists of artworks of Polaroid dimensions by UMass MFA students in response to Andy Warhol's exhibit "The Minox and The Big Shot: Andy Warhol's Photography." "Shameless Self Promotion" is described as an opportunity for MFA students to engage in artistic dialogue with Warhol's art. The title might lead one to expect the artworks in the exhibit would look similar to Andy Warhol's famous photography. One might also expect to walk into the Fine Arts Center and see remakes of the brillo pad pieces or Cambell's Soup cans. However, none of these images appear in the exhibit. Rather than representing mere imitations of Warhol's famous pieces, "Shameless Self Promotion" works to create a conversation connecting the MFA students' original work with that of Warhol.

Andy Warhol's photography currently on view in "The Minox and the Big Shot" exhibit provides MFA students with inspiration for their "Shameless Self-Promotion."

Hannah Richard's untitled piece currently on display at the University Gallery responds to Warhol's photographs. The piece is comprised of Elmer's glue.

The Polaroid sized pieces of the 15 MFA students: Katie Baker, Courtney Cullen, Michelle Dickson, Ryan Feeney, Joshua Field, Kerry O'Grady, Michele Lauriat, Chun-Tso Lin, Camila Molestina, Sarah Purnell, Hannah Richards, Chad Seelig, Karla Stingerstein, Jieun Shin, and Steve Snell each use different media, subjects, and color schemes. While Warhol is most noted for creating pieces of items, products, or people our culture has seen before, many of the MFA artists utilize various mediums to create images we have never seen. Jieun Shin's piece titled "Proxy" is a watercolor on paper with grey shadow-like lines. Hannah Richards's untitled piece is comprised of Elmer's glue. The piece contains loops of glue that unintentionally resemble plastic canned soda rings.

Several pieces do resemble life-like objects or people. Surprisingly, one of the most beautiful photographs in the exhibit was taken on an iPhone. Ryan Feeney's piece consists of a beautiful image of a windshield and dashboard of a car while driving on a highway with the forest and sun rising in the distance. Another piece that uses interesting media is Camila Molestina's "The Stutter." The piece consists of a blurred still image of white roses with music notes on a ribbon-like form resembling a tape measure. Steve Snell's piece is a photograph of an adolescent boy in hunting gear. He has a flannel shirt, a fake long brown beard, and a raccoon tail hat on his head. Although using bright colors, Courtney Cullen's piece titled, "Oh, How Cute" features bright colors made out of newspaper. The subject is a female head with eyes and mouth closed. She has a bright head-wrap on her head with pink, yellow, green, and blue blotches.

Other artists use mixed media to create extremely abstract pieces. One such artwork is Michelle Lauriat's "Phil's Hill." The piece comprises simply blue and green dyed and ripped tissue paper. however, the paper pieces don't constitute a recognizable object. Similarly, much of Michelle Dickson's "To Stop Past It" is made of glue, or some such similar product smudged across embroidered cement.

The only artist who clearly draws on Warhol's work as a direct inspiration is Karla Stingerstein. "If These Walls Could Talk" features a photopolymer print in an acrylic medium. The bottom of the piece has lips, similar to the famous lips seen in Warhol's "Marilyn" series. The lips are more abstracted and it is clear that Warhol's work only provides inspiration and the work is not a deliberate recreation of any of the "Marilyn" pieces.

Participating artist Chun-Tso Lin says in the event advertisement, "Art needs an artist, a gallery, and viewer in order to be 'art.' You as the viewer are invited to come and be part of the 'art making' – let us be known, let us be seen, and let us shine." "Shameless Self-Promotion" is said to not just be a response exhibition, but a conceptual art project that will be performed by the gallery, artist, and viewer, connecting the three through art. Lin says "We might not be seen from Warhol's eyes, we might not be rich and famous, but what we can be are artists that enjoy Warhol's legacy."

Shameless Self Promotion will be on view in the University Gallery of the Fine Arts Center until Sunday, Dec. 13, 2009.

Lisa Linsley can be reached at llinsley@student.umass.edu

EDITOR'S NOTE:

The Arts editorial staff would like to apologize for a factual error in the article titled, "Bringing a musical legend to new generation" that ran in yesterday's issue. The review of "Elvis 75 Good Rockin' Tonight" mistakenly reported that Elvis died in a hotel room. He was in fact discovered dead on the floor of his home, Graceland on Aug. 17, 1977. Again, we apologize for this oversight.

Are you a PHOTOGRAPHER searching for better EXPOSURE?

Get your photos published for over 10,000 people to see each day with THE DAILY COLLEGIAN

Send an email to photos@dailycollegian.com for more information.

Looking for a Job?

The Daily Collegian

is seeking hard-working, motivated undergrads to fill our

ADVERTISING REPRESENTATIVE POSITIONS.

Excellent business experience! •Gain valuable sales experience
Get credits for work •Build your resume

TO APPLY:
Contact Mike Tortorici
@ 413 545-3500
thecollegian@gmail.com

*SOM students strongly encouraged to apply.

TO THE World's Best CUSTOMERS:

Good Luck on your exams and Happy Holidays!

We look forward to serving you next semester.

UMASS DINING
UMassAmherst
umassdining.com

New tests, familiar opponents for UM

SCHEDULE from page 10

currently sit just one point behind UMass in the conference standings, but have played two more games.

Despite the long road trip, finishing strong against the Wildcats and Huskies will allow the Minutemen to pull closer or further away from some teams, as they push to finish in the top four spots in the standings to host the first round of the Hockey East Tournament.

JAN. 15/16 VS. UMASS LOWELL

When UMass traveled to Lowell last weekend to face No. 9 UMass Lowell, it didn't go as planned. Despite tying the game up in the third period, two late goals by the River Hawks put the game out of reach.

With the schools only separated by one point in the standings with UML having played an additional game so far – it would not come as a surprise if these games play a large role in the standings.

Jeffrey R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@dailycollegian.com.

MARY LT. SARKIS/COLLEGIAN

Casey Wellman looks for the back of the net earlier this season. Wellman and the Minutemen look to have success over winter break, facing opponents like Union College, Bentley College and UConn, along with Hockey East teams.

Run rings around their circles. Talk to over 250 million U.S. wireless phone users while on the Sprint network with Any Mobile, Anytime.℠ It's included with our Everything Data Plan. Only from Sprint. Only on the Now Network.™ Savings for students of UMASS Amherst

Save 10%

Select regularly priced monthly service plans

Requires two-year Agreement

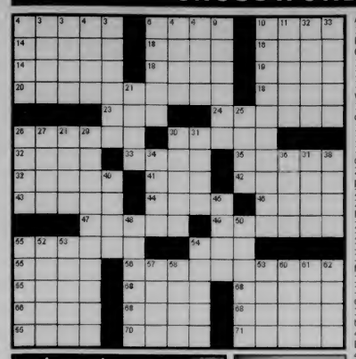
Sprint

The Now Network

Unlike most other wireless providers, your discount may apply to all lines (not just the primary line).

Hampshire Mall K 203
Nexgen Wireless / Sprint
367 Russell St
Hadley, MA 1035
Phone: (413) 582-0039

If you're already a customer, call for your discount.
866-853-4931 Option 1



$36 activation fee is waived.
Corporate ID: GEMCT_UMA_ZST

Enhanced Signal Zone

Individual-Liable Offer ... NVP Empl. Discount ... Any Mobile, Anytime (AMA) ... Other Terms

COMICS

CROSSWORD

ACROSS
1. Weighty books
6. Plate
10. ___-friendly
14. Warning
15. Expect and wish
16. Not a single one
17. Rent
18. Auditory
19. ___ meridiem
20. Competition participant
22. Fastened
23. Fifty-two in Roman numerals
24. Uproar
26. Extremity
30. Vice ___
32. Dwarf buffalo
33. Smell
35. Outer or exterior
39. Paraguayan tea
41. Bigheadedness
42. Portion
43. Expand abnormally
44. Craving
46. Otherwise
47. US bird symbol
49. Really or in truth
51. Male hawk
54. ___ green
55. Cain's brother
56. An afternmage of a taste
63. Alone
64. Tidy
65. Unearthly
66. Narrow opening
67. Penny
68. Famous
69. Apiece
70. Irritable
71. Adolescents

DOWN
1. After-bath powder
2. Margarine
3. Average
4. Formerly (archaic)
5. Unbending
6. Hindu loincloth
7. Bit
8. Rotate
9. Browbeat
10. Not fastened together
11. Relating to audible sound
12. Come in
13. Wheezy
21. Fodder holder
25. Purposes
26. Not nights
27. Once again
28. Center
29. Table linen
30. The popular taste at a given time
31. Cupid, to the Greeks
34. Hollow
36. Story
37. Backside
38. Accomplishment
40. Wings
45. Level
48. Peek
50. Floating in water
51. Piece of armor for a thigh
52. Hemorrhagic fever
53. Museum piece
54. Minor
57. Give food to
58. Zingy taste
59. Found in skin lotion
60. Location
61. Adolescent
62. Concludes amherst cinema

Fri Dec 11 - Thu Dec 17
LA DANSE 2:45 6:00 9:15 +11:30am Sat & Sun
THE MESSENGER 2:15 4:30 7:15 9:30 +12:00pm Sat & Sun
AN EDUCATION 2:30 4:45 7:30 9:45 +12:15pm Sun
28 Amity St. Downtown Amherst www.amherstcinema.org (413) 253-2547

PLEASANT STREET THEATER
Fri Dec 11 - Thu Dec 17
BAD LIEUTENANT PORT OF CALL: NEW ORLEANS 5:00 7:30 10:00 +2:30 Sat & Sun
A SERIOUS MAN 4:45 7:15 9:45 +2:15 Sat & Sun
27 Pleasant St. Downtown Northampton www.pleasantstttheater.org (413) 584-5848

Off The Wall Games
Discount role-playing games, Collectible card games (CCGs), Miniature war games and board games, fun for everyone!
Magic drafts every Friday night and Sunday afternoon, only $12 entry with many prizes
Holiday Hours! 11-27 through 12-24 10-10 Sunday-Saturday!
41 Russell St (Village Barn Shops) Rt. 9, Hadley 413-586-5451
MAGIC WARHAMMER GAMES WORKSHOP

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20 - Feb. 18
Yesterday was like the movie "Snow Day," and UMass was the dreaded Snow Plow Man.

pisces Feb. 19 - Mar. 20
Mr. T just got more money for World of Warcraft promotions. Get plastic surgery to become a night-elf mohawk.

aries Mar. 21 - Apr. 19
Crude things happen every day. Look at you, walking around like an R-rated movie.

taurus Apr. 20 - May. 20
Spend less time worrying about your finals and more time worrying about that creepy dude starring at you from the bushes.

gemini May. 21 - Jun. 21
Runes of Magic wouldn't keep UMass from closing school. Why did you decide to hibernate at Whitmore, naked?

cancer Jun. 22 - Jul. 22
Remember this old geek proverb: "Many PS3s equal a super computer for thee; many XBox 360s will only turn on the red to vex thee."

leo Jul. 23 - Aug. 22
PeeWee Herman's comeback is one of the worst puns in the history of punage. Practice puns, NOW!

virgo Aug. 23 - Sept. 22
Need help with your beer goggles? Take a picture of your seducer and search them on Google Goggles!

libra Sept. 23 - Oct. 22
Many things that are tainted are still revered by many. Look at the NBA.

scorpio Oct. 23 - Nov. 21
Just because you secretly write for an adult film blog doesn't mean everyone wants to hear about your holiday movie guide.

sagittarius Nov. 22 - Dec. 21
Laurence Maroney is the perfect example of how to drop the ball when you're on the job. Learn from these mistakes.

capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 19
Appreciate "Good Night, Moon" for the children's classic it is. It also has double the intellectual content of a Michael Bay film.

Hits Now 94.3 FM
The Valley's Hit Music Now in HD on 99.3 HD2
www.hits943.com

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162.

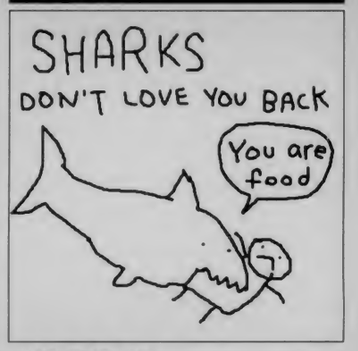
Rent us your ears! $10/hr to participate in a listening experiment. Write to phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu. English must be your first language.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. now leasing, 1 & 2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jan 1. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop by or call 549-0600.

1 Bedroom Apt. available Jan. 1st. Rent $760 on bus route. 5 1/2 miles from campus. Squire Village 665-2203

WE WANT YOUR COMICS!
Put your comics in front of thousands of readers.
Questions? Comments?
E-mail us:



Basic Instructions by Scott Meyer basicinstructions.net
"How to Avoid Sounding Condescending"

Saturday Morning Breakfast Cereal by Zach Weiner smbc-comics.com

Hark! A Vagrant by Kate Beaton harkavagrant.com

Chainsawsuit by Kris Straub chainsawsuit.com

SUDOKU

	4				2
		7		1		4		3
		6						1
	5						6
2						7
8					5	2
			9	5
	7			3			9	5
9					4	1

T Shirts & Sweatshirts in 1-3 Days!
Sunraise printing
586-7133
YOUR 1 COLOR LOGO ON WHITE T-SHIRTS
$4.41 EACH 100 piece minimum SCREEN INCLUDED sunraiseprinting.com Hadley, MA 01035

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 10, 2009 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Minutemen ready for second half

Contests over winter provide challenges

By Jeffrey R. Larsard
Collegian Staff

Early season results can affect a team in more ways than just the standings.

Just take a look at the records down the stretch of the No. 15 Massachusetts hockey team the past two seasons. In the 2008-09 season, the Minutemen entered January with a 9-7-1 record. After playing to a 2-4-2 record in the month of January, UMass continued to slide, going 4-7-0 for the remainder of the regular season and finishing with a 15-18-3 record.

The 2007-09 season was no better, as the Minutemen had a strong start to the season, a 9-3-5 record. But a 0-5-1 January sent UMass in a downward spiral that continued into February (2-6-2), ending the season at 15-18-3.

Over winter break, it will be a priority for UMass to build some momentum during the month of January to carry them through the stretch run of the season. Here is a look at the schedule they will face in between semesters.

Dec. 29 vs. Union

The second to last non-conference game for the Minutemen and the opening round of the UConn Tournament. UMass will take on the No. 20 Dutchmen – the first top 20 ranking for UC in nine years – that has played well early this year. UC (7-3-5, 3-0-3 Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference) has a 3-3 tie with No. 8 Yale and most recently a 2-2 with No. 5 Cornell on its resume.

Dec. 30 vs. UConn/Bentley

Host UConn will square off with Bentley, with the winner advancing to the finals of the UConn Tournament and the other to the consolation game. If UMass comes out on top of Union, they'll face the winner between the two in its final non-conference game. Taking the tournament would give the Minutemen some momentum heading into January and the remainder of its Hockey East Schedule.

Jan. 2 at Boston University

The Terriers don't have the No. 2 ranking they had when UMass beat them 3-2 earlier this season, and few expected them to be in second-to-last place in the Hockey East at this point in the season. But they still can't be overlooked, because they are the defending national champions.

BU has dropped from the rankings, but it has played strong at times – a 5-4 overtime victory at UMass Lowell and a 3-3 tie to New Hampshire. UMass coach Don Cahoon will not let the Minutemen look past this team, especially with it being the middle game of a five game road trip.

Jan. 9 at New Hampshire

The Minutemen split with UNH in the middle of November at home, but the No. 19 Wildcats have become a new team since then. Going 4-0-1 since then has propelled UNH into the national rankings and to the top of the Hockey East standings. The Wildcats have also protected their home ice well this season, going 4-1-2 in Durham with wins over UMass Lowell and BU and ties against Miami (Ohio) and Boston College.

Jan. 10 at Northeastern

This will be the first meeting of the year for these two squads, and the final game of UMass five-game road trip. While the Huskies have a sub-.500 record overall and in Hockey East, they

See SCHEDULE on page 8

Jeff Blackstock/Collegian

The Minutemen celebrate a goal earlier this season, and will look to generate offense over winter break against some new foes and familiar conference opponents. UMass hosts Merrimack on Saturday night.

Even with recent skid, hockey not entering panic mode yet

Nick O'Malley

Despite the warnings signs, it's not quite panic mode yet for the Massachusetts hockey team.

Yes, they've dropped three straight games at the end of their stretch of five straight ranked teams. Sure, the team has had a penchant for fast starts and mediocre second halves in their past two seasons. And, maybe the team is on the rain-slick precipice of an apocalyptic midseason implosion, destined to follow a pattern towards inevitable .500 finishes.

Nah, they're fine.

The Minutemen are still the 15th best team in the country, having gone through a beast of a stretch and have one of the better assembled teams in recent memory. An electric top scoring line (excuse me, the Maroon line) and power play unit, two NHL draft picks on the blue line and some solid depth behind it all has produced some impressive results. That, and Paul Dainton is quickly maturing as a top-tier goalie while Dan Meyers, despite recent struggles, is a damn good goalie in his own right.

UMass coach Don Cahoon has been singing the praises of his roster all season, specifically, the fact that this year's incarnation of the Minutemen features a strong balance of talent, experience and depth, a combination that had the team ranked No. 8 in the country last week.

More importantly, though, Cahoon says his team is putting itself in better situations and staying in almost every game this season until the very end.

Unlike past seasons, where the Minutemen would have a spectacular upset of No. 1 Boston University, but only after laying an egg against an nine-win Merrimack team, UMass seems to be playing well against the tough teams, beating the teams they need to beat and all of the other clichés necessary to be a good team.

Speaking of the Warriors, they come into the Mullins Center this Friday with a .500 record and some solid performances. In fact, Merrimack has matched all of UMass' big conference wins of the season (BU, Boston College, Vermont, New Hampshire), with both teams losing to UMass Lowell.

With this in mind, this Saturday's game against the Warriors will be a solid indicator of what to expect from the second half of the season. Currently, the Minutemen are in a tough spot and really can't afford to enter the break on a four game skid.

Things are looking up, though. This particular team, with the balance and experience it brings to the table, is much better suited to bust out of such a slump. At least Cahoon thinks so.

"I think that, in the past, we would look at it and say 'Jeez, there might be a talent deficiency,'" Cahoon said about his current team's ability to handle this tough stretch. "We have concerns, but I think they're solvable."

Of course, we're not going to find out about the Minutemen's ability to finish out the season strong until they get there. After eight-win starts in the past two seasons, UMass went on to have losing records in the second half both times.

As it stands right now, if there was any team that was going to keep going after winter break, it'd be this one. The team's balance allows it to keep chugging along even when it struggles in certain areas.

The power play's on fire? Great. Now it's cold? Oh, now they can score five-on-five. Three players are injured? That's alright, the team's already showed it can shuffle the lines and still score.

Oh and by the way, the last time the Minutemen had a winning record in the second half? Three years ago, the team's last appearance in the NCAA tournament.

Nick O'Malley is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu.

UM hosts Merrimack in Hockey East clash

By Jay Asser
Collegian Staff

With the familiar "fading down the stretch" talk surrounding the Massachusetts hockey team after three consecutive losses, the Minutemen will look to rebound and squash doubt when they host Merrimack on Saturday night at the Mullins Center.

"You rebound by just getting back to the simple things that allowed you to succeed and spend some time on identifying what problem areas that get in the way," UMass coach Don Cahoon said. "We've got one game this week, and we've got to dedicate ourselves to take care of that one game for 60 minutes. That's how we go back to square one and organize."

In the last two weeks, No. 15 UMass (9-5-0, 5-4-0 Hockey East) had dropped games against then-No. 9 Quinnipiac, then-No. 15 Boston College, and then-No. 8 UMass Lowell. Before the losses, the Minutemen had been undefeated in three previous games against ranked opponents.

The problem for the Minutemen hasn't been their play, but their loss of focus in one period of each game.

"Clearly, each of the last three games we've lost, we've played two pretty good periods," Cahoon said. "The worst of the three periods has been devastating for us in which we were dominated and taken out of our game opportunity."

In a critical game in the standings, UMass will look to build on its two point lead on their Hockey East rival and gain ground on conference-leader New Hampshire, which leads with a total of 16 points.

The Warriors (7-7-0, 4-5-0 HEA), along with UMass, have had their own problems over the past few weeks, winning one of their last five games.

Cahoon, however, has been impressed with Merrimack this season and doesn't read too much into its recent struggles.

"I think they're unquestionably the most improved team in not just our league, but Division I," Cahoon said. "Mark Dennehy, who was an assistant here, has done a great job recruiting better athletes. They skate well and have some of the top young players in the game. They've got really good goaltending, and that gives them the confidence to play with anybody."

The success the Warriors have experienced so far this season has been a drastic change over past years. The seven wins for Merrimack is only two behind the mark set by the team in 2008-09, in which it went 9-21-4 overall.

In the all-time series with the Warriors, the Minutemen lead with a 32-29-5 record, including 10 straight victories at the Mullins Center. In its last 14 wins, UMass has outscored Merrimack, 63-20, dating back to 2003.

Last season, the Warriors claimed the season series, 2-1, with a pair of wins at Lawler Arena. Merrimack won the first two meetings with scores of 3-1 and 3-2 (overtime), but it was the Minutemen who took the last contest, 6-1, with a high offensive attack.

Though the Minutemen seem to be moving this year in a familiar pattern of past seasons, Cahoon insists that this team is more mature and better-equipped to handle pressure down the stretch.

"Everybody out there is waiting for us to fall on our face. I've heard it over and over again, and the kids have heard it over and over again, but I don't think we feel that way at all," Cahoon said. "We think we can play through this and have the maturity to deal with it and cope with it."

Jay Asser can be reached at jasser@student.umass.edu.

Dacko and Co. snap two-game win streak

UMass falls to UVM at Mullins Center Wed.

By Steve Levine
Collegian Staff

A strong freshman performance was wasted on Wednesday night, when the Massachusetts women's basketball team could not find answers against Vermont, falling 57-38.

Freshman center Jasmine Watson had the best game of her collegiate career, recording career highs in points and rebounds with 14 and nine, respectively. She was UMass' only consistent player on the night, hitting 5-of-11 shots from the field while adding one of the Minutewomen's three blocks.

Watson's effort went by the wayside, though, as UMass looked sloppy from the start. The first twenty minutes added up to a 12 point deficit for the Minutewomen, who shot poorly from the floor. Out of 18 shots, the Minutewomen converted four (22.2 percent), while missing all five three-point attempts. The Catamounts, who turned the ball over three times in the first half, scored eight points off of UMass' 13 turnovers.

The few bright spots in the first came from the free throw line and on the glass. UMass continued its effective shooting at the charity stripe, converting on seven of eight attempts. They also out-rebounded Vermont, 19-11. These UMass' successes were not enough to overcome its blunders, though, and went to the locker room down, 27-15.

The first seconds of the second half delivered a glimpse of hope for the Minutewomen, when sophomore forward Nicole Jones completed a three-point play to cut the deficit to nine. UMass quickly fell back into its first half form, however, and would fail to take a lead throughout the remainder of the game.

"I'm really disappointed," UMass coach Marnie Dacko said. "We were coming off a weekend with us really executing well. Our defense was good, but our offense wasn't executing, as we were mishandling the ball. Those are things we've been working on, so that disappoints me."

UMass added 10 turnovers in the second half, which led to 10 points for Vermont, with some help coming via the Minutewomen's three shot clock violations.

"Our inability to be aware of the time on the clock is inexcusable," Dacko said. "We knew they were going to be physical with us. They disrupted what we like to do, and we couldn't stay with it."

Much of Vermont's successes came from their starting lineup, which boasted four seniors, while UMass used a much younger team which relied on bench points to keep them in the game.

"They have a seasoned team with four senior starters," Dacko said. "They've played together for four years. That being said, we were able to get the ball inside when we struggled on the perimeter. The post [players] had to step up, but I thought Jasmine did a good job."

Watson shot close to 50 percent from the field, far better than any of her teammates, while UMass finished the game at 25 percent shooting.

"It comes down to us not being able to put the ball in the bucket," Dacko said. "We were unable to set good screens and free up players for good shots. They were also being physical with us and the officials let us play. If the officials are going to let you play, then we have to step up and play that game."

UMass returns to action on Friday, when it hosts Providence at the Mullins Center at 6 p.m.

Steve Levine can be reached at slevine@student.umass.edu.

Zullo, Watson contributing off bench for Minutewomen

By Mike Mastone
Collegian Staff

Despite the team's immense struggles on the offensive end, the bench of the Massachusetts women's basketball team continued to shine last night against Vermont, scoring 22 of the team's 38 points.

Freshman Jasmine Watson came off the bench to lead the team in scoring with a career-high 14 points on 5-of-11 shooting, while sinking all four of her free-throws and grabbing four of her nine rebounds on the offensive glass.

Redshirt junior Megan Zullo finished third on the team with six points and went without a 3-pointer for the first time this season.

With her starters heavily struggling in the first half, UMass coach Marnie Dacko decided to give her bench extra run after halftime.

Leading-scorer Kristina Daniella missed all seven of her field-goal attempts, while senior Dianiema Hill picked up two quick fouls early on.

The UMass bench accounted for 10 of the team's 15 points and all four of its field goals in the first half. Watson got off to a hot start, pacing the team with six points on 2-of-4 shooting through the first 20 minutes.

"They're giving us quality minutes," Dacko said of her bench players. "I just don't think some of our starters were really with it [tonight]. In the past we've shared some time with kids. So again, the more time they get in the long haul, by the time we hit mid-season, we'll be a better team."

Last night's game marks the third consecutive match up in which the UMass bench provided at least one double-digit scorer, with the bench contributed 103 of the team's 189 total points over that span.

The recent increase in production coincides with the improved play of Zullo, the team's top 3-point shooter. She is the team's leading bench scorer with an average of 8.4 points per game, and has scored in double-figures four times this season.

Watson's consistent improvements over the past few weeks have also had an immense impact on the team's bench production. The center could not consistently find her touch in her first four games, with her 14 point effort against St. John's marking the only time she scored more than four points over that span.

Aside from Zullo and Watson, Dacko has other players that are capable of stepping up and providing a boost when needed.

Although their minutes are scarce, freshman Dee Montgomery and sophomore Emily Teuscher have proven that they possess the ability to provide another spark off the bench when needed.

Against Vermont, Montgomery was the only player aside form Zullo and Watson to contribute off the UMass bench. With 12:17 remaining in the first half, she dived through the Cattamount defense to score on an off-balance layup.

In 12 minutes against Northeastern, Montgomery posted a career-high 10 points on 3-of-7 shooting from the field, including 3-of-5 from 3-point range. She is shooting a consistent 47-percent from the field, knocking down seven field goals on 15 attempts.

Maxwell-Sparks/Collegian

Guard Meghan Zullo has been a lift off the bench for UMass.

Teuscher's career-best effort came three days after Montgomery's. Against Brown, the guard made all three of her attempts from beyond the arc for nine points.

Mike Mastone can be reached at mmastone@student.umass.edu.

the daily collegian

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM DECEMBER 11, 2009

inside this issue:

Home cooking

SEE PAGE 13

2009's top albums

SEE PAGE 7

UM gains law school

SEE PAGE 2

A UMass student's battle with a rare disease

See page 3

Fighting on two fronts

Michelle Williams/Collegian

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN

CXVIX
ISSUE 64

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief William McGuinness
Managing Editor S P Sullivan
Business Manager Daniel Jette
Production Manager Michael Sarkes
Night Supervisor Kirsten Swenson
Advertising Manager Michael Tortorici
Advertising Production Max Detmer
Arts & Living Editor Shayna Murphy
Comics Editor Annie Keithline
Editorial Editor Nick O'Malley
News Editor Nick Bush
Sports Editor Jeffrey R. Larnard
Web Editor Brian Wood
Photo Editor Matthew Harrison
IT Manager Victor Jacek
Asst. Business Manager Matt Zolnieitz
Assistant Advertising Nicole Jacinto
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Distribution Manager Norman Provost
Classified Manager Katelyn Tamilio
Asst. Arts & Living Justin Gagnon
Asst. Arts & Living Elyse Horowitz
Asst. Arts & Living Cal Scannell
Assistant Comics Andrew Witts
Assistant Editorial Michael Phillis
Assistant Editorial Matthew Robare
Assistant News Samuel Butterfield
Assistant News Alyssa Creamer
Assistant News Jenn Heshion
Assistant Sports David Brinch
Assistant Sports Jay Asser
Assistant Sports Adam Miller
Assistant Photo Maxwell Sparr
Assistant Multimedia Sara Cody
Assistant Multimedia Chris Shores

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE. BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1907. THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914, AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
ON STAFF TODAY

NIGHT EDITOR
JEFF LARNARD
COPY EDITOR
HANNAH MCGOLDRICK
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
MICHELLE ABBASCIANO

UM votes on law school

By Tim Jones and Sam Butterfield
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees voted 14-4 Thursday to approve a proposal to establish a law program at the University of Massachusetts Dartmouth. The vote is the last in a series of Trustee committee votes which have cleared the way for UMass Dartmouth to absorb the Southern New England School of Law, creating Massachusetts' first public law school.

Now the only obstacle standing in the way of the creation of a public law school in the Commonwealth, one of just six states without a public law program, is the approval of the State Board of Higher Education, which will vote on the law school plan next February.

"This is a major step forward for public higher education in Massachusetts," said UMass President Jack M. Wilson in a Thursday release. "The creation of a public law program will afford the citizens of the Commonwealth the same opportunity that exists in 44 other states," he furthered. "The University of Massachusetts exists to serve the citizens of the Commonwealth, and this action opens the doors of opportunity to students seeking an affordable, high-quality legal education."

Chairman of the University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees Robert J. Manning said that the Board made a solid decision for the future of public higher education in Massachusetts.

"The University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees has examined this proposal very thoroughly," he said. "The academic and financial components of this proposal have undergone rigorous review." Manning went on, "after much study, it is clear that we can create a top-tier public law school without placing financial demands on the state or the University."

The Board of Trustees Committee on Administration had previously completed a review of the University's financial proposal of the plan to establish the public law school at UMass Dartmouth, and gave it a stamp of approval, as well.

The proposal, authored by UMass Dartmouth Chancellor Jean MacCormack, states that the financial aspects will not draw from any state or University funds. Previously, the law school plan gained an 11-4 vote from the Committee of Student and Academic Affairs.

UMass Dartmouth Chancellor Jean MacCormack said in the proposal that the law program would help to bridge a hole in the state's higher education system.

It would "fill a gap in the state's public higher education curriculum," said MacCormack, "be on course to gain American Bar Association provisional accreditation by Fall 2013 [and] generate $673,576 for the Commonwealth in tuition revenue next year and more than $1 million annually within five years."

MacCormack also stated that the school would "produce a University cumulative cash balance rising from $1.8 million in fiscal year 2011 to $10.2 million in fiscal year 2018."

MacCormack's proposal also calls for increasing enrollment at the law school from 278 students in the 2010-2011 academic year to 559 students by 2017-2018. With this enrollment increase, the proposal states that the program will generate $81 million in student revenue between fiscal year 2010-2011 and fiscal year 2017-2018. Those funds will assist the school in winning ABA accreditation, a crucial step in bolstering the school's profile.

After the vote, MacCormack told the Board that she appreciated its support and that it had helped broaden the University's horizons.

"The University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees has come down on the side of students and in favor of opportunity," she said. "This vote advances our historic mission and demonstrates that the University's future will be determined by the public interest rather than by private institutions," she said at the meeting.

The Southern New England School of Law, a private law school in Dartmouth located about three miles from UMass Dartmouth, has offered more than its share of support to the proposal, making available the school itself and all of its assets, an estimated donation of about $23 million in total.

The assets included are the law school building and abutting real estate, recently appraised at $8.2 million, $11.5 million in library resources, $2.5 million in furnishings, technology and related infrastructure and $1 million in cash, making this donation the largest in the history of UMass Dartmouth.

According to the proposal, UMass Dartmouth will "create a public alternative, built on the major assets that will be donated by SNESL to the University once UMass Dartmouth is successful in gaining authority to offer the Juris Doctor (law) degree."

"After the transfer of assets," the proposal continues, "SNESL will no longer offer a law program."

UMass Spokesman Robert Connolly said the proposal would be entirely self-sufficient and would involve rehiring of faculty.

"The current plan calls for tuition to be around $23,000 and for the school to be self-sufficient" in terms of funding. As for staffing and faculty, Connolly said that "we would invite the current faculty to come and teach, but they would have to go through the application process again."

The school will actually bring money to the Commonwealth through this process. Tuition for a state school goes to the general fund of the Commonwealth, and the proposal's authors estimate that between $500,000 and $1 million will be returned to the Massachusetts general fund this year.

In 2005, The Trustees of the University of Massachusetts voted to purchase SNESL and operate it as a public law school, but the Massachusetts Board of Higher Education voted against the proposition.

UMass Spokesman John Hoey said the reason for the proposal was mutual objectives. "Our missions have been very similar, there is a great synergy of mission," he said.

Hoey also said that a public law school would provide more opportunities to those who cannot afford a private school.

"You have to live or be near Boston and be willing to spend about $50,000 a year, and that places you into tremendous debt and narrows your options," he said of the state's current law offerings.

There are currently 44 states with public law schools, with education-rich Massachusetts absent. Presently there are nine law schools in the state, all of which are private with SNESL set to fall from that number if the proposal passes the Board of Higher Education. If the proposal passes through all reviews and gains final approval, students will be able to enroll as soon as September 2010.

This proposal for the public law school is not to be confused with the Massachusetts School of Law, a private institution located in Andover.

Governor Deval Patrick and Senator John Kerry have also given the plan their support.

Tim Jones can be reached at timothyjjones@umass.edu. Sam Butterfield can be reached sbutterfield@dailycollegian.com.

CINEMARK
For advance tickets & showtimes visit
cinemark.com
or call 1-800-FANDANGO + Exp Code 1118#
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
FIRST MATINEE SHOWTIME (7 DAYS A WEEK) $5.00
ADULT MATINEE BEFORE 6PM $6.25 • STUDENT $7.00 (WITH ID)

A CHRISTMAS CAROL - REAL D 3D
($2.75 SURCHARGE) [PG]
150 415 645 915

◆ INVICTUS [PG13] 100 400 700 1000
◆ THE PRINCESS AND THE FROG [G]
120 405 650 920
◆ ARMORED [PG13] 155 435 735 1005
◆ BROTHERS [R] Ⓓ 110 420 705 1010
◆ EVERYBODY'S FINE [PG13]
115 410 715 945
NINJA ASSASSIN [R] Ⓓ 145 450 730 1020
OLD DOGS [PG] 240 455 710 925
PLANET 51 [PG] 140 430
THE BLIND SIDE [PG13]
125 425 720 1015
THE FANTASTIC MR. FOX [PG]
225 440 655 910
THE TWILIGHT SAGA: NEW MOON [PG13]
105 400 700 800 955
◆ NO PASSES-NO CLASSIC SUPERSAVERS

COLLEGIAN FILE PHOTO

On Thursday the University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees voted 14-4 to turn the Southern New England School of Law into the first UMass law school.

UM student in fight of her life

By Michelle Williams
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts student Hannah Coler is currently fighting diffuse scleroderma, an autoimmune disease, as well as her insurance company, which is refusing to pay for her potentially life-saving treatment.

In November, 2007, Coler went to the doctor because her hands and feet would lose color in the cold weather. She was told she could have Raynaud's disease, a disorder that restricts blood flow to the extremities such as fingers, toes, nose, and ears. Later that year she returned to the doctor with hardening skin on her fingers and arms. After switching doctors in January, 2009, her doctor ordered a blood test.

The results of Coler's blood test were positive for autoantibodies, which, combined with the thickening of her skin caused Coler's doctor to recommend she visit a specialist. The Coler's drove out to see Dr. Lee Shapiro, a rheumatologist in Albany, NY, who confirmed the diagnosis.

Hannah said the diagnosis was not initially alarming, as she really did not understand the ramifications of the disease. "When my doctor told me that I had scleroderma it didn't really affect me because I didn't really understand what that meant," she said. "When I went to see Dr. Shapiro in Albany and he explained what having this disease meant it really hit me," she explained.

Due to her disease, Coler experiences chronic fatigue and joint pain, especially in her knees, and has difficulty standing up from seated positions, in addition to experiencing pain walking up stairs. Due to the hardening of her hands and arms, Coler can have difficulty writing at times. Because the disease has started to affect her lungs, Hannah is trying to avoid catching any viral diseases, such as the H1N1 this flu season, as the virus would affect her worse than most.

There are two treatments for diffuse scleroderma; patients can either take highly concentrated doses of the chemotherapy drug Cytoxan or participate in the Scleroderma: Cyclophosphamide or Transplantation, otherwise known as SCOT, trial. Hannah's father, Andrew Coler said that the extent of Hannah's condition mandates that she join the SCOT trial.

"Because the progression of her scleroderma has been so rapid, there is only one option, the SCOT trial," he said. "That is the only treatment that has been proven and known to be effective," he emphasized.

Though there are side effects to the treatment, the family firmly believes that this is the best option despite the risk.

The Coler's insurance, UniCare, however, does not see the SCOT trial as the best option. Despite recommendations from Dr. Shapiro, Dr. Karen Ballen of Massachusetts General Hospital and Dr. Robert Simms of the Boston University School of Medicine, appeals for coverage have been denied three times. In the three letters Hannah has received from UniCare, the SCOT trial is called an "Experimental or Investigational Procedure," and deemed "inadequate or lacking in evidence as to its effectiveness."

Rather, UniCare is offering to pay for the chemotherapy drug, a medical option that the family isn't sure will be effective against Hannah's rapidly progressing fibrosis. If she partook in chemotherapy, it would not be easy to transition into the SCOT trial, the Colers said.

The insurance company's reasoning angers Hannah's family, who have been in contact with others suffering from diffuse scleroderma and found the treatment to be the best option. The Colers have been in close contact with David Becker, an attorney from Bradenton, Fla., who underwent the SCOT treatment three years ago.

Andrew Coler said that Becker has become a prominent figure in the fight for insurance coverage, writing letters to different peoples' insurance companies. Often times, Becker's petitions bring results, even full coverage, yet for Hannah it brought only another rejection letter.

Less than a year ago Hannah would have been covered by her insurance, but her family switched their coverage so that they could see doctors outside their primary care physician more easily. Switching from Heath New England, an HMO insurance company that would have covered the SCOT trial, is one of Andrew Coler's biggest regrets.

"After we had to pay a large fee to see the specialist in Albany, I thought it was a smart decision to switch to a plan that allows Hannah to see doctors outside of the network," he said, "I was wrong."

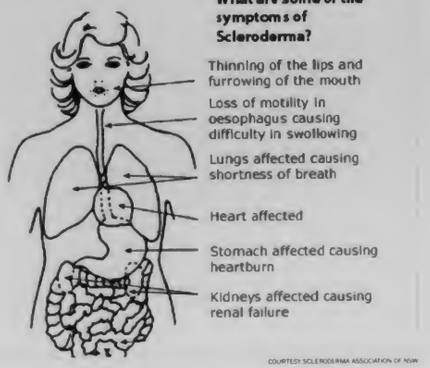
Though she was set to graduate this spring as Biology major on the pre-med track, Hannah has only been able to take six credits this fall due to her fatigue and constant scheduled doctors appointments. She hopes to graduate in the spring of 2011 and go on to become a doctor.

Hannah said the hardest part of her ordeal has been changes in her social life.

"I would say partly friends, and also dealing with my parents," she said. "I can deal with it okay, I don't feel that sick, I just feel uncomfortable at times, but my parents are having a hard time coping with this," she explained.

Andrew Coler voiced his fears. "I'm terrified, I fear for my daughter's life," he said. "It has really put a toll on us," he related.

Because of her experiences with this disease, Hannah has lost friends, and, partly, the social experience of college. She said that the experience has in effect separated out those who care about her from those who do not.



"When you go through a situation like this, you realize who your real friends are, and that was one of the really tough parts of dealing with the disease, a lot of my friends, well I guess I wouldn't really consider them friends anymore, weren't there for me," she said. "There were a couple of people that were really nice, and I learned that those are my true friends," she elaborated.

Despite the cost, Andrew Coler explained that the family needs to go through with the trial before her condition deteriorates further, and she may no longer be eligible by the time she

See DISEASE on page 4

What is Scleroderma?

It is an acquired, rare, non-contagious disease that occurs world wide in sporadic cases, with a great variety of clinical presentations.

COURTESY SCLERODERMA ASSOCIATION OF NSW

The Office of Jewish Affairs and the Center for Student Development extend our holiday greetings to Jewish students, faculty and staff

Happy Hanukkah!

The Hebrew word chanukah means "dedication." This eight-day "Festival of Lights" commemorates the victory of the Maccabees, who fought against the religious persecution of the Jews, and their rededication of the Temple in Jerusalem.

It is customary to eat fried foods such as potato pancakes (latkes) or doughnuts, to remind us of the miracle of the oil which burned for eight days.

Hanukkah begins Friday evening, December 11th and ends at sunset on Saturday, December 19th

UMASS AMHERST
For more information about Jewish holidays, and the University's policy regarding class absence for religious observance, visit umass.edu/jewish or call 413.545.9642

Student faces fight on two fronts

MICHELLE WILLIAMS/COLLEGIAN

Hannah Coler and her father Andrew are seen here sifting through insurance paperwork. Color is battling both her diffuse scleroderma and the health insurance companies refusing to cover her treatment.

DISEASE from page 3

could participate. The family plans to begin the trial either this month or in January at the latest.

To pay for the $280,000 trial, he explained the family may have to make some major sacrifices.

"We may need to sell the house, take out loans," he said. "We'll pretty much do whatever it takes to allow Hannah to get the treatment she needs," Coler stated.

Andrew has founded the "Help Hannah Coler Medical Fund" at Bank of America. People have contributed monetary donations ranging from $14 to over a $1000. Currently, the fund has raised over $5,000, which the family plans to use towards Hannah's treatment, or if ultimately unneeded, to donate to other patients or research for diffuse scleroderma, the cause of which is unknown.

After hearing of Hannah's condition through local news outlets, community members have reached out to help in more ways than just financially. An attorney in Northampton offered free legal services to the family, as they pursue litigation against their insurance company UniCare.

Hannah said friends from high school who she probably wouldn't have talked to otherwise have contacted her to see how she is.

"We are really grateful to everyone that has reached out to us, because every little bit adds up and with their help we're going to beat this."

Michelle Williams can be reached at mnwilliams@student.umass.edu.

Looking for a Job?

The Daily Collegian

is seeking hard-working, motivated undergrads to fill our

ADVERTISING REPRESENTATIVE POSITIONS.

Excellent business experience! •Gain valuable sales experience
Get credits for work •Build your resume

TO APPLY:
Contact Mike Tortorici
@ 413 545-3500
thecollegian@gmail.com

SOM students strongly encouraged to apply.

Float on...

MATTHEW HARRISON/COLLEGIAN

Senior Mechanical Engineering students Matt Jarret and Adam Rhodes carry Zoe Crowley in their River Portaging Gurney, a project designed to help the disabled kayak and canoe.

editorial&opinion

"FREE SPEECH IS THE WHOLE THING, THE WHOLE BALL GAME. FREE SPEECH IS LIFE ITSELF" - SIR SALMAN RUSHDIE

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Energy drinks: What comes with the buzz?

Energy drinks like Red Bull, Monster and Rock Star are a visible part of many college student diets. They are so popular that, in 2005, sales reached almost $2 billion. College students use energy drinks as study aids, for general energy, for sport performance, to mix with alcohol and to treat hangovers.

They may boost alertness, performance and focus in the short-term, but these benefits can be accompanied by undesired effects on overall health. In this letter, we consider the evidence in a balanced way to draw conclusions about the effectiveness and safety of popular energy drinks.

Most people have heard the Red Bull slogan "it gives you wings" or Monster's call to "release the beast." What does the advertising really mean? The drinks are promoted to improve performance, reaction time, and concentration. Many college students use energy drinks to help get through their many daily tasks.

Students often don't get sufficient sleep and when they wake up exhausted, they rely on energy drinks. When they need to stay focused while working deep into the night, they rely on energy drinks. To maintain high energy during a night of fun, they rely on energy drinks. What do these drinks contain that makes them effective for these purposes? After considering the published literature, it is clear that the effects are mainly due to large quantities of caffeine and sugar.

Caffeine is a stimulant that can improve mental performance, focus and mood for several hours. However, frequent use of caffeine can lead to caffeine dependence. Dependence is a major concern with energy drinks because many contain two to three times the caffeine that is present in a large cup of coffee.

Diet and sleep patterns can be altered when people regularly consume energy drinks. The drinks may mask a lack of sleep, tricking the person into staying awake and getting less sleep, further perpetuating the need for energy drinks to get through the day. Energy drinks affect behavior, especially when consumed with alcohol.

A 2009 paper from the U.S. Food and Drug Administration (FDA) showed that this mixing energy drinks and alcohol increases the risk for accidents and injuries. Mixing alcohol and energy drinks can deceive the student into believing they are less drunk than they really are, increasing chances the person will believe it is OK to drive. In a 2008 study from the Journal of American College Health, frequent consumption of Red Bull and other energy drinks were linked to risky behavior, an effect that has been referred to as "toxic jock syndrome." These damaging social behaviors need to be taken into account when considering the risks versus rewards of using energy drinks.

In addition to other uses, college athletes use energy drinks to boost energy for practice or competition. Although caffeine and sugar can both contribute to athletic performance, there are clear downsides. Caffeine increases loss of water from the body and can lead to dehydration, especially in hot conditions.

The large amounts of sugar in most of the drinks (the equivalent of 12 tablespoons of sugar in a single can of Monster) contain hundreds of calories that can make it difficult to maintain optimal body weight for performance. This nutritional concern — hundreds of "empty calories" that contribute almost nothing to overall good health — may be even more of a concern for non-athletes who don't practice several hours a day to burn off those extra calories. Although there are varieties of energy drinks that are low in sugar or sugar-free, the few studies available suggest these drinks do not have benefits for athletic performance.

Consuming more caffeine than the body can handle can cause a range of problems related to caffeine toxicity. Common symptoms of caffeine toxicity are anxiousness, nervousness, difficulty sleeping and irregular heart beat. Sound familiar? In rare cases, excess caffeine consumption can lead to serious injury and even death.

Frequent reliance on energy drinks regularly can also result in caffeine withdrawal when you stop using them. Withdrawal symptoms include minor to serious headaches, irritability, depression, fatigue and difficulty concentrating. To avoid withdrawal symptoms, people will consume energy drinks even when the reason for using them is gone (for example, during breaks between semesters).

As with most things, energy drinks are rarely harmful if used in moderation. But there are other choices that could be more beneficial. Caffeine in small-moderate quantities in the form of coffee is generally assumed to be safe according to most of the evidence. For athletes, water or diluted sports drinks help with hydration and can provide extra carbohydrate energy for hard exercise.

Overall, energy drinks might boost mood and increase cognitive performance but they also contribute to caffeine dependence, a "crash" that occurs hours later, and, when mixed with alcohol, potential for poor decisions and dangerous consequences.

In the long-term, consuming hundreds of extra calories per day makes it more difficult to manage body weight. Most students have not carefully considered the balance between the rewards and the risks of frequently consuming energy drinks. We hope this letter helps students make a more informed decision.

This column was a collaboration of 238 UMass undergraduate students in Professor Barry Braun's Fall 2009 Kinesiology 110 Human Performance and Nutrition. Due to space constraints, the 238 student e-mails cannot be listed.

Gambling not the magic solution to money problems

Evan Haddad

The growing interest in "how much?" is quickly absolving the remnants of moral doubt linked to Mohegan Sun's building plans for Palmer, Mass. At least that's what Town Council Vice President Paul Burns banks on.

Burns recently addressed fellow municipal officials at the Franklin County Technical School in Turner Falls, Mass., bluntly stating that his endorsement of a casino depends upon the amount of revenue Palmer will receive from Mohegan Sun.

His statement followed an embarrassing — if not revealing — miscommunication between the Town Council and Casino Impact Study Committee, in which five of nine councilors voted in favor of the casino before even hearing the committee's final report, which was submitted in mid-April of 2009.

Palmer's Town Council assembled the citizen's committee over two years ago to analyze the possible corollaries of a casino coming to town. Members probed into a myriad of important issues, ranging from traffic control to crime trends. But that sure didn't stop the Town Council from chucking the report directly into the recycle bin.

One member of the group reported his frustration to the Springfield Republican.

"For the Town Council to assign a citizen's group two years ago and to ask that they prepare a report for the Town Council on possible impacts of a casino, only to have that same committee watch as five Town Council members declare their stances on the subject before holding a proper question-and-answer session is nothing short of a slap in the face," he told Republican reporters.

Slaps aside, the affront shows the rising level of anxiousness in getting the casino — or something — going for Palmer. The state economy has hit many communities of Western Massachusetts hard, including Palmer; unemployment rates waver around 8.3 percent in Franklin County and a whopping 12.2 percent in Springfield.

Burns and supporting Franklin County aldermen hope that the seductive figures of new jobs and services will elicit stronger support from state legislators and offset persistent local criticism.

Mohegan Sun promises Palmer 1,000 construction jobs and 3,000 permanent jobs to come from building the $1 billion casino resort. In addition, Mohegan also boasts that it will supply its establishment with locally bought goods. The company's website states that the casino spends nearly $250 million alone on Connecticut vendors each year.

> Casino's aren't the magic formula for a depressed state economy. They don't create remarkable opportunities and they cater to an isolated pocket of the job market.

Big wigs of Mohegan Sun have touted these mouthwatering claims to Palmer and its neighbors for nearly 20 years — and it's finally working.

Despite any formal legislation, the multi-billion dollar casino has already elbowed its way into Palmer. Just last year, Mohegan's transformed an empty and dilapidated storefront facing Palmer's main junction into a satellite office, consecrating it with that notorious cursive banner, "Mohegan Sun." Though repeatedly denied authority to build, they hold a 50-year lease on land off route 32 in Palmer, with an option to renew it for an another 49 years.

They're not going anywhere soon.

Now that Palmer's Town Council is on board, Mohegan's have nearly 100 years for state legislators to yield, either to financial strain or the hankering for a crap-shoot.

That isn't to say the same old community concerns don't swathe the casino debate. They do; but, economic pressure on Beacon Hill is slowly nudging this once fantastic bill closer towards Gov. Deval Patrick's desk. And, as Paul Burns and company seem to think, for good reason.

No doubt many locals feel that legislators ought to patronize the penniless purse of western Mass. Whether they ought to gamble on the silver lined promises of Mohegan Sun, is another question.

Short term payoffs from the casino could possibly bolster the feebly-inclined job growths of Palmer and surrounding counties. But make no mistake. Casino's aren't the magic formula for a depressed state economy. They don't create remarkable opportunities and they cater to an isolated pocket of the job market.

The glossy promise of jobs, however, polishes the otherwise grim exterior of casino towns. But because factory and mill jobs have disappeared from Palmer, even the staunchest opponents now appear sighingly acquiescent to Mohegan Sun's plan.

Believe it or not, even Paul Burns was once an opponent of legal gambling. "We're concerned about this massive development...it will change the community," he once told reporters.

Unfortunately, that concern doesn't translate into revenue or jobs. Burns, like many other long time residents of Palmer, now simply wants to get his community out of the red and into the black.

Can you really blame him?

Evan Haddad is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at ehaddad@student.umass.edu.

LETTERS TO SANTA

Dear Santa,

The University of Massachusetts has outgrown its socks and underwear. For a school with over 20,000 students, 40 Learning Commons computers plus another 40 scattered throughout the campus, are not enough.

Santa, I have to wait 40 minutes to an hour to use a computer in the library! If UMass coughed up enough ellipticals and treadmills in the new Rec Center so there would never be a line, why can't they upgrade the library? There should be enough computers for every UMass student, whether they want to Google LOLcats or do work on OWL.

Shera Demchak

Dear Santa,

It's safe to say that I have been a great student all semester. I have only missed one class, I pass in all my assignments on time and I have been getting pretty good grades as well! I have not really been going out a lot this year, and have even taken care of some friends after they have had "a few too many."

With that in mind, I would like to give you my one Christmas wish. This Christmas, more than anything, I would like you to take care of my UMass parking fines. Sure, I might have deserved a few of them, but I can assure you that I did nothing so wrong to have accumulated $215.00 in parking tickets. I can understand why I received those two tickets for parking in a "Reserved Lot," but I can't fathom why my one sole car out of about 20 would receive a ticket on move out day. And what about that time when I got the "No Valid UMass Park Permit" ticket, when my pass was clearly plastered on my vehicle? It's not my fault I have tinted windows.

Please take into consideration that I am in fact a student, who has a multitude of items to purchase and pay for throughout the year. Between schoolbooks, rent, bills, food and everything else, paying my parking fines does not exactly reach the top of my priority list. Anything you can do would be greatly appreciated.

Love,
Jessica Kemp

PS — If you happen to be feeling extremely generous, a commuter pass for lot 34 would be fabulous!

Dear Santa,

I know I don't usually ask for much for Christmas, but this year, there are a few things I really need, and they revolve around maybe the most important thing in my life — Boston sports.

Let's start with what's first on my list: the New England Patriots swagger of the first half of this decade. I know we already had an abundance of this when we were winning championships, but sorry to say we've lost it. If you could give us this back, we might actually start playing smash mouth defense and be a better second half team.

Second on my list, but just as important, are players the Red Sox can acquire this offseason that don't add to the clones of J.D. Drew's already on the team. If you could get us some hitters whose main focus isn't to take 20 pitches an at-bat, that would really help. Maybe some young players who don't suffer from broken hips and are enjoyable to watch would be great.

As far as the other two Boston sports, I can't really complain about the Celtics, and the Bruins... well, they're the Bruins.

The last thing I could ask for is if you could find it in your heart to give us a playoff system in college football. actually forget it, there's no point in asking anymore. I haven't got that in the last 10 Christmases.

Jay Asser

Dear Santa,

All I want for Christmas this year is a Sega Saturn. Discontinued in 1999, the Saturn was a complete flop due to the simultaneous release of its superior counterpart the Playstation. I could ask for a PS3, or a Nintendo Wii, but just to test you, Santa Claus, I'm asking for a Sega Saturn. You will need your elves to research the archives of inferior and failed technology, because you can't even get one of these bad boys on Ebay! Never mind about the unwieldy and inconvenient controllers. I'll leave those for the Easter Bunny.

Of all the ancient failures of game systems we know today, I think the Sega Saturn will be the most challenging. Anyone with knowledge of Craigslist or Ebay can find a Gamecube or a Dreamcast. But you, Santa, have quite a challenge on your hands. This may be short notice, seeing as you only have a couple weeks to come up with one. But if your plump, jolly self can make reindeer fly and shuffle up and down chimneys, I have complete confidence that you can make this happen. Extra milk and cookies if you do!

Sincerely,
Brendan Murphy

Dear Santa,

I know I shouldn't be writing to you, cause I technically don't believe in you. But if you do exist as I imagine (high atop an ice fortress commanding a legion of robot yetis), please send my friend Patrick a beautiful woman via your quantum future-sled. She can be made out of gold, or diamonds, so long as she is super cuddly and loves him like a drowned puppy at the bottom of a waterfall.

Love,
Isaac

Dear Santa,

For Christmas this year, I don't want anything for myself. This year, I would like pants for all the Southwest girls. It's getting cold here at UMass and I don't think their spandex leggings will provide them enough heat for the remainder of the winter. Granted, their Ugg boots will keep their calves warm and their overpriced North Face jackets are providing a decent amount of warmth to their torsos, but their thighs need protection from that New England cold.

They may pretend that they do not want them, because wearing spandex leggings and a sweatshirt is more fashionable to them than warm jeans, but please Santa, provide them with jeans. It's not just for them; it's for the entire campus.

Give the Mrs. my best,
Ashley Lesperance

To Kris Kringle:

All I want for Christmas is a dining commons. It's nice that everyone is so jazzed up about Berkshire, Franklin and the rest, but what about those of us who commute to campus? Don't we deserve a dining commons too? The people who live on campus can go to the DCs on the way between classes and their dorms, but those of us who live off-campus have to trek to the nether regions to partake of all the wonderful things that have been reported in The Collegian these last few weeks.

I am tired of the Blue Wall and the Whitmore Café, so please Santa, please, give me a dining commons somewhere in the middle of campus. In fact, I hear that the Alumni Association is having financial troubles, so maybe you could rent some space for a DC from them.

Happy Chanukah,
Ben Rudnick

Dear Santa,

For Christmas, I want the elimination of Christmas. It's a secularization of a commercialization of a Christianization of a pagan holiday that worships the cold, darkness and death of the winter solstice. That's (count them) three levels of idolatry with the additional insult that people now act as though non-Christians should celebrate it too, despite the fact that some of us openly tell the world that we practice religions with only one God.

If you can't eliminate Christmas, please shorten it to only December 25. I remember a time when we spent November preparing for Thanksgiving without a Christmas carol in the air, even on store radios. I want that back.

Shalom,
Eli Gottlieb

Dear Santa,

For Christmas this year, all I want is chicken fingers to be available all the time at every Dining Commons on Campus. Lets be honest, chicken fingers are awesome. Everyone knows that chicken fingers are awesome. If they can provide chicken breasts every day, they can give us chicken fingers everyday. Also, I would like to ask for chicken finger tournaments every week at each DC.

As you can see Santa, this is not a selfish request, but rather, a benevolent one.

Sincerely yours,
Michael Sarkes

Dear Santa,

For Christmas, I would like the University of Massachusetts to stop spraying soy sauce all over the campus in anticipation of snow storms. I love soy sauce, just not all over my sweet Timberland boots. It's really annoying having to peel them off of the sidewalk with every step I take. Plus, the smell makes me nauseous as I walk from class to class and I don't think maintenance would enjoy cleaning up my throw up. So for me and the maintenance department, will you please stop this absurd spraying of soy sauce.

Jeffrey R. Larnard

Dear Santa (not the Tim Allen one, the Miracle on 34th Street one),

For [non-descript winter holiday], I would like some plain bagels. Not an everything bagel, not that weird berry-raisin-nut bagel and especially not that funky-looking blue bagel that no one eats – ever. I'm looking for plain, boring, bagels.

Seriously, this is a trend that has gone too far. And while we're at it, why is there as much rye bread as there is white bread. Really? This is college. I can pretty much guarantee no one has ever gone to make a sandwich and go "What the hell? Where's the rye, brah?"

Plain bagels. White bread. If you're feeling adventurous, get some wheat bread. My dad doesn't go to this school, you don't need five loafs of rye bread out there. And no one knows what's in that other bagel.

Bagelly yours,
Nick O'Malley

arts&living

2009's top albums

COURTESY FACEBOOK.COM

The controversial, strange and always intriguing Lady Gaga hit the mainstream scene with authority this past year with her album "The Fame Monster." Gaga has performed in a handful of award shows, and her recent hit "Bad Romance" reiterates her legitimacy as a star.

By Kate MacDonald
Collegian Staff

As 2009 is coming to an end rapidly, we should look back at the better parts of the past 12 months in music. It was a year of huge headline-grabbing concerts and uber-popular singles. It was not really a good year as far as albums go. Many released this past year were lack luster at best.

It was quite the year of ups and downs. We saw the degradation of our society via Miley Cyrus and Jonas Brothers albums, as well as the reemergence of the popularity following the sudden death of a great performer.

2009's main problem? Almost all of the great singles Americans blared on their stereos this summer were from albums released in 2008 by artists such as Beyonce, Kings of Leon, Taylor Swift and The Ting Tings.

Maybe 2009's selection wasn't all bad. Here are some of the better releases of 2009, in no particular order.

"No Line On The Horizon" - U2

Five years after their last studio album, Bono and the boys came back onto the scene with fervor this spring with "No Line On The Horizon." While their voices have aged, their songwriting and playing abilities are just as good on this new CD as they were 20 years ago.

"So Far Gone" - Drake

As Lil Wayne's slated prodigy, Toronto native and former child actor Drake lit up the airwaves with his single "Best I Ever Had" this past summer. He manages not to come off as repetitive and has decent lyrics. As one of the most highly anticipated albums of the year, no best album list would be complete without it.

"The Boy Who Knew Too Much" - Mika

Many thought that Brit Mika couldn't get any better than his 2007 debut. They were wrong. The happy go lucky songs are evident hits, including first single "We Are Golden." Emotional slow song "I See You" trumps them all though.

"The Fame Monster" - Lady Gaga

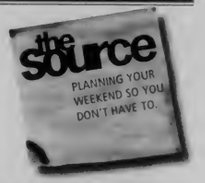
The ridiculously popular singer is an obvious choice for any "best of" list. That being said, if this album didn't include a rerelease of her first CD, these that wouldn't have been the case. "Bad Romance" is trendy now, but the rest aren't that great. The exception is a collaboration with Beyonce, "Telephone," which actually showcases Gaga's decent voice, not just her eccentricities.

"Play On" - Carrie Underwood

Released more recently, Underwood's album doesn't bring much new to the table. This, however, is not a bad thing. She's proven she has the pipes and ability to stay relevant for years after her American Idol win. Fret not; single "Cowboy Casanova" does not define the album. Better songs like "Undo It" and "Unapologize" bring real oomph to the CD.

"Lady Antebellum" - Lady Antebellum

Today's country is no longer the country of the 20th Century: singing about broken tractors, runaway dogs and cheating wives all in the same day. Lady Antebellum's self-titled EP brings emotion and good times to the table, and not one flaw can be found in the voices of this threesome. If anything, it's more contemporary than country, and most definitely worth a listen.



"Veckatimest" - Grizzly Bear

One of the most underappreciated bands of our time, Grizzly Bear displays great songwriting talent and natural voices in their newest album. With the inclusion of one of their best songs on the "New Moon" soundtrack, hopefully 2010 will bring the recognition these guys deserve.

"Waking Up" - One Republic

Most seem to be ready to write One Republic as a quasi pop-R&B group based on their summer singles. Anyone who listens

See ALBUMS on page 8

TODD BARRY
WHERE: IRON HORSE MUSIC HALL
WHEN: FRIDAY, DEC. 11, 2009
DOORS: 7 P.M.
PRICE: A: $15.00 - D: $18.00

BARRY IS A STAND-UP COMEDIAN KNOWN FOR HIS ROLES AS MICKEY ROURKE'S MEAN BOSS FROM THE ACADEMY AWARD NOMINATED FILM "THE WRESTLER," THE FRUSTRATING BONGO PLAYER IN "FLIGHT OF THE CONCORDS" AND A HANDFUL OF OTHER TV SPOTS, INCLUDING TWO "COMEDY CENTRAL PRESENTS" SPECIALS.

COURTESY IRON HORSE ENTERTAINMENT

EILEEN JEWEL BAND
WHERE: IRON HORSE MUSIC HALL
WHEN: SATURDAY, DEC. 12, 2009
DOORS: 7 P.M.
PRICE: A: $15 - D: $18

THE EILEEN JEWEL BAND HAVE A SOUND THAT THE IRON HORSE CLAIMS IS "POWERFUL AND MELANCHOLY WITH A LITTLE BIT OF 50'S ROCK N'ROLL PEPPERED IN."

Year of Woody ends well with army flick

By Shayna Murphy
Collegian Staff

According to the Chinese zodiac calendar – something you may have glimpsed at once or twice while waiting for an order of beef fried rice to come out of the kitchen at a local Chinese restaurant - each year is governed by an animal whose attributes come to typify the year which he has been assigned.

So it is that 2009 may rightly be declared the year of the Woody. Woody Harrelson, that is. The chiseled visage of this mighty fine actor, who first rose to fame on the hit television series "Cheers" as kindly bartender Woody Boyd, has been splayed across the silver screen this year with alarming alacrity. In October, Harrelson conjured up anarchy as Twinkie-hunting Tallahassee in the zom-com "Zombieland." November saw him predicting a forthcoming disaster (no, not the film) in the aptly titled doom flick, "2012."

To the lay frequenter of concession stands and movie theaters, it would appear that Harrelson has slipped his finger into several different cinematic pies. Now as the winter cold sets its clammy grip upon the land, Harrelson tries his hand at a confection more substantial, yet no less delectable in the big screen scheme of things. This time around, he's in the big pie known as the Oscar-baiter.

Woody Harrelson co-stars as a casualty notification officer for the United States Army in Oren Moverman's "The Messenger." As a veteran soldier, Harrelson gufflaws and, upon the audience's first introduction, strikes an image that to most should seem very familiar: he comes off like a godamned raving lunatic.

Callow and brash, Harrelson's Captain Tony Stone is given over to fits of rage and bouts of self-delusion. His "baptism" by fire – observed during service during Operation Desert Storm – is a trump card he attempts to play against the younger, though palpably more experienced and decorated staff sergeant Will Montgomery (Ben Foster), whom he is paired with early in the film's narrative.

Foster, whom audiences may recall was stuck only a few years ago to bit roles in sub-par vampire films like "30 Days of Night," shines in the role of a young soldier racked with regret for his past deeds. Foster carefully feels his way through the enigmatic yet unpredictable Montgomery, lending him a perennial air of melancholy. His eyes have seen too much, so it is fitting that throughout "The Messenger," his eyes remain a constant focal point.

With three months remaining in his tour, Montgomery is forced to grapple with what

See MESSENGER on page 10

Complete a course in two weeks over winter break!

Save time and money by taking a two week course at Mount Wachusett Community College over intersession and transferring it back to your home institution. It's easily done. Check with your registrar's office first to ensure that the course meets their requirements. Once you complete the course, request a transcript from the MWCC Enrollment Center to transfer the credits back. That's it!

CRN#	SUBJ	NUM	COURSE TITLE	CREDITS	DAYS	BEGIN	END
Gardner Campus				444 Green Street, Gardner, MA 01440
21968	ART	105	Introduction to Drawing	3	MTWHF	9:45 AM	1:30 PM
22053	CIS	127	Computer Technologies	3	MTWRF	9:00 AM	12:45 PM
22260	MAT	126	Topics Mathematics	3	MTWRF	9:00 AM	12:45 PM
22474	NUT	101	Intro To Nutrition	3	MTWRF	9:00 AM	12:45 PM
22309	THE	103	Intro to Theatre	3	MTWRF	9:00 AM	12:45 PM
22310	THE	113	Speech	3	MTWRF	9:00 AM	12:45 PM
22289	BUS	112	Customer Relations	3	MTWRF	4:30 PM	8:15 PM
Leominster Campus				100 Erdman Way, Leominster, MA 01453
22291	BUS	113	Business Etiquette & Protocol	3	MTWRF	9:00 AM	12:45 PM
22228	CIS	127	Computer Technologies	3	MTWRF	4:30 PM	8:15 PM
22227	CIS	127	Computer Technologies	3	MTWRF	9:00 AM	12:45 PM
22245	PSY	105	Intro To Psychology	3	MTWRF	9:00 AM	12:45 PM
22248	SOC	103	Intro Sociology	3	MTWRF	4:30 PM	8:15 PM
22246	SOC	103	Intro Sociology	3	MTWRF	9:00 AM	12:45 PM
22251	THE	113	Speech	3	MTWRF	4:30 PM	8:15 PM
22250	THE	113	Speech	3	MTWRF	9:00 AM	12:45 PM
Devens Campus				One Jackson Place, 27 Jackson Road, Devens MA 01434
22204	PSY	110	Human Growth & Development	3	MTWRF	5:00 PM	8:45 PM
22205	THE	113	Speech	3	MTWRF	5:00 PM	8:45 PM

Most courses run January 4-15! A three credit course usually costs from $535 to $565.

Check out MWCC classes offered this spring (including affordable online courses you can take from anywhere)!

Go to www.mwcc.edu/spring

Mount Wachusett Community College

Enrollment Center
(978) 630-9110
Email admissions@mwcc.mass.edu

www.mwcc.edu
AA/EO Institution

Jay-Z has one of the best albums of the year with "Blueprint 3." The chart topper gave the Jigga Man the most number one records of all time surpassing Elvis.

Top CDs of the year

ALBUMS from page 7

to their second album will realize their full rock/pop potential. The album is held together by the lyrical stylings of lead vocalist Ryan Tedder, who wrote every song on the record. "Everybody Loves Me" and "Secrets" are the standout tracks on the album.

"The Blueprint 3" - Jay-Z

Any UMass student who went to or even heard about Jay-Z's Mullins Center appearance can't question his place on this list. Virtually every song on this CD is good. This album is wildly popular, and his tour is selling out. Even though he's been around for a while, Jay-Z is quite literally unstoppable.

"This Is It" - Michael Jackson

In a list of 2009 albums, this one is a given. The late MJ's release features an unremarkable new tune and the rerelease of many old, legendary songs. One of the biggest sellers of 2009, thanks in part to the singer's untimely demise, the status of "This Is It" can't be denied.

Though 2009 wasn't as great music wise as 2008, albums released this year have been accepted pretty well. Some honorable mentions have to go to the new CDs from Muse, Pitbull, and Weezer.

Competition is tough, mostly because we live in an age where no one buys albums anymore; they get their tunes offline, and not always by legal means. This probably won't change any time soon, but at least listeners can look forward to downloading some great new songs from various artists in 2010.

Kate MacDonald can be reached at katlynn@student.umass.edu.

Haymarket Café offers new menu

By Lauren Rockoff
Collegian Correspondent

It's a chilly winter morning and you're on Main St. in Northampton. You pass Faces on the right, so you know it must be close. You almost walk right by, but then realize your mistake. Haymarket Café's little entryway nearly eluded you.

You come in through a small door that is easy to miss – the one that a friend and I nearly skipped over altogether on our way to review this Northampton staple. But the small entryway is actually one of the great appeals of this interesting place. In the café's own wordless language, it seems to be saying it has never had to beg people to come in. And come they do, as is clearly evidenced by how packed it is inside.

As you continue to walk through the galley-shaped restaurant, there are plenty of cozy corners and snug nooks to sit and sip coffee, drown in a milkshake or swan dive into an oatmeal chocolate peanut butter cup. At the back is the café part of the restaurant and dessert case. Two stairways, one in the front and one in the back, will take you down to the restaurant portion for full meals – breakfast, lunch and dinner.

As you head downstairs, the old-world feel continues. It's like you've taken a trip, but not just to NoHo. The stairwell at the front is lined with paintings in a mish-mash of golden, gilded and intricate frames you'd think were straight out of a medieval castle.

The lower level is dimly lit with decorative metal cut-outs and satiny fringed lamps. Their glow dances upon the large cream floor tiles, exposed wood and mirrored and mural-covered walls. Painted tables decorated with the same reds and oranges of the walls line the right side and black square ones sit unobtrusively scattered about the rest of the space. A warm hearth-like glow is set upon each one by a single glass votive candle in the center.

Orders are taken at a counter on the left hidden behind a luxurious cream-colored floor-length curtain held back by a tassel. Though the din of the place makes it hard to hear your number being called, it's somehow subdued to a comforting level that speaks of familiarity rather than noise. It's crowded, but in such a way that it builds your excitement about the meal ahead.

The breakfast menu ends at 11:30 a.m. I guess I could deal with that, except for the fact that when you pick up the menu, the breakfast options are on the front page and are therefore the first thing seen. As college students about to eat our first meal of the day on Saturday at 11:32 a.m., seeing a breakfast menu that includes bourbon french toast served with crème fraiche, sourdough toast served with fruit compote and a fresh fruit bowl served with homemade granola, the immediate effect can only be that of an overwhelming desire for these scrumptious-sounding breakfast foods.

Still, although we had arrived too late for breakfast, the lunch menu proved itself to us without a doubt. My friend and I elected to choose from among the sandwich and soup options, though an equally appetizing selection of salads and rice dishes make up the lunch menu, which is served until 4:30 p.m. I went with the baked portobello mushroom sandwich with gorgonzola, mesclun greens and tomato, and she chose the fresh mozzarella and tomato sandwich with greens and basil pesto.

We both also tried the soup of the day, a very tasty cream of tomato soup. Our sandwiches were accompanied by wavy tortilla chips that were perfect for dipping in the soup. Neither of us were impressed with the generous pieces of bread that housed our sandwich ingredients. Though soft and appealing to behold, I didn't particularly care for their spongy texture or lack of discernible crunch.

In the end however, the bread was only a tiny piece of the total Haymarket Café experience. In fact, an eatery must be good when you and a friend both fail to notice the absence of meat on its menu until someone else points it out days later.

Additionally, the Haymarket Café recently introduced a separate dinner menu, served from 5:30 p.m. until 9:30 p.m. With dishes under $10, like the house-made tagliatelle served with spinach, roasted red peppers and fresh thyme in lemon, caper and cream sauce, I'm thinking it'd be worth it to make another trip back before the semester's end.

Lauren Rockoff can be reached at lrockoff@student.umass.edu

Northampton's Haymarket Café offers a menu with a lot of unique and tasty options. The restaurant just recently introduced a new dinner menu with dishes under $10.

Write for Arts&Living!
Interested? Let us know...
arts@dailycollegian.com

Peter Pan connects me to my family where can we take you this holiday season?
connecting People & Places
Why make your parents drive?
• Flexible Daily Schedules
• Affordable Rates
• Reserved Seating Available
• Did we mention FREE Wi-Fi?
Reserved SEATING
Get Guaranteed RESERVED SEATS to and from BOSTON for Only $5 more
UMASS Amherst ↔ Boston
Daily Service as low as $24 each way
Buy Tickets Online and Save peterpanbus.com

Mixed message

MESSENGER from page 8

may be his hardest assignment yet. With Stone, he is charged with notifying the families of soldiers who are dead, wounded, or missing in action of their loved one's fate. All the while, his personal life remains D.O.A. although his former lover Kelly (Jena Malone) meets him early in the film to greet him with a patriotic welcome, she's since moved on to a man who seems the stark opposite of the taut and brooding Montgomery. Her new man is rotund and older. He also sports a shaggy beard. It's a loss Montgomery straight up can't stand, and not even the attentions of a grieving widow (Samantha Morton) whom he meets on the job can alleviate his heartache.

"The Messenger" follows on the heels of Kathryn Bigelow's sleeper summer drama, "The Hurt Locker." While "Locker" seems primed to collect numerous laurels this awards season, "The Messenger," with its smaller locus of attention, is of the same merit. Moverman, who co-wrote the rambling and spastic Bob Dylan biopic, "I'm Not There," seems to have learned from his past lapses in judgment.

"The Messenger" steers clear of polemics and keeps its focus oriented in a sentimental, more intimate prism than Bigelow's "Hurt Locker," which was fixated on one man's unanswered call for death. How do people cope in times of war with the loss of a loved one?

Implicitly, the film suggests that one of the best ways to depict the current conflict in the Middle East is to turn the lens inward and to focus the narrative on the conflict raging within the souls of the soldiers who are serving.

Moverman and co-screenwriter Alessandro Camon deftly rise to the occasion, and although "The Messenger" transpires largely in the civilian realm of shopping malls and quiet, sleepy suburbia, the setting is deceiving. Harrelson and Foster adorn their finest garb, but they still seem caught in a war zone somewhere. Who needs to be rescued more, the grieving next of kin or the boys themselves, is a question "The Messenger" struggles to answer.

Shayna Murphy can be reached at skmurphy@dailycollegian.com.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
COLLEGIAN

Need to spread the word?

Reach more than 18,000 readers every day!

IT'S CHEAPER THAN YOU THINK!

On-Campus & Local Business Ads for $10
per column inch

R.S.O. Ads for $6.70
per column inch

CONTACT PAMELA:
thecollegian@gmail.com
413-545-3500
or stop by our office in the Campus Center basement

Facebook blocking loyal users for being too social

By Meredith Rodriguez
McClatchy Newspapers

John VanPelt would seem to be the ideal Facebooker.

He never rejects a friend request. He posts pithy comments on friends' walls - constantly.

As a middle-school teacher with students as Facebook friends, the Lee's Summit, Mo., man swears he never cusses online.

"I honestly thought I was being nice to people," he said.

But within weeks after VanPelt developed a slight addiction to the social networking site, the ubiquitous "Facebook Team" informed him he was blocked from posting or sending messages for an indeterminate amount of time.

Despite sending repeated e-mail appeals to Facebook, all he received was a generic response. "Facebook has limits in place to prevent behavior that others may find annoying or abusive."

Ouch.

"That was really offensive to me. I might be an annoyance?" VanPelt said. "What business tells you that?"

Answer: Facebook. But why?

Facebook did not respond to repeated inquiries, but a spokesman was quoted last year as saying that security issues were the reason.

Outside experts sum it up in one word: Spam.

Amid the war to block those cyber-tyrants who feed off Facebook's growing popularity, the Facebook gods block innocents who act like spammers.

Because spammers send many messages, post on many walls and do it quickly, the irony is that some Facebook users are punished for being too social on a social networking site.

BLOCKED AND BRUISED

VanPelt is not the only Facebook junkie who has become jaded.

In the networking site's former help section, the thread about disabled accounts was one of the longest - until, it appears, Facebook redesigned its help center and took it down.

The complaining spilled into customer support sites such as getsatisfaction.com, where hundreds of people have replied to threads such as, "facebook account disabled" and "Disabled from Facebook with no warning or explanations and now no one to assist me!"

A Google search brings up pages of complaints.

About 200 people from around the world, many also blocked, protested by - what else? - forming a Facebook group.

Pastors, stay-at-home moms and international students displayed their cyber-solidarity by joining the "Rescue Mr. VanPelt from Blocked Island" group after they were abruptly disconnected from their online society. Their isolation lasted days or weeks.

Those affected say the worst part is Facebook's opaqueness. Despite following instructions to appeal, many never learn what they did wrong.

Maggie Giamalvo, after having her own technical difficulties, started a group, too. It's called, "Facebook. Connecting you with 200 million people, except when you need account help."

BEHIND THE BLOCKING

The real problem people should focus on, some experts say, is not the blocking. It's the reason for it.

Facebook exasperates some of its users as it tries to protect them, said Nancy Baym, communications professor at the University of Kansas.

"They're trying to avert spam," Baym said. "They assume it's not really a person using it, but a machine."

Facebook membership soared from 120 million in November 2008 to more than 300 million as of September, largely because it opened its site to people outside the United States and those not associated with a university, Baym said.

Like ants to a Sunday picnic, spammers have followed.

Hackers send obscure links and messages through friends' accounts, spreading viruses and advertisements as well as stealing information and, in some cases, money.

Facebook stepped into the courtroom to end some of its greatest spamming attacks, according to the official Facebook blog. Facebook was awarded $711 million in October and $873 million in November 2008 against scammers who infested the site with phony and sleazy posts and messages.

"People think of Facebook as being a pretty safe space, and that serves them really well," Baym said. "Facebook has a lot to lose if they are perceived as a site with spam circulating."

Last year, Facebook's director of corporate communications, Brandee Barker, told The Washington Post that security incidents had prompted blocking.

"Accounts may have been deactivated not necessarily because of their activity but because of the precautions we've taken," Barker said. "Because of recent security incidents, we've been overly cautious."

AVOIDING BANISHMENT

As long as spam persists and blocking remains one of Facebook's weapons, there's only one thing for social-networking consumers to do: Avoid acting like spam.

So says Facebook blogger Nick O'Neill on allfacebook.com.

Facebook has set up an automated system that calculates the average message use for each member, according to O'Neill. Anyone who falls out of his or her statistical range could be blocked.

"Don't think you'll be able to blast out messages or wall posts to 300 people when you are friends with 50," O'Neill said.

In its online help center, Facebook addresses these systems that flag potentially abusive accounts. It warns that trying to use Facebook when you're blocked will only extend the block.

Facebook's Terms of Service note that Facebook has the right to disable anyone's account. Like a restaurant, it can refuse service to anyone, Baym said.

Still, users clamor for a better system to distinguish between the Facebook spam and the Facebook fanatic. After all, their eyes draw advertisers, VanPelt said.

"Even though users don't actually have rights in their spaces," Baym said, "as they become increasingly important to conduct people's lives - their careers as well as their social life - these sites have a greater obligation to verify that their suspicions are correct."

UMass to compete in Puerto Rico

MAXWELL SPANN/COLLEGIAN

UMass is looking for its competition in Puerto Rico to prepare it for the Atlantic 10 Tournament Feb. 17-20. The Minutemen have three wins on the season.

By Jeffrey Engmann
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts swimming and diving team should get some time in the sun as well as some competition during winter break. UMass will head to San Juan, Puerto Rico to compete in the Loyala Invitational on Jan. 9. The actual meet is little significance to UMass , and solely for preparation.

"It does bring them together as we focus in on the final part of the season. As soon as we get back from the finish, it is a sprint to the finish," UMass coach Russ Yarworth said.

Yarworth hopes the break will allow UMass to better prepare for the Atlantic 10 Championships which will be held from Feb. 16-20. Both teams have three dual meets remaining this season, two of which are on the road.

The weekend before classes resume, both teams will compete in the Rhode Island Invitational. Just a week after, they will compete in two dual meets in one weekend.

UMass will be on the road for both as it faces off against Boston College, and Fordham on Jan. 22, and Jan. 24 respectively. Both teams hold a record of 3-2 in dual meets, and in their last races of 2009, sustained losses to Yale and Boston University, respectively. Nevertheless, each side is enthused about the second half of the season.

The teams focused on the Terrier Invitational as a measuring stick, and both performed well placing third overall. Yarworth was very pleased with their performance, as he felt the team swam hard.

The break gives UMass an opportunity to rest for about a week and a half. However, it remains important for both teams to stay in shape so that they can hit the ground running once they get back.

"We're at the phase of the season when we kind of go back to basics," Yarworth said. "We've gotten through the first part of the season and have done really well but now it's time to roll things back, work on mechanics, leg strength and aerobic conditioning."

The trip will also be extremely special for Yarworth. It gives him the opportunity to visit old alumni he helped recruit as members of the UMass water polo team. The team was very successful, and Yarworth along with many of the students that he recruited in Puerto Rico were a big part of that. He says it is important that each time he makes this trip he seeks out former students, to see how they are. Ultimately, however, it is an opportunity for both teams to experience a different culture and beautiful weather.

"It's a chance to get a way from winter," Yarworth said. "Coaching outside in the sunshine is not too bad at all."

Jeffey Engmann can be reached at jengmann@umass.edu

GET CASH FOR BOOKS

UMass Amherst University of Massachusetts
University Store and Textbook Annex
Amherst Campus Center • 413-545-2619
www.umass.bkstr.com
Powered by efollett.com

Find us on Facebook
Search:Follett UMASS Amherst

Buyback Hours

Campus Center Concourse
Monday – Friday
December 7 – 11
9:00 a.m. – 4:00 p.m.

Monday – Thursday
December 14 – 17
9:00 a.m. – 5:00 p.m.

Friday, December 18
9:00 a.m. – 2:00 p.m.

Textbook Annex
Monday – Friday
December 7 – 11
9:00 a.m. – 4:00 p.m.

Monday – Friday
December 14 – 18
9:00 a.m. – 5:00 p.m.

Saturday, December 19
9:00 a.m. – 2:00 p.m.

Southwest/Hampden Lobby
Monday – Thursday
December 14 – 17
10:00 a.m. – 5:00 p.m.

Friday, December 18
10:00 a.m. – 1:00 p.m.

We want books with this sticker!
HALF BACK GUARANTEE

Freshmen getting used to new roles

By Neil Carroll
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's basketball team plays host to Providence on Friday night, and the three talented freshmen brought to Amherst from last year's recruiting class are coming along right on schedule.

Last year, UMass coach Marnie Dacko signed Jasmine Watson, Shakia Robinson and Dee Montgomery as recruits, and now is making sure that the players are comfortable off of the court in a new setting.

"I'm happy with our freshman class," Dacko said. "We talk about their grades all the time, and we talk about them being effective learners in the classroom. I just want them to become an integral part of the campus atmosphere."

Watson has been a key on the defensive end of the floor in the early season, but is now coming into form on offense. She led the team in scoring against Vermont on Wednesday night with 14 points and was a constant threat down low.

"On offense I have to worry about the speed," Watson said of her improvements. "The coaches tell me to go 'one speed' or 'snail speed' in order to take my time and concentrate on finishing at the basket."

As a senior at South Bend Washington High School in Indiana, Watson averaged 11.5 points and 8.7 rebounds and her team was ranked second in the nation in the ESPN RISE FAB 50 National Poll. Listed at 6-foot-3, Watson is second on the team in blocks.

"I'm used to playing girls who are my size or bigger," Watson said. "I've just been getting used to timing blocks more, because I think that is what helps me stay out of foul trouble."

On offense, Watson is starting to fulfill her promise. The forward struggled early on in the season with turnovers in the low post, but recently adjusted her game with the help of the UMass coaching staff.

The other freshman that helps the Minutewomen in the post is Shakia Robinson. She adds another type of defense to the freshman class.

Robinson is typically a post defender, but on Wednesday night against UVM, she was used as a perimeter defender, and helped shut down the Catamounts leading scorer Courtnay Pilypaitis. The guard averaged 19.1 points per game coming into the matchup, but with steady defense from Robinson and Kristina Danella, UMass limited her to just six points.

Robinson is one of the most vocal players on the team and her yells on defense can often be heard echoing through the Mullins Center during practice and games.

"If the court is silent then no one knows where everyone is," Robinson said. "So the more we talk and communicate, the better we're going to be defensively."

Montgomery has also contributed for the Minutewomen, but is the only guard out of the trio.

MAXWELL SHARP/COLLEGIAN

Freshman center Jasmine Watson forces a shot over an opponent during a home game this year. The Minutewomen (5-5) take on Providence tonight as part of a double-header.

In UMass' 73-64 loss to Northeastern on Dec. 2, Montgomery had 13 points in 10 minutes of play. Her speed and quickness are her key attributes, and she works well in the pick and roll.

"The best aspect of my game would be being able to be a slasher, and being able to penetrate to the gaps," Montgomery said.

A native of Tennessee, Montgomery struggled with consistency so far. She sat out a lot of the preseason due to a concussion she suffered in the first day of practice at UMass. Montgomery's ball-handling skills are among the best on the team, but she continues to improve her game.

"I've really been trying to play catch up with everybody because I've been out about six to eight weeks now," Montgomery said of her injury. "I'm really having to just learn on the fly and listen to the older girls as much as I can because they try to help me out."

Neil Carroll can be reached at ncarroll@student.umass.edu.

MCT CAMPUS

Villanova's Isaiah Armwood blocks a layup by Saint Joseph's Darrin Govens.

'Nova holds off St. Joe's

By Joe Juliano
The Philadelphia Inquirer

PHILADELPHIA, Penn. — It did not appear to matter to St. Joseph's on Wednesday night that Villanova was the third-ranked team in the nation. This was a Big Five game, a battle between two old and bitter rivals, and there was no script.

The Hawks threw a monumental scare into the Wildcats before a packed house at the Palestra, but Villanova, with the help of 18-of-18 shooting from the free-throw line in the final seven minutes, hung on for a 97-89 victory.

The Wildcats (9-0, 3-0 Big Five) won for the 21st time in their last 22 City Series games. They can finish off the Big Five title Sunday when they play Temple at the Liacouras Center.

Villanova coach Jay Wright remembered two seasons ago, when the Hawks handed his team a 77-55 pounding at the Palestra for its only loss in Big Five competition since December 2004. And he had to sweat out last night as well.

"I know I say this every time," Wright said, "but these games, you can never predict what's going to happen. You've got to come in here and tough it out. This was a classic Big Five atmosphere. St. Joe's has those incredibly passionate fans and the building is different when they're all in here.

"Their team played great, but I'm proud of our guys. It was a gutty Big Five win."

One of the more gutty Wildcats was sophomore Taylor King, a transfer from Duke who was playing in the Palestra for the first time. He scored 20 points and knocked down four three-point baskets, including a big trey with 1 minute, 29 seconds to play.

"My teammates did a good job helping me out, staying positive and keeping a good attitude," said King, who led the Wildcats with nine rebounds.

The Wildcats sank their final 29 free throws in the game, finishing 30 of 31 in the half and 35 of 40 for the night. Scottie Reynolds made 12 of 14 and led 'Nova with 22 points.

"That's the kind of free-throw-shooting team I expect us to be," Wright said.

The Hawks (3-5, 0-1) lost their fifth straight game, but they made things awfully interesting down the stretch.

Villanova held an 11-point lead with 6:53 to play and appeared ready to go up by 13 as King drove alone to the hoop on a breakaway, but he missed a dunk and the Hawks proceeded to go on an 8-2 run to get back into the game.

Three-point baskets by Carl Jones and Charoy Bentley enabled St. Joe's to narrow the deficit to 75-70 with 4:30 remaining. Jones later knocked down three free throws to make it a four-point game, 84-80, with two minutes left.

King's three-pointer got the margin back to seven. After Jones turned the ball over, the Wildcats' Corey Fisher sank two free throws and the lead eventually got back to 10.

"I was pleased with our response," St. Joe's coach Phil Martelli said. "To be honest, we crumbled against Purdue and we crumbled against Cornell. Tonight it was different. It really never was uncomfortable (for the Wildcats), but at least (the deficit) didn't go from nine to 17, and then it would be really uphill."

Antonio Pena chipped in with 15 points for 'Nova. Idris Hilliard led the Hawks with a career-high 22, while Darrin Govens added 19 and Jones 16. Villanova held a 42-31 edge on the boards.

The Wildcats led by only 41-38 at the half and 47-45 about 3 minutes into the second half before Reynolds' three free throws touched off a 10-2 run that gave them their largest lead to that point, 57-47, with 13:50 left to play.

Villanova later boosted its margin to 12, 71-59, on a layup by Dominic Cheek with 7:46 remaining. About a minute later, the Wildcats had King alone for a basket that would have given them a 13-point edge, but King missed the dunk, and St. Joe's began its rally.

Minutemen host Grambling State

By Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

The schedule over winter break could be pretty frustrating for the Massachusetts men's basketball team based on its schedule and how it's done against other quality opponents.

However, UMass coach Derek Kellogg believes that tonight's game against Grambling State could be a good test to see if playing a competitive schedule has done anything to the Minutemen's confidence. At the very least, he knows that matchups against top-40 teams are what will make fans more interested in watching his team.

"When you talk about schedules and tough scheduling, I think that will translate into people wanting to come watch a team that's playing pretty much everyone," Kellogg said.

The most recent quality opponent to play UMass (4-5) was Seton Hall on Dec. 7. After being down 44-19 at the half, the Minutemen turned around in the second half with 49 points.

However, the effort was not enough to overcome a combined 43 points by Herb Pope and Jeremy Hazell in an 86-68 loss to the Pirates. Seton Hall was one of four non-conference teams in the top 40 to play UMass this year.

Most of the top-tier opponents that played or are scheduled to play the Minutemen do so at neutral sites or on their home turf. But when it comes to non-conference opponents coming to the Mullins Center, Cornell was the only team to even receive a vote in the Associated Press Top 25 poll.

The Tigers (1-4) will be a similar opponent to what UMass is now accustomed to on its home court.

GSU's only win game against Paul Quinn College in a 75-61 victory. Since then, it has failed to pull any closer than 10 points to its last three opponents.

JEFF BERNSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

Sampson Carter (22) goes up to block a shot during a home game this year. After tonight's game against Grambling State, UMass will take a week off before facing Memphis at the TD Garden in Boston, Mass.

The meeting between the two teams will be the first ever and the first time a team from Louisiana played in Amherst since 1992.

The Tigers' recent struggles should give Minutemen's younger players plenty of opportunities to showcase their talent considering how little attention they received during practice on Thursday.

"We haven't really started talking about [Grambling St.] much, so I really don't know too much about them," guard Ricky Harris said.

The Tigers have struggled offensively, averaging 58.8 points per game while giving up 74.8 points per game.

Their leading scorer is point guard Ariece Perkins (13.2 points per game), who is one of three players to average in double-figures.

Kellogg hopes to see an improvement with his team's effort during games and in practice now that the non-conference schedule is coming to a close. One of his biggest challenges has been getting the newer players to understand how hard they have to play at the Division I level.

"When you tell them to sprint, I don't even know if they know what a sprint is at this level, so I'm going back to the minute details of 'this is how we do things,' and they've responded pretty well," Kellogg said.

Some of the reserves who don't have many minutes will get their opportunities tonight with Harris, Freddie Riley and Javorn Farrell out with various injuries. Since all three players are guards, junior Gary Correia will likely play much of the game at point guard.

Following the meeting with GSU, UMass will have a week of rest before it plays Kellogg's former team, Memphis, at the TD Garden in Boston on Dec. 19.

Adam Miller can be reached at amillera@dailycollegian.com

JEFF BERNSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

Anthony Gurley (17.4 points per game) shoots during a game at the Mullins Center.

UM fatigued by schedule

By David Brinch
Collegian Staff

After playing three games in one week, the Massachusetts men's basketball team is feeling the effects of back-to-back games on the road, including four of its past five away from the Mullins Center.

Freshman guard Freddie Riley will not play against Grambling State on Friday because of minor knee surgery Wednesday that will keep him out 2-4 weeks. He is averaging 9.6 points in 16.2 minutes for the Minutemen, and is the third leading scorer for UMass behind senior guard Ricky Harris and redshirt junior Anthony Gurley.

Along with Riley, Harris is suffering from an injury, when he rolled his ankle during Thursday's practice after stepping on a teammate's ankle during a drill.

"I don't know exactly what his status is, but I'm sure he will play, but I don't know what percentage he will be at," UMass coach Derek Kellogg said.

Harris was named the Atlantic 10 Co-Player of the Week, and is third in the conference averaging 17.7 points per game. He had 19 points, six assists and three rebounds in both victories over Quinnipiac and Holy Cross.

With Riley out and Harris not at 100 percent, sophomore guard David Gibbs and junior guard Gary Correia will likely see more minutes against the Tigers.

Gibbs started the first five games at point guard and last three on the wing, as Harris has been bringing the ball up for the Minutemen, while Correia is providing a spark off the bench for UMass.

Javorn Farrell pulled his groin in Wednesday's practice, but will most likely play against Grambling St., but according to Kellogg, he still isn't completely healed. Farrell played in all nine games off the bench, averaging four points and 2.7 rebounds per game in 11.1 minutes, and has been one of the key contributors for the Minutemen on the defensive side of the ball.

Winning at Mullins

The Minutemen have won their past three games at the Mullins Center, and will go for their fourth against the Tigers.

After the tough loss on the road against Seton Hall, Kellogg feels that it is important to win games at home in order to build confidence for his young team.

"I think it's great," Kellogg said. "The one thing in college basketball is that the major programs have a winning percentage of at least 70 percent at home, and I'm trying to get that home-court advantage. Our guys have played well at home and felt more comfortable, and we've had some pretty good support, and we're hoping to continue to get more students involved and to get more people here to support us."

Four of the teams the Minutemen are scheduled against on the road are in the top 40.

Shot Selection Says it All

In their first nine contests, the Minutemen's fate relied on shooting the ball effectively and getting the ball where it needed to be. In its four victories, UMass is shooting 49.8 percent from the floor overall and 40.7 percent from 3-point range.

"We watch the games and break down tape and pull all the shots out," Kellogg said. "I've tried to really zero in on practice and let them know that's a good shot, not a good shot, and at some point it becomes their own. They take ownership of what a good shot is for them, and for each player, it may be different."

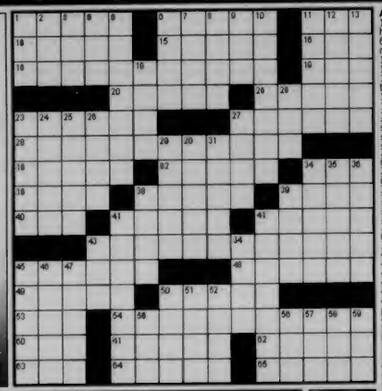
In its five loses, the Minutemen have shot 34.8 percent from the field and 30.4 percent from beyond the arc.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu.

comics

CROSSWORD

UMASS AMHERST



New Schedule for Winter Session

Earn credits during break!

Online classes begin: December 21, 2009

On campus classes begin: January 4, 2010

View Classes and Register now on SPIRE or

ACROSS
1. Any agreeable harmonious sounds
6. Drink served with marshmallows
11. Petrol
14. Health
15. Express a thought
16. Tear
17. Translator
19. Bother
20. Shrewd
21. Proposal
23. Consecutive
27. Spreads sleeping sickness
28. The act of sending a message
32. Stones
33. Wooden pin
34. Male sheep
37. Lyric poems
38. Melancholy music
39. Indian music
40. Apiece
41. Fliers in V's
42. Birds of peace
43. Falsify
45. Renter
48. Things that happen
49. Showers
50. Language of Persia
53. Anger
54. Favoring social equality
60. And so forth
61. What we're called
62. Bing, bang or boom
63. Third person pronoun female
64. Hellenic language
65. Chubby Checker's dance

DOWN
1. Japanese apricot
2. Ashes holder
3. Seat oneself
4. Frozen water
5. The dead body of an animal
6. Maize
7. Not closed
8. Large town
9. A single thing
10. Spray can
11. Payola
12. Anagram of "Aside"
13. Fern-to-be
18. Inner surface of the hand
22. Marsh
23. Sharpen
24. Wear away
25. An Indycar or F1 car
26. Writing fluids
27. Neckwear
29. Do-nothing
30. A drunk
31. Push a broom
34. Black bird
35. Spy
36. Sail supports
38. Not worst
39. A thorny flower
41. A Chinese herb
42. Degenerate
43. An adult male
44. Repose
45. Attempts
46. Our planet
47. Kinswoman
50. Renown
51. Out of the wind
52. Hazard
55. Needlefish
56. Propel a boat
57. Three in Roman numerals
58. Donkey
59. Mesh

SUDOKU

8	2		9
7							3	5
			3				2
				8
			4	9
	4		7			1
	1	6				9
3				1
	9	8	2	6			1

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20 - Feb. 18
Buy low. Sell high. Buy low. Sell in a giant loop. Invest in roller coasters.

pisces Feb. 19 - Mar. 20
Bananas are an excellent source of potassium. Corpses are an excellent source of embalming fluid.

aries Mar. 21 - Apr. 19
Unfold your legs while you're sitting there. It's bad for you.

taurus Apr. 20 - May. 20
If brains were gas money, you wouldn't have enough to drive a toy car around a dime.

gemini May. 21 - Jun. 21
Stop giving out relationship advice. You're the reason your sister got dumped.

cancer Jun. 22 - Jul. 22
Find a nice, grassy spot on the hill and take some time to look at the sun. Give it a few hours to really leave an impression.

leo Jul. 23 - Aug. 22
That guy you make fun of in class? He's drawing up the blueprints for your demise right now.

virgo Aug. 23 - Sept. 22
If you keep poking at it, it's never going to heal properly.

libra Sept. 23 - Oct. 22
Make sure your tombstone says something inspirational. That, or "I'm with stupid."

scorpio Oct. 23 - Nov. 21
It's a bad practical joke to put a bear trap under the cushion of someone's chair.

sagittarius Nov. 22 - Dec. 21
You're not a pirate. So stop talking in a pirate voice. And give me back my parrot.

capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 19
Listerine is not a beverage, and no amount of tiny umbrellas is going to make it one.

Off The Wall Games

Discount role-playing games, Collectible card games (CCGs), Miniature war games and board games, fun for everyone!

Holiday Hours: 11-27 through 12-24
10-10 Sundays Saturdays
91 Russell St (Village Barn Shops)
Hadley, MA 01035-9451

Tournaments every Friday night and Sunday afternoon, prizes and more with many copies

MAGIC THE GATHERING
WARHAMMER 40,000
GAMES WORKSHOP

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162.

Rent us your ears! $10/hr to participate in a listening experiment. Write to phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu. English must be your first language.

Household Help, Immediately 6 Hrs/Week $11/Hr Car Needed 413-549-1578

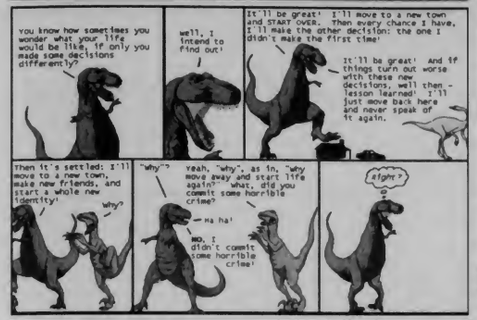
Handyman. Hours Flexible, snow removal. Light household repairs. Car Needed 413-549-1578

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. now leasing, 1 & 2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jan 1. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop by or call 549-0600.

---

1 Bedroom Apt. available Jan. 1st. Rent $760 on bus route. 5 1/2 miles from campus. Squire Village 665-2203

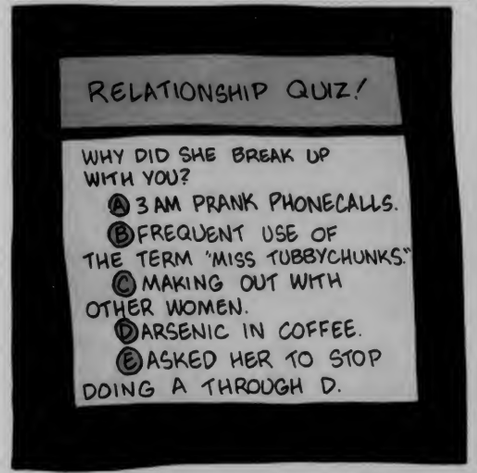


TUTORING INSTRUCTION

English language lessons; TOEFL preparation. Individual or group. 413-253-3842 Davidhnielsen@gmail.com

FOR SALE

WWW.PRESIDENTOBAMAPICS.com Over 1,000 vivid pictures of President Obama. Get prints made and framed!



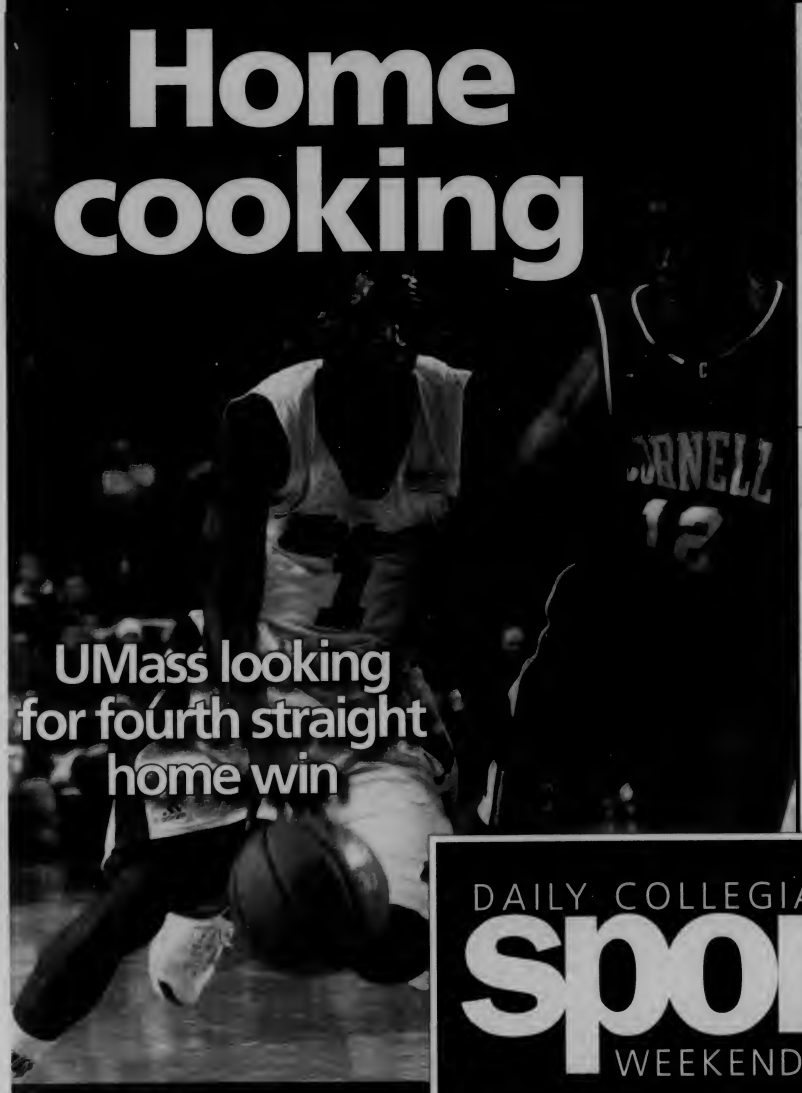
Dinosaur Comics by Ryan North — qwantz.com

Chainsawsuit by Kris Straub — chainsawsuit.com

Saturday Morning Breakfast Cereal by Zach Weiner — smbc-comics.com

Hark! A Vagrant by Kate Beaton — harkavagrant.com

Wondermark by David Malki! — wondermark.com



WE WANT YOUR COMICS!
Put your comics in front of thousands of readers.

Questions? Submissions? Concerns? Suggestions?
email us: comics@dailycollegian.com

BASIC INSTRUCTIONS — How to Give Directions — by Scott MEYER

Home cooking

UMass looking for fourth straight home win

WOMEN'S HOOPS

Tomorrow's basketball doubleheader kicks off with the Minutewomen playing Providence. UMass' three freshmen have been an important part of its .500 record.

SEE PAGE 13

SWIMMING AND DIVING

UMass heads to Puerto Rico over winter break for the Loyola Invitational. Coach Russ Yarworth hopes to use winter break to prepare for the Atlantic 10 Championships.

SEE PAGE 11

DAILY COLLEGIAN sports WEEKEND EDITION

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SNOW HIGH: 35 LOW: 25 www.DailyCollegian.com BACK TO SCHOOL, SPRING 2010

Special election down to the wire

President Barack Obama campaigned for Mass. Attorney General Martha Coakley in Boston on Sunday. Coakley faces a strong challenge from Republican Scott Brown in the election to fill the late Ted Kennedy's seat.

SENATE RACE 2010

By Sam Butterfield
Collegian Staff

This one really is too close to call.

It's election day, and Bay State residents are being hammered with a final frenzy of advertising aimed at convincing them that presumed front-runner Democrat Martha Coakley or Republican Scott Brown is an inadequate candidate for the U.S. Senate seat left vacant by the death of Sen. Edward M. Kennedy. Nothing is for sure in a race that once seemed like a lock for Coakley.

If the presence of political heavyweights like President Barack Obama, former President Bill Clinton and former New York Mayor Rudolph Giuliani stumping for Coakley and Brown were not enough to reflect the tightness of this race, polls from across the state and nation paint a picture of ambivalence from registered Democrats and widespread embitterment with politics as usual.

One thing is certain in this unexpectedly close election: Independent voters now hold in their hands the fate of whom the Commonwealth will send to Washington.

According to Andrew Smith, survey center director at the Carsey Institute at the University of New Hampshire, 51 percent of voters in Massachusetts are not registered with the Democratic or Republican party. Among independents, the race is practically a dead heat, with the Carsey Institute's most recent poll showing support split at 47 percent for both state attorney general Coakley and state Sen. Brown.

Smith emphasized that Tuesday's vote is particularly hard to predict, as special elections always see lower turnout than general elections and less voter participation from groups expecting victory. This gives Brown an advantage, as Democrats outnumber registered Republicans by a factor of three to one in Massachusetts. However, with a low turnout from registered voters and high participation from independents, anything is possible.

"My sense is still that Coakley wins, but that it's going to be much closer than anticipated," said Smith. "There are just so many more Democrats in Massachusetts than there are Republicans, and despite Republicans' current advantage in excitement and motivation, I don't believe that there's enough of that anger to compensate for the absolute numbers of Democrats in this state," he continued.

Smith stressed that this election would be difficult to track as, despite sheer numbers, further polling reveals that among people likely to actually go the polls, the race is virtually tied.

"If you look at just party registration, it's 36 percent Democrats, 48 percent unregistered, 13 percent Republicans and three percent other," said Smith.

"What that doesn't reflect is who actually is going to show up on election day," he said. "We saw that of the people most likely to vote, the people who will definitely vote on election day, it was a tie between Brown and Coakley, and among those people who said they were definitely going to vote, Coakley held a narrow lead."

See SENATE on page 2

Changes to FAFSA try to simplify form

By Michelle Williams
Collegian Staff

A revamped federal financial aid application system was introduced this year, aiming to simplify the often frustrating and time-consuming process for students.

The Free Application for Federal Student Aid (FASFA) is an optional form that can by filled out annually by incoming and current college students, both undergraduate and graduate. The form consists of multiple questions of student finances that are entered into a formula, determining the Expected Family Contribution (EFC). Factors used in determining the EFC include income, the number of students in a household currently in college, assets and household size.

According to a study by the federal education department, 16 million students applying to college last year were asked as many as 153 questions, most of which had little to no effect on actual financial aid packages. Due to the amount of questions and confusion surrounding the forms, it is estimated that 1.5 million enrolled students would have been eligible for the Pell Grant program, but did not apply.

When applying for aid, more than 90 percent of families and students supply information that the federal government was already provided when they filed their taxes. When applying online now, students will be able to access their tax information from the IRS, which will answer up to 20 questions.

As 98 percent of applicants use the online application, the new form no longer simply reproduces the paper version, but allows students to skip unnecessary questions, effectively eliminating 250 million questions per year. It allows students over the age of 24 or married to be exempt from questions regarding parental income. The new system also allows men 26 or older to skip Selective Service registration questions. Students with low incomes will no longer need to provide information on family or personal assets, which are not used in the determination of the aid eligibility. In prior years, both incoming and current students have been required to disclose past drug convictions on their FAFSA forms.

On the 2010 forms, only returning students will need to answer these questions.

In a June 2009 press conference, President Barack Obama stressed the need to make college more affordable by simplifying the financial aid process.

"I'll simplify the financial aid process so that we don't have a million students who aren't applying for and because it's too difficult," he said.

When explaining the changes to FAFSA, U.S Secretary of Education Arne Duncan said in a February 2009 visit to a high school in Arlington, Va., "We have to educate our way to a better economy," adding, "young people and adult earners deserve the chance to go to college and know the money is available."

In a press conference, Duncan said of FAFSA, "You basically have to have a Ph.D to figure that thing out."

Last year, 20,000 University of Massachusetts students received financial aid from federal, state and University sources, totaling to more than $198 million in aid.

Tori Conlon, a freshman journalism major, found the forms extremely difficult.

"The forms took me hours to finish," said Conlon. "It was really frustrating to learn that I needed to answer so many questions even though many didn't affect my financial aid. In the end, though, it was worth filling out."

Michelle Williams can be reached at mnwillia@student.umass.edu.

Quake leaves Haiti in chaos

Smith alumna among those killed; locals rush to send aid

By Alyssa Creamer and Chris Shores
Collegian Staff

An estimated 200,000 were killed in the Caribbean nation of Haiti due to a massive earthquake, leaving 1.5 million people homeless, according to widespread reports from media outlets still struggling themselves to maintain a foothold in the devastated country.

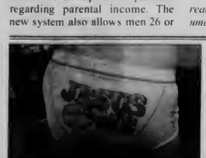
The tragedy in Haiti struck close to home when it claimed the life of Smith College alumna Lisa Mbele-Mbong '93, who was killed in the collapse of the United Nations building when the earthquake struck. According to the Washington Post, Mbele-Mbong was killed instantly, after being struck by a falling piece of concrete. Although most of her colleagues survived in the basement of the U.N. compound, nearly 400 of the organization's workers are listed as killed or missing, almost guaranteeing that the U.N. will be facing the greatest casualties in its history due to the natural disaster.

Mbele-Mbong worked in Haiti's capital Port-au-Prince as a human rights officer, and leaves behind her parents Helena and Samuel Mbele-Mbong, a sister, and her 10-year-old son, Nady.

As aid for victims of the 7.3 magnitude earthquake that hit Haiti last week continues to be flown in, a group of University of Massachusetts students seek to see how many text messages from the UMass community have been sent to support the victims.

A project to tally the amount of monetary support the UMass community has given to the victims of Haiti will launch on Jan. 19. From 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. each day until the tentative date of Jan. 22, students can bring their cell phones to the campus center concourse with a outbox receipt proving they donated to the Red Cross by texting "Haiti" to 90999 to aid efforts.

A UMass graduate student of public health Matthew Sloan and his Pi Kappa Phi brothers Russell Brown and Joshua Slocum piloted this project with the initial goal of discovering that 50 members of the UMass community had donated to the Red Cross. However, the group anticipates a much greater turnout during the week.



Fraternity members designed a display from a wooden plank and plexiglass. Red foam numbers can be inserted in between to show the running total. When students and staff go to the booth set up in the campus center to show proof of Haitian Police officers take down the flag draped near the top of the National Palace in Port-au-Prince, Haiti. Destruction grips Haiti seven days after an earthquake rattled the country, triggering riots and food shortages.

See HAITI on page 3

AP

ARTS & LIVING

What would Jesus wear?

Andrew Sheridan road tests a pair of "I Love Jesus" boxers to see what they do for his luck (and his conscience).

SEE PAGE 6

SPORTS

Correia and Riley stepping up

Despite a three-game losing streak, the Minutemen have seen strong performances from veteran Gary Correia and freshman Freddie Riley.

SEE PAGE 12

EDITORIAL & OPINION

Columnist Leigh Greaney argues that affirmative action tools, such as the University's SPIRE quiz, do not make the playing field equal for students.

SEE PAGE 4

DailyCollegian.com

Head to DailyCollegian.com for an interactive map of the polling locations for today's special election to fill the late Ted Kennedy's U.S. Senate seat.

Coming in February to Amherst Center

AMHERST CREPERIE

Large Variety Fresh Crepes - Sweet & Savory • Hot Paninis • Smoothies • Coffee • Cappucino • Espresso

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXX
ISSUE 1

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
413-545-3500
Fax 413-545-3699
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR in CHIEF William McGuinness
MANAGING EDITOR Matt Rocheleau
MANAGING WEB EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
BUSINESS MANAGER Dana Jette
PRODUCTION MANAGER Michael Sarkes
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Kirsten Swenson
ADVERTISING MANAGER Michael Tortorici
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Amanda Jonson
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Shauna Murphy
COPY EDITOR Andrew Witt
EDITORIAL EDITOR Alyssa Creamer
NEWS EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS EDITOR Jeffries R. Larnard
PHOTO EDITOR Matthew Harrison
IT MANAGER Victor Jacek
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Matt Zolnier
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Nicole Jacinto
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Norman Proust
CLASSIFIED MANAGER Katelyn Tamilio
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Justin Gagnon
ASST ARTS & LIVING Elise Horosiz
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Cal Sannell
ASSTANT EDITORIAL Benjamin Moriarty
ASSTANT EDITORIAL Michael Phillis
ASSTANT EDITORIAL Matthew SL Robare
ASSISTANT NEWS Samuel Butterfield
ASSISTANT NEWS Jenn Heshion
ASSISTANT NEWS Chris Shores
ASSTANT SPORTS Jay Asser
ASSTANT SPORTS David Brinch
ASSISTANT SPORTS Adam Miller
ASSTANT PHOTO Maxwell Sparr
ASSTANT PHOTO Samantha Webber
SENIOR PRODUCER Sara Cosh
SENIOR PRODUCER Pete Rizzo

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian published Monday through Friday during the semester. The Collegian is independently funded operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Sage Hill became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Massachusetts Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1971, the Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

PRODUCTION CREW
on staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Matt Rocheleau

COPY EDITOR
Kirsten Swenson

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Sarkes

Special election may leave Dems blue

SENATE from page 1

Smith continued.

David Paleologos, director of Suffolk University's Political Research Center, said that support had been gravitating toward Brown since a debate last Monday and that this momentum was generated by slip-ups by Coakley and a strong media push by the Brown campaign. Suffolk's poll, conducted Jan. 11 to 13, had Brown leading by four points, but ahead 65 to 30 percent among independents. Independents accounted for 45 percent of the survey. Democrats representing 39 percent and Republicans representing 15 percent.

"We've had a scenario where it looks like Brown is opening up a lead, where previous polls had Coakley ahead," said Paleologos of his poll.

"You've had a lot of forces at play," Paleologos said of Brown's surge in popularity, "a good debate performance by Brown, a backdrop of dissatisfaction about healthcare and the economy and all of this has been dovetailing towards Brown."

Paleologos said he believes Brown's recent gains could be too much for Coakley to overcome and could propel him to the Senate.

"I think [Brown's gains] have continued through the end of the week and into the weekend, and while I think Obama's presence could have helped in certain demographics, whether you can reverse these wholesale gains in a few days, I don't think so," he said.

Statistically, "I see him as more viable at this point," Paleologos said of Brown. "He is affecting more demographics, and in areas where he's winning, he's winning big, and in areas where he's losing, he's not losing by much."

Smith, on the other hand, predicted a tight Coakley victory, but said that turnout will be the deciding factor.

"You have to pay attention to turnout – who shows up," he said. "Turnout is differential, it doesn't mean that equal percentages of Republicans and Democrats show up, right now Republicans have an advantage there," said Smith.

Smith cited voter dissatisfaction with early results from Obama administration policy as key in support drifting towards Brown as, he explained, voters blame the party in power when times are tough.

"Most voters don't pay attention to politics," he said. "But they do pay attention to their pocketbooks and their jobs."

"So, fair or not fair, that puts blame on the party of the president, and so there's a kind of general malaise towards the Democrats right now, even from Democrats," Smith said.

He also said that while independent can be something of a relative word, these numbers indicate that people who are dissatisfied with political parties are more likely to support Brown and his limited government platform.

Brown has strongly attacked President Obama's healthcare proposals as well as any new taxes, while Coakley has stood behind most of the Obama administration's stances, promising to vote in the tradition of the late Sen. Kennedy.

This race is especially critical and has, as such, drawn national attention because it could possibly break Democrats' 60 seat majority in the Senate. Presently, Democrats hold 60 seats, enough to block Republicans from even filibustering Democratic-backed bills. However, were Scott Brown to win, he would break that hold, giving Republican groups hope and incentive to attempt to win this election.

Voters across the state have likely had a hard time missing a spate of pro-Brown, anti-healthcare reform ads funded by the Our Country Deserves Better Political Action Committee, otherwise known as the Tea Party.

Joe Wierzbicki, press spokesman for Our Country Deserves Better, said his organization has decided to back Brown because of the election's potential effect on the composition of the Senate.

"We got involved largely because this race has national ramifications," said Wierzbicki. "If Scott Brown wins, it could bring a halt to the Democrats' healthcare plan in Congress, which our organization vehemently opposes," he added.

According to Wierzbicki, the Tea Party will ultimately have placed a great investment in this race, as the PAC will have spent $300,000 supporting Brown by Tuesday.

Despite tight poll numbers, Wierzbicki predicted voters' dissatisfaction with America's political status could translate to a Republican victory in Massachusetts.

"Because people are not happy with the way things are going on in America [Brown could win]," he said.

Locally, campus political groups were scrambling to get out the vote and show their support in a race that has ended up tighter than most anticipated.

Derek Khanna, president of the University of Massachusetts Republican Club, said that he and the club as a whole were supporting Scott Brown.

"I've been working for the Scott Brown campaign for a couple of months," said Khanna. "The club chose to support Scott Brown in the fall."

On the election, Khanna said he feels that since the late Sen. Kennedy is no longer on the ballot, anything is possible.

"I have said for some time that it is possible for a Republican to be elected as senator in Mass. provided that Kerry or Kennedy is not running for re-election," he said.

A Kennedy who will appear on the ballot as an independent candidate, Joseph Lewis Kennedy, a Libertarian and information technology executive, has no relation to the late Sen. Kennedy.

"Much of Western Mass. is majority Republican," he elaborated, "and suburbs of Boston as well are Republican."

Khanna also pointed to voter disenchantment with the status quo as a factor working to Brown's favor.

"If the polling data shows Coakley slightly ahead and Republicans are energized and Democrats are disenchanted, Brown will win," he said.

Conversely, UMass Democrats President Charlie Felder said Brown's attempt to cast himself as an independent was pure politics, and feels Brown is a conservative Republican who would work to block the Obama administration's agenda.

"The choices in this election could not be clearer," said Felder. "Scott Brown is barely working to conceal the fact that he is nothing more than a conservative wolf in an outsider sheep's clothing."

Felder further held that he believes Brown will work to impede President Obama's progressive agenda, while he feels Coakley will vote on a similar line to the late Sen. Kennedy.

"[Brown] will do nothing but serve as a roadblock to the progressive Obama agenda that is slowly moving us away from the destructive and failed conservative policies left in place by an incompetent Republican administration," Felder said. "This is an election to replace the late, great Ted Kennedy, electing Scott Brown to Sen. Kennedy's seat would not simply stand as a slap in the face to all of the causes for which Kennedy fought his entire life, but would ensure a rapid reversal and abandonment of the values that define us as Massachusetts residents."

MATTHEW HARRISON – FILE/DAILY

Scott Brown, the Republican candidate vying to fill Ted Kennedy's Senate seat, gained ground recently against Democratic rival Coakley.

UMass journalism professor Ralph Whitehead, an expert on Massachusetts politics, said that while he has no idea what the outcome of the election will be, he believes it is a vote not only on the personalities of the candidates, but also on the governing of Democrats in Boston and Washington.

"This election is at least three elections," said Whitehead. "A referendum on the public personalities of the two major party candidates, a referendum on the Democrats on Beacon Hill [and] a referendum on the Democrats in Washington."

In addition, Whitehead said that the election's timing in mid-January could make for low turnout.

"Because only one office is on the ballot and because election day is in the middle of the chilly month of January, the number of people who turn out to vote is likely to be smaller than the number who would turn out to vote for a regular election," he said.

Despite the attention the Brown campaign has received, Whitehead cautioned that it may be too early to make any sweeping statements about the nature of Massachusetts politics changing.

"We don't yet know for sure if Blue Massachusetts is trending Red," he said. "If Brown were to win, would it be because some of the people who voted blue in November of 2008 later shifted their outlook and voted red in January of 2010?" he posited, "or would it be because the percentage of voters who are Blue is just as high as it was in November of 2008, but these voters didn't turn out at a high enough rate to elect Coakley?" Whitehead stated.

Lastly, Whitehead said a hearty Coakley victory would quell the momentum Republicans have accumulated on a national level and would allow the Democrats to set their own agenda.

"If Coakley wins by a healthy margin, all of the national hubbub will die down, and the Democrats in Washington will try to proceed as they have been planning to proceed," he said.

On the other hand, "if [state] Sen. Brown wins," Whitehead speculated, "he will become a national political celebrity overnight, the toast of Red America, and his victory will be interpreted by Democrats as well as by Republicans as a protest against the Democrats in Washington."

Locally, Whitehead predicted high turnout and ardent support for Coakley.

"We should expect the voter turnout to be extremely high, as high as it is for a general election for Congress in a nonresidential year – and for Coakley to get at least 85 percent of the vote," he said.

Polls will be open in Amherst from 7 a.m. to 8 p.m. Amherst polling places include the North Congregational Church at 1193 North Pleasant St., North Fire Station at 603 East Pleasant St., Immanuel Lutheran Church at 867 North Pleasant St., Bangs Community Center at 70 Boltwood Walk, Fort River School at 70 South East St., Crocker Farm School at 280 West St., Munson Memorial Library on South Amherst Common at 1046 South East St. and Wildwood Elementary School at 71 Strong St.

Sam Butterfield can be reached at sbutterfield@dailycollegian.com

SAVE MORE

We have the most used textbooks

UMASS AMHERST University of Massachusetts
University Store and Textbook Annex
Amherst Campus Center • 413-545-2619
www.umass.bkstr.com

Powered by efollett.com

Massive earthquake leaves Haiti in ruin

HAITI from page 1

their donation, they can update the board themselves.

"We're trying to reach out and find how many students have already contributed to support the relief effort and create a visual of that," said Sloan. "That visual [will serve] as an inspiration to other people who might be considering making donations."

"It is always difficult to see what people have been doing to help support others across the world, but when there is a visual sign, people can know what is being done," said Brown. "I think back to when we made ramps for the handicapped, and every day I can walk by and see how our actions have helped others."

Sloan said he is planning to meet with the Student Government Association (SGA) on Wednesday to discuss collaborating their fundraising efforts. Pi Kappa Phi would help promote this fundraiser – and those of other student groups – and those funds would be included in the UMass tally.

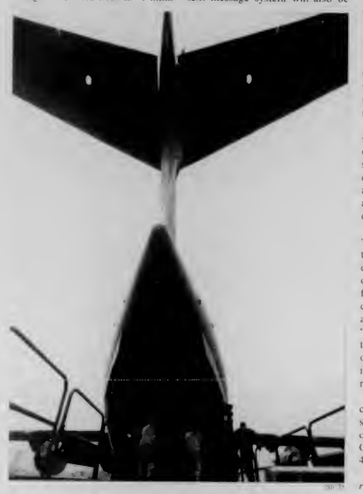
Fraternity members are also considering ways to track progress of material goods donated as well. Students who donated to Haiti relief via other outlets besides the text message system will also be counted in the group's tally, provided they give proper evidence of their donation.

At the conclusion of the project, Pi Kappa Phi will send out a mass e-mail to those who contributed to the relief efforts.

Sloan said that the project began to form after the Jan. 13 e-mail was sent to the entire campus by Chancellor Robert Holub.

In the e-mail, Holub wrote, "While information coming from Haiti has been difficult to obtain, it is clear that this disaster will require both immediate and long-term assistance. The people of Haiti, and their family and friends here and around the world, need our assistance."

Holub's e-mail reported that he is asking the Division of Student Affairs and Campus Life and the International Programs Office for the best recommendations on how to assist in Haiti. Sloan interpreted the e-mail as a call to form his own ideas to contribute.



"We felt like he was asking students to think about things they could do to support the efforts," said Sloan. "We're hoping that during this first week, we'll have a presence in the campus center, and it will jog their memory [to donate]."

According to its website, the "Red Cross is a charitable organization – not a government agency – and depends on volunteers and the generosity of the American public to perform its mission." The website also quoted the Red Cross' President and CEO Gail McGovern, saying "[The Red Cross'] focus now is on the immediate relief for the people of Haiti, but make no mistake, this is going to be a massive long-term recovery operation.

People trying to locate U.S. citizens living or traveling in Haiti should contact the U.S. Department of State, Office of Overseas Citizens Services, at 1-888-407-4747 or (202) 647-5225.

Alyssa Creamer can be reached at acreamer@student.umass.edu

Chris Shores can be reached at cshores@student.umass.edu.

Crews load supplies onto an aircraft at Langley Airforce Base. The aircraft delivered the supplies to Haiti, returning stateside with evacuees.

A guarded United Nations truck makes its way to deliver protein bars to residents of Petionville, Haiti on Sunday. There currently remains a dire need for food and medical supplies in the earthquake-ravaged country.

FIRST MEETING
FOR NEW MEMBERS
Wednesday, January 20, 2010, 7:00 p.m.
ALPHA TAU GAMMA
the academic, service & social fraternity of the Stockbridge School of Agriculture founded in 1919

This is an invitation for new Pledges

Come to our home at 118 Sunset Avenue

Where? Alpha Tau Gamma Fraternity House
When? Wednesday, January 20
What time? 7:00 p.m.
Who is invited? All Stockbridge men
Why? To begin a five week Pledge program from January 25 through February 27

Goal? TO BECOME A MEMBER OF THE OLDEST, STRONGEST, MOST ACTIVE & MOST ENJOYABLE PART OF AN AMHERST CAMPUS EDUCATION WITH THE BEST LIFE LONG NETWORK

Welcome Back to your award winning UMass Dining...
we've been waiting for you!

JANUARY 19 Soup & Bread Special Lunch
JANUARY 20 Pioneer Valley Breakfast (local items)
JANUARY 21 KETUMBA Street food at Berkshire & Worcester DCs – Dinner
JANUARY 22 Pineapple Upside Down Cake from the UMass Bake Shop - Dinner
JANUARY 23 Live Jazz Brunch

YCMP YOUR CAMPUS MEAL PLAN
RMP THE BEST VALUE ON CAMPUS RESIDENTIAL MEAL PLAN
UMASS DINING UMassAmherst
umassdining.com
facebook.com/umassdining
RESTAURANTS & MORE TAPPING ivy

UMASS RETAIL DINING
We appreciate your business!
Enjoy the following specials in the Campus Center January 19–22

FRENCH MEADOW CAFÉ
• Peppermint Mocha or Eggnog Latte 16 oz..... $2.99
CAFÉ TALESAI
• $2.00 off any Combo Meal
cafe talesai
Burgers 101
HATCH
• FREE Bluewall Cookie with the purchase of any Burgers 101 Combo Meal
• Bread Boúle filled with Legal Sea Food Clam Chowder..... $4.59
LEGAL SEA FOODS
UMASS DINING UMassAmherst
umassdining.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

BACK TO SCHOOL, SPRING 2010

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Equality is for all races

Leigh Greaney

The federal government wants University of Massachusetts students to slap a label on their identity via SPIRE. They've updated their system and now allow for students to choose more than one race, ethnicity to identify with. After logging in, SPIRE's home page is replaced with a bubbled display of questions for students to "voluntarily self-identify" their race/ethnicity, and it is promised that any given information will not be used to discriminate.

This is where the gray area fades over the black and white. Discrimination is distinguishing a person by exposing difference.

Classifying a person by the color of their skin is discrimination. It's racism.

Although, it can be beneficial to society by certain means to establish these differences – it also can be extremely caustic.

Acceptance into higher education should be based on merit – not melanin.

The patterns that exist within racial percentages are not something to be ignored, and can be used for educational purposes. However, the dissection of the statistics needs to define a means. Is the purpose to evolve and to end racism and discrimination? Or, is it simply to sink into the pessimism that holds this country's scale is tipped in favor of the majority.

The most prominent arguments toward the useful nature of classifying students by race lead to the conversation of affirmative action that has been going on for years.

Some think it's racist against the white population. Some think it's helping to break down the monopoly of white-centric higher education.

Robert K. Fullinwider, a senior public policy researcher at the University of Maryland, believes affirmative action "means positive steps taken to increase the representation of women and minorities in the area of employment, education and business from which they have been historically excluded." Fullinwider also believes African Americans and Hispanics need it the most.

However, it is critical to ask: Who is affirmative action for? Is it only for African-Americans and Hispanics? Why should it not benefit all minority groups?

In a 1995 Stanford Law Review, Paul Brest and Miranda Oshige asked that question and came to the conclusion that there is "no single answer." For Stanford Law School, affirmative action has meant if a student is African American, Native American, Mexican American or Puerto Rican, they may be preferred to other applicants – sometimes chosen over those with higher test scores.

Asian Americans, who in 1995 made up 9 percent of the Stanford Law student population, have not been involved with the affirmative action process, yet their acceptance into the university was on the rise then. Asian Americans represented around 12 percent of the school's student body in 2008, according to Stanford Law's website. Therefore, it is possible for the acceptance percentage of minorities to rise without affirmative action.

Affirmative action, even with its advantageous arms for minorities, has also proven to do the opposite. If a student is accepted into a school solely based on race over a student with higher credentials, it is possible that the student might have difficulty adjusting to the competitive university environment. The student might have excelled much more significantly at a different university – one that fit his or her application's strength.

Acceptance into higher education should be based on merit – not melanin.

The need for campus diversity in culture, class, life experience, personal skills, interests and background is vital. However, that does not need to circle around race. The color of someone's skin cannot determine how much of an educational contribution that person is to his or her community.

Application forms should not require race, ethnicity or gender. They should include the things that actually matter in an educational environment. They should ask test scores, GPAs, community service achievements, awards received and anything that promotes a healthy form of competition – one that everyone has equal access to and can excel at.

All application forms include an essay section where prospective students are asked to sell themselves to the university they're applying to.

This is the proper forum for a student to address issues of race and ethnicity, and why that makes them a good candidate if they think it plays a part in their identity.

Some believe identity is skin deep. It's not whether they're Cape Verdean or Latino – it's about the way they move around in this world and how they affect their surroundings.

Human beings do not choose their race (or their gender, for that matter). They choose actions. They choose whether or not they want to work themselves into higher education. If the race question is not asked, it loses its importance.

If the goal of affirmative action is to create equality, then it should do so. By erasing the label, everyone is put onto the same playing field and can prove themselves. That's equality.

The day that race becomes moot is the day that racism ends and equality begins. With the exclusion of surveys such as the SPIRE inquiry, that day will come sooner.

Leigh Greaney is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at lgreaney@student.umass.edu.

Photo finish for Senate campaign

Want to know how Attorney General Martha Coakley screwed up her lead in the Massachusetts Senate race? Look no further than the contrasting rallies she and her opponent State Sen. Scott Brown held in Boston on Friday.

Alana Goodman

At the Brown rally, the Republican nominee fired up a crowd of cheering supporters who braved the chilly weather to watch him stump at Paul Revere Park in the city's North End.

Coakley's rally, by contrast, was held in the lavish ballroom of the famed Fairmont Copley Plaza Hotel – the "grand dame of Boston," which has played host to royalty, celebrities and virtually every U.S. president since the early 1900s.

The two events are a fitting metaphor for a race that has turned into a populist, "We-the-People" denunciation of entitlement politics in Massachusetts.

Brown, who was essentially a no-name politician in the state up until a few months ago, successfully painted himself as a blue-jeans-wearing, pickup-truck-driving, average-Joe fighting against an out-of-touch establishment Democrat. It worked.

In just over a month, Brown has made up his nearly 20-point lag in the polls and now appears to be neck-and-neck with his rival.

Coakley's team has bungled her campaign from the beginning, but their tactics are growing more convoluted by the day.

As the Democrats desperately watch their lead in the state Senate race slip away, their revamped political strategy over the past few weeks can only be described as mind-bogglingly clueless.

First came the spectacular display of entitlement politics, complete with indignant outcries that a Republican could become a successor to "Ted Kennedy's seat."

Even after Brown's campaign pointed out the underlying pretention of this talking point – "With all due respect, it's not the Kennedy's seat ... it's the people's seat" – Brown corrected the moderator during his crowning moment of the Senate debate – the Democrats still didn't seem to grasp that the "Kennedy seat" meme was killing Coakley with the public.

"We can't let [Brown] get anywhere near Kennedy's desk," warned a letter to supporters from the Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee on Jan. 15. "Ted Kennedy's Senate seat could fall into the hands of Scott Brown," cautioned a Jan. 12 e-mail blast sent out by the Democratic National Committee arm, Organizing for America.

In reality, the only thing in Scott Brown's hands was the Coakley campaign, which was playing right into them. While invoking Ted Kennedy may have helped Coakley when it came to energizing those who already supported her, it also succeeded at turning off independent voters with its arrogance and cynical politicization of Kennedy's recent death.

If this close election has shown us anything, it's that voters are sick of politicians behaving with all the entitlement of impetuous royalty.

On Friday, Democrats finally appeared to get the message that this strategy wasn't working, when they released a video of Vicki Kennedy, the late Sen. Kennedy's wife, urging voters to elect Coakley not for "Ted Kennedy's seat" but for "the people's seat." But by that time, the damage had already been done and the message came off as politically expedient and insincere. Not to mention desperate.

However, Coakley's most cringe-worthy stumble came in the middle of last week, when her distaste for "pedestrian" politics was made comically clear in the Boston Globe.

In response to a comment that she hasn't spent much time campaigning among the people, Coakley shot back without a touch of irony – "As opposed to standing outside Fenway Park? In the cold? Shaking hands?"

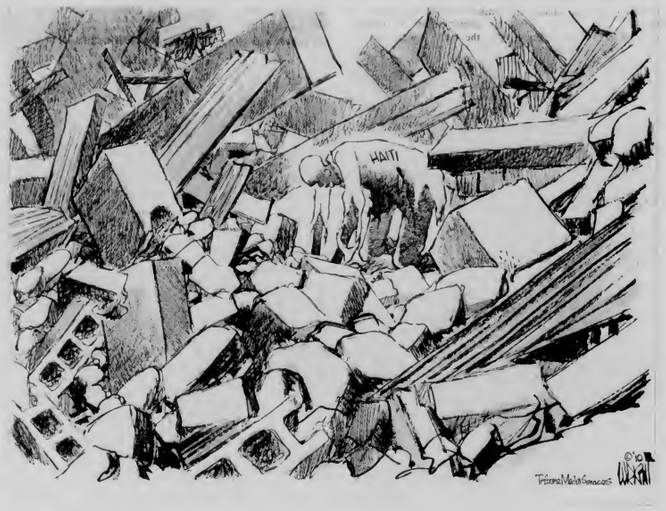
Boston Globe columnist Brian McGrory remarked that this Marie Antoinette attitude may end up costing the attorney general the election. "Literally, [Coakley] all but vanished [since December]. She refused to debate on TV unless it was exactly on her terms. She went days without venturing out in public," he noted in a Jan. 15 column.

And while Coakley is clearly unwilling to get her hands dirty when it comes to hob-knobbing with the rank and file, that hasn't stopped her campaign from desperately chucking mud at her opponent.

Democrats have gone negative over the past few weeks, scrambling to portray Brown as a "radical right-winger" with ties to former Alaska Gov. Sarah Palin, conservative radio host Rush Limbaugh, former President George W. Bush and the "Tea Party Movement."

"[Coakley's] opponent is a far-right tea-bagger," wrote New York Sen. Chuck Schumer in a letter to supporters. A commercial paid for by the Service Employees International Union alleged that "Brown's campaign is being supported by the same extremist group that backs Sarah Palin."

But if the muck is sticking to Brown, his numbers certainly haven't reflected it. A bombshell Suffolk poll released Thursday shows the state senator with a four point lead over Coakley.



Further, the poll also shows that it may be Coakley whose views are too extreme for the average voter – 51 percent of the Massachusetts electorate opposes the national health care reform championed by the state attorney general.

If this close election has shown us anything, it's that voters are sick of politicians behaving with all the entitlement of impetuous royalty.

They are annoyed that an aspiring Senator thinks she can swagger into a cushy reserved seat without smudging her manicure on the hands of the unwashed masses.

Despite her difficulties over the past few weeks, Coakley still may still pull off a win today. But even if she does, at least the Massachusetts voters have made her – and other overconfident politicians up for election in 2010 – sweat a little.

Alana Goodman is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at angoodma@student.umass.edu.

UMass law school in it for the money, not the students

Last month, the University of Massachusetts' Board of Trustees edged Massachusetts an inch closer to the creation of its first public law school in a decisive 14-4 vote. If the Massachusetts Board of Higher Education ratifies the Trustees' vote in February, students could begin enrolling in a legal program at the UMass-Dartmouth campus as early as fall 2010.

Evan Haddad

But State Sen. Stan Rosenberg and several private law school deans have rancorously criticized the plan, using the state's weak economy to chauffeur their opposition.

Though he has no formal say in February's vote, Rosenberg is preparing to offer legislation that would bar UMass-Dartmouth from tapping into state taxes for support of the law school. He and other critics argue that the proposed $23,565 tuition, which, in theory, would support the program, is simply not enough.

As reported by the Boston Globe, Arthur Ostiller, dean of Western New England School of Law in Springfield, wrote a letter to the UMass Board of Trustees echoing Rosenberg's concerns.

"It is not possible for an American Bar Association-approved law school, or one seeking approval, to operate solely on the stated tuition funds without incurring a substantial cost to the University of Massachusetts or the state," Gaudio said in the letter.

The deans of private law schools, like Western New England Law and Suffolk University Law School, have deeper reasons to fret the University's proposed $23,565 tuition: It's half the price of theirs.

Without a doubt, a UMass law school would steal many applications from private institutions on the grounds of affordability alone. It's a relief for aspiring lawyers and a panic for the good ol' boy law schools, whose elitism has historically defined higher education in Massachusetts.

Uproars throughout the state's legal community show just how deep the monopoly on jurisprudence extends.

Even legal tabloids are snapping venomously at the proposition. In an online article from "Above the Law: A Legal Tabloid," writer Elie Mystal went so far as to say, "this is not about the students. And it's certainly not about educational opportunity ... we all know what this is about: money. Lenders have it, the state wants it, the financial future of citizens of the Commonwealth be damned."

It all seems bizarrely ironic. But to be fair, there is a vestige of civic concern in all the lawyerly fire and brimstone. That is, can we really set up an accredited public law school without tax dollars?

Although a UMass law school might seem like a potentially pricy venture, Trustees Chairman Robert Manning maintains otherwise.

"The University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees has examined this proposal very thoroughly. The academic and financial components of this proposal have undergone rigorous review. After much study, it is clear that we can create a top-tier public law school without placing financial demands on the state or the University," Manning said in a statement from the University announcing the Trustees' approval in December.

In theory, student tuition alone would finance the law program. By increasing initial enrollments of 235 students to 559 over a decade, a UMass law school would generate nearly $81 million, hopefully enough to support its ambitions and gain accreditation from the American Bar Association.

Ironically, confidence in the fiscal soundness of the plan owes much to a floundering and unaccredited institution in Dartmouth, Mass., called Southern New England School of Law. SNESL recently donated its campus and assets to UMass for their public law school. The $22.6-million contribution undoubtedly supercharged the initiative, and with it the University luckily sidestepped the home-buying process.

Now those precious resources can go toward the costs of accreditation.

UMass-Dartmouth Chancellor Jean MacCormack, who authored many of the financial specifics, intends to spruce up SNESL's facilities with some $13.8 million of non-taxpayer dollars, so that a UMass law school would compete with private schools.

According to MacCormack, a proper UMass law school would channel millions into both the Dartmouth campus and the state economy.

Both Chancellor Holub and UMass President Jack Wilson have endorsed MacCormack's plan and expressed satisfaction with the Trustees' recent vote.

"This is a major step forward for public higher education in Massachusetts," Wilson said. "The creation of a public law program will afford citizens of the Commonwealth the same opportunity that exists in 44 other states."

Besides Massachusetts, states without public law schools include nearby Rhode Island, New Hampshire and Vermont, along with Delaware. Alaska has no private or public law schools.

Indeed it will. But despite all the chancellery cheer, the plan just seems too good to be true. Like financial quandaries of the past have shown, "paper budgets" don't always equate to "working budgets." Only time will tell whether or not MacCormack's plan for a UMass law school is waterproof.

But if we're really so sanguine about a UMass law school, Rosenberg's legislation only confirms what we already know: So why oppose it?

Evan Haddad is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at ehaddad@student.umass.edu

Harass UMass for cheaper texts

Every semester starts out the same way. During the first week of classes, thousands of students flock to the Textbook Annex to shell out hundreds and hundreds of dollars for overpriced books that they may or may not end up needing for the courses they are taking. Nobody likes having to pay such hefty sums for their course materials on top of all the other exorbitant expenses of going to college, but what choice do we have?

Dan Rahrig

It is true that textbooks are going to be expensive no matter what, but the prices the annex charges every year are outrageous. Someone buying all of their textbooks from the annex could find themselves spending hundreds more than they would have to online or even in some bookstores.

But the fact of the matter is, sometimes UMass students are left with no choice. Most of us know to get textbooks online in advance, but not all of the required course materials are listed on the annex's website.

Those that are listed can usually be found much cheaper on sites like Amazon or eBay (I paid $80 for the books I need for my civil liberties class online, compared to the $120 being asked for at the annex), but oftentimes a student does not find out all the books he or she needs until the first week of classes.

Because of the lack of competition, Follett is able to mark up book prices by an average of roughly 30 percent.

By then, of course, buying cheap books online is much more inconvenient – it can take weeks for your order to arrive at your dorm, but professors usually expect you to have your books for the next class. Amherst Books or Food for Thought Books may carry the textbook you need, but only if your professor has notified one of these stores in advance.

Since this is often not the case, and since we do not want to fall behind or get off to a bad start with the semester, we are forced to face the inflated prices at the annex.

So why are their prices so obscene? Because the annex and the school's University Store are run by the Follett Corporation, a for-profit wholesale distributor that has a lucrative contract with UMass.

Within the contract is an "exclusivity clause," much like the clause in UMass' controversial contract with Coca-Cola, which gives the company monopolistic control over the on-campus textbook market. Because of the lack of competition, Follett is able to mark up book prices by an average of roughly 30 percent, according to Student Government Association Senator Brandon Tower who launched an online group demanding the University to lower textbook prices.

We students begrudgingly pay that markup. The University is not opposed to these high prices, of course, because they receive a percentage of the sales. Then, once they have made tens of thousands of dollars from textbook sales, the University offers to buy back our books at the end of the semester for a fraction of what they are worth so they can sell them again the following year for the same unfair prices we paid the first time.

Students have tried to fight against this system in the past, asking professors and the administration to notify students in advance of books they need for their classes, but such requests have been ignored.

More recently, there has been a push to start a student-run business that would provide fairly-priced course materials, but this, too, was rejected because of the exclusive contract with Follett.

In response to the University's refusal to allow a student-run competitor to the annex, an online movement began to lobby the administration in anticipation for renegotiation of its Follett contract.

The crusade, spearheaded by Tower, already gained the support of over 2,200 students through a Facebook group called "UMass will lower textbook prices; we the students demand it." The administration agreed to allow student representation in their upcoming negotiations.

Though it is doubtful that such representation will translate into the signing of a less unfair contract, it is a promising start. Tower and supporters of the movement hope to make enough noise to persuade the University to remove its exclusivity clause from any future contract, or to at least get an exemption for a student-run business.

Though lofty, this goal is not entirely out of reach. Tower and his supporters are not trying to put the annex out of business or hurt the University; they are simply fighting to create competition in the on-campus textbook market.

Such competition could be hugely beneficial to the students of UMass, providing them with an affordable alternative to the annex without the inconvenience and hassle of ordering books online.

But in order for any progress to be made, we all have to do our part to get UMass to see our side, and that will require us to get involved and make our grievances known.

If you're tired of being ripped off, make a phone call or send an e-mail – let the administration know you're fed up.

If we make enough noise and persist in our efforts, we could finally be able to buy cheaper books right here on campus – and that's something worth fighting for.

Dan Rahrig is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at drahrig@student.umass.edu.

Extraordinary aid after earthquake

Ben Moriarty

The New York Times recently analyzed community service learning programs and even used the one operated by the University of Massachusetts as an example. They wanted to know if the system works and how to make it better.

Even more recently, Haiti was rocked by a magnitude-7 earthquake, devastation the country's capital, Port-au-Prince. An estimated 200,000 people died as a result of the natural disaster, while another 1.5 million have been left homeless, according to the Associated Press.

Haiti, the poorest country in the Western Hemisphere, hasn't received any support throughout its history to get out of its desperate situation. The extent of what Americans know about it, besides the debilitating poverty that Haitians share, may extend merely to something about Toussaint L'Ouverture, sugar cane or Voodoo, a religion widely practiced in Haiti.

People may not know about Jean-Bertrand Aristide, but they do know that when a catastrophic earthquake levels a city and country which has barely anything to begin with, it is time to lend a helping hand.

Thank God for that!

But what is funny – or actually, dreadfully depressing – is that Haiti is in shambles now, but it was also in shambles a week ago. And a year ago. And two years ago. And pretty much always has been – but not many people were there to lend a helping hand before the earthquake disaster.

In the name of democracy, Haiti's aid from the United States and other countries was suspended for nearly half a decade at the beginning of this millennium. The problem was Aristide, a former Roman Catholic priest and liberation theologian who received two-thirds of the vote in his first election and nearly nine-tenths in the next, was accused of corruption and human rights abuses.

The past for the Haitians was grim, the present is grim and the future doesn't look like it holds anything but the grim reaper.

The United States, being the God and democracy-loving nation it is (at least to people like Pat Robertson), decided to cut aid to the poorest country in our hemisphere, where infant mortality and child malnutrition runs as rampant as obesity does in our country.

The past for the Haitians was grim, the present is grim and the future doesn't look like it holds anything but the grim reaper.

So we give a helping hand, rightfully, when a quake or a tsunami strikes, and then?

UMass' Community Service Learning program has many ideals. According to their website, its purpose is to make "connections, affect change, meet needs and create opportunities."

A class at nearby Amherst College called "Reading, Writing and Teaching," where students go to Holyoke, Mass., and help with English classes, is mentioned in The New York Times' article "Does Service Learning Really Help?," published last month.

Karen Sánchez-Eppler, the class' instructor, told The Times, "... it really has had little to no institutional impact. During the 20 years of this course, the school has continued to have high dropout rates, low test scores, high teen pregnancy rates."

Not to say that all community service learning programs are useless – far from it. This year, the article notes that several UMass students set up a website database manager, which greatly helped Holyoke-based community organization, Enlace de Familias.

The real impact, while what good can come of it now, is that it plants seeds in people. These seeds, hopefully, will fall on to some good soil, and yield fruit that might grow to some 30 fold, some 60 some 100 times what it was.

Obviously, despite the Gospel reference and John F. Kennedy's Catholicism shaping his ideas of social justice, his quote, "Ask not what your country can do for you, but what you can do for your country," stands true today. If we have seen anything during the past week in our country, and even here at our University, that also means doing for others, including the poorest country in our hemisphere.

The question of whether the programs work or not can't be answered entirely.

We can see some tangible and other results – whether it's building something, increasing children's test scores or other simple volunteer tasks. What we won't see is whether or not, after having served the community, the people will continue to serve their share, and not just when an earthquake strikes.

Ben Moriarty is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at bmoriart@student.umass.edu.

5 Reasons Why:
"Nobody will tell politicians what 'tea bagger' means"

1) It's funnier that way.

2) They're all Johnny-come-latelies.

3) Adds something to Obama's vigorous thrusts against a heaving, gyrating economy.

4) It reminds us that Bush is out.

5) Late night TV has gotten so competitive recently.

Dinosaur winds torture University

Matthew M. Robare

I've been a student at the University of Massachusetts for two and half years now, and I've lived here for about a year. I can say with absolute confidence that the single worst thing about UMass is the wind.

It comes down from the north; cold sub-Arctic blasts from Canada, Vermont and New Hampshire; sweeping over farms, bridges, trees and foothills until it reaches its destination: The tall buildings and spires of the University.

The campus seems to be built as a playground for the northern winds; all nice, flat and boxy buildings that force it to curve around and pick up speed, then the campus center, the Du Bois Library, the Lederle Graduate Research Center and the Southwest Residential Area, sticking up to create wind tunnels that funnel the aerial beast down to the ground to attack helpless students.

[The wind at UMass] is like the velociraptors from Jurassic Park: utterly relentless and unforgiving.

Then there's the big mass of the Fine Arts Center and its supposed "piano" shape right at the end of the depression holding the campus pond. The wind comes down from over and through the campus center, sweeps over the pond and is forced over the Fine Arts Center. Like an airfoil, the wind is blown over the building and makes a low-pressure pocket in the arcade in front of it. We all like to hope that it's safe in there, that the wind won't find us, but we're being foolish.

The wind whips around from one end of the Fine Arts Center with vengeance. It's like the velociraptors from Jurassic Park: utterly relentless and unforgiving. It is, I believe, an illustration of Bernoulli's principle, where a dinosaur becomes more cunning the hungrier it gets.

The wind we suffer from here certainly seems like a predator. It could be fairly warm but you wouldn't know because of the wind chill. It just swoops down and gnaws at any exposed part of your body. I like walking – considering it makes up the majority of my exercise – but being assaulted by hurricane-force winds puts me off.

Sometimes it seems like those old Arbor Day commercials showing scratchy film of the Dust Bowl. I bet I could make a small cart, hoist a sail and make it down North Pleasant Street. I wouldn't recommend doing so, but I bet it would work.

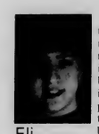
Is there anything we can do about the wind, short of going some place warm for the winter?

To find the answer, it is worth investigating what the wind is and where it comes from. According to the National Weather Service, wind is the result of differences in air pressure between two geographic areas. The pressure differences can be caused by atmospheric absorption of solar energy, differences in altitude of the geographic areas, the Earth's rotation and axial tilt, a slight contribution from the moon's gravity and the odd catastrophic explosion or two, such as from a volcano, nuclear blast or asteroid impact/atmospheric entry disintegration.

I do not believe that the winds we deal with down here are caused by Canadian nuclear testing, but perhaps the CIA should investigate, just to make sure.

Anyways, the most likely reason for the strong winds is that we're in a valley. We're not that far above sea level so we've got a higher pressure than say, most of Vermont. In the winter, pressure decreases because of cooler temperatures, but all that air is still weighed down by the rest of the atmosphere, so there's some give-and-take between the competing forces. But another force is involved: the sun. Because of the cooler air temperature, the air is dryer so there are fewer clouds. On days without many clouds, the atmosphere absorbs more solar energy, warming up and increasing air pressure.

The most affected area is going to be one that's very cold and dry, like eastern Canada and northern New England. The high pressure areas win out and expand, creating the north wind that speeds up as it goes through river valleys because of Bernoulli's principle.



I think the solution lies in those Arbor Day commercials. We can plant trees. A nice, dense forest of tall pine trees with some hardwoods thrown in for variety, planted across the northern side of campus, should work wonders when it matures.

A shorter term solution would be to build tunnels linking all campus buildings, or at least all academic buildings. They have a similar network at the State University of New York in Albany beneath their main academic quadrangle.

The tunnels will also be useful because we can hide in them when the dinosaurs attack.

Matthew M. Robare is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mrobare@student.umass.edu.

Hot drinks in cold weather

Eli Gottlieb

Let us discuss the Tea Party movement, a movement originally founded by civil libertarians and fiscal paleoconservatives. Since it began in 2007, its grassroots efforts have been watered by aristocratic Republican backers, and its enemies have ridiculed it for taking in anti-Semites, white supremacists, Christian fundamentalists and conspiracy theorists.

As jobs have evaporated, however, the Tea Party movement has attracted many ordinary Americans angry at the alliance between government and big business. They have become an undeniably solid political force, and a Wall Street Journal poll released in mid-December showed more support for the Tea Party movement than for the Democratic and Republican parties.

Since only 28 percent of Americans trusted the Republican Party to take America in the right direction (versus 45 percent for the Tea Party movement), I honestly think that the latter could replace the former as a real political party. This would totally reconfigure the American political spectrum, and I'd like to tell everyone how I hope to see it go.

The Tea Party will stand for the freedom of Americans to live without anyone reaching into their wallets. They will support the use of violence in defense of one's self and one's nation. They will stand against deficit spending and for balancing the federal budget – though I wish to remind them that Clinton did. They will stand for allowing free markets to take their course by letting even the largest corporations die when they so mismanage themselves so as to lose everything.

Where the Democrats have betrayed progress in favor of pretending to be Europeans, the Coffee Party will stand on Enlightenment values and the solidarity of working Americans.

They will stand for reforming the tax system, most likely supporting the Fair Tax proposal or some other flat tax, so that everyday Americans need not suffer extra tax burden for failing to fill out proper forms, and tax cheats among the rich and large corporations will find themselves with nowhere to hide from paying the price of civilization.

Still, as much as I'd like to see the real Tea Party devote itself to fairness in business and noninterference in government, I honestly can't believe that the party will form without the support of the established Republican base. Somehow, the dirty money of neo-feudal businessmen hungry for taxpayer dollars always seems to creep into free-market movements in the United States, and that brings the Republican foot-soldiers, the self-proclaimed "army of Christ."

It doesn't matter to these people that they make markets less free by passing taxpayer money to large corporations nobody likes over smaller businesses who satisfy their customers, as long as homosexuality and abortion remain legally condemned. The Republican Party of the Bush years has shown us that only by facing a powerful opposition party can the sensible folks within the Tea Party movement contain the influence of these self-aggrandizing moralists.

Thus, I propose the formation of the Coffee Party to oppose the Tea Party. Where the Democrats have betrayed progress in favor of pretending to be Europeans, the Coffee Party will stand on Enlightenment values and the solidarity of working Americans.

We of the Coffee Party will support some positions of the old Democratic Party, like national health insurance and environmental protection, because we know they can work. However, we will proclaim that all Americans are "Real Americans" deserving of representation, no matter what educational degree they have.

We will also have the guts to say what nobody today says: We can't defeat terrorism by giving up liberty, free speech entails free offense, American schools can only be fixed by letting better students learn more and a strong economy requires saving and exporting more while borrowing less.

The common consensus between the Tea Party and Coffee Party will define the coming political era. In the new consensus, both parties will stand for the right of citizens to live according to the dictates of our consciences, and both will stand for nationalism and the sovereignty of the American voting public over that of big business or foreign opinion.

Most of all, both parties will stand for hot drinks in cold weather, and right now America could certainly do with some of that.

Eli Gottlieb is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at egottlieb@student.umass.edu.

Boxers or briefs: What would Jesus wear?

By Andrew Sheridan
Collegian Staff

These days, symbols of faith seem to be in high fashion. From religious pendants and "What Would Jesus Do?" bracelets, to crucifix tattoos and Buddhist symbols, style is very important for those who believe. But while just about anyone can sport a Star of David around their neck, not every man has the cojones to rock their faith where it really counts – in their pants.

"I Love Jesus" boxer briefs are the latest incarnation of fashion's holiest trend. The briefs were created by New York designer Jason Sutherland, the founder of the underwear company Piss & Vinegar. In their company tagline, Piss & Vinegar asks, "Do you think you have enough?"

For the consummate consumer of religious iconography, the answer is a resounding "no." Piss & Vinegar's newest line is called "I Love..." and for the first time, it allows men to really show where their loyalties lie. While the "I Love Girls" and "I Love Boys" shorts make a statement that should be apparent by the time the pants come off, Sutherland anchors the line with the "Jesus" and "Buddha" models, intended for those who want to hide their shame but not their religious beliefs.

"Piss & Vinegar is about living from the heart, making sure you personally push yourself to do everything you can to find the energy needed to be something and more," said Sutherland in a recent interview. Sutherland is a pioneer in the industry, doing to boxers and briefs what Hot Topic has done for T-shirts.

While he does see the humor in his over-the-top designs, Sutherland uses iconic figures for a purpose and wants his customers to be able to express themselves genuinely.

Right away, I was intrigued by the idea of expressing myself through religious underwear. I couldn't help but wonder, would it serve as a reminder, sort of a "WWJD" meets Fruit of the Loom, or would it simply keep my equipment warm? I decided to do an experiment: I would wear the Jesus briefs twice, with one day spent as piously as possible, and the other spent being evil. What would having the Lamb of God strapped to my groin do to my luck, and to my conscience? I aimed to find out.

The first morning of the experiment was a Sunday, and I put on the sacred shorts right under my Sunday best. The first thing that struck me was that they were, in fact, quite nice briefs. I have always been a boxers man, and the tighty-whities got me a bit closer to the Host than I would have liked, but the material – 95 percent Pima cotton – was very high caliber. Emblazoned brightly with "I heart Jesus," the flaming Sacred Heart replaced the standard Western love emblem and made quite a bold fashion statement.

Upon arriving at my church, I was informed that the children's message I had been roped into participating in had been called off. Someone lost the script, so I didn't have to do a thing. I chalked that up to a win for the man with God in his pants, and sat back and listened to the day's sermon.

From there, the day went well, rounded out with a visit to my grandmother's house and other chores of a family man. I wasn't sure if I felt good because of my lucky charm or because I was playing Mr. Nice Guy, but seeing the tortured face of Jesus every time I unzipped was certainly startling. The Bethlehem briefs had been supportive so far, but the test was far from over.

Andrew Sheridan of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian sought to find out how having the Lamb of God hugging his groin might guide him spiritually, while sporting the latest "I Love Jesus" boxer briefs. In the end, his omnipotent undergarments brought him a little bit closer to God.

Forget wearing your heart on your sleeve. Wear the Sacred Heart on your undies to express your religious fervor. Few men have what it takes to pull off this look.

The next day, with underpants freshly folded, I suited up and headed out first thing in the morning for a full day of shameless debauchery. First thing on the agenda was to get some liquor in me, so I headed into town with a couple of friends to hit up a bar. My luck was sour right off the bat, as the bar we picked gouged me on mediocre beer and put a serious dent in my deviance budget.

Next, I hopped on the subway in Boston, trying to cheat the system by using an illegally acquired discount T pass. Once again I was foiled, as a pair of undercover Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority officers grabbed me on my way in and cited me for fare evasion. Did the underpants know? Were they working against me somehow?

Undeterred, I continued my trek and headed to Chinatown to meet up with a girl who staunchly claimed that her middle name was, in fact, "danger." My omnipotent shorts must have known my intentions with this young lady were impious, because my luck stayed bad. Lunch was a series of lousy dishes and hot oil burns, but I wasn't about to lose faith just yet.

Just as I was getting the feeling that God's judgment had me by the balls, my underpants gambit finally paid dividends. Back at "Ms. Danger's" apartment I was finally able to see the light. The briefs' most important feature is that they're hilarious. I wouldn't usually be happy if a woman laughed when I took off my pants, but in this case I made an exception. The holy yet comical shorts ended up on the floor for a good long while.

By the time I got home, the verdict was in: Jesus wanted me to be good. Sporting an image of the Son of God while trying to get laid falls into the category of desecration of the Host, and I seem to have paid for my transgression.

However, there is something to be said for making a statement, expressing how you feel no matter who sees it. And to those who are offended, remember: God gave us the free will to choose. Don't get your undies in a bundle.

Andrew Sheridan can be reached at asheri1@student.umass.edu.

Look for the "I Love Jesus" Boxers Photo Slideshow
www.dailycollegian.com

James Cameron's 'Avatar' opens a Pandora's box of clichés

Isaac Himmelman
Collegian Correspondent

I'll just get this off my chest. "Avatar" sucked.

Like everyone else on Earth, I shelled out $16-something to put on silly looking 3-D glasses and watch what will probably be the highest grossing film of all time. For those of you who spent winter break in a cave, "Avatar" is the latest film from director James Cameron, the man responsible for a little movie called "Titanic" (ever heard of it?). With a budget large enough to feed a small country, "Avatar" has been touted as groundbreaking in its use of new technology and computer-generated imagery (CGI) animation.

So just as our parents wax nostalgic about the first time they saw "Star Wars," 15 years from now I'll probably be sitting on a porch somewhere with my kids telling them that within the first half-hour of "Avatar," around the time when the alien cats were sticking their braided ponytails into the alien horses, I took off my 3-D glasses and walked out of the theater.

For weeks I've been hearing variations of the following: "Dude, 'Avatar' is totally sick." Or, "Bro, you have to see it at least once totally baked." And even "Dog, the plot is alright, but the visual effects make it worthwhile."

First off, dude, if by totally sick you mean totally filled with gut-wrenchingly predictable plot lines, cardboard acting and dialogue ripped from B-list Disney cartoons, then yeah, no doubt, it was totally sick. Next, bro, you should assess what it is in your life that sucks so much that you're willing to throw away large chunks of it on low-hrow romance movies where alien cats are prone to the occasional nip-slip. And finally, dog, you're wrong, the visual effects do not make the film worthwhile. OK, granted, there were some pretty spectacular visuals in this film. But you know what else has spectacular visuals? The screen savers on my MacBook, but you don't see me watching those for three hours.

From what I deciphered during my half-hour of viewing – and mind you, I didn't catch much – "Avatar" has something to do with white capitalist humans looking to kill off the planet Pandora's native blue species in order to obtain a resource known as unobtainium (get it?).

Cameron, perhaps looking to carve out a place for himself amongst the more courageous social critics of history, comments on the malignant nature of our military-industrial complex by making all the army guys really scary and mean. Meanwhile, an ex-marine (Sam Worthington) becomes an alien and falls in love with one of the buxier members of the tribe (Zoe Saldana). After overcoming obstacles he learns to live as one of them and paint with all the colors of the wind.

During my 30 minutes in the theater I sat and wondered: Where is the scrappy raccoon and the talking willow tree? Then I thought, am I the only one here that finds this film's depiction of the native inhabitants, with their braided hair and cross bows, to be borderline racist? Why is it that Hollywood's idea of native peoples always seems to involve crossbows and hair braids?

Finally I wondered, what would these noble, blue, crossbow-wielding natives of Pandora – with their new age pabulum and their surprisingly fantastic abdominal muscles – think of Cameron unahashedly brandishing the chic green flag of environmentalism while raking in God-knows-how-many millions off of "Avatar's" promotional tie-in with the dubious folk at the McDonald's corporation?

Then the aliens began sticking their ponytails into their horses, which to me is the universal sign for "show me the nearest exit." So save yourself 16 bucks if you haven't already made it to the theater. I'll let you watch a spectacular screensaver on my MacBook for free.

Isaac Himmelman can be reached at ihimmelm@student.umass.edu

The floating Hallelujah mountains of Pandora depicted in 3-D are one of few high points of "Avatar," boasting groundbreaking effects.

James Cameron's latest film "Avatar" features numerous plot holes, a clichéd sequence of events and racial overtones that border on the offensive.

Baby it's cold outside, but you can still look hot

By Liana Steir
Collegian Correspondent

Fashion is constantly evolving and being re-invented by not only designers, but everyday people, too. Currently, the trend of personalization reigns supreme. In addition to being weather conscious, the possibilities are endless for this new semester of fashion in a new decade.

Amherst in January sets a particular scene; sometimes it's challenging to rock the latest trends while not freezing. While I am big believer that fashion trumps comfort, I'm also a big believer in a little thing called warmth. That said, don't shy away from the coats and HSGs (hats, scarves, gloves). Right now especially, a lot of stores are having huge sales on warm coats.

Selecting a coat in a basic color, such as black or heather gray, opens up many more windows for fashion. Mixing prints and colors of your HSGs is much easier when you have a jacket that's a basic color. Placing a little pin or personalized button at the top of your scarf makes the look your own. Don't have a little pin or personalized button? No problemo. The Student Union Craft Center has dozens upon dozens of magazines you can flip through to make your very own button. How darling!

Coats in basic colors allow you to dress up your look with colorful hats and gloves. Try adding a pin to your scarf to switch it up.

Now you may be thinking, what are some fierce colors for winter? The answer: reds, royal blue, fuchsia and mustard yellow. Just because its wintertime doesn't mean you have to shy away from wearing hot colors. Purple hues are also in this season; purple tends to be a universal color that, depending on the shade, can we be worn all year round.

Don't worry though, denim is still "in!" It's a staple in almost everyone's wardrobe. Though you could write a whole book on the art of selecting the right denim, whether you are male or female, there are a few little tricks of the trade. Some days, it feels as if the bone-chilling winds could blow right through your jeans. Ladies, in order to prevent this, may I suggest wearing leggings or tights underneath your jeans? It may be hard to get them on at first, but trust me – it keeps your legs so much warmer when walking around campus, and may even ease the fit of your pants.

A well-fitting, flattering pair of jeans is priceless, and investing in high-quality denim is wise. However, you don't necessarily have to spend a fortune for the high-end brands, but you do want to devote time toward taking care of your jeans. Wash them inside out, and if you can, avoid putting them in the dryer – letting jeans air dry maintains the integrity of the fabric. I've seen affordable, great pairs of denim for men and women at places like H&M and The Gap.

Getting around in the snow sometimes proves to be a challenge. Because we live in New England, Uggs are totally appropriate in the winter, but they are not the only option! Outdoorsy brands like L.L. Bean and Land's End are recognizing the demand for more fashion-forward footwear. Available in a wide range of colors at an affordable price, they are designed to repel all of Amherst's wintery elements – now that's a booty call!

Liana Steir can be reached at lsteir@student.umass.edu.

Form meets function with trendy boot styles, now available as retailers respond to the demand for chic-looking winter clothing and accessories.

MESSAGES FROM THE BURSAR'S OFFICE

Payment Information

QuikPAY for Students

The Umass Amherst campus no longer sends paper bills. QuikPAY is our system for all students to view and/or pay their bills online and it is the preferred method of payment. To access QuikPAY students should go to their Student Center in SPIRE and then click on "View/Pay Bill" in the Finances section, located below the classes that the student is currently enrolled in.

QuikPAY for Parents and Guardians

Students can set up parents and other individuals as QuikPAY Authorized Payers through SPIRE. Students will input the payer's email and assign a temporary password. Authorized Payers will receive an email with their login name and after signing in with the password provided by the student they can select a new password for future use. Each billing cycle the payers will receive an email notifying them that the bill is available through a link in the text of the message. Go to www.umass.edu/bursar for details. Please be advised that QuikPAY and FERPA have their own separate authorizations/access codes.

FERPA

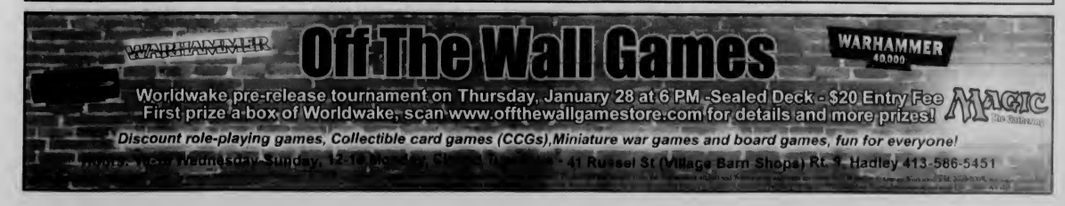
The Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act is a federal law protecting the confidentiality of your student records. In compliance with FERPA, UMass Amherst must have the student's written permission to release information from your records. You can provide permission by filling out a FERPA privacy waiver online. Completing the waiver will allow whomever you designate to communicate with the university about your bill, financial aid, and housing. You may edit your FERPA waiver at any time to change or eliminate your designees. The FERPA privacy waiver is limited to two categories of information: finances and housing. It does not allow your designees access to your academic information (such as your grades). Fill out the FERPA Privacy Waiver through SPIRE; navigate to the Student Home ⇨ Holds & To Do's⇨ FERPA Privacy Waiver.

Excess Express

Why wait in line to pick up your refund check? Sign up for Excess Express and have your refund automatically deposited into the U.S. bank account of your choice. To enroll, log on to SPIRE, navigate to the Student Menu->Finances->Excess Express. There you will follow the instructions and enter your banking information.

Mass PIRG/Child Care Waivers

Mass PIRG and Child Care can now be waived online. Log on to SPIRE. On your Student Center, click the Mass Pirg/Child Care Waiver link. Under the Finances Heading.



Waiving Student Health Insurance

If you did not waive the student health insurance for fall 2009 you may not waive it for spring 2010 semester unless spring 2010 is your first semester. The student mandatory health fee cannot be waived. If you are eligible to waive the Student Health Insurance Plan, visit http://spire.umass.edu for a link to the online waiver process. The Student Health Insurance waiver deadline for Spring 2010 is the end of add/drop.

Eligible Graduate Student Employees (Those in the GEO bargaining unit who qualify for SHIP Fee Exemptions) who do not waive SHIP are entitled to a 95% reduction of the SHIP Health Fee for an individual. Send the Bursar's Office an email at bursar @admin.umass.edu. to inform them that you will be enrolled in SHIP and qualify for the 95% reduction of this fee.

How to Contact Us

The Bursar Teller hours are Monday through Friday from 9:00am-4:00pm and the Customer Service hours are 9:00am-5:00pm. The Bursar telephone number is (413) 545-2368 or you can contact us by email at bursar@admin.umass.edu

Redshirt junior guard Megan Zullo helped combat the Minutewomen's turnover problems. Against Richmond, she had just one turnover, adding 11 points in the victory.

MAXWELL SARKIS/COLLEGIAN

Turnovers a problem

By Steve Levine
Collegian Staff

An undesirable statistic has haunted the Massachusetts women's basketball team all season: turnover ratio.

The Minutewomen, who finished non-conference play at 6-9, have the worst turnover ratio in the Atlantic 10.

UMass' strengths this year have been rebounding and getting to the line, where it converts 77 percent of the time, good for second-best in the conference. UMass averages 38.4 rebounds per game and limits opponents to 35.2 rebounds per game, good for fourth-best and fifth-best, respectively. However, UMass' weakness in turnovers frequently out-does its strengths, a problem coach Marnie Dacko cannot ignore.

"[Limiting turnovers] is critical to your success, it's critical to your possessions," Dacko said. "You work hard to outrebound teams, and when you have the ball and lose it, you automatically give it to your opponent and give them more opportunities to score."

UMass has committed 331 turnovers to opponents' 233, a margin of -5.76 per game. The top three teams in this category are Richmond (+4.50), Temple (+2.81) and Duquesne (+2.12). Consequently, these teams are experiencing great success this year. Richmond finished nonconference play at 12-4, Temple at 11-5 and Duquesne at 12-5.

"Unfortunately, we've been consistent at turning the ball over," Dacko said. "But it's also different people at different times. It seems to kill us because when we turn the ball over it [constantly] leads to opponent points instead of them having to go 94 feet and beat our defense. When we're rebounding more than other teams, shooting fairly well from the floor and getting to the foul line, the turnovers negate all those good things."

On Jan. 9, UMass hosted Rhode Island to open its conference schedule. UMass committed 24 turnovers to Rhode Island's 14 and lost the game, 58-57. Impact players Jasmine Watson, Kristina Danella and Nicole Jones accounted for 18 of the turnovers, registering six apiece.

Turnovers are being committed all over the floor, from all different positions.

"Our post players are moving their feet, they're not focused," Dacko said. "The perimeter players are lacking discipline. Attention to detail is missing. We've got to be a lot more consistent in executing our offense ... and that doesn't take a lot of skill. It takes effort and concentration. Staying in the moment and not getting ahead of ourselves has been a problem."

UMass edged out a 62-59 win against Saint Louis; still, turnovers were an issue, as the Minutewomen committed 18, four more than the Billikens. If not for forward Diatiema Hill's brilliant performance, UMass could have endured a different fate. Hill scored 26 points, while registering 10 rebounds, five assists and four steals.

UMass' strength lies within its bigger players at the forward and center positions. These players frequently score and deliver defensive stops. The relative ineffectiveness of the Minutewomen guards is creating more turnovers, as well as putting additional strain on the veteran guard, Kim Benton.

"We're not giving our point guard [Benton] enough rest," Dacko said. "Having Dee Montgomery out there has really been a struggle for us. Having a distributor and a point guard that can dish the ball out well is critical to your offense."

UMass' next two games come against Richmond and Duquesne, which are in the top three in turnover ratio in the conference. Combining UMass' lowly ratio to these teams' high ratios could show the great effects turnovers have on the game.

Steve Levine can be reached at slevine@student.umass.edu.

Katie Chandler is finding balance as the legal guardian of her teenage sister, her busy life and her promising career. Every day, she's feeding her life, her career and her future.

Feed your future at www.pwc.tv

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

© 2010 PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP. All rights reserved. "PricewaterhouseCoopers" refers to PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP (a Delaware limited liability partnership) or, as the context requires, the PricewaterhouseCoopers global network or other member firms of the network, each of which is a separate and independent legal entity. We are proud to be an Affirmative Action and Equal Opportunity Employer.

winter sale
up to 75% off
women's shoes clothing and accessories
ZANNA
downtown Amherst

Inconsistencies plague UMass in new year

By Jay Asser
Collegian Staff

During winter term, the Massachusetts hockey team continued problems from the first half of the season, along with adding inconsistencies on both sides of the puck to begin 2010.

The Minutemen (14-8-0, 7-6-0 Hockey East), who have struggled to play a full 60 minutes of hockey at times this season, had trouble in single periods in their three losses.

In its 4-1 loss to Bentley in the UConn Hockey Classic Championship Game, UMass kept the score knotted at one despite outshooting the Falcons 35-10 after two periods. In the final frame, the Minutemen allowed three goals, putting the game out of reach.

Against Boston University, UMass was once again outplayed in the last period as the Terriers scored three goals to put the game on ice for a win.

The third consecutive loss for the Minutemen was caused by a poor start, as New Hampshire came out of the gates with four scores in the opening period to give UMass an insurmountable deficit.

Normally a strong squad in the later stages of the game, half of the third period goals (18) allowed by the Minutemen this season came in the last four contests. Nevertheless, UMass is tied with UMass-Lowell in the Hockey East for the second-fewest goals given up in the final frame.

Power play inconsistent

On offense, the power-play unit for the Minutemen has been erratic in the last five contests prior to this weekend's set with UMass-Lowell. Though the UMass man advantage scored six goals, it was held scoreless in three games. All six scores came in two games which resulted in a loss against BU and a win against Northeastern.

In the Hockey East, UMass ranks second in power-play goals with 25, and second in power-play percentage, with a 25.8 success rate.

Return unsuccessful

Though Dan Meyers came into his final season at UMass in contention with Paul Dainton for playing time between the pipes, he has had difficulties regaining his 2008 form when he averaged 2.65 goals-against in 14 contests.

After beginning his senior year with two victories in his first two games against Niagara and Yale, Meyers was benched after allowing three goals in the first period to Quinnipiac in a 5-4 overtime loss on Nov. 28.

Meyers did not see action again until he returned to start against New Hampshire on Jan. 9, following two losses by Paul Dainton in which Dainton allowed 11 total goals.

Despite making 26 saves, Meyers struggled again in the first period, allowing four goals and seven total for the game as the Minutemen fell 7-2 to the Wildcats.

Doing damage

In the last five games prior to the Minutemen's two games with the Riverhawks, Will Ortiz, James Marcou and Casey Wellman have contributed to UMass' offense, each tallying at least five points over that span.

Marcou continued to pour on assists, recording seven to give him a nation-leading 28 assists and 34 points.

Ortiz and Wellman were named UMass Dimn Bros. Athlete of the Week in consecutive weeks, each playing a significant role in victories.

After scoring three goals and adding two assists in three games, Wellman was awarded the honor for his play. His two scores, including a game-winner, gave the Minutemen a 4-3 win over Union in the opening game of the UConn Hockey Classic.

Wellman's 17 goals tie him with Michigan State's Corey Tropp for first in the nation, despite playing four fewer contests.

Ortiz received the honor after helping UMass snap a three-game losing streak with a 4-1 win against Northeastern, in which he tallied a goal and two assists.

The three-point game for Ortiz gave him a total of 10 goals and 11 assists for the season, tying his career-high of 21 points he set in his freshman year.

Jay Asser can be reached at jasser@student.umass.edu.

Junior James Marcou leads the nation in assists (30) and points (27), helping the Minutemen earn a No. 19 national ranking. UMass hosts Vermont Saturday in search of their fourth consecutive victory.

ED BERNSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

Danella leading UM

By Mike Mastone
Collegian Staff

Amid an up-and-down season for the Massachusetts women's basketball team, forward Kristina Danella continues to shine and prove that she is one of the best offensive talents in the Atlantic 10.

After showing promise during her freshman campaign, Danella is taking advantage of her increased playing time and becoming the Minutewomen's most dangerous offensive weapon. Entering Saturday's match up against Richmond, she is the team leader with averages of 14.3 points per game and 6.8 rebounds per game. She has also made a team-high 80 free throws in 91 attempts (87.9 percent).

Her scoring and rebounding numbers rank fourth and eighth in the A-10, respectively, while she trails only Fordham's Kristina Bell (93.2 percent) and UMass (7-10, 1-1 A-10) teammate Diatiema Hill (89.4 percent) in free throw percentage.

"I think I'm being more patient on offense and knowing when to shoot and not to shoot, and rebounding more, and picking up the defense a little more," Danella said. "I know it's still a work in progress, but I've picked it up a lot from last year."

The key reasons for Danella's success on the offensive end are her consistency and versatility. Defenses are forced to honor her presence on the court due to her ability to score in a variety of ways. She led UMass in scoring in 9 of her 16 games, and scored in double figures in 14 of them.

Because Danella's numbers from 3-point range are down from last year, when she tied the UMass record for 3-point field goals in a season (58), getting to the foul line became an increasingly important part of her game. From Nov. 20-28 she knocked down 27 consecutive free throws, four shy of the UMass record of 31 set by Kathy Coyner in 1998.

Although they are down, her 3-point numbers should not be taken lightly. She is second on the Minutewomen with 29 made 3-pointers in 80 attempts (36.3 percent). She trails only Megan Zullo, who has 39 makes on 92 attempts (37.3 percent).

Dacko is not the only member of UMass impressed with Danella's skills on the offensive end. In her first season playing alongside Danella, freshman forward Shakia Robinson was quick to praise her teammate's scoring abilities.

"She's a good shooter ... also her post work has improved a lot," Robinson said. "It's just her nature. I think she's a natural scorer."

However, both Danella and Dacko said they agree that one area that has lots of room for improvement is Danella's ability to communicate while on the floor.

"The coaches talk to me about being a better communicator because I'm quiet and don't really talk [on the court]," Danella said. "So I'm continuing to work on that. I'm not the vocal leader on the court, I'll say that. But I'm just leading by my play I guess, because I don't really speak."

Dacko said she feels that by being more vocal, Danella will become a better team leader and thus a better overall, more well-rounded player.

"She's scored more than 500 points already in her sophomore season and her voice is still silent out there. But in order to become a better player, she has to become the vocal leader of this team as well," Dacko said.

Dacko also cited one problem in particular that not only plagues Danella, but the team as a whole. She cited the forward's late decision making in games against New Hampshire and Rhode Island, saying she needs to be more disciplined and have more confidence in her skills, rather than trying to stay in her comfort zone.

"When you tend to doubt yourself as an individual is when you can't knock [in] that delivery blow," Dacko said. "That's where we are as a team right now. We've played well enough to win ball games and were coming up short. We're fragile instead of being able to compete and leave it all on the floor."

Through 46 games, Danella already cemented her spot in the UMass record books. She is the leading scorer among active Minutewomen with 508 career points, which puts her 42nd all-time at UMass. She is the only player in the top 50 with less than 50 games played in her career. She is second among active players in rebounding with 246, trailing only Hill's 259.

Mike Mastone can be reached at mmastone@student.umass.edu.

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT
REGISTRATION FOR SPRING 2010

The Writing Program Placement Test will be offered on:

Tuesday, January 19, at 6:00pm in Bartlett 3

You must take this exam to qualify for enrollment in EnglWrit112 (College Writing).

This test may be taken only once.

Students do not need to register for the test.

WANNA HOOK UP?
Free High Speed Internet and Expanded Cable

SUGARLOAF ESTATES
28 River Road, Sunderland
665-3856
www.sugarloafestates.com

Aspen Chase & Alpine Commons
APARTMENT HOMES
133 Belchertown Road, Rt. 9, Amherst
256-0741
www.aspenchaseapartments.com
www.alpinecommons.com

- Deluxe 2 bedroom apartment homes
- FREE Heat & Hot Water
- Basketball, Volleyball & Refreshing Pool*
- Washer/Dryers in selected styles
- Pet Friendly Community
- Free On-Site Parking
- On-Site Storage Facilities*
- Minutes from UMASS on FREE Bus line
- Spacious 1, 2, 3 & 4 bedroom apartment homes
- All UTILITIES INCLUDED*
- Patio or Balcony in selected styles
- On-Site Laundry Facilities
- Pet Friendly Community
- Off Street Parking
- On the PVTA Bus line
- Minutes from UMASS & the Center of Amherst

*Restrictions apply

THE BOLTWOOD PROJECT™
Serving others since 1989—and STILL making a difference!
A STUDENT / COMMUNITY SERVICE LEARNING PROGRAM
(an RSO and Dept. of Landscape Architecture & Regional Planning sponsored prog.)

REACH OUT—AND BECOME A SPECIAL FRIEND TO PEOPLE WITH SPECIAL NEEDS
Your life will NEVER be the same!
••EARN 1-2 CREDITS ••GAIN VALUABLE EXPERIENCE ••REWARDING, CHALLENGING, and FUN
Spring Semester 2010— Recruitment Nights
You must attend ONE of these meetings. No exceptions, even if you have participated before!
6:00-8:00 PM (Note: Prompt starting time!!!)
Campus Center Basement • Room 101 • Jan. 25 (Mon) • Jan. 26 (Tues) • Jan. 27 (Wed)
•Assignment notification ONLY Thurs. Jan. 28 at Bolts.ood table CC Concourse
No telephone inquiries. YOU (or a friend) must pickup the notification letter!!!
Volunteer, while earning credit!

GET A 5% REBATE ON TEXTBOOKS
from the UMASS Textbook Annex

Here's how it works:

Step 1: Purchase your books from the UMass Textbook Annex.

Step 2: Bring your receipt and UMASS ID to the UMASS University Store in the Campus Center between the fourth week and last day of classes.

Step 3: Redeem your 5% rebate credit on anything at the UMass University Store.

Rebate offer is good only on textbook purchases. Valid ID required. Returned books not eligible for rebate. Textbook receipts must be presented during the semester purchases where made. Store rebate credit expires at the end of the semester they where received. Rebate not to exceed $50.00 per semester. See store for details.

UMass Amherst University of Massachusetts
University Store and Textbook Annex
Amherst Campus Center • 413-545-2619
Powered by efollett.com

UM drops last three

BASKETBALL from page 12

game back and tied the Minutemen, thanks to Brenton Butler's 31 points. With 2.9 seconds left, senior captain Ricky Harris made a jump shot to give his team its first A-10 win.

With less than four minutes to go in the second half, Harris scored five straight points to give UMass a 52-42 lead and continued its control of the game up until the 10:28 mark.

Butler then scored 11 of his points as part of a 16-3 run and tied the game at 65 apiece. However, the Rams couldn't maintain a lead and stayed winless in the A-10.

DAVIDSON 63 – UMASS 61

Davidson's DP Kuhlman made two free throws with 4.1 seconds left in the game to give UMass its second-straight loss in A-10 play.

The Minutemen were up 49-47 with 10:28 left in the game before the Wildcats went on an 11-0 run to go up nine. UMass went scoreless for over seven minutes, but stayed with Davidson long enough to tie the game with eight seconds left.

Harris came off the bench to lead his team with 21 points, while Anthony Gurley added 17 to the effort.

The Minutemen finished the game 18-8 percent from 3-point range, including nine straight misses in the first half.

BC 79 – UMASS 67

The Minutemen hoped to keep the game close against Boston College as it did against Memphis, but the Golden Eagles pulled away midway through the second half on a 16-4 run and held on for a 12-point win.

Gurley led UMass with 23 points and 10 rebounds. The Minutemen dominated the boards, 50-33, but couldn't hold off BC's offense, which had four players finish in double-figures.

Forwards Corey Raji and Joe Trapani finished with a team-high 18 points for the Golden Eagles and the team shot 44.1 percent from the field compared to 36.8 for the Minutemen.

UMASS 73 – MEMPHIS 72

All Memphis needed to break the Associated Press Top 25 Poll was a win over the Minutemen. UMass freshman Terrell Vinson had other plans for the Tigers.

The forward led the Maroon and White with 21 points at the TD Garden in Boston, including a last-second shot to give his team a one-point win.

Part of the reason for UMass' success was its advantage in rebounding (44-24) and 50 percent shooting.

The Minutemen led by seven points in the second half, until Memphis went on a 12-2 run to take a 63-60 lead with 6:40 left. However, UMass continued to use its edge on the boards to limit second-chance opportunities and upset the Tigers.

Adam Miller can be reached at amiller@dailycollegian.com

Guard David Gibbs saw a decrease in his playing time with the emergence of Gary Correia and Freddie Riley. Gibbs has averaged 2.7 points and 2.6 assists this season as a sophomore.

Minutewomen start Atlantic 10 schedule with 1-2 record

W. BASKETBALL from page 12

Wilson's game-winning bucket came off of a steal she made while UMass had the lead. She finished the game with 11 points, five steals and five assists.

Danella had a double-double with 16 points and 11 rebounds and shot 3-of-4 from 3-point distance. Watson had 13 points, five rebounds and three blocks. Hill added 10 points, five rebounds, three steals and two assists.

The Ram's Lindsay Harris led URI in scoring with 14 points but also pulled down nine rebounds.

HARVARD 72 – UMASS 60

Watson received the first start of her collegiate basketball career; however, UMass fell to the Crimson's spot-on shooting (72-60) at home.

In the first half, Harvard shot 58.8 percent from 3-point range and forced the Minutewomen play catch up as they fell behind 46-29 at halftime.

Watson had 13 points and 10 rebounds to log the first double-double of her career. Danella added 19 points and seven rebounds but was second in scoring to Nicole Jones, who had 22 points on 8-of-14 shooting from the free-throw line.

UMass put together a 25-12 run over a period of eight minutes in the second half but could not comeback.

MAINE 65 – UMASS 49

In the first game of 2010, Maine pulled off an upset over UMass at the Mullins Center as the Blackbear's Amanda Tewksbury shot 4-of-7 from 3-point range and had 24 points to go along with nine assists.

Danella was the high scorer for the Minutewomen with 12 points, and the team struggled to get things going on offense. Jones and Watson also scored in double digits for UMass with 11 and 10 points respectively.

UMass was outscored 20-11 in bench points, and the team was held to under 50 points for the third time this season.

DELAWARE 57 – UMASS 55

In front of a crowd of 2,938 at the Bob Carpenter Center, UMass battled but lost against Elena Delle Donne and the Delaware Blue Hens 57-55, thanks to a last-second shot by the transfer from UConn.

Delle Donne is one of the most highly touted women's basketball players in the nation and proved why by putting up 21 points and 11 rebounds against the Minutewomen. UMass limited the 6-foot-5 forward in the first half, but Delle Donne banked in a jumper with 4.3 seconds remaining to seal Delaware's victory.

Zullo led the Minutewomen with 15 points, and it was her lob pass to Jones with 30 seconds left that set up Jones with a perfect lane to the basket, tying the game at 55.

After Delle Donne's game-winning shot, UMass worked the ball down court, but a Kim Benton 3-point shot did not fall in the waning seconds of the contest.

UMASS 70 – NJIT 59

The Minutewomen were led by the starting five as Danella, Jones, Zullo and Hill all scored in double digits and UMass pulled away with a victory on the road.

Zullo once again lit up the scoreboard with her 3-point shooting, going 5-of-8 from beyond the arc. However, NJIT's Jessica Gerald kept the Highlanders in the game and battled Zullo by converting 4-of-12 3-point attempts. Gerald finished with 24 points to lead NJIT.

Hill also had a big game for UMass, recording her second double-double of the season with 13 points and 10 rebounds.

Neil Carroll can be reached at nacarroll@student.umass.edu

Stephanie Lawerence had nine points and six rebounds in 26 minutes, helping the Minutewomen defeat Saint Louis on Jan. 13.

Minutemen silence critics of January play

HOCKEY from page 12

the Minutemen were still within reach at the start of the final period, but three goals by BU put the game out of reach.

Syner, Wellman and Ortiz each found the back of the net for UMass, while Zach Cohen and Colby Cohen led the way with two goals apiece for BU. Dainton allowed six goals while making 22 saves on the night.

BENTLEY 4 – UMASS 1

UMass came into the UConn Hockey Classic as the favorite, but left disappointed as they fell in the championship game to Bentley behind a 42-save performance by Kyle Rank.

The Falcons managed just 16 shots in the game but made them count when they did, sneaking three past Dainton and scoring another on an empty net.

Kevin Czepial scored his first goal of the season to give UMass a 1-0 lead midway through the second period, but Bentley would tie it 1:26 later and go on to score four unanswered goals on their way to winning the tournament.

UMASS 4 – UNION 3

Despite trailing 3-1 at the start of the third period, Wellman scored two goals and Ortiz added a third for the Minutemen in the final period to advance past the first round of the UConn Hockey Classic.

Dainton played well in net for UMass against then-No. 18 Union, stopping 36 shots, including all 12 in the third period.

The win set up a match up between the Minutemen and Bentley after the Falcons topped host UConn in the opening round of the tournament.

Jeffrey R. Lamard can be reached at jlamard@dailycollegian.com.

UMass had its most impressive January in recent memory with a winning record during winter break. The Minutemen won their last three games, holding opponents to two or less goals in each game.

UGG sale
UGG sale
UGG sale
selected styles
selected colors
regular $188
now $99
regular $149
now $89
ZANNA
downtown Amherst

The Daily Collegian asks, "Are you a SPORTS FAN?" THEN GO WRITE FOR THE COLLEGIAN!
Contact Jeff Lamard at sports@dailycollegian.com

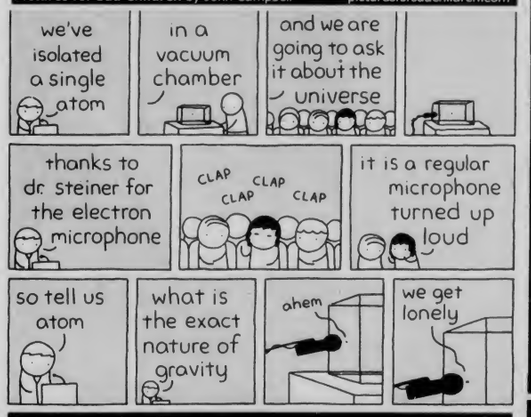
SPRING BREAK
JAMAICA
Once you go, you know.
Spring Break comes to life...
Live Concerts
Awesome VIP Parties
Beautiful Beaches
Scenic Cliff Jumping
Spectacular Sunsets
Book Your Trip Today! Contact:
SUN SPLASH TOURS
www.sunsplashtours.com
1.800.426.7710
STUDENT TRAVEL SERVICES
1.800.648.4849
www.ststravel.com

COMICS

SUDOKU

				4		7		8
	9				3	5
		1	6		9	4
		4		8				9
1	8							4
6			1
		6				7	5
		2	3	6	5

MONDAY - SATURDAY
Happy Hour -
1/2 Price Appetizers 9:30 - Close
EVERY THURSDAY:
Promo & Trivia Night
EVERYDAY:
$1.00 Drafts and $5 Movie Tickets!*
21ST BIRTHDAY:
Free Entree or Small Pizza with ID*
Hampshire Mall
Across from Cinemark
413-549-0077
FREE Delivery
ARIZONA PIZZA



CITY FOOTWEAR
Students and Staff of the five Colleges Eligible for 10% of with ID nike
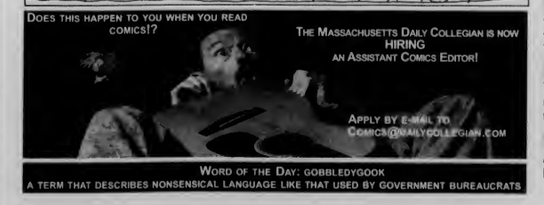
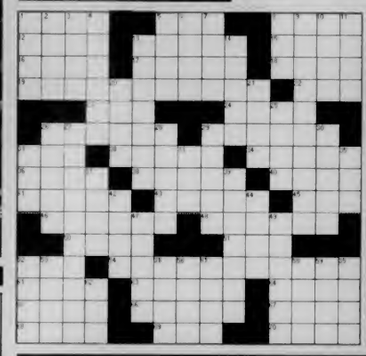
New Era
Clarks
TIMBERLAND
34 Pleasant Street · Northampton
413.341.5581

Chainsawsuit by Kris Straub chainsawsuit.com



Pictures for Sad Children by John Campbell picturesforsadchildren.com

Hark, a Vagrant by K. Beaton harkavagrant.com



WE WANT YOUR COMICS!
Put your comics in front of thousands of readers.
Questions? Comments? E-mail us: comics@dailycollegian.com
Friend us on Facebook: "Collegian Comix"

CROSSWORD

"Club Nights" at the MONKEY BAR
Tues. 1/19 DJ Biggs
"He's been touring the east coast circuit during the break, packin' up handles along the way. It's time to see the goods. Welcome back Techno Tuesday!"
Wed. 1/20 DJ Marvel
"Monkey has been a catalyst for local as well as out-of-town talent. Marvel is new to the Monkey Squad and looking to make an impression. Hip Hop, Techno, House, Dance and Mash-Ups"
Thurs. 1/21 DJ Yeah Guy and DJ Rott Sizzle
While thrown babies & thon' diary deeds this past has been procuring a new sound incorporating old & new beats with some trash off-the-boat sounds. don't miss it. House, Hip Hop, Dance, Techno & free dance lessons..... SIKE!"
Fri. 1/22 DJ Rott Sizzle
Rockin' his interplanetic "make ya wanna order milkshake on a date" sound... smoooooothe yet daring!
Sat. 1/23 DJ Construc
There is no doubt this beat bound will be bringing thunder, You provide the lightning & we have ourselves a storm!
413-259-1600
63 North Pleasant Street
Amherst, MA 01002
www.mymonkeybar.com
21+

ACROSS
1. Black bird
5. Alien Life Form
8. Eardrum
12. Not there
13. Spy on
15. Secure against leakage
16. Bright thought
17. Make physical contact
18. Coastal raptor
19. Collaboration
22. Chief executive officer
23. Egg cells
24. A type of volcanic rock
26. Set ablaze
29. A tincture
31. Relative of an ostrich
32. Sensational
34. Way in
36. Unwanted email
38. Donkeys
40. Eat
41. Danger
43. An ancient Athenian philosopher
45. Allow
46. Lasso
48. Billows
50. Close
51. Blemish
52. Cereal grain
54. Similarity in appearance
61. Supplication
63. Hardrail post
64. Deviate
65. Purposes
66. Mountain crest
67. Sword
68. Mats of grass
69. Before
70. Current event information

DOWN
1. Fashionable
2. Start over
3. Chocolate cookie
4. Munition
5. Dwarf buffalo
6. Dolt
7. Central points
8. Anagram of "Sue"
9. Moneymaking
10. Curse
11. Margarine
13. Layer
14. Picture
20. Wickedness
21. Naked
25. Discover
26. Push
27. Warranted
28. Explode
29. Notions
30. Cousins of ospreys
31. If you had this, you would know this
33. Sick
35. Nevertheless
37. Bog
39. Misstep
42. Teller of untruths
44. Verbal
47. Sporting venue
49. Sculpted
52. Creative work
53. As well
55. And
56. Pitcher
57. Distribute
58. Back of the neck
59. They man a ship
60. Visual organs
62. Donkey

"Cheese... milk's leap toward immortality"
–Clifton Fadiman

BASIC INSTRUCTIONS How to Explain What "the Hell" You Are Doing by Scott MEYER

If someone asks what "the hell" you're doing, it's often because they know what you're doing, but don't want to face it.

Often the issue is not that they don't get what you're doing, but that they can't understand why you're doing it.

Don't get defensive. Just calmly explain why what you're doing is a good idea, or at least not as bad an idea as they think.

You may never get people to understand your actions, but you might get them to accept your actions, which is something.

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20 - FEB. 18
There are only so many times in life when one can change their last name to McGillicutty.

pisces FEB. 19 - MAR. 20
Perhaps you should reaffirm your bold declarations with sensational hip thrusts to show the world who's boss.

aries MAR. 21 - APR. 19
I believe it was a famous civil rights activist who once said, "You lookin' like a fool wit yo pants on the ground!"

taurus APR. 20 - MAY. 20
Auditions for the new sexbot infomercial are being held in local back alleys. See your local "creepy guy" for details!

gemini MAY. 21 - JUN. 21
Your Wi-Fi allergies are too terrible which is why your family bought this horoscope to tell you, "connection terminated"

cancer JUN. 22 - JUL. 22
All of your future problems can be solved by large deposits of unobtainium.

leo JUL. 23 - AUG. 22
Either there is a disturbance in the force or Nicolas Cage has publically endorsed Rogaine for Men.

virgo AUG. 23 - SEPT. 22
How many times will you suffer from indecent exposure and not learn from your mistakes?

libra SEPT. 23 - OCT. 22
One must always make friends in the right places. Where will you meet your luchador body guard?

scorpio OCT. 23 - NOV. 21
Statistics is the best guide to decision-making. 95 percent of the time, it works every time.

sagittarius NOV. 22 - DEC. 21
It's quite frustrating when your companion closes his or her eyes while watching Whoopi. . .Goldberg movies.

capricorn DEC. 22 - JAN. 19
Stealth actions should be committed with the musical theme from "Inspector Gadget" in mind.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS TUESDAY

BACK TO SCHOOL, SPRING 2010 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

New year, new outlook for UMass

Minutemen have big win amongst struggles

By Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

While students were on break, the Massachusetts men's basketball team started its Atlantic 10 schedule after closing out the non-conference games.

Although UMass (7-10, 1-3 A-10) finished winter break 2-5, coach Derek Kellogg remains positive about his team's progress over winter break. Here's a recap on all the games that happened during break.

Temple 76 – UMass 64

The last time UMass played a ranked opponent was on Nov. 28, when it lost in a 100-68 rout to Michigan State.

The 19th-ranked Owls tried to produce a similar result with a 22-point lead and six minutes, eight seconds left in the first half, but this time, the Minutemen kept Temple from running away. UMass cut the deficit to seven points on a 3-pointer from Javorn Farrell with 8:41 left in the second half, but Temple's hot shooting kept the Minutemen from getting any closer.

The Owls finished the game 14-for-22 from beyond the arc with 11 of those shots coming from guards Ryan Brooks and Juan Fernandez.

Richmond 70 – UMass 63

Freddie Riley led UMass with 20 points and also helped overcome an early 14-point deficit, but was outscored 17-10 in overtime. Richmond opened with a 5-0 lead before the freshman hit a 3-pointer to keep the game close.

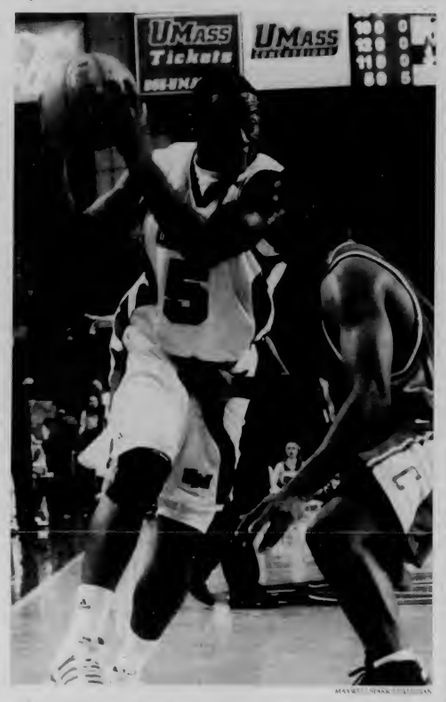
The Spiders were cold from the field (37.1 percent) and from 3-point range (20.7), but controlled the game with their defense.

Richmond's Darrius Garrett was dominant on the defensive end with 13 rebounds and 14 blocks. The sophomore was two points away from recording a triple-double.

Ryan Butler also played a critical role on the defensive end with four steals, which contributed to 18 Minutemen turnovers.

La Salle 80 – UMass 74

Poor free-throw shooting (52.2 percent) prevented the Minutemen from holding onto their seven-point lead at halftime to lose in front of a pro-UMass crowd in Springfield.



Aaric Murray led the Explorers with 18 points in 27 minutes and showed off his defensive skills around the basket with four blocks.

The Minutemen received strong efforts from Terrell Vinson (13 points) and Riley (22 points), but couldn't hold off La Salle's size down low, as it dominated the boards with 47 rebounds compared to 32 from UMass.

UMass 78 – Fordham 76

UMass led by 13 points during the game, but Fordham

See BASKETBALL on page 10

Senior guard Ricky Harris leads the Minutemen in points (17.0) and assists (2.9), but the Minutemen won two of seven games over winter break.

Correia, Riley see increase in playing time over winter break

By David Brinch
Collegian Staff

After coming off the bench in 29 of 30 games last season, junior guard Gary Correia was very close to transferring to Boston University in 2009. Correia had backed up guard Chris Lowe during his first two seasons in Amherst, and didn't know what his role with the Massachusetts basketball team really was, with coach Derek Kellogg bringing in five freshmen. Besides senior guard Ricky Harris, Correia is the most experienced player for the Minutemen (7-10, 1-3 Atlantic 10).

At the beginning of the season, Correia was splitting time with sophomore guard David Gibbs at running the offense. After having Harris run the point for a bit, Kellogg turned to Correia to play a much bigger role, and as of late, it has paid off. He played 31 minutes in the upset over Memphis, playing tough defense, scoring seven points and grabbing a career-high five rebounds.

Following the Memphis game, Correia played 24 minutes, dishing out five assists and no turnovers in a Boston College loss. He has started the past four games for UMass, earning his second career start at Davidson on Dec. 30. He has turned the ball over just 14 times this season, and Kellogg sees Correia as somebody who he can trust on the court.

"Really, he gives us a junior who's been through the wars a little bit," Kellogg said. "I think he's maturing into a role of being a good guy that the coach can rely on and trust out there, [and] he's really one of the guys that does the little things out there."

Riley scoring big

It seems that there are no questions regarding freshman guard Freddie Riley's health.

After having minor knee surgery on Dec. 9, Riley has returned to the court and has been a strong force off the bench offensively for the Minutemen after missing four games. In his first game back against Fordham on Jan. 6, Riley played 16 minutes, scoring six points and grabbing three rebounds in the UMass victory. During the next game against La Salle, Riley exploded for 22 points, leading all scorers while going 6-of-14 from beyond the arc.

The following game against Richmond, Riley again led all scorers with 20 points, going 7-of-13 from the field and 5-of-10 from 3-point range in 25 minutes of action. It was Riley's sixth game in double figures, and his second in a row.

While the contests against the Explorers and the Spiders both ended in defeats for the Minutemen, Kellogg now knows how big of a threat Riley can be scoring the basketball off the bench. In 12 games, Riley is third on the team behind Ricky Harris and Anthony Gurley with 11.2 points per game, while averaging just 17.8 minutes per game.

"I expect Freddie to have a big game now every time out, and if it goes the other way, I'm going to be disappointed," Kellogg said. "We no longer have freshmen, and I think Freddie is starting to figure out how to play the college game."

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu.

UM wins last three contests

By Jeffrey R. Larnard
Collegian Staff

With more wins this January (3) than the past two Januaries combined (2), the Massachusetts hockey team silenced all questions its critics had entering this year's winter break.

Despite a three-game losing streak, the No. 19 Minutemen (14-8-0, 9-6-0 Hockey East) finished their winter break with a 4-3 record on a three-game winning streak, reaching third place in the Hockey East Standings. Here is a recap of UMass' games over break.

UMass 2 – UML 1

For the first time this season, the No. 19 Minutemen swept a weekend series, something few teams have accomplished in Hockey East this season.

A late power-play goal with 1:07 by Matt Irwin at the Tsongas Arena in Lowell, Mass., lifted UMass over UMass-Lowell and gave it the Alumni Cup for winning the season series.

Marc Concannon gave the Minutemen an early 1-0 lead, despite being outshot 14-6 in the first period.

With eight minutes to play in the second period, the River Hawks' Patrick Cey netted the equalizer, the only mistake made by UMass' Paul Dainton (28 saves).

In the final frame, UML was called for five penalties, two coming late in the game, giving the Minutemen a 5-on-3 man advantage. Irwin capitalized on the power play to extend UMass' winning streak to three and put an end to the question of their annual January collapse.

UMass 3 – UML 2

With goals by James and Michael Marcou in the third period, the Minutemen avoided a late collapse to UML to take the first game of the home-and-home set and jump into third place in the HEA standings.

UMass jumped out to a 1-0 lead in the first quarter, and behind a strong performance from Dainton (31 saves) – found itself in a 1-1 game to start the third period.

James Marcou, the nation's leading scorer, notched his seventh goal of the game after putting in a rebound on a Casey Wellman shot in front of the net. The goal put UMass up 2-1, until David Valforani tied it back up at two with 5:06 left in regulation.

After Danny Hobbs was called for a penalty, the momentum seemed to be shifting in the favor of the River Hawks. However, a UML penalty shortly after set four-on-four play, resulting in Michael Marcou's game-winning goal with 2:19 left.

UMass 4 – Northeastern 1

Dealing with a three-game losing streak, the Minutemen came away with a much-needed win over the Huskies at the Matthews Arena.

Behind strong play from both power-play units, UMass built a 4-0 lead by the end of the second period with three power-play goals. The penalty-kill unit was a perfect 6-for-6 when Northeastern had the man advantage.

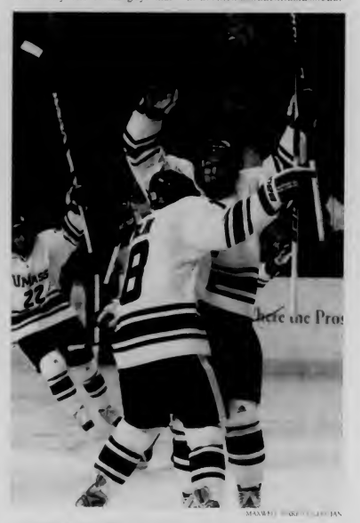
Wellman started off the scoring in the first period with his 17th goal of the season on the power play, and Rocco Carzo added another at the end of the period with both squads at even strength. Within an 18-second period in the second quarter, James Marcou and Will Ortiz notched their sixth and 10th goals on the season, respectively, to put the Minutemen up 4-0.

Tyler McNeely ended goaltender Dainton's (12 saves) hopes of a shutout two minutes, 10 seconds into the final frame, when he scored his sixth goal of the season to give the Huskies their only goal of the game.

UNH 7 – UMass 2

Besides a 2-5 loss to then-No. 4 Cornell on Jan. 3, New Hampshire hadn't lost since UMass stole a game back on Nov. 13. For the Minutemen, the Wildcats were the last team they wanted to see as it tried to get back on track and avoid another collapse in January.

UNH wasted no time, scoring two goals in the first six minutes of the game, and later added two more at the end of the first period to hold a 4-0 lead heading into the middle frame. T.J. Syner would score an unassisted goal 23 seconds into the second period, but the Wildcats would add two more in the period.



Dan Meyers got the start for UMass in goal, making 26 saves while allowing seven goals.

BU 7 – UMass 3

After a disappointing first half of the season, Boston University came out of the new year looking to make a statement, and did so with a convincing 7-3 victory over UMass at home.

Both teams scored three power-play goals in the contest, but the Minutemen were 3-of-12 while the Terriers were 3-of-6 on the night. Trailing 4-2,

See HOCKEY on page 10

Members of the Minutemen celebrate a goal earlier this season. Over winter recess, UMass went 4-3 after a rough start to 2010.

Sophomore Nicole Jones shoots over an opponent earlier this season. The Minutemen went 2-5 over break, suffering a four-game losing streak to Delaware, Maine, Harvard and Rhode Island.

Minutewomen struggling as of late, experience four-game slide

By Neil Carroll
Collegian Staff

Winter break was not easy on the Massachusetts women's basketball team as it went 2-5 including a four-game losing streak. Here is a recap of the Minutewomen's (7-11, 1-2 Atlantic 10) games over break.

Richmond 73 – UMass 62

Although Kristina Danella played in the game, she was not at full strength, and the UMass offense could not match Richmond's attack, falling to 1-2 in the A-10.

Danella was hesitant on her ankle but managed to still score 12 points for the lacking offense. Brittani Shells ran through UMass' zone defense and finished the game with 22 points and four assists.

In the third start of her collegiate career, freshman Jasmine Watson was the only legitimate offensive threat for UMass. She racked up 19 points and grabbed eight rebounds.

As UMass tried to get their shooters going, Megan Zullo had 11 points and seven assists but was 3-of-8 from 3-point range.

UMass 62 – SLU 59

Coming into the game the Minutewomen knew they would be without their leading scorer Danella, who injured her ankle a day before in practice, but showed a lot of heart against the Billikens.

Diatiema Hill came up huge for UMass by setting a new career high with 26 points in the overtime win. She also added 10 rebounds, five steals and four assists and carried the offense in Danella's absence.

UMass let up a second-half lead to Saint Louis, culminating with a 3-point shot by Katie Paganelli with three seconds left in regulation. However, the team rallied in overtime around Hill and came away with their first win of 2010.

URI 58 – UMass 57

Rhode Island took the victory in UMass' A-10 season opener, 58-57, thanks to a layup by Anisha Wilson with 33 seconds remaining in the second half.

See W BASKETBALL on page 10

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

HIGH: 37 LOW: 21 www.DailyCollegian.com WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 20, 2010

Brown triumphs in Senate race

SENATE RACE 2010

By Matt Rocheleau
Collegian Staff

Republican Sen. Scott Brown claimed a shocking come-from-behind win in Tuesday's Massachusetts special election over Democratic candidate Martha Coakley, who most had believed until recently was a shoe-in for the U.S. Senate seat left vacant by the late Sen. Edward M. Kennedy.

The race began tightening in the final weeks of campaigning as surveys showed Brown had gained significant ground on the state's attorney general, which put a national spotlight on the Jan. 19 election.

With Brown's stunning upset in liberal Massachusetts, the Democrats' 60-seat supermajority in the Senate is now gone, meaning Democrats can no longer block Republicans from filibustering Democratic-backed legislation, such as the heavily-debated health care proposal.

Sen. Kennedy had held the Massachusetts Senate seat for 46 years before he died at age 77 in August after a lengthy battle with brain cancer.

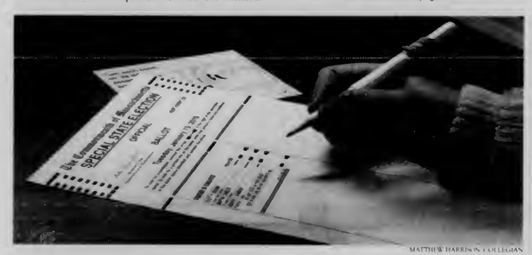
Brown nabbed 52 percent of the 2.2 million votes cast – Coakley had 47 percent – to become the first Republican to win a Massachusetts Senate seat since 1972.

Before a roaring crowd, he expressed his gratitude to those who voted for him and honored former Sen. Kennedy during his victory speech.

"I will remember that while the honor is mine, this Senate seat belongs to no one person, no one political party," he said, calling his new position, "the people's seat."

"It was all of us against the machine. And tonight, we have shown everybody now that you are the machine," he added.

Coakley addressed and thanked her supporters in a speech after conceding the race last night when Brown's victory had become apparent.



"I wish we were here with other and better news here tonight, but we're not," she said.

"I know we will get up tomorrow and continue this fight," to advance on such issues as healthcare, she added later.

See SENATE on page 2

Republican Scott Brown seals the deal with his victory over Martha Coakley for the Massachusetts Senate seat amid strong voter turnout on Tuesday.

The special election on Jan. 19 pit Republican Scott Brown against Democrat Martha Coakley with Brown securing the Senate seat left by the late Massachusetts Senator Edward Kennedy.

UMass professor designs new microscope to see molecules

By Bobby Hitt
Collegian Staff

In the spirit of Chancellor Holub's initiative to make the University of Massachusetts Amherst a research powerhouse, biology professor Patricia Wadsworth and physics assistant professor Jennifer Ross are developing a new microscope to shed light on the inner workings of the cell.

The microscope, to be completed next year, uses techniques which place fluorescent markers on specific molecules.

This allows scientists to observe the behavior of these illuminated molecules in a living cell.

According to Ross, the ability to observe molecules, such as proteins, in real time is greatly important to understanding the cell.

"Just knowing where a protein is located is not enough to understand a protein's function in the cell," said Ross.

"Since cells are living, the proteins of the cells are moving and often performing multiple functions simultaneously," Ross continued.

Wadsworth and Ross are co-principal investigators for this project.

"We make a great team," said Wadsworth of the tandem.

"Ross' background in physics means that she has training in building the components of a microscope from scratch," she said.

"My training in biology means that I have experience working with cells, and the processes in cells that can best be solved using this type of microscope," continued Wadsworth.

Wadsworth and Ross were given a $684,000 grant by the National Institutes of Health through the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act.

Ross envisions this microscope aiding in more than just biological functions.

"This technology could be applied in polymer science, physics, chemical engineering or other nano-scale applications," she said.

According to Ross, the application of this microscope to medical research is not a stretch of the imagination.

"Although this microscope is meant to benefit fundamental science questions, the answers to these questions often lead to results that aid medical research," said Ross.

"If we can dissect the activities of the cell during cell division, we can start to understand what goes wrong during diseases that exploit cell division such as cancer."

A conventional light microscope cannot take high resolution images of molecules, according to Nature.com, a site dedicated to scientific information.

In order to gain a better image, Ross explained, the scientists tag specific molecules, such as proteins, with a fluorescent marker that can be illuminated by ultraviolet light.

Scientists mark these molecules using a process called stochastic optical reconstruction microscopy (STORM), first developed by a Harvard professor, and Fluorescence Photo-activated and Localization Microscopy (FPALM).

See MICROSCOPE on page 3

Wilson gets pay raise

UM president receives 15 percent pay increase

By Sam Butterfield
Collegian Staff

With a fee increase and a salary freeze still fresh in some members of the University of Massachusetts community's memory, President Jack M. Wilson's overall compensation level increased by 15 percent in 2008-2009.

A survey released Monday by the Chronicle of Higher Education finds that President Wilson's compensation from the state increased from $473,200 in 2007-2008 to $546,000 last year, despite the fact that the University faces a budget shortfall as the Commonwealth struggles to balance its budget.

Wilson received a total of $546,000 in his compensation package for 2008-2009, with $425,000 allocated for salary, a $45,000 housing stipend, $25,000 in deferred compensation, $51,000 towards retirement, and the use of a car.

Wilson's package checked him in as the number 50 highest-paid public university leader of the 185 included in the survey.

In a statement, Robert J. Manning, Chairman of the University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees, said that the Board awards compensation it considers commensurate with attracting excellent administrators.

"The University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees seeks to set compensation at levels that are sufficient to attract and retain top administrators," he said.

"We believe that strong and astute leadership is important to the 63,000 students of the University of Massachusetts system," Manning stated, adding that the Board feels President Wilson has met their standards.

Manning explained that the University attempts to pay its chief administrators at levels around the 75 percentile of national administrators.

Manning further emphasized that part of President Wilson's compensation increase came from him declining to accept a performance bonus in fiscal year 2008 which would have provided him with an additional $54,000.

He also said that President Wilson took a two-week furlough in December, 2008, docking $13,076 from his pay.

Wilson participated in the same furlough again last December, adding to another reduction of income of the same amount.

Further, Manning said, President Wilson was entitled a three percent salary increase this year, separate from the compensation increase he received, but said he would refuse the raise until faculty and staff salaries also increase.

Robert Connolly, a press spokesman for the University system, said that he believes what is actually relevant about the pay increase was that Wilson had not accepted previous increases.

"What is really new here and, perhaps, news is that President Wilson not accepting the salary increase that his contract allows during the current fiscal year," he said.

President Wilson, chief of the UMass system, made the most of any UMass leader.

Chancellor Robert Holub earned $420,000 in total compensation, making him the 104th highest paid university leader.

The Chronicle of Higher Education's survey found that about one in three public universities froze base

See WILSON on page 3

Presidents of Public Universities' Pay 2008–2009

$1,000,000 and above	. . . 1
$900,000 to $999,999	. . . 1
$800,000 to $899,999	. . . 1
$700,000 to $799,999	. . . 8
$600,000 to $699,999	. . . 20
$500,000 to $599,999	. . . 27*
$400,000 to $499,999	. . . 60
$300,000 to $399,999	. . . 48
$200,000 to $299,999	. . . 16
$0 to $199,999	. . . 3

*University of Massachusetts President Jack Wilson fell into this pay bracket for 2008-2009, with a total compensation of $546,000, up 15 percent from 2007-2008.

$436,650 = The median total annual compensation for the sample of 185 leaders of public research universities and public-university systems

UHS hosts walk-in flu clinic

UMass' University Health Services (UHS) will host a walk-in H1N1 flu vaccination clinic on Thursday, Jan. 21 from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom. The clinic is open to individuals over six months old, and available while vaccine supplies last.

The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention and the Massachusetts Department of Public Health recommended vaccination for all individuals in the virus' target groups.

Forms and information will be available at the door, but to save time, UHS recommends that individuals download the registration form and vaccine information from the UHS website, www.umass.edu/uhs, and photocopy both sides of their insurance card. They also instruct patients to bring the completed form, insurance card and card copies to the clinic.

— The Massachusetts Daily Collegian News Staff

ARTS & LIVING

Bottom's Up!

Collegian writers put all your winter beer woes at ease with instructions on how to brew your own hard cider and the top lagers of the season.

SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS

Bonnies travel to Mullins Center

The Minutemen are hoping to put an end to their three-game losing streak tonight against St. Bonaventure. UMass is coming off its latest loss to Temple.

SEE PAGE 8

EDITORIAL & OPINION

Columnist Nick O'Malley chimes in from Ireland to let students know that Irish stereotypes seem to hold some truth.

SEE PAGE 4

DailyCollegian.com

Head to DailyCollegian.com for an exclusive slideshow of one reporter's adventures while wearing the Jesus boxers.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXX
ISSUE 2

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
413-545-3500
Fax 413-545-3699
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF William McGuinness
MANAGING EDITOR Matt Rocheleau
MANAGING WEB EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
BUSINESS MANAGER Daniel Jette
PRODUCTION MANAGER Michael Sarkes
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Kirsten Swenson
ADVERTISING MANAGER Michael Tortorici
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Amanda Johnson
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Shayna Murphy
COMICS EDITOR Andrew Witts
EDITORIAL EDITOR Alyssa Creamer
NEWS EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS EDITOR Jeffrey R. Larnard
PHOTO EDITOR Matthew Harrison
IT MANAGER Victor Jacek
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Matt Zolnierz
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Nicole Jacinto
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Norman Provost
CLASSIFIED MANAGER Katelyn Tamilio
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Justin Gagnon
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Elyse Herowitz
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Cal Scannell
ASSTANT EDITORIAL Benjamin Moriarty
ASSTANT EDITORIAL Michael Phillis
ASSTANT EDITORIAL Matthew M. Robare
ASSISTANT NEWS Samuel Butterfield
ASSISTANT NEWS Jenn Heshion
ASSISTANT NEWS Chris Shores
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jay Aser
ASSISTANT SPORTS David Brinch
ASSISTANT SPORTS Adam Miller
ASSISTANT PHOTO Maxwell Spaer
ASSISTANT PHOTO Samantha Webber
SENIOR PRODUCER Sara Cody
SENIOR PRODUCER Pete Rizzo

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

PRODUCTION CREW
on staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Jeffrey R. Larnard

COPY EDITOR
Hannah McGoldrick

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Nick Guarino

MATTHEW HARRISON/COLLEGIAN

Smith College student Kira Disen votes in Tuesday's special election at Smith Vocational and Agricultural High School while a reported 7,800 voters turned out in the town of Amherst to cast their ballots.

Brown claims victory

SENATE from page 1

Despite snowy, slushy weather, voter turnout was strong across the Bay State, including in Amherst.

The town saw nearly 7,800 voters cast their choice for the seat, according to multiple media sources.

Around 84 percent favored Coakley, 15 percent voted for Brown and 1 percent for independent candidate Joe Kennedy — no relation to the late Sen. Kennedy.

At Precinct 3, the Immanuel Lutheran Church on North Pleasant Street, election constable Catherine Butterfield said polls there were busy throughout Tuesday and that student turnout was higher than would be expected for a state senate election.

Butterfield said there was confusion among many students on which precinct they were registered to vote in and if they were registered to vote in Amherst at all.

Though he won, Brown's supporters were not easy to find at polls around Amherst, which has historically voted favorably for Democrats.

Only one of nearly two dozen voters interviewed yesterday said they had voted for him.

Nineteen-year-old Rachel Foley, a freshman nursing major, voted for Brown because she wanted, "to see more of a balance," by having a Republican win in the heavily Democratic Massachusetts, and because she "didn't like Coakley's negative ads."

Nearly every voter questioned at the Bang's Community Center polling location yesterday evening said they were especially motivated to vote because of how close the race had become in the final weeks of campaigning and due to the potential impact the winner could have on major national issues such as healthcare.

"[Healthcare] doesn't affect me personally all that much, but I just feel like something has to be done," said Gabriel Gent, a 20-year-old junior and psychology major, who said he voted for Coakley.

Lieselle Trinidad, a graduate student studying mechanical engineering, and Megan Howe, who is working towards a second bachelor's degree in nursing, both 31, said they voted for Coakely because of her pro-healthcare reform and pro-women's rights stance.

"I was at home, about to eat dinner, and I thought 'there's only one hour left to vote, but, OK, I have to do this'."

Collegian Staff writer Matthew M. Robare contributed to this report.

Matt Rocheleau can be reached at mrocheleau@dailycollegian.com.

UM scientists hope to understand cells

MICROSCOPE from page 1

"The easiest and least invasive way for most cell biologists is to engineer proteins that are linked through their sequence to fluorescent proteins, such as green fluorescent protein," said Ross of the process.

"The DNA for the newly engineered protein is inserted in the cell, and the cell uses its own machinery to make the protein," she added.

"Our fluorescent proteins have been further engineered so that they have a switch on them," Ross furthered.

"These proteins are dark until UV light hits them, and then they turn on. This is how we control how many proteins we see of the many that are there."

Ross stated that scientists can illuminate nearly any molecule using this technique.

"We can engineer almost any protein that the cell expresses to put a fluorescent label on it. With the fluorescent label, we can see these proteins," she said.

However, current microscopes illuminate too many proteins leaving the image blurry.

"The problem is that there is never just one of each protein — but rather thousands," said Ross.

"Thus, our new microscope will allow us to visualize a very small population of proteins at each time," she continued, "thus, we will light up just 10 or so of the thousands that are in the cell; we will track them until their light burns out, and then we will light up another 10."

"We repeat this until all thousand plus molecules have been imaged and tracked," Ross went on.

Currently, Ross and Wadsworth have the optical table, the microscope body, cameras and three lasers to begin building the microscope.

However, the team is still in search of a technician to help construct the device.

Their lab will be demonstrating spinning disk confocal systems in February, and will begin to build the new set-up over the spring semester.

When the scope is built, there will be tours of the pair's laboratory in Hasbrouck Laboratory.

According to Wadsworth, these tours will be open to anyone wishing to see the instrument.

UMass undergraduates in Ross and Wadsworth's research program will be trained on the microscope.

Several faculty members will also be using the new microscope for their own experiments, including Magdalena Bezanilla, of biology, Wei-Lih Lee, also of biology, Jim Chambers, in chemistry, and Lori Goldner, a professor of physics.

Bobby Hitt can be reached at rhitt@student.umass.edu.

UMass is a BIG campus, and we need your help covering it.

Know of something that's happening? Want to see an event get news coverage? Let us know!

Go online and head to DailyCollegian.com and click "Submit a Tip."

SAVE MORE

We have the most used textbooks

UMASS AMHERST University of Massachusetts
University Store and Textbook Annex
Amherst Campus Center • 413-545-2619
www.umass.bkstr.com

Powered by efollett.com

MATTHEW HARRISON/COLLEGIAN

Refreshments are served as Chancellor Robert C. Holub discusses the works of five local artists at the January Hillside Salon hosted by his wife Sabine Holub.

Holub hosts visual arts

By Jennifer Heshion
Collegian Staff

The latest in a series of Hillside salons hosted by Sabine Holub, the wife of University of Massachusetts chancellor Robert Holub, featured the visual artwork of five local artists. Running from 6 p.m. to 8 p.m. yesterday, the salon session was the first of the spring semester's monthly series of Hillside gatherings to be held in the Holub's residence located at 150 Chancellor's Drive in Amherst.

During what was described as an "informal gathering" by salon organizer Rebecca Dufault, each artist received 20 seconds to show 20 slides of his or her artwork, which was then promptly followed by an open discussion with the artists.

"It's very interesting," Dufault said. "You get to experience local artists who come from a variety of different backgrounds and you have different formats — dance, print, video, etc."

The artists featured in January's salon included Anita Hunt, who has been producing a variety of artwork for the past 30 years, including printmaking, photography and drawing, as well as producing handmade artists' books.

Hunt, a resident of western Massachusetts, is currently teaching printmaking workshops as well as working with Zea Mays Printmaking, a studio facility in Florence dedicated to the use of safer, non-toxic and innovative printmaking methods.

Mary Frey is a professor of photography at the University of Hartford's art school whose past work has incorporated the use of documentary images to express contemporary culture of families, friends and real-life dramas. Frey's work has been featured in New York's Museum of Modern Art, the Museum of Fine Arts, Houston, the Chicago Art Institute and the International Polaroid Collection.

Lilliana Pereira also took part in the salon. She is an art director for Northampton marketing firm Bidwell ID, and was born and raised in western Massachusetts. Pereira specializes in drawing and collages, as well as printmaking with the Zea Mays Printmaking studio. Pereira has won several design awards, including a Gold CASE Award and a Gold Creative Merit Award.

Fraser Stables is a Scottish-born photographer and video artist who is currently a professor at Smith College. Stables' work has been featured in art galleries throughout the U.S., Canada and Europe.

"It's a different and exciting way to get to know local artists and to get to understand what motivates the artists," Dufault said.

Loretta Yarlow, director for the University Gallery (who also helped coordinate the event) added to Dufault's sentiments on the benefits of the small, informal gatherings at Hillside for both the artist and those in attendance that are passionate about the arts.

"There is a really wonderful mix of local artists and media," Yarlow said. "It's a wonderful way to get an overview of what is happening in our community because it's such a rich community of artists who are working with different mediums."

Each Hillside salon session is held on the third Tuesday of every month, with the next one scheduled for Feb.16. The salons require those in attendance to register via email with hillsidesalon@umass.edu, or by contacting Dufault directly at 413-545-4336.

Jennifer Heshion can be reached at jheshion@student.umass.edu.

Wilson's raise causes concerns due to UMass financial woes

WILSON from page 1

salaries for executives, and about 10 percent cut their compensation packages.

Although some universities cut executive pay, others continued to raise compensation and benefit packages.

On average, public institutions increased their compensation packages to their executives by 2.3 percent from 2007-2008.

University presidents who earned significantly more than Wilson included Michael M. Crow, president of Arizona State University, M. Roy Wilson, president of the University of Colorado at Denver, Michael J. Hogan, president of the University of Connecticut, Patrick T. Harker, president of the University of Delaware, T.K. Wetherell at Florida State University, G.P "Bud" Peterson at Georgia Tech, John V. Lombardi at Louisiana State, Mary Sue Coleman at the University of Michigan system, E. Gordon Gee at Ohio State University, Nancy L. Zimpher at the University of Cincinnati, Michael D. McKinney, president of the Texas A&M system, William C. Powers Jr. at the University of Texas at Austin, Fracisco G. Cigarroa, president of the Texas system, John T. Casteen III at the University of Virginia, Charles W. Steger at Virginia Tech and Mark A. Emmert at the University of Washington.

TUSCRIPT WWW.JACKWILSON.COM

The Chronicle of Higher Education survey ranks Wilson as number 50 on the highest paid list.

Sam Butterfield can be reached at sbutterfield@dailycollegian.com.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

Need to spread the word?

Reach more than 18,000 readers every day!

IT'S CHEAPER THAN YOU THINK!

On-Campus & Local Business Ads for $10 per column inch

R.S.O. Ads for $6.70 per column inch

CONTACT PAMELA:
thecollegian@gmail.com
413-545-3500
or stop by our office in the Campus Center basement

Welcome Back to your award winning UMass Dining...

we've been waiting for you!

JANUARY 19 Soup & Bread Special Lunch
JANUARY 20 Pioneer Valley Breakfast (local items)
JANUARY 21 KETUMBA Street food at Berkshire & Worcester DG – Dinner
JANUARY 22 Pineapple Upside Down Cake from the UMass Bake Shop - Dinner
JANUARY 23 Live Jazz Brunch

YOUR CAMPUS MEAL PLAN YCMP
THE BEST VALUE ON CAMPUS RESIDENTIAL MEAL PLAN RMP
UMASS DINING UMassAmherst umassdining.com
RESTAURANTS & INSTITUTIONS Ivy
facebook.com/umassdining

You will ♥ our upcoming specials!

LOOK FORWARD TO...
· Pioneer Valley Breakfast
· Blueberry Week
· Black History Month
· New England Winter Harvest
· Valentine's Chocolate Fondue
· Chinese New Year
· Frost Your Own Cupcake
· Restaurant Week
· Student Iron Chef Competition
· Recipes from Home
· American Produce Week
· Taste of UMass

www.umassdining.com

RESTAURANTS & INSTITUTIONS Ivy
YOUR CAMPUS MEAL PLAN YCMP
THE BEST VALUE ON CAMPUS RESIDENTIAL MEAL PLAN RMP
UMASS DINING UMassAmherst umassdining.com
facebook.com/umassdining

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 20, 2010

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
—Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

You know Ireland

GLOBAL PERSPECTIVES

Nick O'Malley

The Irish love drinking. No, I don't think you're getting me here. The Irish really, really, really love drinking.

When moving to a new place, it's usually best not to cave into stereotypes. As most out-of-state students discovered, people from Massachusetts aren't crazy liberal, angry-driving, WASPs running around yelling "chowdah." Most people, at least.

So when I first landed in Ireland, eager to start my semester at University College Cork, I tried to go in with a pretty open mindset. Sure, I had my preconceptions about the great Republic of Ireland and what the people were like, but I was more than ready to see the stereotypes that are promoted in America blown up and find out how much I really knew.

The answer? Pretty much everything.

For example: The Irish love drinking. No, I don't think you're getting me here. The Irish really, really, really love drinking.

Sure, most people have a general idea of Ireland's reputation for drinking, rain and drinking while it's raining. But still, it's a stereotype. Surely alcohol can't be that engrained into the culture of an entire country. It's probably an overplayed myth.

Nope. In fact, it's No. 1 on the list things that you thought you didn't already know about Ireland.

It didn't take long. Heck, I hadn't even been admitted into the country when the immigration officer at the airport saw my paperwork and said: "Spending the semester at UCC, huh? Try not to drink too much." Most of the other students I've met over here got the same treatment at immigration.

This country's penchant for the sauce was pretty well showcased in the brand new show that's been hitting the airwaves over here, "Stone Cold Sober," in which a bunch of Irish guys give up drinking for six months. That's it. They just do stuff and happen to not drink.

Mind you, these are guys that went out to the pubs four nights a week and recovered the other three while doing this weird thing called "working."

Which brings me to stereotype No. 2: The Irish are laid back about everything.

When it came time to pick classes at UCC, I didn't know what to expect. Mostly, I was hoping the system was better than SPIRE, which isn't saying much.

The system here, it turns out, isn't really much of a system at all. Just show up to classes, see which ones you like. Sign up eventually. Try to get it done within a month.

The police? It's not exactly the UMPD over here.

During our international student orientation, a Cork police officer that came to talk to the group about (you guessed it) drinking, laid down the law on drugs, informing us of the strict, "zero-tolerance" attitude at the school. "Be smart about it. Don't get caught," he said.

Well, there may be a little leeway.

Stereotype No. 3: It's always raining.

Well, it isn't always raining. I have seen that glowing yellow orb in the sky every now and then. But, compared to New England, it's monsoon season. Remember the deluge we got back in June and July? A drizzle.

Sunlight is optional in Ireland. So much so, advertisements actually market the amount in vitamin D in their product, playing at the fact that the people don't get enough of the stuff from the sun.

Yet, even when it's a torrential downpour with gale force winds (the two go together more often than not), the people here still aren't as miserable as they are on a nice day in Massachusetts.

Which brings me to stereotype No. 4: The Irish people are ludicrously nice.

It's difficult to describe how nice people in Ireland are, mostly because I don't think we have any American phrases to describe this level of kindness. So, I'm going to make one up.

People in Ireland are Mr. Rogers-marshmallowily nice. It's like every guy is Michael Cera's character from, well, any Michael Cera movie and every girl is the nice, kind of cute best friend character that the main character doesn't fall in love with until the last 20 minutes of a movie.

When first exposed to Mr. Rogers-marshmallowily kindness, it's almost as if someone's messing with you by being overly nice. It's weird. It's not until you're talking to someone for over five minutes you go, "Oh wait, this person isn't messing with me. They actually are this nice. Weirdo."

However, there is one exception: Middle school-age kids in Ireland are just as annoying as the American ones. The only difference is that they have stereotype No. 5: the accent.

Since I've been here, I've noticed three distinct types of Irish accents, all of which most people have heard. First, there's the Colin Farrell-esque light accent that can make girls melt. Jerks.

The second is found mostly in the older population: the mumble. Prevalent around my current city of Cork, the mumble is a combination of the talking speed of a middle school girl and the annunciation of someone that's just back from the dentist and got a mouthful of Novocain. Difficult to understand under normal circumstances, the mumble is unintelligible and undistinguishable from Gaelic when the speaker is drunk, which is often.

Finally, there's the whine. Think Dudley from the Harry Potter movies (not Irish, I know). Regardless of nationality, everyone with an accent under the age of 16 is infuriating to listen to and will increase the chances of you wanting to punch a child 10-fold.

It's not like doing so would get you in trouble. The kid's mom would probably brush it off and offer you some tea.

Nick O'Malley is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu

Valley's homeless scraping by

Chris Russell

"About 15 different police officers came up to the door and rapped on the window. That's a horrible sound after a while, that stern rapping," he said.

I met Steve Cuoco last May as he sat on the sidewalk outside Thorne's Marketplace, eating out of a Chef Boyardee can.

A sign that read "homeless vet" leaned against a coffee cup full of coins, imploring people to part with any spare change floating around their pockets. He suspected many ignore him because "they think I'm just a derelict trying to get crack money."

He had been homeless in Northampton for about two years, the whole time coping with degenerative arthritis in his back. A weathered cane helped with walking, but his slow, stooped gait made it clear every step was an excruciating ordeal. Alcohol is the only available remedy able to dull the almost constant pain.

A doctor said a fall down a flight of stairs in 1981 is responsible for his current medical condition. The fall happened while he was an active duty Air Force member, for which Cuoco received a medical discharge under honorable conditions. He receives $960 a month from the military for mental disabilities caused by the fall, but does not receive disability payments for his back condition. After doctors said his fall caused the degenerative arthritis, Cuoco filed a disability claim, but the military claimed they couldn't find his medical records, and denied the claim.

"The military gives me shit; they give me nothing," he said. "They just kicked me to the curb."

Cuoco said he would receive another $1800 a month if the military also recognized his back disability, allowing him to get an apartment. Right now he can only afford three weeks a month in a motel, as rent is $325 a week. After that he is on the streets until the next check comes.

Cuoco said he felt like a "crumbum" begging on the street, but that is the only way he can survive. Although Northampton provides some free meals, Cuoco said it isn't nearly enough. "I gotta beg like a scumbag to keep from going hungry," Cuoco said. "This is the only meal I get, Chef Boyardee."

Cuoco is homeless and to no fault of his own. A similar situation also faces Chris Barnard, an Amherst native I met at the Amherst Survival Center last March. At the time he lived out of his car, which had been his home for the previous 10 months. The lifestyle he was living was the result of a working class life that had quickly unraveled.

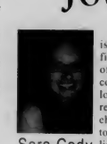
Barnard was laid off from his post office job, lost his modest house, and went through a divorce during which his ex-wife took the last $2,000 from his bank account to pay her lawyer. Completely broke, Barnard didn't know where to turn before he discovered the Amherst Survival Center, which provided him with a hot meal most days.

"Before this place I starved for four days," he said. "I didn't have any place to go."

At night Barnard had to return to his car, an unsuitable dwelling for the frigid Amherst winter.

"About 15 different police officers came up to the door and rapped on the window. That's a horrible sound after a while, that stern rapping," he said. "Sometimes it got so cold out they would force me to go to the hospital to get warm."

I met him again in May on the bus, and he said things were finally improving. His ex wife finally repaid him, and he was looking for a permanent residence and a new job.



Unfortunately, Steve Cuoco and Chris Barnard are not the only people suffering through the constant problems homelessness presents. In 2007, over 5,000 people in the Pioneer Valley experienced some period of homelessness, and almost half of these were families with children, according to All Roads Lead Home, a report commissioned by the mayors of Holyoke, Springfield and Northampton.

Although some of these individuals may be responsible for their current situation, many are on the streets because life threw them a curveball they could do nothing about. The Valley's many shelters and food banks provide essential aid to these unlucky souls, who like Barnard and Cuoco saw fate steal their metaphorical bootstraps. It's impossible to lift one's self out of homelessness by pulling at air.

Basically a lot of people need a lot of help. Donations to shelters and food banks are always helpful, but one should not understate the significance of giving five dollars to someone on the street asking for help. For that person, five dollars means a warm drink and some food to quiet a stomach likely raging with hunger. It may seem like a small gesture, as five dollars means little to most people. Yet for someone who has nothing, five dollars is everything — it allows them to survive the day more comfortably. This may be a small victory, as there is another battle to find sustenance waiting the next day, but it is still better than going hungry that day.

Chris Russell is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at crussell@student.umass.edu

Journalism not dying, just evolving

Sara Cody

In all of my classes, I have heard about journalism going digital and the big race to create a web presence. Print media seems to be on the endangered species list.

As a journalism major in my final semester, I often find myself confronted with a lot of pessimism regarding my career choice. According to statistics published in the New York Times from the Audit Bureau of Circulations on Oct. 27, 2009, 21 out of the 24 major newspapers reported a significant decline in the number of paid circulation of newspaper subscriptions, some as much as almost 26 percent.

Two of the remaining three newspapers reported an increase due to their competitors folding, and the last newspaper, The Wall Street Journal, has a loyal online following that requires a paid subscription. I can't tell you how many times I have heard about the so-called impending doom of journalism, whether in my classes or by the media itself.

But I can't help but disagree. As an aspiring science writer, I know more about Darwin and the theory of evolution than what is probably socially acceptable. And while I don't condone anthropomorphizing Darwin's theory of natural selection (social Darwinism and eugenics, anyone?), but I can't help but think of certain aspects of evolution, particularly the Red Queen hypothesis and apply it to what the field of journalism seems to be experiencing these days.

Natural selection, in regards to biological evolution, refers to how nature tends to favor organisms with traits that are best suited to a particular environment. This is the basis for evolutionary change. Over time, the population will exhibit these traits once the organisms with the less-favorable traits die off. This, in a very basic nutshell, is how evolution happens.

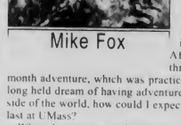
In 1973, evolutionary biologist L. Van Valen came up with the Red Queen Hypothesis, which is based off of a quote from Lewis Carroll's "Through the Looking Glass." The Red Queen tells Alice, "It takes all the running you can do, to keep in the same place. If you want to get somewhere else, you must run at least twice as fast as that!" Van Valen thought this was a great example that explains the evolutionary arms race she was witnessing as an evolutionary biologist. The quote explains how when a fox evolves to run faster, the rabbit it hunts must evolve in turn to run at least twice as fast, or face extinction.

Journalism is evolving. There is no question about this. In all of my classes, I have heard about journalism going digital and the big race to create a web presence. Print media seems to be on the endangered species list. Readers have opened their eyes to the different ways of consuming news. From RSS feeds to podcasts to subscribing to newspapers via Amazon Kindles, the most popular forms of news distribution have changed dramatically in the past decade.

The key thing I'm trying to point out here is that journalism is not dying. There will always be a need to know what exactly is going on in the world. The only thing that is in danger of dying out is the print medium by which we distribute it. The advent of the Internet has brought with it revolutionary ways to consume the news.

As journalists, we need to recognize that our environment is changing. Therefore we need to change with it as per the Red Queen Hypothesis. As students in college studying journalism right now, we have an advantage to learn about all of the different methods people are using to deliver the news. We need to foster the skills, or traits, if you will, to think outside the proverbial box and brainstorm different techniques to present the news.

Video, blogs and social media like Facebook and Twitter have become so integrated in our daily lives that these outlets tend to be overlooked as viable news sources. As journalism students, we shouldn't be afraid to experiment with the Internet and learn multimedia. This is how we will survive in this ever-changing field of journalism.



From my experience, journalists seem to possess an innate curiosity, much like scientists. It's important to maintain this mentality, even when you graduate from the classroom. As a journalist you are a student of the world, and you should never stop exploring. Especially when it comes to the most effective way of delivering the news.

Print journalism is the common ancestor from which multimedia journalism deseended. But in today's world, multimedia journalism is proving to be the fittest contender. Like the fox, the Internet has evolved to make delivery of news and information much faster and more efficient. Journalists in turn need to evolve to be twice as efficient in order to outsmart the fox. But as long as you evolve and develop the multiplatform traits needed to survive as a journalist, your career won't go extinct.

Sara Cody is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at scody@dailycollegian.com.

UMass holds adventures with right mindset

GLOBAL PERSPECTIVES

Mike Fox

When presented with new surroundings, one is naturally forced to adapt and become a stronger version of themselves or falter in the face of the pressures around them.

Equal to the sadness I felt at leaving Buenos Aires was the uncertainty I had in regard to how I would feel upon returning to UMass. After living through a five-month adventure, which was practically living my long held dream of having adventures on the other side of the world, how could I expect the glisten to last at UMass?

When I came as a freshman, college was a fantastic world of possibilities. Independence, thousands of new people to meet and the ability to choose one's own direction of study, and all of this was possible in a mostly safe and easy to travel bubble. Simply put UMass was a playground.

Then I came to a city on the other side of the world, and I found that I had even more independence and instead, there were millions of people to meet. I also had the ability to pursue nearly anything I wanted as a purpose and not just as a course of studies. All of this was possible in, well not the safest place, but it was easy to travel around and the favorable exchange rate was my key to possibilities. Buenos Aires emerged as an even bigger playground.

All the qualities of UMass life had seemed dim and petty in comparison. Yes, I will admit I missed a good deal of friends that I had left back in Amherst, but it's very difficult to tear yourself away from what has emerged as a vision of your ideal life.

In my last column written in Argentina, I mentioned my will to make my life at UMass that much better due to the experiences I was leaving behind. However, the question of how to do that persisted.

After a winter break of part time work, Jersey Shore, Avatar, and staying up every night through the triathlon of NBC late night programming all the way to the far from distinguished finish line of Last Call with Carson Daly, an answer came out of my pitiful level of inactiveness.

It's not about the playground or the place; it's about the mentality that you bring to it. When I first arrived in Amherst, I came with the mentality of enjoying every minute of it. In Buenos Aires, a friend of mine taught me a Spanish word that described my mentality there, "Aprovecharse," the act of trying anything that comes one's way. In both instanees I had a desire to explore the world around me and conquer any challenge that happened to come my way.

So what's left to do when there's nothing new to experience or conquer? Discover experiences past my range of vision and create new challenges. Luckily enough, UMass's nature of being its own little world with a unique connection to everything outside of it presents the perfect place to do this.

Hundreds of student organizations participate in numerous activities that I've never tried with thousands of people that I still haven't met yet. The opportunity to learn something out of my comfort zone is a few clicks on SPIRE away. A passionate population participates everyday in activities that benefit plenty of philanthropies. With the current crisis in Haiti and the opportunities presented by our community, one really has the chance to both confront individual challenges through activities that better the world around them.

Riding the bus into work one day, an old man heard my conversation with another and interjected to change the world, you first need to change yourself, and within this lays the other course to finding new adventures and challenges.

When presented with new surroundings, one is naturally forced to adapt and become a stronger version of themselves or falter in the face of the pressures around them. But this doesn't mean it's out of the question to challenge yourself to become better rounded and talented every day. I made a New Year's resolution to relearn the Saxophone, continue learning Tango, learn how to cook, and exercise every day. Through pursuing these personal challenges, I'm positive that I'll find the resources I need at UMass and in the process continue meeting new people and learning from new experiences.

There's adventure in the everyday. Every day we have opportunities to push out of our comfort zones in ways that betters both ourselves and those surrounding us. By leaving UMass for eight months, I returned to the realization that this place is designed for this. So I urge others to come to the same realization I did, to find new adventures through the pursuit of personal betterment, all it takes is a little bit of legwork and a tiny bit of courage. But on a less heady note, I'm sure that my 21st birthday in a few weeks will also lead to plenty of new adventures and ways to look at UMass.

Mike Fox is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mgfox@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 20, 2010

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

How to brew hard cider on a college budget

By Brendan Murphy
Collegian Correspondent

Brendan Murphy demonstrates the final step of creating an in-house brewery to make hard cider. Murphy instructs students step-by-step on the fermentation of hard cider with instruments costing less than $50.

Ever find yourself in a package store or a bar, wishing you knew how to make your own brew? Well, it's not as difficult as you think.

Brewing homemade hard cider from apple cider is fun, legal and surprisingly easy. It's also steeped in American tradition; historically, hard cider was the drink of choice in America before beer became popular. Even George Washington himself got in on the hobby, brewing his own brand of hard cider.

To take on this time-honored seasonal tradition for yourself, you won't need much, just the right amalgam amount of patience, along with the following instruments and ingredients:

- A five-gallon plastic container ($20, Target) or plastic gasoline container ($10-$20, Wal-Mart). Although I used a gas can the first time I tried this, it's probably safer to use the five-gallon container to better keep an eye on your alcohol.

- Two to three feet of rubber tubing (Under $10, Aubuchon Hardware or Home Depot). It doesn't hurt to bring in your container to find the right-sized tubing that will best fit your container's hole; just make sure it's not too big.

- Preservative-free apple cider. You will need as many gallons as you wish to make. Be sure to check the ingredients before purchasing your cider, since it must be preservative-free. Avoid ciders with sodium benzoate or potassium sorbate in the ingredients, otherwise it will not ferment. The cheapest preservative-free cider is available at Wal-Mart seasonally under the brand name Musselman's, but quality brewing cider can be obtained at Atkins Farms.

- Duct tape. If you don't have duct tape, then you need to restock.

- Yeast. You can buy packets of yeast at a relatively inexpensive price at Stop & Shop under the brand name Fleischmann's.

- Bleach.

The first step in brewing begins with the sterilization process. Be sure to sterilize the equipment with a bleach solution to prevent potentially harmful bacteria from growing in your booze. Sterilize anything that will touch your cider including the inside of the brewing container and the rubber tubing. It is also extremely important to thoroughly wash out any remaining bleach. Once everything is sterilized, you're ready to get started.

An optional step would be to cook your store-bought cider over a stove top for sterilization purposes. If you choose to do this, heat the cider at a medium temperature for at least 30 minutes with frequent stirring. Do not allow the cider to boil, or the result will come out cloudy and not look right. Again, this step is optional. If you choose not to boil the cider, your final product may taste a bit off, but will still be edible and tasty.

Another optional step is pitching your yeast to get it ready for brewing. To do this, you need to add your packet of yeast to warm cider. The cider should be warm to the touch, but not hot. Wait until the yeast starts bubbling (should be 5-10 minutes) before it is ready to add. Your cider should brew just fine without this step, but will brew faster if included.

Now, add room-temperature cider to your sterilized brewing container. The cider cannot be cold, otherwise the yeast will not grow. Leave your cider out for 24 hours before adding the yeast. One packet should work just fine, as your yeast will be actively dividing as it converts the sugars to alcohol. If you took the time to prepare your yeast as previously described, that's even better; throw it right in.

This next step may be the most important in the whole brewing procedure. Insert the rubber tubing inside the hole of your container, and form an air-tight seal. The rubber tubing must be above the liquid level so that gas can escape. Creating an air-tight seal is important; if air is allowed into your container, it will not brew. Use the duct tape to wrap the tubing until no air is let in or out. Check by blowing into the other end of the tubing and see if air escapes. If no air comes out from anywhere, you're doing well.

The last step in your brewing setup is to form a 'U' shape with the extra tubing sticking out of the container and fill it with water. Use duct tape once more to form the 'U' shape and secure it to the brewing container. By adding water and filling the bottom of the U, you effectively have made your own brewery. The water allows gas that is created by the yeast to escape, but keeps air from the environment out.

Your booze should begin brewing within hours. Wait two to six weeks before opening and then enjoy. I recommend siphoning the cider out and leaving the inch or so of yeast at the bottom. You can bottle the cider and let it age — the longer the better — or drink it right away.

Congratulations, you have just made hard cider!

Brendan Murphy can be reached at brendanm@student.umass.edu.

'Tis the Season: rounding up the best and worst winter seasonal beers around

By Andrew Sheridan
Collegian Staff

COURTESY WWW.FLICKR.COM/PHOTOS/SBCDIGITAL

The Full Moon Ale, brewed by Molson Coors Brewing Company, serves well as an after-dinner drink.

COURTESY WWW.FLICKR.COM/PHOTOS/MOUNTAIN_MAN

Sierra Nevada's Celebration Ale holds a taste of Christmas spices to keep you warm on even the coldest nights.

The holidays are a time for relaxation, for family, for food and for fun. They are also a time for beer, and every December, brewers around the world uncap a special variety of brew that, while released for the Christmas season, is known collectively as "winter beer."

While there are no specific qualifications that define a beer as "winter," the category usually follows certain guidelines. First of all, the beers are generally medium to dark in color. Light flavors and bodies are fine for sunny weather, but when the bitter cold strikes a full-bodied, dark beer is more likely to warm you up. Winter beers are also flavored differently, forgoing strong hops for spices and flavors typically associated with baking.

Since the explosion of microbrews, the selection of seasonal is staggering and sometimes hard to sort through, so here is a run-down of some of the more common lagers and ales that are hitting the shelves this winter.

The first beer on anyone's lips when seasonal beers are discussed is Sam Adams, the titan of craft brewers, and during the winter they pull out all the stops. The Sam Winter Variety Pack comes with three distinctly Christmas-themed brews, including the excellent Holiday Porter and the not-quite-beer Cranberry Lambic, but their true seasonal offering is the Winter Lager. While not as refreshing as their Summer Ale or as robust as Octoberfest, the Winter Lager is a decidedly decent beer. It is lighter in flavor and body than some of the other winters on the market, though, and those who are looking for something to really keep them warm would be better off picking up Sam's Cream Stout.

Blue Moon, brewed by the Molson Coors Brewing Company, is famous for it's signature Belgian-style wheat taste, and for their winter seasonal. The Full Moon Ale has a medium body, and is easy on the palette. It is brewed with a hint of dark sugar, which blends well with the wheat background and gives it a smooth, caramel flavor. The Full Moon ale is not very spicy, and works well as an after-dinner dessert beer.

COURTESY WWW.FLICKR.COM/PHOTOS/MOUNTAIN_MAN

Sam Adams' Cranberry Lambic is one of the many different seasonally-flavored beers offered in the winter variety pack, which can include the Holiday Porter, another fan favorite.

Harpoon, best known for making the IPA a household name, also has a winter brew. Their Winter Warmer is perhaps the most flavorful and pungent winter on the market this season, spiced strongly with cinnamon, nutmeg and caramel. The combination works well, and gives the general impression of a spiced pumpkin pie full of booze. It has a long finish but is quite refreshing, and anyone who enjoys Harpoon's standard offerings should enjoy the Warmer.

Redhook, makers of the Long Hammer IPA, have a winter seasonal known as the Winterhook. This particular variety of their "liquid goodness" is well balanced and very full-bodied. Rounded out with a hefty six-percent alcohol content, the Winterhook is one of the best beers available this season and is available more readily on tap than in the bottle.

Magic Hat Breweries, in their usual tradition of churning out interesting and quirky beers, seized on the concept of the solstice and released a distinctive beer called Howl for the darkest season of the year. This elixir has a medium body but is darker than the night itself, due to the heavily roasted malt which gives it a coffee-like bite. With an alcohol content of only 4.6-percent, Howel doesn't have quite as much alcohol as other winter seasonals, but it is a solid offering and fans of the brand should be sure to pick up a pack.

The final beer in the roundup is Sierra Nevada's Celebration Ale. Sierra's most popular beer is their signature pale ale, noted for its light flavor and strong hops bite, and the Celebration is not all that different. At a staggering 6.8-percent alcohol content, Celebration stands out among the other winter beers with a light body, palpable hops and lighter golden color. What makes this a "winter" brew is the notes of fruit in the body of the beer and the Christmas spices that linger on the tongue. It is not a traditional winter beer, but those who enjoy pale ales year round are likely to enjoy the Celebration.

Although these are some of the most well-known brewing brands to offer up a winter variety, they are by no means the only ones. Dark, rich and generally high in alcohol, these beers make winter one of the best seasons for the thirsty epicurean. Explore every bar tap and find out your favorites. And until next time, bottoms up.

Andrew can be reached at asheridan@student.umass.edu

Watson proving value inside, earns honors

W HOOP from page 8

UMass also has sound rebounding ability. The Minutewomen average 3.2 more rebounds than their opponents and are fourth best in the league.

Making her presence known in the paint is freshman center Jasmine Watson, who tallied eight rebounds and 19 points against Richmond. She added two assists, a steal, a block and a perfect free throw percentage (3-3). Her performance propelled her earning A-10 Rookie of the Week honors.

The Minutewomen have the advantage at the free-throw line, which has been the most consistent aspect of UMass' game this year. Its 76.5 percentage is second-best in the league. Duquesne's 67.2 mark puts them in ninth place.

The final advantage the Minutewomen have is their strength away from home. Five of its seven wins have come on the road, the last being a 62-59 overtime win at Saint Louis on Jan. 13. However, Duquesne does covet certain statistical advantages as well.

The Dukes are stronger at distributing the ball. Their 15.7 assists per game are five more than the Minutewomen's mark, and is second-best in the league behind Xavier.

Duquesne also occupies the number two spot in steals, averaging 11.3 per game while UMass' 7.2 per game is 11th. Superior stealing, coupled with UMass' high turnover frequency, could spell disaster for the Minutewomen, whose -5.89 turnover margin is worst in the league.

In order for UMass to pull off an upset, it has to start with limiting turnovers. Additionally, the Minutewomen have to find ways to get to the line, as well as continue their rebounding success.

Steve Levine can be reached at slevine@student.umass.edu.

MAXWELL SIGMUND/COLLEGIAN

Redshirt junior Megan Zullo takes a 3-pointer during a home game for the Minutewomen. They play Duquesne on the road tonight, who is undefeated in Atlantic 10 play.

UM effective with free-throws

By Mike Mastone
Collegian Staff

Although the Massachusetts women's basketball team has trouble finding a rhythm offensively, the team continues to be extremely effective and consistent from the free-throw line.

UMass (7-11, 1-2 Atlantic 10) enters tonight's match-up at Duquesne, ranked 10th in the nation in free throw percentage, (76.5). That mark also places them second in the A-10 behind St. Bonaventure (79.1 percent). Through 18 games, the Minutewomen converted a conference high 290 free throws on 379 attempts.

The team's success at the charity stripe is led by sophomore Kristina Danella and senior Diatierna Hill, who rank second and third in the conference, respectively. Danella (87.9 percent) leads UMass in free-throw percentage, going 80-for-91.

However, Hill, who held a slight advantage over Danella entering the week, narrowly trails her teammate (87.8 percent) from the line.

This season, both Danella and Hill tied the UMass single-game record for free throw percentage in a game (with a minimum of 10 attempts) by going perfect from the line. Against Rice, Danella sank all 12 of her free throws, while Hill went 11-of-11 four games later against Quinnipiac.

Although they have fewer attempts, other UMass players are displaying the same consistency and taking advantage of their chances at the line. Nine of the 12 players on the roster are shooting 70 percent or better on their free throws, with five shooting over 80 percent.

Senior Kim Benton's accuracy at the free-throw line is much improved from last season. After shooting 66.7 percent as a junior, the guard has successfully converted all 20 of her attempts this season.

Junior Cerie Mosgrove and redshirt junior Megan Zullo enter the game against the Dukes (13-5, 3-0 A-10) with 15 attempts apiece, with Mosgrove (80 percent) capitalizing on 12 and Zullo on 13 (86.7 percent).

Freshman center Jasmine Watson and junior Stephanie Lawrence round out those shooting over 70 percent. Watson is shooting 73 percent from the line, while Lawrence converted 20 of her 28 attempts.

Despite getting to the line more often than any player on the team, aside from Danella, sophomore Nicole Jones continues to struggle with her free throws with 53 percent shooting.

Watson honored

After averaging 17.5 points per game and seven rebounds over a two game span, Jasmine Watson earned A-10 Rookie of the Week honors.

The South Bend, Ind. native set career highs, scoring in consecutive games against Saint Louis and Richmond. She led UMass to a 62-59 victory over the Billikens (7-11, 1-2 A-10) by tallying 16 points, six rebounds and two blocks. She followed that up with a 19-point effort against the Spiders (13-4, 2-0 A-10), where she also grabbed a team-high eight rebounds and chipped in one block.

The loss to Richmond marked the second time this season Watson led the team in scoring, with the other being a 14-point outing against Vermont. It also marked the fourth time she led the team in rebounding.

For the week, Watson made 14-of-25 field goal attempts, converted all seven of her free throw attempts, and chipped in two assists and a steal. She is third on the Minutewomen in points (9.1) and rebounds (5.5) while leading the team with 23 blocks. Her block total places her fourth in the A-10, while she is sixth with 1.3 blocks per game.

Watson is the first member of the Minutewomen to earn A-10 accolades this season.

Mike Mastone can be reached at mmastone@student.umass.edu.

UMass sweeps URI in 2-day Invitational

Men, women among nation's Top 25, break in Puerto Rico

By Jeffrey Engmann
Collegian Staff

This winter break marked a transition in the swimming and diving season. Before the season, men's coach Russ Yarworth said the events that would take place after the Loyola Invitational on Jan. 9 as key meets in the stretch run before the Atlantic 10 season.

After taking their annual winter break trip to San Juan, Puerto Rico, the Massachusetts men and women's swimming teams came back to the frigid temperatures of the Northeast to compete in the two-day Rhode Island Invitational. They were accompanied by the Massachusetts diving teams who spent some of their winter break training at the facilities at Georgia Tech.

The meet, which took place in Kingston, R.I., was an A-10 showdown as it featured the swimming and diving teams of La Salle University, George Washington and host Rhode Island. Before the race, the latest rankings from Collegeswimming.com placed both the Minutemen and Minutewomen among the Top 25 swimming programs in the nation. The men placed 10th and the women were ranked 21st. Both teams' performances this past weekend did nothing to put their spots in jeopardy.

The Minutemen and women both got off to a great start on the Invitational's first day. The men's team jumped out of the gates with a first-place finish in the 400 medley relay. Seniors Andrew Wilbrandt and Mike Berthaume teamed up with juniors Trevor Ziegler and Brian Schmidt to finish with a time of three minutes, 29.77 seconds; over two seconds ahead of second-place La Salle. Led by the standout sophomore Jason Cook, the Minutemen took control of the diving boards by capturing first place in five of six diving events. The diving teams also received strong contributions from John Clark and Adam Dunfield, who placed right behind Cook.

Sophomore Kayla Teagler earned the Minutewomen's first top finish on Friday by winning the 500-yard freestyle with a time of 5:20.17. Freshman Amina Meho continued her strong season with another victory in the 50-yard freestyle, and Hannah Swift also got the Minutewomen off to a great start by placing first in the 1-meter diving event. Freshman Michaela Butler finished in third place in the event

Both teams followed up their first-place finishes on Friday with strong efforts on Saturday to sweep the event. Sophomore Chelsea Downing finished in first place in the 400 individual medley with a time of 4:37:11. Mike Berthaume had another strong day, as he captured two first-place finishes on Saturday. In the last event of the day, Berthaume brought home a first-place finish in the 200 butterfly with a time of 1:55.71. Sophomore Joey Sbordon continued his strong season by capturing first place in the 200 freestyle. He also earned second place in the 1,000 freestyle.

The women's team finished with a score 635 points through 38 events, well ahead of second-place La Salle, who finished with 554 points. The men's team finished with 619 points for the weekend, over 120 points more than second-place La Salle.

The teams will see each other again, a month from Sunday, as they compete for conference supremacy in the A-10 Championships on Feb. 17-20.

Jeffrey Engmann can be reached at jengmann@student.umass.edu.

GET A 5% REBATE ON TEXTBOOKS
from the UMASS Textbook Annex

Here's how it works:

Step 1: Purchase your books from the UMass Textbook Annex.

Step 2: Bring your receipt and UMASS ID to the UMASS University Store in the Campus Center between the fourth week and last day of classes.

Step 3: Redeem your 5% rebate credit on anything at the UMass University Store.

Rebate offer is good only on textbook purchases. Valid ID required. Returned books not eligible for rebate. Textbook receipts must be presented during the semester purchases where made. Store rebate credits expire at the end of the semester they where received. Rebate not to exceed $50.00 per semester. See store for details

UMASS AMHERST University of Massachusetts
University Store and Textbook Annex
Amherst Campus Center • 413-545-2619
Powered by efollett.com

The Daily Collegian asks, "Are you a SPORTS FAN?" THEN GO WRITE FOR THE COLLEGIAN!
sports@dailycollegian.com

THE BOLTWOOD PROJECT™
Serving others since 1969 -- and STILL making a difference!
A STUDENT / COMMUNITY SERVICE LEARNING PROGRAM
(an RSO and Dept. of Landscape Architecture & Regional Planning sponsored prog.)
REACH OUT — AND BECOME A SPECIAL FRIEND TO PEOPLE WITH SPECIAL NEEDS
Your life will NEVER be the same!
••EARN 1-2 CREDITS ••GAIN VALUABLE EXPERIENCE ••REWARDING, CHALLENGING, and FUN
Spring Semester 2010 — Recruitment Nights
You must attend ONE of these meetings. No exceptions, even if you have participated before!
6:00-8:00 PM (Note: Prompt starting time!!!)
Campus Center Basement • Room 101 • Jan. 25 (Mon) • Jan. 26 (Tues) • Jan. 27 (Wed)
• Assignment notification ONLY Thurs. Jan. 28 @ Boltwood table CC Concourse
No telephone inquiries. YOU (or a friend) must pickup the notification letter!!!
Volunteer, while earning credit!

Off The Wall Games
Worldwake pre-release tournament on Thursday, January 28 at 6 PM -Sealed Deck - $20 Entry Fee
First prize a box of Worldwake, scan www.offthewallgamestore.com for details and more prizes!
Discount role-playing games, Collectible card games (CCGs), Miniature war games and board games, fun for everyone!
Hours: 10-10 Wednesday-Sunday, 12-10 Monday, Closed Tuesdays - 41 Russel St (Hampton Village Shops) Rt. 9, Hadley 413-586-5451

COMICS

WE WANT YOUR COMICS!
Put your comics in front of thousands of readers.
Questions? Comments? E-mail us: comics@dailycollegian.com
Friend us on Facebook: "Collegian Comix"

CROSSWORD

SUDOKU

4				8	5			1
		3			1			2
			4			3		7
	7				8	4
		6		5		2		9
		8
8	1		9			7
						3		8
		6

LA PIAZZA
Sundays Open at NOON
Best Deals in Town!!

ALL	Calzones	$4.99
ALL	12" Subs	$4.99
ALL	Salads	$4.99
ALL	Entrees	$5.99
10"	Cheese Pizza	$4.99
	ea. xtra topping .75
12"	Cheese Pizza	$5.99
	ea. xtra topping $1
16"	Cheese Pizza	$6.99
	ea. xtra topping $1.25
16" Cheese Pizza + 10 Wings (Bone)		$11.50
16" Cheese Pizza + 1/2lb Wings (Boneless)		$11.50

OCMP Free Delivery
(413) 253-6444
www.lapiazzaristorante.us

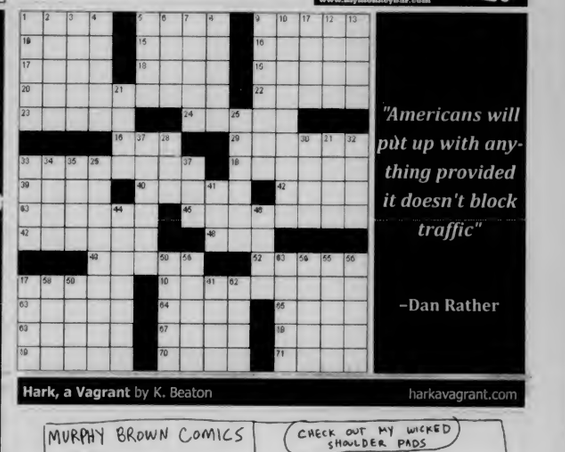
ACROSS
1. Dogfish
5. Sword
9. Flower feature
14. Curse
15. Hindu princess
16. Without company
17. ___-friendly
18. Wall support
19. Tart citrus fruit
20. Abnormal narrowing of a passageway
22. Catkin
23. Aromatic compound
24. Chip away at
26. American Dental Association
29. Lime tree
33. Indoor footwear
38. The whole thing
39. Sharpen
40. Any factual evidence
42. Affirm
43. Enclose in
45. Bald
47. A church elder
48. Registered nursing assistant
49. Deacon
52. Lava
57. Outer or exterior
60. Athletic supporter
63. Exculpation
64. Decorative case
65. Pledge
66. French for "Room"
67. Maize
68. Fifty-seven in Roman numerals
69. "Come in!"
70. Arduous journey
71. Give temporarily

DOWN
1. Bad treatment
2. Sail supports
3. Lifeless
4. Eagle's nest
5. At one time (archaic)
6. Maori club
7. Habituate
8. Sea duck
9. Someone who fights for a cause (archaic)
10. Primary
11. Hefty volume
12. Auth. unknown
13. The period preceeding Easter
21. Crummy
25. Any unsaturated aliphatic hydrocarbon
27. Rely
28. Arranger (abbrev.)
30. Plunge
31. God of love
32. Current event information
33. Small storage structure
34. Solitary
35. Ancient Peruvian
36. Unaggressive
37. Fifth note in do-re-mi
41. Paddle 44. Warrior
46. Male sheep (plural)
50. Expel
51. Turbine part
53. Coral island
54. Tomb
55. French for "Morning"
56. Plant louse
57. Lack of difficulty
58. Tribe
59. Slant
61. Remedy
62. An eccentric idea

"Club Nights" at the MONKEY BAR

Wed. DJ Marvel 1/20
"Monkey has been a catalyst for local as well as out-of town talent. Marvel is new to the Monkey Squad and looking to make an impression... Hip Hop, Techno, House, Dance and Mash-Ups"

Thurs. DJ Yeah Guy and DJ Hott Sizzle 1/21
While throwin' bashes & doin' dirty deeds this pair has been procurring a new sound incorporating old & new beats with some fresh off the boat sounds - don't miss it! House, Hip Hop, Dance, Techno & free dance lessons ..... SIZE!!!

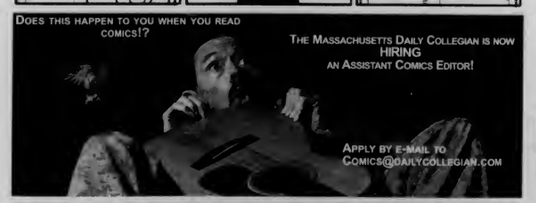


Fri. DJ Hott Sizzle 1/22
Rockin' his interplalectic 'make ya wanna order milkshakes on a date' sound ...smoooooothe yet daring!

Sat. DJ Construc 1/23
There is no doubt that beat hound will be bringing thunder. You provide the lightning & we have ourselves a storm!

413-253-1600
63 North Pleasant Street
Amherst, MA 01002
www.mymonkeybar.com
21+

BASIC INSTRUCTIONS — How to Save Money — by Scott MEYER



Hark, a Vagrant by K. Beaton — harkavagrant.com

Chainsawsuit by Kris Straub — chainsawsuit.com

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

A GREAT JOB! Spend your summer in a lakefront cabin in Maine. If you're looking to spend this summe outdoors, have fun while you work, and make lifelong friends, then look no further. CAMP MATAPONI, a residential girls camp in Maine, has female/male summertime openings for Land Sports, Waterfront (samm crafts, skiing, life guarding, WSI, boat drivers), Ropes Course,

EMPLOYMENT

Tennis, H.B. Riding, Arts & Crafts, Theater, Cooking, Gymnastics, Dance, Videography, Group Leaders and more. Top salaries plus room/board & travel provided. Call us today at 1-561-748-3684 or apply online at www.campmataponi.com.

Online Bookkeepers needed. To earn $200 per duty, contact john.culcer@gmail.com.

WORD OF THE DAY

PETTIFOGGER

A PERSON WHO TRIES TO BEFUDDLE OTHERS WITH HIS OR HER SPEECH.

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20 - Feb. 18
Railings are used by germ fiends and really weak people. Think twice about who, what and when you touch things.

pisces Feb. 19 - Mar. 20
Peanut butter and plaster are the only two things that can shield your ears from UMass construction in the morning.

aries Mar. 21 - Apr. 19
Who says that super-powers are not real? Promise ring powers activate!

taurus Apr. 20 - May. 20
Your roommate is not a floosy, they just can't stop eating Wendy's new spicy chicken nuggets for only .99 cents.

gemini May. 21 - Jun. 21
A certain master of the custodial arts once spoke this great proverb, "up wit the hope and down wit the dope!"

cancer Jun. 22 - Jul. 22
There is nothing that you can do wrong today that has not already been a highlight on a VH1 reality show.

leo Jul. 23 - Aug. 22
The real doomsday device in this world is the evergrowing weapon known as Warren Sapp's dome-piece.

virgo Aug. 23 - Sept. 22
It is excess check season! Collect yours by shouting this slogan, "it's my money and I need it now!

libra Sept. 23 - Oct. 22
Luckily for you, Good Ol' Tom's will accept your gold-plated sex toys.

scorpio Oct. 23 - Nov. 21
Ninja fashion is coming back in style with Jay-Z advocating, "all black everything".

sagittarius Nov. 22 - Dec. 21
Mad peeps want to steal the only thing important to you, your VHS copy of the Star Wars Christmas Special!

capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 19
Your phobia of all things tan have truly excluded you from great things like certain mountains and the Jersey Shore.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSWEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 20, 2010

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

SBU takes on Minutemen

UM looking to snap 3-game losing skid, keep offense away from Nicholson's arm

By Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

The last time the Massachusetts men's basketball team played a team with a prominent shot-blocker was against Richmond on Jan. 13 when forward Darrius Garrett recorded a career-high 14 blocks against the Minutemen as they lost 70-63 in overtime.

UMass coach Derek Kellogg doesn't think any player will record that many blocks against his team for a while. However, he believes that tonight's opponent, St. Bonaventure, will make going to the basket difficult because he views Andrew Nicholson as a superior shot blocker.

"You have to be conscious of when there's a guy in there blocking shots like that," Kellogg said. "We've let our guys know what we're looking for if he's coming over to block shots."

The Minutemen (7-10, 1-3 Atlantic 10) will look to find more open looks such as a lob over Nicholson or kicking out for a 3-pointer. Shooting hasn't been one of their strengths, as they are 13th in the A-10 in field-goal percentage (40.8) and 11th in 3-point percentage (31.3).

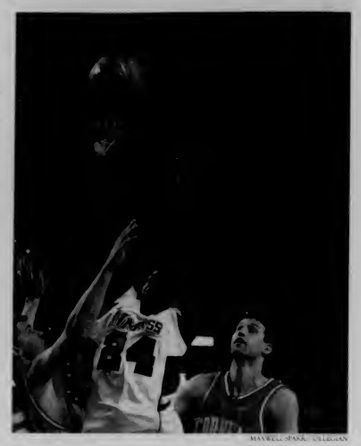
Meanwhile, the Bonnies (8-8, 1-2 A-10) are at the top of the conference in shooting (48.2 percent), but have been dealing with losses against quality opponents the entire season.

SBU lost by 13 points to No. 5 Syracuse on Dec. 19, and are 2-4 since, which included a three-game losing streak to open up January before defeating Saint Joseph's by a narrow 68-65 win.

Although UMass will be at the Mullins Center for the first time since Jan. 6, when it defeated Fordham, Kellogg expects tonight's meeting to be difficult because of the Bonnies' experience this season.

"I think they're in a similar position that we are," Kellogg said. "They've played in a ton of tough games that have come down to the wire, and similar to us, they just haven't been able to pull all of them out."

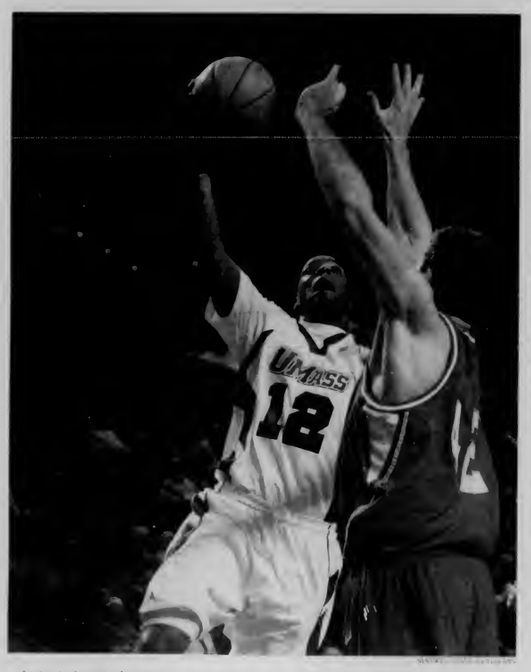
The Minutemen are currently on a three-game losing streak, which other than a loss to the Spiders includes losses to La Salle and hot-shooting Temple.



Against the No. 16 Owls, UMass came back from a 22-point lead to come within single digits, but couldn't survive the guard tandem of Ryan Brooks and Juan Fernandez, who finished 14-of-22 from 3-point range.

Despite the Minutemen's latest road woes, Kellogg is seeing a lot of improvement out of his team, and hopes to see his players benefit from their work over the past week with a win.

"I think it would be a good bonus for these guys that are playing hard and competing at a higher level," Kellogg said. "We're still not playing as smart as I want, but a reward of a victory coming up at some point would be good for team morale and also that if you play the game the right way, the wins will come."



In the last game against Temple, Kellogg inserted guard David Gibbs back into the lineup after trying to bring more experience to his lineup by using junior Cary Correia. Before Tuesday's practice, he said that both players were playing well, but would base his decision for tonight based on how he believes they match up.

Adam Miller can be reached at amiller@dailycollegian.com.

MAXWELL SPARK / COLLEGIAN

Freshman Freddie Riley drives to the basket during the Minutemen's first home game against the Big Red on Nov. 18.

MAXWELL SPARK / COLLEGIAN

Junior Anthony Gurley goes up for a hook shot against a defender during the home opener vs. Cornell. Gurley is second on the Minutemen in points per game (16.9).

Gurley stepping up

Wake Forest transfer picking up scoring effort over break

By David Brinch
Collegian Staff

Going into the 2009-10 basketball season, Massachusetts basketball coach Derek Kellogg knew that with a young and inexperienced team, he would need his older players to step up and set the tone for the Minutemen to have success.

With Ricky Harris, the team's only senior and captain, there was no question that he was to fill the shoes left by Tony Gaffney.

But over winter term, while the Minutemen (7-9, 1-2 Atlantic 10) won just two of their past six games, junior forward Anthony Gurley has begun to help UMass develop its young players by being a leader on the court with Harris.

Harris leads the team with 17.4 points per game, while Gurley is second with 16.9 points per game and sixth in the A-10, third on the team in rebounds (5.0 per game) and third in the conference in free-throw percentage (82.9).

Gurley has played in all 14 games, starting the last nine, while coming off the bench during the team's first five games.

"I've just been trying to do whatever is necessary for the team to win, whether it's defending, rebounding or scoring," Gurley said. "I'm just trying to give it my all."

On Dec. 19, the Minutemen upset Memphis, 73-72, the biggest win for the program so far this season. Playing in his hometown of Boston, Gurley had 14 points, going 5-for-8 from the field and 4-of-5 from the free-throw line while adding four rebounds.

Four days later, against Boston College, Gurley scored 23 points and grabbed a career-high 10 rebounds, his first career double-double. However, the Minutemen could not hold off the Eagles for the win, falling 79-67.

Though Kellogg feels that Gurley has been key in helping younger players transition to the college game, the coachBut as of late, Kellogg has not been impressed by the way his leader who is averaging 7.7 three point attempts per game has been taking shots from beyond the arc lately, but still feels that he has been key in helping his younger player's transition to the college game.

After strong performances in a tough defeat against Davidson and a victory against Fordham, Gurley struggled in a loss to La Salle on Jan. 10, going just 3-of-13 from the field and 0-for-4 from 3-point range. He was also non existent against Richmond, being held scoreless in 17 minutes of play.

Gurley went 0-for-4 from the field and 0-for-1 from the 3-point line against the Spiders, as UMass fell in overtime.

"[Gurley] has been great," Kellogg said. "He hasn't shot the ball fantastically from [the 3][-point line] as of late. He's working on it, [but] I don't think he's totally there yet."

While Kellogg thinks of Gurley as a leader of the Minutemen, he feels that during the toughest stretch of UMass' season, Harris or Gurley must be vocal on the court in order for his team to be successful.

"The tough thing is that he's just not a vocal player, and in order to be a 100 percent leading, you have to be vocal out there," Kellogg said. "We actually have a very quiet team on the floor, which means as a coach, I sort of have to take on a leadership role until somebody is able to take that over."

With strong opponents coming up on their schedule against Baylor and conference games against Charlotte and Xavier, Gurley wants to continue to lead the Minutemen so that his team can be successful in A-10 play.

Gurley transferred to UMass from Wake Forest, and sat out the 2007-2008 season. Last season, he started 23 of 30 games, averaging 11.2 points per game and 3.1 rebounds per game.

Players like guard Freddie Riley and forwards Terrell Vinson and Sampson Carter have started to come into their own as players, and have benefited from Gurley's experience.

"I try to be a leader out there with so many guys," Gurley said. "I'm trying to help them out in any way that I can, so I try to give them advice on certain things since I've been in college for a couple of years. I think they've responded very well and they're all great kids."

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu.

CAA Coach of the Year takes helm for Minutewomen in '10

By Jeffrey R. Larnard and Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

On Jan. 7, the Massachusetts women's soccer team announced the fifth head coach in the program's history when Ed Matz a former coach at Northeastern was appointed the position.

Matz, the 2009 Colonial Athletic Association Coach of the Year is coming to the sidelines for the Minutewomen in 2010 after two of his best seasons at the helm of the Huskies. In 2009, he led Northeastern to a 12-4-3 overall record and a CAA regular season title with a 7-1-3 conference record. In 2008, the Huskies advanced to the second round of the NCAA Tournament after winning the CAA Championship.

"I'm very excited to come to University of Massachusetts because it's certainly a school and university with a great education and also puts a great deal of emphasis on all of the athletic programs across the board, including women's soccer," Matz said.

After Jim Rudy retired in the summer of 2009, the opening at UMass was one that caught the eye of Matz, but the timing was not right.

"This is a job I had interest in this past summer, it was just a little too close to my season at Northeastern and I just didn't feel comfortable leaving my program at that time," Matz said. "At the conclusion of my season I renewed my interest in the position."

With the success of the Minutewomen this past season then first trip to the Atlantic 10 Tournament since 2004 under interim head coach Angela Napoli, Matz sees great potential on the new team. With 20 years of coaching experience at Northeastern nine seasons as Northeastern's mens coach and 11 seasons as the women's coach and numerous winning seasons, Matz knows the commitment it takes to win and plans to bring a new level of commitment to UMass.

"One of the first things that we want to implement is that it is a 12 month commitment to playing at the Division 1 level and that they have to commit a great deal of their time to give themselves a chance to get back to the tournament," he said.

Matz also plans on implementing a new practice style to get his players to play more competitively come game time.

"I love to have a competitive type of practice that will carry over into games," Matz said. "A lot of our focus is just to try and bring out the competitiveness and desire to succeed in our players and also when you have a competitive practice it is a fun practice."

As well as being named the 2009 CAA Coach of the Year, Matz was named the America East Coach of the Year in 2000 and 2002 as the head coach of Northeastern's men's program. In his tenure at Northeastern, Matz posted a combined 182-165-41 as the men's and women's coach.

Jeffrey R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@dailycollegian.com. Adam Miller can be reached at amiller@dailycollegian.com.

UMass expecting tough game against A-10 leader Duquesne

MAXWELL SPARK / COLLEGIAN

Center Nicole Jones takes a jumper during a home game this season.

By Steve Levine
Collegian Staff

A tough start to the conference schedule is about to get tougher.

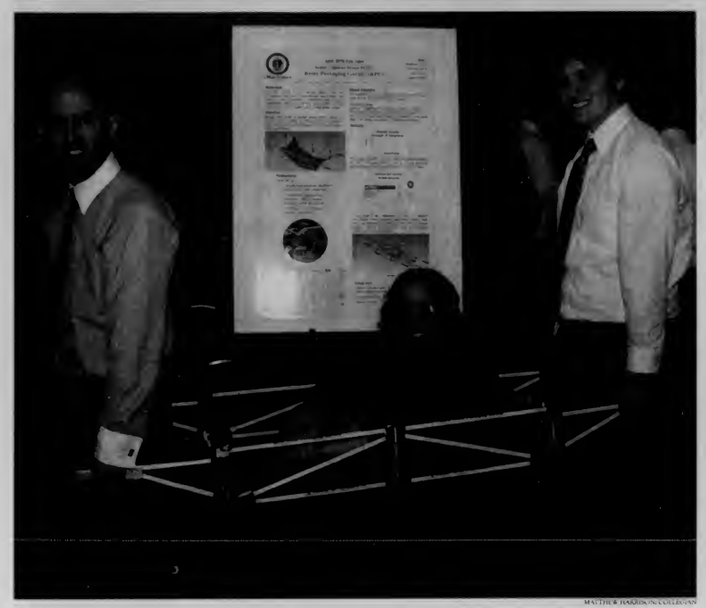
The Massachusetts women's basketball team travels to Pittsburgh tonight for a game against league-leading Duquesne.

Duquesne (13-5, 3-0 Atlantic 10) looks to continue its confident play after defeating Fordham, 69-63, in a nationally televised broadcast on Sunday. Leading the way for the Dukes was redshirt junior forward Samantha Pollino, who registered a game-high 20 points to go along with her nine rebounds.

Against St. Bonaventure four days earlier, Pollino tallied 15 points and six rebounds in the Dukes' 57-52 victory. Her road trip performances earned her A-10 Player of the Week honors for the second time in her career.

Despite leading her team with 13.1 points per game, Pollino and the Dukes benefit largely in-part to a balanced scoring attack. Right behind Pollino is senior guard Keri Pryor (12.8 points per game) and sophomore forward Alex Gersler (11.4). In overall scoring, Duquesne ranks third behind Xavier and Dayton, averaging 67.9 points per game.

Although the Minutewomen (7-11, 1-2 A-10) enter Wednesday's game as the underdog, they believe there are a few reasons to be hopeful. UMass gained valuable experience against another elite conference team on Saturday, when it lost to Richmond, 73-62. The Spiders (13-4, 2-0 A-10) witnessed an inspired second half from the Minutewomen, whose 33-25 advantage in the second half was not enough to overcome its mistakes in the first.



See W. HOOP on page 6

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY

COLLEGIAN

HIGH: 36 LOW: 22 www.DailyCollegian.com THURSDAY, JANUARY 21, 2010

MATTHEW HARRIS / COLLEGIAN

Matt Jarret and Adam Rhodes carry Zoe Crowley in the River Portaging Gurney. The device that should allow disabled individuals to take part in kayaking and other outdoor activities previously considered out of reach.

Engineering the outdoors

Winning Capstone project lends a hand to the disabled

By Nick Bush
Collegian Staff

Four University of Massachusetts engineering students found a way to lend a helping hand to individuals with disabilities eager to spend more time in the great outdoors.

Over the past year, senior mechanical engineering majors Matthew Jarrett, Adam Rhodes, Andrew LaPré and Sean Moore developed the River Portaging Gurney (RPG), a device that should allow disabled individuals to take part in kayaking and other outdoor activities previously considered out of reach. The team was the winner of the 2009 UMass Senior Capstone Design Competition, which took place last month.

The RPG is a gurney that folds up compactly enough to fit in the end of a kayak, but when unfolded can carry the weight of one person, allowing a disabled individual to navigate portions of kayak trips involving walking over rocks and shallow rapids.

"There is definitely a market for this device," said Rhodes. "For people without the use of their legs, this will absolutely help them [get over difficult terrain]."

"Currently there is no device for white water kayaks that could fit inside and aid in the portaging of kayakers with physical disabilities," said Jarrett. "Right now, this prevents the participation of such individuals in similar sports."

The team worked with Zoe Crowley, a disabled kayaker and senior at the university, along with the UMass Outing Club.

"I'm incredibly impressed," said Crowley. "They have taken something that seemed like a pipe dream, and made it possible."

The team also received a $225 investment from Northampton-based All Out Adventures Inc., which lists promoting "health, community, and independence for people with disabilities and their family and friends through outdoor recreation" as its mission statement, and has expressed great interest in the device's potential.

See KAYAK on page 2

Auto accident Mon. leaves four injured

By Matt Rocheleau
Collegian Staff

A pickup truck and an SUV collided head-on in Amherst Monday night, sending four people to the hospital and causing extensive damage to both vehicles, according to police.

Three of the people involved who were riding together in the SUV are believed to be students at the University of Massachusetts, according to names provided by police that match the names of students enrolled at UMass; however that could not immediately be confirmed.

A Mitsubishi four-door driven by Brynne S. Goldberg, 22, of West Hartford, Conn., crossed the center line on North East Street to maneuver around a police cruiser that was parked at the side of the road where another vehicle had been pulled over, said Amherst Police Lt. Ronald A. Young.

While passing by the cruiser, Goldberg's vehicle collided head-on with a Ford Ranger driven by James N. Broderick, 24, of Amherst, officials said.

Goldberg, Broderick and two passengers in Goldberg's vehicle, Meredith Kirby, 21, of Lenox, Mass., and Alexandra Kelley, 20, of Milton, Mass., were all hospitalized as a result, police said.

Young referred questions regarding the extent of each person's injuries and their current condition to hospital officials who could not immediately be reached for comment.

Police said Goldberg will likely be issued a citation for unsafe lane change.

A dog inside Broderick's truck was not injured, officials said.

Matt Rocheleau can be reached at mrochele@dailycollegian.com.

New Google Maps tool brings together protestors nationwide

COURTESY OF STUDENTACTIVISM.NET

StudentActivism.net uses Google Maps to show student protest actions that are being organized or have taken place in the 2009-10 academic year, with the markers with black dots indicating locations where protestors were arrested.

Valley artists show off their work at Holubs' latest Hillside salon

By Angela Hilsman
Collegian Staff

Tuesday, Jan. 19, the University of Massachusetts Amherst's chancellor, Robert Holub, and his wife, Sabine Holub, opened their home to both artists and art enthusiasts alike for the fourth monthly Hillside salon. At 6 p.m. that night, approximately 60 guests mingled and settled within a half an hour to enjoy the presentations of five local artists.

Artists included Photographer Mary Frey, Printmaker Anita Hunt, Video Artist Fraser Stables, Designer Anja Schutz, and Art Director Lillianna Pereira. Sabine Holub welcomed guests to the "informal and non-academic event." From there, each artist was given 20 seconds to show 20 views of his or her work, a total of about 6.5 minutes per artist. Thirty minutes of group discussion and more mingling followed the presentation.

Mary Frey started the show, portraying her progression through black and white photographs to colored photos accompanied by text. Her subjects included everything from kids playing Monopoly, to owls, to close-ups, and nakedness. She described her work as "strange, ghostly, and beautiful."

Anita Hunt stepped up next, and enlightened the crowd on her printmaking processes, explaining that she has eliminated all solvents

See SALON on page 3

By Nina Heikkinen
Collegian Staff

This year, student activists have a new tool on Google Maps to help them publicize their protests and find support from like-minded students across the country. Angus Johnston, professor of American student activism at City University in New York, began tracking student activism in the United States on the Google program last November as part of his website and blog, studentactivism.net. The map has quickly gained in popularity, with 11,061 views total, averaging about 1,000 hits per day, according to Johnston.

Johnston said he first came up with the idea of using Google Maps to track student activism in this country after he came across student activists in Europe using the program to share information about protests occurring at European universities.

"I thought that was a really interesting idea and decided to take it to the next level," he said.

According to Johnston, the map is designed to give readers a geographical, visual and chronological overview of the types of student protests in the country this academic year. Each pin on the map is color-coded based on the type of student protest. A red pin represents a building occupation, blue is a demonstration, green stands for a labor strike, and yellow is for any other newsworthy event. A pin with a black dot in the center means that students were arrested at the protest. Click on a pin, and a short description of the protest pops up, along with directions to the location of the event.

Johnston said one of his primary motivations for using Google Maps to cover student activism was to address what he said was a lack of effective media coverage of student activism. While large student protests may capture national media attention, smaller demonstrations around the country often go unnoticed by both the media and other students.

"There is a real lack of awareness of the nature and extent of activism on college campuses that goes beyond major protests," he said. Johnston also said he wanted to increase students' awareness of activism occurring, "in their own backyards."

Johnston said that he came across most of the student activism shown on the map through

See ACTIVISM on page 2

ARTS & LIVING

Petticoats and vampires abound

Watch more than "Avatar" over winter break? Collegian staff writer Shayna Murphy breaks down some of the best (and worst) films of the season.

SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS

UMass drops last-second thriller

Fighting back from a 10-point deficit in the second half, the Massachusetts basketball team missed completing the comeback on a missed 3-point shot as time expired.

SEE PAGE 10

EDITORIAL & OPINION

Nick Milano finds something lacking with our new academic calendar.

SEE PAGE 4

DailyCollegian.com

Head to DailyCollegian.com for an exclusive slideshow of one reporter's adventures while wearing Jesus boxers.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXX
ISSUE 3

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
413-545-3500
Fax 413-545-3699
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF William McGuinness
MANAGING EDITOR Matt Rocheleau
MANAGING WEB EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
BUSINESS MANAGER Daniel Jette
PRODUCTION MANAGER Michael Sarkes
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Kirsten Swenson
ADVERTISING MANAGER Michael Tortorici
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Amanda Joinson
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Shana Murphy
COPY EDITOR Andrew Wirn
EDITORIAL EDITOR Alyssa Creamer
NEWS EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS EDITOR Jeffrey R. Larnard
PHOTO EDITOR Matthew Harrison
IT MANAGER Victor Jack
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Matt Zolnierz
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Nicole Jacinto
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Norman Provost
CLASSIFIED MANAGER Katelyn Tamilio
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Justin Gagnon
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Elyse Horowitz
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Cal Scannell
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Benjamin Moriarty
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Michael Phillis
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Matthew M. Robare
ASSISTANT NEWS Samuel Butterfield
ASSISTANT NEWS Jenn. Heshion
ASSISTANT NEWS Chris Shores
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jay Auer
ASSISTANT SPORTS David Brinch
ASSISTANT SPORTS Adam Miller
ASSISTANT PHOTO Maxwell Sparr
ASSISTANT PHOTO Samantha Webber
SENIOR PRODUCER Sara Cody
SENIOR PRODUCER Pete Rizzo

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1996. Published daily since 1967. The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

PRODUCTION CREW
on staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Nick Bush

COPY EDITOR
Chelsea Dugan

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Sarkes

Engineers lend a hand to disabled

KAYAK from page 1

Human factors came into play in the design of the RPG according to Moore. "This is a device that had to be used," he said. "We had to make a few sacrifices to get it to [work]."

The engineers chose aluminum because it is lightweight, inexpensive and easily-machined compared to other metals. They also utilized fiberglass for its high tensile strength, as well as rot-resistant and comfortable Neoprene. The RPG is collapsible to 27 percent of its original length, allowing it to easily fit into a kayak or canoe.

"We met our goals," said LaPré. "The RPG had to collapse, hold 200 pounds of body weight and weigh less than 10 pounds itself," all while remaining cost-effective to produce. The team is now working on generating real-world testing, market analysis and designing larger harness sizes to accommodate a wide range of body types.

"The hardest part was getting it to fold up into such a small space," continued LaPré. "The biggest plus is that it is going straight into use [at the UMass Outing Club], which was a lot of motivation for us."

"I feel very accomplished," said Jarrett, who noted that over 80 hours of machining went into constructing the prototype, which was ultimately donated to the Outing Club. "I think that our attention to detail created something that will have an impact."

Nick Bush can be reached at nbush@student.umass.edu.

MATTHEW HARRISON/COLLEGIAN

Matt Jarrett (right) looks on as Andrew LaPré marks places on parts which need adjustment. The team's River Portaging Gurney will allow those without use of their legs to take part in kayaking and other sports.

MATTHEW HARRISON/COLLEGIAN

Andrew LaPré cuts some parts for the River Portaging Gurney, which took more than 80 hours of machining to produce.

Online map hopes to counter lack of protest media coverage

ACTIVISM from page 1

his own research, although he said he also uses news-gathering websites such as National Student News Service to find stories. "Increasingly, students are giving me a heads-up about protests through email, my blog or Twitter," he said. "Students know that this resource exists."

Several UMass students interviewed said that they liked the idea of the Google Maps application, though they had not personally used the map before.

"It seems like a really great idea," UMass Student Government Association (SGA) Senator Melissa Urban said about the Google Maps application. "Campus organizers will be able to act in solidarity across the nation and work together to address the important issues like fee hikes or justice for students," she said.

"I think I would use it, especially for work with my committee for the SGA, the State and Federal Organizing Committee. We're anticipating an exciting semester and this could be useful in seeing the similarities in our campus and those across the country," Urban said.

"It would be good for our club, and clubs in general, because they would get more press, and also for political analysis and tracking of movements," said Derek Khanna, president of the Republican Club. "It's really subjective what rallies are covered by the media. Having a more or less objective attempt to display ongoing protests is a great idea. I definitely think that tool would be useful."

Niina Heikkinen can be reached at nheikkin@student.umass.edu.

GET A 5% REBATE ON TEXTBOOKS
from the UMASS Textbook Annex

Here's how it works:

Step 1: Purchase your books from the UMass Textbook Annex.

Step 2: Bring your receipt and UMASS ID to the UMASS University Store in the Campus Center between the fourth week and last day of classes.

Step 3: Redeem your 5% rebate credit on anything at the UMass University Store.

Rebate offer is good only on textbook purchases. Valid ID required. Returned books not eligible for rebate. Textbook receipts must be presented during the semester purchases where made. Store rebate credits expire at the end of the semester they where received. Rebate not to exceed $50.00 per semester. See store for details.

UMASS AMHERST University of Massachusetts
University Store and Textbook Annex
Amherst Campus Center • 413-545-2619
Powered by efollett.com

FOUR Seasons
WINE • LIQUOR • CIGARS
BUY 6 BOTTLES OF WINE WITH YOUR REUSABLE FOUR SEASON WINE BAG AND SAVE 10% OFF START YOUR PLAYOFF RUN WITH A STOP INTO FOUR SEASONS!

BEER * All beer prices plus deposit
Heineken & Heineken Light 24 pk btl $22.99*
Corona & Corona Light 24 pk btl $21.99*
Bud & Bud Light 24 pk btl $16.99*
Busch & Busch Light 20 pk btl $11.99*
Opa Opa Light Lager 12 pk btl $10.99*
Sam Adams Variety Pack 12 pk btl $10.99*
Pabst Blue Ribbon 18 pk can $9.99*
Moosehead 12 pk btl $9.99*
Miller High Life 18 pk btl $9.99*
Rolling Rock 18 pk btl $9.99*
Narragansett 16 oz 6 pk can 2 for $9.98*
Dogfish Head 6 pk btl $9.99*

LIQUOR
Ardberg 10Yr 750 ml $52.99
Hennessey Black Cognac 750 ml $38.99
Grand Marnier 750 ml $32.99
Crown Royal Canadian Whiskey 750 ml $25.99
Bailey's Irish Cream 750 ml $23.99 Including Original, Caramel, Coffee, Mint, Chocolate
Ketel One Vodka 750 ml $20.99
Ketel One Citroen Vodka 750 ml $20.99
Myer's Platinum Rum 1.75 lt $19.99
UV Flavored Vodka 1.75 lt $16.99
Captain Morgan Spiced Rum 750 ml $16.99
Smirnoff 80° Vodka 750 ml $12.99
Smirnoff Twist Flavored Vodka 750 ml $12.99 Including Pear, Apple, White Grape

WINE All wine 750 ml except where noted
Black Box 3.0 lt All Varieties $19.99
Bogle Vinyards Phantom Red Blend $18.99
St. Francis Red Blend $10.99
Villa Mt. Eden Antique Vines Zinfandel $10.99
The Velvet Devil Merlot $10.99
Blackstone Merlot $10.99
Mark West Pinot Noir $10.99
Kris Pinot Grigio $10.99
Kung Fu Girl Riesling $10.99
Castle Rock Cabernet Sauvignon $9.99
Callia Alta Malbec $8.99
Santa Carolina Reserva Cabernet Sauvignon $7.99

SALE 1/21 - 1/27 333 Russell St., Rte. 9, Hadley, MA
584-8174 • Mon.-Sat. 9AM-11PM • Sun. Noon-11PM

Amherst Leisure Services Community Theater presents
JOSEPH AND THE AMAZING TECHNICOLOR DREAMCOAT
Music by Andrew Lloyd Webber | Lyrics by Tim Rice
Director/Choreographer: David Wolgin
Music Director: Heather Davies
Childrens Chorus: Cindy Naughton
January 2010
22 & 23 7:00 PM
23 & 24 2:00 PM
Bowker Auditorium
UMass Amherst
Final Weekend SPECIAL!
Luke Plummer as Joseph
Photography by Mark Lenhold
$10 tickets for college students at the door only for the 22nd, 23rd & 24th
Amherst Leisure Services
70 Boltwood Walk, Amherst, MA 01002
Monday - Friday 8:00 AM to 4:30 PM
(412)-259-3065 www.lsse.org
Tickets are on sale at Amherst Leisure Services!
• Call (413) 259-3065
• Purchase on-line at www.lsse.org
• Visit LSSE Monday - Friday, 8:00 AM to 4:30 PM

Holubs host artists and enthusiasts

SALON from page 1

and acids (and now uses less toxic materials). She focuses her art on ecosystems and local habitats, deliberately taking her photos out of focus to "leave room for invention in the final process."

Fraser Stables showed video clips and pictures of his subject, Scott, "an aging rocker" who talks about applying makeup before an 80's concert. Stables explained his interest in metaphors, saying there are many "metaphors in one's own environment." Examples from his slides included Scott repeatedly standing by the refrigerator, tattoos, colored hair, and Spiderman and wrestling posters.

Anja Schutz's art inspired much interest among viewers, as she focused on her designs for many businesses including "The Lady Killigrew" and "The Rednezvous." Her simple, 60's-modern style drawings can be found on billboards, t-shirts, posters and books as well, including "A Night for Mingus and Mong" and "Sex for America." "I like quirky things," said Schutz, which was clearly demonstrated on her business card.

Lillianna Pereira nervously finished the presentation, demonstrating her interest in collage. "I'm very good at drawing the human figure, although they're mostly muscular and unusual," she said, explaining her comic book inspiration. Her work was "very autobiographical," portraying many girls looking in mirrors or out windows.

In a very relaxed setting, Sabine started the discussion, and artists answered both honestly and jokingly. Schutz noted that in school, her "report card always said, 'Anja is fantastic in art, but needs to pay more attention in class.'" Stables, a Scotland native, explained his start in the arts: "In Scotland, if you're not good at anything else, you do art." Pereira said she got into collage because "I like to get my hands dirty."

Sabine Holub was very pleased with the evening's progression. It was an "intimate setting," she said, explaining that it good to have "access to the artists" (as opposed to in a gallery or museum).

Sabine Holub explained that the point of art is not to interpret it, but to "just enjoy it." "Some art I can relate more to," she said, "some, I go 'What the heck is that?' You keep an openness and that's sort of fun, too."

Rebecca Dufault, executive assistant for the Holubs, said she was very excited to help organize the event. "It's very comfortable," she described it. She added that the last salon, held in November at the Eric Carle Museum of Picture Book Art in Amherst, went smoothly as well.

Chancellor Holub said the salons "are always at a very high level." He added that it is "a good thing for community relations" and has "been very well received by everyone." The chancellor had no problem opening his home to the public. He explained "part of the function of this house is to welcome [the community and University for] academic and artistic endeavors".

UMass Amherst professor of electrical and computer engineering, Baird Soules, having previously attended a salon, described this particular event as "very inspiring," and gravitated towards Schutz's graphic design.

Hunt said the event was a "very different combination" of artists and styles, and noted the many "diverse approaches" to the presentations. She admired the community, saying that she enjoyed being part of a big presentation. "Really, very satisfying," she said.

Sabine Holub crafted the idea of the Hillside salon with the University Gallery's director, Loretta Yarlow, Education Curator, Eva Fierst, and one of the Fine Arts Center's board of directors, Kevin Chrobak. The event was based off of the 'salons' held by well-regarded wives in their living rooms intended to entertain the local community, starting in the 18th Century. The idea originated in 1780s Berlin, and spread throughout Western Europe during the Enlightenment. Sabine Holub explained that these gatherings were basically "networking events."

Sabine Holub noted that she met many "cool artists" a year and a half ago when she was welcomed to the Pioneer Valley. She specified the creator of "Rhymes with Orange" comics, as well as a Tiffany Lamp maker. Ms. Holub said it was a good way for "a nobody like me, not knowing anybody" to meet people of common interests. She wanted to apply the mix of interest and networking to "this house that lends itself to entertaining."

The salons are free to guests. Sabine Holub added, "We like to keep it fresh. We invite artists of all sorts of genres" from all over the Pioneer Valley. She noted that the artists at Tuesday's event are "quite renowned" and "have won numerous awards."

Hillside salons are held every month on the third Tuesday at 150 Chancellor's Drive in Amherst. Space is limited, and guests can reserve a seat online at www.hillsidesalon.org. It is a first-come, first-serve basis.

The campus' hotel management catered the event. They served free wine, hors d'oeuvres, sushi and pastries. Soft piano accompanied the sociable atmosphere. Various still-life, cubism, and abstract paintings, as well as funky vases and assorted books, adorned the Holub's home, a look that Dufault described as Sabine's "clean, modern" style.

Angela Hilsman can be reached at ahilsman@student.umass.edu.

MATTHEW HARRISON/COLLEGIAN

The fourth in a series of salons at the Chancellor's house gave students an opportunity to mingle with Pioneer Valley artists.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

Need to spread the word?

Reach more than 18,000 readers every day!

IT'S CHEAPER THAN YOU THINK!

On-Campus & Local Business Ads for $10 per column inch

R.S.O. Ads for $6.70 per column inch

CONTACT PAMELA:
thecollegian@gmail.com
413.545.3500
or stop by our office in the Campus Center basement

UGG sale
UGG sale
UGG sale
selected styles
selected colors
regular $180 now $99
regular $149 now $89
ZANNA
downtown Amherst

UMASS RETAIL DINING
We appreciate your business!
Enjoy the following specials in the Campus Center January 19–22

FRENCH MEADOW CAFÉ
• Peppermint Mocha or Eggnog Latte 16 oz..... $2.99

CAFÉ TALESAI
• $2.00 off any Combo Meal
cafe talésai
Burgers 101

HATCH
• FREE Bluewall Cookie with the purchase of any Burgers 101 Combo Meal
• Bread Boule filled with Legal Sea Food Clam Chowder..... $4.59

BAKERY & CAFE
LEGAL SEA FOODS RESTAURANT • OYSTER BAR
UMASS DINING
UMassAmherst
umassdining.com

You will ♥ our upcoming specials!

LOOK FORWARD TO...
• Pioneer Valley Breakfast
• Blueberry Week
• Black History Month
• New England Winter Harvest
• Valentine's Chocolate Fondue
• Chinese New Year
• Frost Your Own Cupcake
• Restaurant Week
• Student Iron Chef Competition
• Recipes from Home
• American Produce Week
• Taste of UMass

www.umassdining.com

RESTAURANTS & BISTRO AT THE IVY
YOUR CAMPUS MEAL PLAN
THE BEST VALUE ON CAMPUS RESIDENTIAL MEAL PLAN
UMASS DINING UMassAmherst
umassdining.com
facebook.com/umassdining

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, JANUARY 21, 2010

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Congrats, Martha

Congratulations, Martha! I awoke only a few moments ago, but the morning news cycles are all abuzz and atwitter with the joyous trumpeting of your resounding victory over the spineless, dead-vote-gathering Republicans that have sucked at the bottom of the bucket of Buzzard's Bay bilge we know affectionately as Beacon Hill. You defeated the odds, you gathered the votes, overcame hardship and the ramblings of known Yankee Fan at-large Curt Schilling, and upon the gusts of an electoral whirlwind which would put Ted Kennedy to shame, you have delivered the promise of an uncompromised (until now) health care bill.

Charlie Felder

Oh, wait.

Seriously? This is Massachusetts. How do you lose a democratic campaign in a state that is bluer than a drowning man? In all seriousness, the answers are simple. You lost this campaign for a (hardly) complex web of reasons. You were the perfect non-candidate. You cruised through a primary by providing cookie-cutter answers with the occasional liberal dismissal of real world issues (cough, Afghanistan, cough), never deigning to lower yourself to the serious debate raging between your primary opponents. Scott Brown didn't. You didn't show up to the debate hosted here at UMass, co-sponsored by the League of Women Voters. Scott Brown did. You took your election to the Senate for granted, treating it more like an inevitable succession than a legitimate race with a crucial impact on the course of the national political and legislative landscape. Scott Brown didn't. You made it seem like, and (in some instances) convinced us that you didn't care. Scott Brown did.

Yet there is silver lining, Martha. Though this is a most woefully ominous precursor to the midterm tsunami rolling our way this fall, there is one lesson to be learned, though the fact that Democrats haven't learned it by now boggles the mind.

Worry not, though. You are not the only person to blame. Anyone who told you that you could and should win this is also to blame. Anyone who voted for you in the primary is also to blame. Anyone who didn't recognize that Representative Michael Capuano was a far superior candidate is also to blame. The Boston Globe shares some of that blame for their confusing and pie-in-the-sky endorsement of Alan Khazei for the Democratic nomination, lending an element of chaos and confusion to a very serious campaign. Steve Pagliuca running a campaign of any sort didn't help. I have no clue how many people voted for him simply because he co-owns the Celtics, but it was too many. They share some of the blame, to be sure. But the bulk of the blame lies undeniably with you. This seat – Ted Kennedy's seat – was yours for the taking. Instead of taking the seat seriously, you took it for granted. Thus slips away President Obama's filibuster-proof majority. The Kennedys are rolling in their Arlington Cemetery graves.

An election like this must serve as the ultimate warning against political hubris and miscalculation. Our country was teetering on the edge of disaster only a year ago, and thanks to decisive action from President Obama, we're inching away. In times like these, we cannot afford to tether ourselves to the failed policies of the past nor throw our support behind those who hold their fingers to the political winds and speak quietly from their lecterns. Yet there is silver lining, Martha. Though this is a most woefully ominous precursor to the midterm tsunami rolling our way this fall, there is one lesson to be learned, though the fact that Democrats haven't learned it by now boggles the mind. You never – never – take an election for granted. You fight until you have nothing left inside you, and then you fight on. Who needs sleep? You can sleep when you're dead. You stand up and shout your beliefs from a megaphone when no one listens and when everyone listens.

Take a moment to once more reflect on the gravity of all that you have wrought, Martha (or in the case of Health Care reform, unwrought). Massachusetts – the only state to vote against Richard Nixon in 1972, the first state to provide universal health care and marriage equality to all of its citizens, the national bastion of liberalism and progressive thought – has just sent a hawkish, reactionary conservative to Washington to fill the seat that Ted Kennedy, Charles Sumner, and Daniel Webster once held. Scott Brown? How unworthy. How utterly opposed he is to all those values which have come to define us as citizens of this Commonwealth. He is no more a voice for the people of Massachusetts than George W. Bush was for the United States. His views do not reflect our virtues, nor the better angels of our nature. From the election of Scott Brown at the hands of your criminally incompetent campaign, Democrats across the country will draw political wisdom. Your loss, though a bitter pill, is the necessary dose of reality which Democrats needed to swallow. If they take their medicine, then who knows? Maybe you've saved the Democratic Party.

So Congratulations, Martha.

Charlie Felder can be reached at charliefelder@gmail.com.

dorms, the Recreation Center's not open yet, swine flu's everywhere, my midterms stink, school costs too much, some guy in the Collegian just said something weird, marijuana should be legalized,

Feel like ranting?

Send letters to the editor to:

editorial@dailycollegian.com

people keep complaining about health care, there are ladybugs in my room, my RA's a jerk, there's nowhere to park, the buses are never on time, every time I go to the library it's crowded, one of these days a car's going to hit me when I cross the street, one of these days a bike rider is just going

Shorter break long on nonsense

Nick Milano

Something just does not seem quite right. For those of us who have been at UMass for almost four years now, and even for juniors and sophomores who have been introduced to the normally long UMass winter break, it feels strange to be walking into our third day of classes so soon. The Pioneer Valley has been awakened from its winter slumber a little earlier than usual and students at UMass and the rest of the Five Colleges are worse off for it. From a strangely constructed winter term here at UMass, to confusing schedules for the other colleges, UMass has restructured its spring semester. It would serve itself well to realign its scheduling with that of the entire Five College system.

It is true that summer will start sooner now with final exams ending on May 13 and for graduating seniors, school's out forever on May 15. Few will complain about starting summer – beginning a new job or entering the real world – a week early. Another benefit is that the other colleges typically end earlier than UMass.

UMass is typically the last school to wrap up all its examinations, meaning UMass students sometimes get out too late to participate in certain internships. Lastly, something anyone who has suffered the heat in the dorms can understand: Leaving the Pioneer Valley earlier means less time spent sweltering in dorms with the heat strangely turned on regardless of the outside temperature.

Still, personally I have not encountered an internship that I could not apply for because it started too early. Oftentimes, internships have flexible dates in my personal experience, so the internship benefit may be overstated. The primary reason that UMass should be on its normal schedule is for the benefit of the entire Five College system.

Now, I am not one to be too concerned with the welfare of poor Amherst College, Hampshire College, Mt. Holyoke College and Smith College students, but what is fair is fair. Each school ends around the same time, but for some reason, UMass is alone in starting early. This means that students from those schools who wish to take classes at UMass will have to be moved in and at school a week early.

The primary reason that UMass should be on its normal schedule is for the benefit of the entire Five College system.

If UMass is any example, moving in day is usually the weekend before school starts and moving in early or having a nine month dorm is more expensive. As a participant in the Five College system it is up to each school to arrange its schedule so that no student is negatively affected; UMass is not playing its due part.

While its role in the Five College system is reason enough for UMass to stick to a similar class schedule, there are other reasons for going back to school later. As all who have sweated through even one layer of clothing while lying still on a dorm room bed know, the heating system at UMass should not be considered optimal by any means. Regardless of the temperature outside, the heat is on. Regardless of the temperature of the dorm, be it 100 degrees, the heat is on.

This makes zero sense, both economically and environmentally.

The cost of energy and the need to reduce dependence upon fossil fuels has risen so much that Deval Patrick's administration has invested a million dollars to help the construction of four new wood burning power plants in Western Massachusetts. Now that is a backwards idea if there ever was one. Sending students back into dorms and into off-campus housing for another week in the middle of what always is a brutal Western Massachusetts winter is surely prohibitively costly and a waste of energy. At least in May, the heat is not on.

I always enjoyed being among the last students to trek back to college after winter break was over. It meant we could work for an extra week or relax before school began. College is much less fun in the winter anyway, as that twenty minute walk to Puffton from campus or that eight minute walk up to the bars from Main Street becomes much more intimidating when the wind chill is below zero. Partying in May is much more enjoyable, but there is more to it than just being able to party in shorts and tee shirts. UMass, as part of the Five College program, should not penalize the students of the other schools in the area by starting earlier. Going back to school a week earlier makes zero sense economically, environmentally academically and socially. Whose idea was it anyway?

Nick Milano is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at nmilano@student.umass.edu.

This truck will be parked here for a while

We may never see an election more important than the special one to replace the late Ted Kennedy; it has captured the attention of every political scientist, pundit and blow hard in the country for almost a month. Even the most rabid Republican back in December would not have admitted that his party could ever win a Senate seat from Massachusetts. With Scott Brown's victory, the world has turned on its head, the beginning of the Republican comeback has begun; even before the Democratic majority had warmed the cushions of their plush congressional seats.

Dmitriy Shapiro

It's hard to imagine that only a year and a half ago the rather insignificant State Senator from outside Boston drove his now-famous pick-up truck to UMass to speak to the UMass Republican Club. A very electric, moderate and kind man, he endeared himself to the audience with his "common man" presence and sent Facebook friend requests to every member. Though, Republican candidates in Massachusetts are few and far between, Scott Brown's style exuded the earnestness that told me and the rest of the organization, that he was far different than the rest of the candidates: he had common sense, he had a political future.

Brown was a good candidate, though in a state like Massachusetts, greatness is the prerequisite for a Republican victory. Unless, your opponent is Massachusetts Attorney General Martha Coakley. From the beginning of the campaign, she knew she would cruise to victory. Driving through the state a couple of months ago, you would not see a single Martha Coakley lawn sign; while Brown campaigned diligently. Only when she saw Scott Brown's headlights flashing in her rear view mirror around three weeks ago, did her campaign machine kick in.

This dangerous underestimation is what cost her the race. The scrambling that occurred in the last couple of weeks before the election caused Coakley to make painful mistakes, such as misspelling Massachusetts and the vile error of putting Scott Brown's face on a background of the still standing World Trade Center in an attack ad.

Only when she saw Scott Brown's headlights flashing in her rear view mirror around three weeks ago, did her campaign machine kick in.

Public outrage forced her to pull the ad within hours. From the beginning of the campaign, she had largely avoided any discussion about her beliefs and policies, but in the week before the election, the quotes that Republicans were able to mine from her interviews were nothing short of Palin-esque. She upset many Catholics by saying that there cannot be freedom of religion in a workplace if there is a law that would contradict it, such as laws that would force hospital employees to perform treatments that would violate their consciences.

Nothing alienates Bostonians as much as a quip against the Red Sox. Coakley called Curt Schilling "just another Yankee Fan." She further alienated voters by running so many negative ads on Television and Radio, that even Democrats were appalled, as opposed to Brown's "Hey, Massachusetts, I drive a truck, I'm a nice guy" ads.

But Brown was unconcerned, according to the Associated Press, saying (like a gentleman) "I hope he has a safe trip and enjoys himself and has a good trip looking around a great state."

Coakley's lackluster performance throughout the campaign severely demoralized her base. Independents were an easy gain for Brown, but if you were not one of the Democrats who voted for Brown, you probably weren't so excited about Coakley. The voters on Brown's side were as excited for him as Democrats were for Obama during 2008. Finally, Republicans and right leaning independents began to feel like their vote could finally count and that Brown would need every vote he could get – nothing could have stopped a Brown supporter from voting on Election day.

Turnout would have benefited Coakley, if weather and complacency hadn't interfered. Many Democrats, not very excited about their ticket, decided to stay home. Why would they brave terrible weather, just to vote for someone who they didn't really like, running for a party that usually wins whether they vote or not?

The residents of Massachusetts who exercised their right to vote have finally beaten the machine that has been ignoring a huge amount of constituents, driving liberals into complacency and making Republicans afraid of identifying themselves as Republicans. The notion of a large majority of independents actually being closet Republicans is a real one.

The decades of Democratic domination had beaten the will to compete from these Republicans and finally Scott Brown gave them "Hope." Ironically, during Brown's victory speech, his supporters cheered "Yes we can!"

The lessons Democrats should learn from this election are to never be complacent, that negative ads can backfire, that political clout will not overcome hard work and never underestimate a supposedly weak opponent. Now even some very left leaning liberals, such as Representative Anthony Weiner and many moderates, as reported in the New York Times, are calling for a re-evaluation of Obama's "Agenda for Change" in order to save their own seats in this year's midterm elections. It will be fascinating to see how a much-weakened President Obama will spin his agenda in next week's State of the Union address.

Dmitriy Shapiro is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at dshapiro@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, JANUARY 21, 2010

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Winter chill prompts cinema escape

Blunt reigns supreme, Cera connects with inner machismo

By Shayna Murphy
Collegian Staff

Who says the only thing worth seeing over winter break was "Avatar?" This past winter, as James Cameron's alien parable laid siege to the box office, theater dwellers were given the opportunity to venture deep into alternative realities and historical settings; or, as was the case with "The Young Victoria," into alternative versions of historical realities.

Emily Blunt stars as the future Queen of England in the historical sudser "The Young Victoria," directed by Canadian-born filmmaker Jean-Marc Vallee. Vallee has dabbled in period dramas before – case in point being his racy 2005 film "C.R.A.Z.Y," which chronicled a young man's struggle with his sexuality in 1960s Quebec. But with "Victoria" he goes for broke. While seemingly relishing in the opulent décor of 19th century England, Vallee predicates the film largely on a teenaged Victoria's struggle to wrench independence from the various oppressive forces in her life, among them her mother (a formidable Miranda Richardson), her mother's supposed lover (Mark Strong) and the various political adversaries who would seek to use her power for their own devices.

With Blunt at the helm, Victoria is a sentimental, if not endearing dame, but she fails to conjure up the kind of spirit and gumption that seemed to come effortlessly to Cate Blanchett in her turn as the legendary Elizabeth I. It's not Blunt's fault, per se, as by the standards of her day, Victoria was a fairly conventional woman (Queen or not). But it does weaken the film, as does the script's emphasis on the blossoming (but boring) romance between Victoria and her future husband Albert (Rupert Friend).

In addition to "The Young Victoria," star vehicles abounded during the winter. If you're not completely sick of watching Michael Cera play Michael Cera, you may get a kick out of his latest adventure, "Youth in Revolt," based on the epistolary novel of the same name by C.D. Paine. Cera stars as soft-spoken Nick Twisp, a journal-toting outcast who spends most of his free time listening to records and fantasizing about sex ... What teenager doesn't?

Twisp gets the chance to live out his fantasies after he's suddenly uprooted to the dingy environs of a trailer park. There he meets Sheeni Saunders (Portia Doubleday, milking the ingénue thing for all it's worth), a Francophile with a fondness for poetry-writing and bad boys in the vein Jean Paul-Belmondo. To win her heart, Nick decides to shuck his nice guy ways. With the incendiary assistance of a mustached, gleefully smarmy alter ego named Francois Dillinger (also Cera), Twisp eagerly launches into a regime of delinquency – a regime that soon spirals far out of his control. It's a pleasure to watch Cera break out – for just a bit – of the mold he's constructed for himself, while the rest of the cast, including Justin Long and the always-entertaining Steve Buscemi, seem in top comedic form. If Cera keeps it up, he may stay a hot commodity in Hollywood long after he loses those baby-faced looks.

COURTESY SUTHERLAND

Directed by Canadian-born filmmaker Jean-Marc Vallee, "The Young Victoria" chronicles the blossoming romance of Queen Victoria (Emily Blunt) and her future husband, Prince Albert (Rupert Friend).

COURTESY MYSPACE.COM

With a master's degree in economics, Reginald Gray, also known as Reggie G, balances multiple interests, including a burgeoning rap career.

Like "Youth in Revolt," which was first rumored to be in production back in 2006, "Daybreakers" has been in production for a while, but with the latter film, it's not hard to see why. Although the film cashes in on the current vampire craze – see "True Blood," "The Vampire Diaries" and the dreaded "Twilight" saga – it's about as recycled and ludicrous as they come. The initial premise, conjured up by the Brothers Spierig, seems interesting and offers a more apocalyptic vision of the future than one may be likely to encounter in the typical Doomsday plot.

By the time "Daybreakers" picks up in 2019, most of the population has been changed – due to one pesky bat – into blood-sucking vampires. A few humans remain, farmed for blood in the swanky headquarters of Bromley Marks, the world's leading blood bank. But that's where the plot starts to lose all its vigor. The cast aides in the blood-letting; Willem Dafoe pulls in a truly awful performance as the leader of the human resistance, while Ethan Hawke, the former figurehead for grunge disillusionment in the '90s, seems to be sleepwalking through the picture.

If the acting weren't enough to do you in, even the rules that govern this vampire universe are dull: wooden stakes are a go, while sunlight is a no, and even the strongest vamps fail to cast a reflection in a mirror. It's a wonder then that an ad for a vampire fang-whitening kit features prominently in an early scene. How exactly are vampires expected to whiten their fangs if they have no reflection? And by that same Bela Lugosi school of vampire thought, wouldn't that mean they can't take pictures, either? It's enough to drive a viewer batty.

Shayna Murphy can be reached at skmurphy@dailycollegian.com.

Fashionably ambitious

By Elizabeth Wellington
The Philadelphia Inquirer

PHILADELPHIA – The fabrics Katie Ermilio used in her spring 2010 collection are so soft the pieces appear limp on a rack of hangers in the family's Haverford, Pa., showroom.

But don't let the languid pieces fool you.

She shows the same meticulous attention to detail as her dad, Bob, an internationally renowned fixture in the world of equestrian tailoring. For example, a tomato red, silk-faille Katie Ermilio pencil skirt features a 7-inch, ruffled hem. The matching top is equally exquisite with a seductive open back Ermilio trimmed with the wavy ruffle.

This kind of fashion is a completely different art form," Ermilio said from her father's Haverford studio recently. She's just 24, but as the fourth generation of a family steeped in fashion, she is sartorially wise beyond her years. "I want to translate it as best as I can to pret-a-porter (ready-to-wear) garments."

In the post-recession fashion world, boutiques and specialty department stores are slow to stock sales floors with work by young designers. But because of that, it's an important time for them to continue to build their foundation.

Ermilio is doing just that. In October, she secured a coveted editorial mention in Women's Wear Daily. Her Spring 2010 presentation – a private showing in her New York studio/apartment in September – was attended by fashion editors from Harper's Bazaar, Glamour and Vogue magazines. Next month during Fashion Week, she'll show her fall 2010 collection there as well.

Last January, Washington Post fashion columnist Robin Givhan chose Ermilio's sketch of a sleeveless forest-green gown as the winner of the paper's competition for Michelle Obama's Inaugural gown.

"The silhouette flatters a curvy figure," Givhan wrote. "And the style is both youthful and grand. But it's the color that makes me applaud."

But, most importantly, it's Ermilio's clean, architectural look and couture flourishes that have won over the women who can afford to spend thousands of dollars a season on their wardrobe. (An Ermilio piece ranges from $750 to $4,200.)

These women, most of whom define their sense of style as conservative with a twist, are more than stealth shoppers; they have the power to create a mystique around a clothier powerful enough to launch a career – as long as you get their express permission to mention names.

"Her designs are one-of-a-kind, and that's really great when you want to go to an event and stand out," said client Paula Yudenfriend Green of Haverford.

See ERMILIO on page 6

Rapper shuns the trends, focuses on degree

By Mario Tarradell
The Dallas Morning News

DALLAS – Reginald Gray won't conform to stereotypes. Especially when he's rapper Reggie G.

As Reggie G, he's got a conversational flow and a penchant for musical variety, from spaghetti Western themes to OutKast to Ozzy Osbourne. He bypasses the rap lifestyle trappings – no bling, no limos, no scantily clad women – and relishes everyday realities.

He also has two degrees from Southern Methodist University, a bachelor's in advertising and a master's in economics. He's working on his doctorate.

"Reggie wasn't born with a platinum spoon in his mouth," says Corbin Corona, who produced a track Gray recorded with Chamillionaire. "He came and he worked and he went to SMU. The guy teaches night classes on micro- and macroeconomics."

That's five classes at Dallas' Paul Quinn College and Navarro College's Midlothian campus. It takes coaxing to get Gray to acknowledge that. Not because he's ashamed of teaching, but because he doesn't want to be viewed as "the rapper with the degrees." He doesn't want to appear as if he's being made out to be "better than anybody else," he says.

Gray takes the teaching seriously, and it informs his rapping.

"Well, sort of," he says while sitting at Dallas' Studio 1801, which is owned by Gray's friend and business partner John Allen. "I'm not teaching economics classes in my raps. But what I am is my experiences through economics, through life and being a young, black male trying to survive and do something that's totally different."

"I don't want to say my image is positive so you can put me up on this pedestal. I don't feel like that. But what I do feel is I am doing something different with my life. The teaching gives me a chance to give back to the community. It's sort of like a community service to me but I get a check for it."

Rapping has been a hobby and a career dream for the 29-year-old Gray since 1997. When he was 18 in Grambling, La., he subscribed to what could be thought of as the typical rapper's philosophy.

"At that point in my life I was all about that," he says. "I'd get high every day. I did that, all of that. But I wanted to get better. I'm trying to get better and I'm trying to live a long life. I want to be true to myself."

Gray remembered something his mother told him. She said, "Why don't you get your degree out of the way and then you can do whatever you want?" That stuck. So, the kid who found school easy because he quickly memorized everything moved to Highland Park and began his undergraduate work.

"I grew up in an all-black town," he says. "And then I moved to Highland Park. Culture shock."

He learned to assimilate into the educational system. But rapping never left his life. He continued to do it, releasing three CDs and two mix tapes. Education, however, changed his rhymes.

"I went from rapping about what everybody wanted to hear, to rapping about what I wanted to hear. I became more focused. All of my music is different," he says. "I'm an artist. I wake up in the morning and if I don't feel like taking a shower, instead I write a rap about the basketball game I saw last night. Or the girl I saw. Or making a peanut butter and jelly sandwich. I got peanut-butter-and- jelly-sandwich songs. I'm moody and mood is music. It's everyday."

Gray wants success, the big national kind that made Jay-Z a superstar. He's got a new CD, "Reggie Who?," that will be released physically and digitally on Valentine's Day. The disc includes the collaboration with the Grammy-winning Chamillionaire.

Reggie G wants that CD to connect with every hip-hop fan, and those who don't normally listen to hip-hop. He wants them to hear the words of a guy who feels passion for music, for education and for life. If his nonstereotypical existence is an uphill battle, so be it. Gray is ready.

"I'm motivated by challenges, accomplishments," he says.

"The degrees are accomplishments. I'm always trying to set goals for myself. I love music

B-rate horror films score big at Sundance

By John Horn and Steven Zeitchik
Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — Midnight at the Sundance Film Festival is usually when most Hollywood types are just starting to party. But at this year's showcase of independent film, many film buyers will be heading in a different direction: late-night sales screenings.

The 26th annual festival, kicking off Thursday in Park City, Utah, has yielded the art house breakouts "An Inconvenient Truth," "Little Miss Sunshine" and "Reservoir Dogs." Over the next 10 days, though, distributors could be less interested in potential award-winners than carnage and comedy.

With the ultra low-budget "Paranormal Activity" emerging last year as one of the most profitable movies in Hollywood history — made for about $15,000, the supernatural story grossed $107 million domestically — there's fresh Sundance focus on Park City at Midnight, the festival section dedicated to inexpensive horror works and often raunchy comedies.

It's the same sleep-is-overrated programming slot that brought us the thriller hits "The Blair Witch Project," "Saw" and "Open Water," and independent distributors — who have been suffering through their own slasher story with corporate cutbacks and closures — are praying there's another such film lurking in the wee hours at America's most prestigious film festival.

"'Paranormal Activity' is clearly an anomaly. But what you can draw from it is that people don't care how much a movie costs if it's something they really want to see," said veteran film sales agent Jonathan Dana, who is expecting intensified interest in low-budget movies in both the Midnight section and Next, a new Sundance category for movies costing less than $500,000 to make — about what "Avatar" spent in an afternoon of filming.

The backers of some of the Midnight films are confident their movies will play on their own terms and also create ticket-selling word of mouth.

"This is a movie that definitely will not just blend in," said Peter Safran, a producer of the claustrophobic thriller "Buried," which stars Ryan Reynolds ("The Proposal"). "And we have a star in Reynolds who can get on talk shows and actually promote the movie."

In addition to "Buried," in which Reynolds plays an American truck driver in Iraq held for ransom while confined in an underground coffin, one of the more talked-about Midnight movies is "High School," a pothead comedy about a valedictorian and a stoner who join forces to battle drug testing. Both films are looking for distribution deals.

Warren Zide, a producer of "High School," said he's hopeful buyers and audiences alike will compare the film favorably to "American Pie" (which Zide also produced) and "The Hangover" because of "High School's" originality and irreverence. "It's a different kind of comedy, and that's what makes it commercial," Zide said. "It's a profitable genre to be in right now."

Low-budget movies with a more serious bent are also attracting early buyer interest, like the Neal film "The Freebie," a romantic dramedy in which a husband and wife, each agree to sleep with one person of their choosing.

"There's definitely a renewed vitality in the micro-budget sphere. The big question is whether studios are ready to embrace genres besides horror," said "The Freebie" executive producer Mark Duplass.

The bottom-line benefits of an effective genre film are alluring, especially as the studios are scaling back (when not closing) their specialty film divisions. Unlike pricey studio movies that can chew up hundreds of millions of dollars in production and marketing expenses, genre films not only cost much less to produce but also can sustain themselves through free, young moviegoer recommendations. What's more, these movies often sell for a fraction of the Sundance record $10.5 million Fox Searchlight paid in 2006 for "Little Miss Sunshine."

It wasn't just "Paranormal Activity" that proved the point: 2009's biggest return-on-investment releases included Sony's "District 9" and Warner Bros.' "The Hangover," movies where the positive word of mouth was more remarkable than the production budgets. Paramount Pictures, which bought distribution rights to "Paranormal Activity" for about $350,000, recently launched a new division dedicated to movies budgeting under $100,000. Of course, there's much more than genre titles on the Sundance block. Higher-profile pictures up for sale include the Natalie Portman film "Hesher," the Ryan Gosling-Michele Williams romantic drama "Blue Valentine," Ben Affleck in the layoff story "The Company Men," and "The Extra Man," a story about an unlikely friendship from the filmmakers behind "American Splendor."

Buyers in the teeming mountain resort town will be keeping in mind several cautionary tales.

For all of "Paranormal Activity's" success (the film wasn't invited to Sundance and instead played at Park City's concurrent Slamdance Film Festival), most of last year's Midnight movies disappeared from the multiplex almost as soon as the sun rose. "Black Dynamite," bought by Sony for $2 million, barely grossed $200,000 domestically. Norway's "Dead Snow" grossed $47,000 and "Grace" didn't even get to $10,000 in North American cinemas.

The news was better for dramas acquired last January: "Precious: Based on the Novel 'Push' by Sapphire," is a minor hit and an Oscar contender, and "An Education" is popular with critics and art house patrons.

With fewer buyers — Miramax Films, Paramount Vantage and Warner Independent Pictures have all vanished — optimists point to the ascendancy of video-on-demand services such as Cinetic FilmBuff and IFC Films along with several new buyers, including Oscilloscope Pictures and Apparition.

"Paranormal Activity" made an impact last year in Park City, Utah, the site of the Sundance Film Festival, proving that low-budget films have a place in the illustrious festival.

A history rooted in fabrics

ERMILIO from page 5

At last count, Ermilio had about 50 clients in New York, Connecticut and Florida, with about 20 in the Philadelphia area. She spent most of the holiday season completing fittings and sketching ballgowns for the crowd.

Ermilio, who originally wanted to be a journalist, can't deny that fashion is in her blood.

Her great-grandfather Anthony Ermilio ran a bustling tailor shop in Center City Philadelphia from the late 1800s through the 1920s. He was known for his use of European fabrics.

The shop moved to the Main Line after World War II. In the 1950s, her grandfather Arthur Ermilio designed the first Masters golf tournament jacket, creating the iconic green. He also designed President Dwight D. Eisenhower's World War II bomber jacket and Princess Grace Kelly's riding pants. Both Arthur Ermilio and Katie's father, Bob, dressed former President Gerald Ford.

"They never talk about who they dressed," Ermilio said. "The only reason we know (my grandfather) designed the Masters jacket is because of a handwritten letter. It just wasn't polite. We come from a long line of that tradition."

It's late December and Ermilio is fitting a shrunken jacket with a Peter Pan collar on Debra Guezlo. Guezlo's husband, Allen, is a noted historian and the head of the Civil War Department at Gettysburg College.

After the fitting, Ermilio, wearing Phillip Lim trousers, sips a family favorite -Earl Grey tea - and tells her story.

She spent her Saturdays in the family's Haverford and Paoli, Pa., locations. As a child, she dabbled in design. The first dress she made for herself was a charmeuse baby-doll dress in sea-foam green that she wore to her eighth-grade dance.

In 2006, she snagged an internship with fashion designer Tracy Reese. She landed a marketing internship at Women's Wear Daily, and, the following year, she designed a cream wool-crepe sheath with a low-scooped back that she wore to an interview for an internship with Vogue magazine. She got the job.

She worked for Vogue for a year, all the while designing on the side. In 2008, she graduated from New York University with a degree in visual culture and land..J a job as a public-relations assistant in Teen Vogue. Her father sold her designs from his store and connected her with clients. After working the equivalent of two full-time jobs for over a year, she decided to open her own business with a financial boost from her parents.

Katie Ermilio was born.

"I thought about what I wanted to be doing 10 years from now," Ermilio said. "Designing is something that I was meant to do."

SAVE MORE

We have the most used textbooks

UMass Amherst University of Massachusetts
University Store and Textbook Annex
Amherst Campus Center • 413-545-2619
www.umass.bkstr.com

Powered by efollett.com

UMass looking to extend win streak

Vermont travels to Amherst for a pair

By Jeffrey R. Larnard
Collegian Staff

The tough three-game losing streak experienced by the Massachusetts hockey team over winter break may have been the best thing to happen to it this season.

With all its remaining games against conference opponents in a tight Hockey East race, the losing streak sent a wake-up call through UMass' locker room just in time.

"I think the three-game stretch was kind of a huge wake-up call, its not like we were losing those games 3-2 or in overtime, we got absolutely spanked," UMass goaltender Paul Dainton said. "It was a huge wake-up call and the guys in there, their attitudes changed, it humbled our team a bit."

The humbling paid off as the No. 15 Minutemen (14-8-0, 9-6-0 HEA) had a newfound focus, and responded with a three-game winning streak that propelled them to third place in the conference standings, just three points behind first-place New Hampshire.

UMass hopes to extend that streak this weekend when they host No. 17 Vermont for a two game set at the Mullins Center on Saturday and Sunday.

"[Vermont is] a very skilled team and we've had success playing against them in the past so we're looking forward to this weekend," Dainton said.UMass' most recent success against the Catamounts (11-7-2, 5-6-2 HEA) came back on Nov. 24 when the Minutemen pulled off a 6-2 victory thanks to a Casey Wellman hat trick and five assists by the nations leading scorer, James Marcou.

While there is an opportunity for four points this weekend, UMass coach Don Cahoon is only concerned about the two points his team can earn on Saturday at this point.

"In terms of the four points, I can't be dealing with four points, I got to take care of the two on Saturday," Cahoon said. "We'll worry about Sunday when Sunday comes. Everything we're gearing to is a good performance on Saturday night."

To prepare his team for Saturday's contest, Cahoon is putting emphasis on a high level of execution in the team's practices this week in hopes of building a strong focus and mindset.

One aspect of this weekend's series that benefits the Minutemen is how both games are played at home, a place UMass has played at just once in its last seven games.

"We don't have to worry about picking up and going anywhere," Cahoon said about playing both games this weekend at the Mullins Center. "We've played one game back here since the break and it was nice to get home. We had been away for a long time, so knowing we're going to be here the entire weekend I think it is a healthy thing for our team."

One aspect that has stood out in the Minutemen's three-game winning streak is the ability for the offense to finish games that the defense and goaltending have kept close.

"There have been games where the defense has stolen a couple of games but then there have been games when the forwards have put up 5 or 6 goals and the defense hasn't been there and the goaltending hasn't been there," Dainton said. "We definitely complement each other pretty well but if we just go in with the game plan to give the team a chance to win every single game, they'll take care of the rest."

Saturday's contest against the Catamounts will take place at 7 p.m. and will be followed by a 3 p.m. game on Sunday and can be seen on ESPNU.

Jeffrey R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@dailycollegian.com.

Casey Wellman, the nation's leading goal scorer with 17, attacks the net against Boston University in UMass' first meeting this season. BU avenged its loss earlier this season with a 7-3 win over the Minutemen during winter break.

Junior goaltender Paul Dainton has strung together three good performances after allowing six goals against Boston University.

Power play playing a signficiant factor

By Jay Asser
Collegian Staff

After struggling on the power play in losses during winter break, the Massachusetts hockey team has played consistently on special teams in the past week and a half, resulting in three consecutive wins.

In their three losses over winter recess, the No. 15 Minutemen (14-8-0, 9-6-0 Hockey East) were outscored on the power play, 3-6. Despite having six more man advantage opportunities than its opponents, UMass went 3 for 19 on offense while the penalty kill allowed six goals in 13 attempts.

During their current three-game winning streak, the Minutemen have outscored opponents, 5-0.

UMass coach Don Cahoon knows that playing well on both the offensive and defensive side of the puck during penalties is important.

"Special teams and goaltending are critical factors, and will continue to be," he said.

For the season, the Minutemen are 27 for 109 on the power play with a 24.8 percent conversion rate, ranking them third in the Hockey East behind Maine and Merrimack.

On the penalty kill, however, UMass sits seventh in the conference just ahead of New Hampshire, Maine, and Northeastern with an 80.7 success rate. The Minutemen have killed off 71-of-88 chances, tying them with the Wildcats for the least amount of power play opportunities given up.

"We have the talent to be able to execute in those situations," Cahoon said. "We do pretty well on the penalty kill and certainly the power play has been one of the tops in the country all year long."

This weekend, UMass will face a test in No. 17 Vermont (11-7-2, 5-6-2 HEA), which has had a near-automatic penalty kill as of late, wasting the last 40-of-42 opponent chances.

"Some teams play us real tough and if we're not totally focused and we're not executing the way we're capable of, it can be neutralized and be the difference in the game," Cahoon said.

Dainton rebounding

In UMass' second loss during its losing streak, which came at the hands of Boston University, goaltender Paul Dainton statistically had one of the worst games of his career.

Dainton, who previously made 39 saves while allowing two goals in a 3-2 win over then-No. 2 BU, struggled against the Terriers the second time around. BU pelted 29 shots on goal, scoring six times on Dainton with two goals coming in each period.

"With the BU game we kind of went in there and were just fighting the puck and just the team overall, we weren't playing that great," Dainton said.

Following that game, Dainton was given a day off as Dan Meyers faced similar difficulties in allowing seven goals in his start between the pipes against New Hampshire.

Dainton, though, rebounded well after his poor performance, leading the Minutemen to three straight victories. In the wins, he allowed a total of four goals while making 71 saves, with his best game coming at the Tsongas Arena in the second night of a home-and-home against then-No. 15 UMass Lowell.

As a junior, Dainton is still getting better, and knows he still has room for improvement.

"I've been working with my goalie coach, just a lot of mental work to work on different things and I can see a tremendous difference in it already."

Jay Asser can be reached at jasser@student.umass.edu.

CHECK OUT
THE DAILY COLLEGIAN SPORTS BLOG
http://blog.massdve.com/dailycollegiansports

SPRING BREAK
JAMAICA
Once you go you know.
Spring Break comes to life...
Live Concerts
Awesome VIP Parties
Beautiful Beaches
Scenic Cliff Jumping
Spectacular Sunsets
Book Your Trip Today! Contact:
www.sunsplashtours.com
1.800.426.7710
STS STUDENT TRAVEL SERVICES
1.800.648.4849
www.ststravel.com

winter sale
up to 75% off
women's shoes clothing and accessories
ZANNA
downtown Amherst

Day one
and we're in this together
Bring your experience and ideas. Day one is waiting and so is your team.
At Ernst & Young, you'll find an open and diverse environment. You'll tap into your life experiences. Give fresh perspective to your clients and your colleagues.
And you'll learn from others who share your goals and aspirations.
Explore your career options in assurance, tax, transaction or advisory services.
What's next for your future?
To learn more, visit ey.com/us/dayone and find us on Facebook.
50 BEST PLACES TO LAUNCH A CAREER BusinessWeek
IDEAL
ERNST & YOUNG
Quality In Everything We Do

JEFF BERNSTEIN / COLLEGIAN

Center Sean Carter posts up against an opponent earlier this season. Carter recorded three rebounds, one block, and one assist in 18 minutes of play against the Bonnies.

One-point loss marks fourth straight for UM

UMASS from page 10

SBU led by its biggest margin of 10 points with 9:58 to go in the game, but quickly saw it shrink following a 7-0 run with five of those points by Harris.

Just as things started to turn up for the Minutemen, they found themselves in trouble once again when Matthews set up another fast break layup for Malcolm Eleby to make the game 59-54 with 8:44 to go.

The Bonnies built their lead back up to seven by the four minute mark, but UMass went on another 7-0 run. This time, it was to tie the game for the first time all half.

"We always thought we were going to pull it out because every day in practice when we scrimmage, we do end-of-game situations where one team is down eight points with three minutes to go so we always know we're going to win, but it just didn't go our way," Riley said of his team's ability to come back from a deficit.

Despite the team's frustration with losing four straight games, Harris said nobody has given up because of how Kellogg believes in his players. But he's been doing everything he can to keep that losing to a minimum by shooting jumpers well after practice ends.

The Minutemen's next game will be against the third ranked opponent they've played this season, No. 25 Baylor, on Jan. 23. UMass hasn't beaten a ranked opponent in either game against Michigan State or Temple.

Game notes:

The loss was UMass' first at the Mullins Center since the home opener on Nov. 18 when it dropped to Cornell, 74-61. The Minutemen are now 5-2 in Amherst.

Adam Miller can be reached at amiller@dailycollegian.com.

No shooting rhythm from outside in loss

BASKETBALL from page 10

four games, all loses to Atlantic 10 opponents.

Riley is second to Harris in 3-point attempts with 104, and is second on the team with a .375 average, but leads the team with 39 3-pointers made, good for a 2.8 average. Harris is second with 32 for an average of 1.8 per game.

Against opponents so far this season, UMass has a .304 3-point shooting percentage, while opponents have a .366 mark, but the Minutemen average 6.9 3-point field goals made per game, compared to opponents (6.6).

UMass coach Derek Kellogg felt that his teams' struggle with making 3-point shots has made it difficult to do other things on the offensive side of the ball.

"Its made it very difficult, we shoot threes, and I think we have good 3-point shooters, although our percentages, you know, at times tell us otherwise," Kellogg said.

"I would venture to guess that we missed more open threes tonight than we have pretty much all year, but I will have to watch the tape and see."

Kellogg wants to see his team continue to take threes, and to not pass up open shots, but also wants the Minutemen to start knocking them down in order to win games and stop their four-game losing skid.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinchra@student.umass.edu.

JEFF BERNSTEIN / COLLEGIAN

Freshman Terrell Vinson finishes at the rim earlier this season at the Mullins Center. The forward scored eight points and shot over .500 from the field in UMass' one-point loss to St. Bonaventure. The Minutemen will look to snap their losing streak when they travel to Baylor on Saturday.

555 deal
Three Medium One-Topping Pizzas
$5.55 Each!
Domino's Pizza
413 - 256 - 8911
OPEN LATE NIGHT TILL 4 AM!

WANT TO WRITE FOR SPORTS?
Contact Jeffrey R. Larnard at
SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

THE BOLTWOOD PROJECT™
Serving others since 1969 – and STILL making a difference!
A STUDENT / COMMUNITY SERVICE LEARNING PROGRAM
(an RSO and Dept. of Landscape Architecture & Regional Planning sponsored prog.)
REACH OUT—AND BECOME A SPECIAL FRIEND TO PEOPLE WITH SPECIAL NEEDS
Your life will NEVER be the same!
••EARN 1-2 CREDITS ••GAIN VALUABLE EXPERIENCE ••REWARDING, CHALLENGING, and FUN
Spring Semester 2010 — Recruitment Nights
You must attend ONE of these meetings. No exceptions, even if you have participated before!
6:00-8:00 PM (Note: Prompt starting time!!!)
Campus Center Basement • Room 101 • Jan. 25 (Mon) • Jan. 26 (Tues) • Jan. 27 (Wed)
• Assignment notification ONLY: Thurs. Jan. 28 at Boltwood table CC Concourse
• Incoherent inquiries: YOU (or a friend) must pickup the notification letter!!!
Volunteer, while earning credit!

Are you a PHOTOGRAPHER searching for better EXPOSURE?
Get your photos published for over 10,000 people to see each day with
THE DAILY COLLEGIAN
Send an email to photos@dailycollegian.com for more information.

Off The Wall Games
Worldwake pre-release tournament on Thursday, January 28 at 6 PM -Sealed Deck - $20 Entry Fee
First prize a box of Worldwake, scan www.offthewallgamestore.com for details and more prizes!
Discount role-playing games, Collectible card games (CCGs), Miniature war games and board games, fun for everyone!
Hours: 10-10 Wednesday-Sunday, 12-10 Monday, Closed Tuesdays - 41 Russel St (Hampton Village Shops) Rt. 9, Hadley 413-586-5451

COMICS

WE WANT YOUR COMICS!
Put your comics in front of thousands of readers.
Questions? Comments? E-mail us: comics@dailycollegian.com
Friend us on Facebook: "Collegian Comix"

CROSSWORD

SUDOKU

1								2
6				3
				4			5	8
7		3		9		5	6
								9
							8
	1		8
4		6					7
	5	2			3			1

MONDAY - SATURDAY
Happy Hour -
1/2 Price Appetizers 9:30 - Close
EVERY THURSDAY:
Promo & Trivia Night
EVERYDAY:
$1.00 Drafts and $5 Movie Tickets!*
21ST BIRTHDAY:
Free Entree or Small Pizza with ID*
Hampshire Mall
Across from Cinemark
413-549-0077
FREE Delivery
ARIZONA PIZZA

ACROSS
1. Lariat
6. Swill
10. A period of discounted prices
14. Homeric epic
15. Cab
16. Blockage
17. Skin disease
18. Cards with just one symbol
19. Employ
20. Appraisal
22. Japanese sashes
23. A small drink
24. Woodwind player
26. A frenzied woman
30. The unsaturated organic radical C3H5
32. A single time
33. Europe's highest volcano
35. To curve
39. Celebrate
41. Also
42. The wife of Abraham
43. Rinse, as with a solvent
44. Marsh plant
46. Ritual
47. Rubber
49. Maximum
51. A photographer's need
54. Recent
55. Matures
56. Einstein's theory
63. North Atlantic Treaty Organization
64. Streetcar
65. Leg bone
66. Detail
67. Initial wager
68. Office worker
69. Arid
70. Require
71. Spells

DOWN
1. City in Peru
2. "Oh, my!"
3. Transgressions
4. Wise one
5. A city in the Ukraine
6. At least one on an envelope
7. Shoestring
8. Beasts of burden
9. Handgun
10. Schoolmistress
11. Excuse
12. Large-eyed lemur
13. Discharge
21. Fries, maybe
25. Farewells
26. Brood
27. Freudian stage
28. Almond
29. Irritating
30. Building addition
31. Stow, as cargo
34. Container weight
36. Verve
37. Feed bag contents
38. Sharpen
40. 365 days
45. Song for two
48. Plaid
50. A sudden muscle spasm
51. ___ Major (southern constellation)
52. Marble
53. Almost 40 inches
54. Appointed
57. Coastal raptor
58. Tardy
59. Loathsome
60. Wild goat
61. Rubber wheel
62. Tibetan oxen

LA PIAZZA
Sundays Open at NOON
Best Deals in Town!!
ALL Calzones $4.99
ALL 12" Subs $4.99
ALL Salads $4.99
ALL Entrees $5.99
16" Cheese Pizza $4.99
ea. xtra topping .75
12" Cheese Pizza $5.99
ea. xtra topping $1
16" Cheese Pizza $6.99
ea. xtra topping $1.25
16" Cheese Pizza + 10 Wings (Bone) $11.50
16" Cheese Pizza + 1/2lb Wings (Boneless) $11.50
OCMP Free Delivery
(413) 253-6444
www.lapiazzarestorante.us

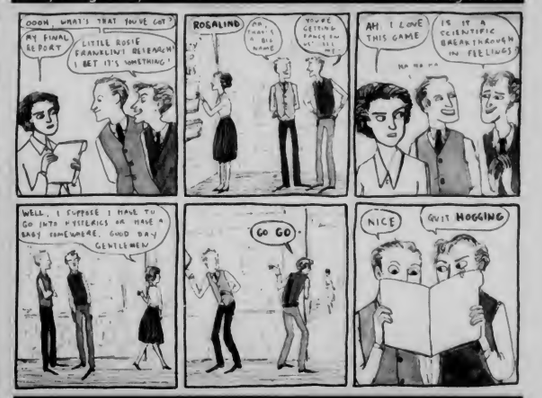
QUOTE OF THE DAY

"I remember the time I was kidnapped and they sent a piece of my finger to my father. He said he wanted more proof."
— Rodney Dangerfield

"Club Nights" at the MONKEY BAR
Thurs. 1/21 DJ Yeah Guy and DJ Hott Sizzle
While throwin' bashes & doin' dirty deeds this pair has been procurring a new sound incorporating old & new beats with some fresh off-the-boat sounds...don't miss it! House, Hip Hop, Dance, Techno & free dance lessons.....SIKE!!!
Fri. 1/22 DJ Hott Sizzle
Rockn' hot intergalactic "make ya wanna order milkshakes on a date" sound.. smoooooothe ...yet daring!
Sat. 1/23 DJ Construc
There is no doubt this beat hound will be bringing thunder, You provide the lightning & we have ourselves a storm!
413-259-1600
83 North Pleasant Street
Amherst, MA 01002
www.mymonkeybar.com
21+

WHAT'S ON TAP AT THE AMHERST BREWING COMPANY:
Thursdays Starting January 28th
DOWNSTAIRS 9 PM - 12 AM
JOHN SHELDON'S MASTERS OF THE STRATOCASTER
Wednesdays starting February 3rd
LOST IN HD
UPSTAIRS ON THE BIG SCREEN
Saturday January 23rd
ABC UPSTAIRS
REGGAE, DANCEHALL, DUB
10PM - 2AM WITH I-GANIC
Saturday January 30
RYAN HOMMEL TRIO
GUITAR PHENOM
facebook
24 NORTH PLEASANT ST.
AMHERST
WWW.AMHERSTBREWING.COM

Mr. Gnu by Travis Dandro



SMBC by Zach Weiner smbc-comics.com

Turns out last words are preferable to last thoughts.

Hark, a Vagrant by K. Beaton harkavagrant.com

WORD OF THE DAY
Slangwhanger
A loud abusive speaker or obnoxious writer.

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20 - Feb. 18
Some people lie, some people steal and some people just want a get a tan in their white tee.

pisces Feb. 19 - Mar. 20
Regardless what Tiger Woods says about you, we all think you're more than just a par five.

aries Mar. 21 - Apr. 19
Find some peace and quiet. Learn to be one with nature. Embrace the all powerful deity known only as Leonard Nimoy.

taurus Apr. 20 - May. 20
There are only two major things that a man can regret. One of them is dating Jennifer Aniston.

gemini May. 21 - Jun. 21
A daffodil grows silently in a field. It shares this characteristic with the bacteria in your shower.

cancer Jun. 22 - Jul. 22
Don't you even think about wearing that shirt! You know it's after Labor Day don't you?

leo Jul. 23 - Aug. 22
Remember what Neil Patrick Harris said, "the Doogie line always works on strippers."

virgo Aug. 23 - Sept. 22
Having Joss Whedon as your idol shows that you not only have bad taste but are lazy as well.

libra Sept. 23 - Oct. 22
Tomatoes help greatly when your rash is at its most indominable. We'll talk more about it later.

scorpio Oct. 23 - Nov. 21
Today you will find that your sham-wow cleans up blood stains just wonderfully!

sagittarius Nov. 22 - Dec. 21
Stop rubbing your tongue against your cheek, it is really creeping out the person sitting next to you on the bus.

capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 19
What's even scarier than sex-education? Shakespeare's green-eyed monster.

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT
A GREAT JOB! Spend your summer in a lakefront cabin in Maine. If you're looking to spend this summe outdoors, have fun while you work, and make lifelong friends, then look no further.
CAMP MATAPONI, a residential girls camp in Maine, has female/male summertime openings for Land Sports, Waterfront (samm crafts, skiing, life guarding, WSI, boat drivers), Ropes Course,

EMPLOYMENT
Tennis, H.B. Riding, Arts & Crafts, Theater, Cooking, Gymnastics, Dance, Videography, Group Leaders and more. Top salaries plus room/board & travel provided. Call us today at 1-561-748-3684 or apply online at www.campmataponi.com.

Online Bookkeepers needed. To earn $200 per duty, contact john.culcer@gmail.com.

EMPLOYMENT
Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necessary. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

WANTED
Wanted Part-Time Personal Care Attendant about 10-12 hrs/week. Flexible Hours. Please call Patrick 413-275-7928

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, JANUARY 21, 2010

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

MASS/FILE PHOTO/COLLEGIAN

Anthony Gurley and the Minutemen nearly completed a comeback in the second half, but came up one point short in their fourth straight loss of the season to St. Bonaventure at the Mullins Center.

Comeback by UMass falls short to Bonnies

Last-second 3-point shot by Riley misses

By Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

There's no 3-point shot Freddie Riley is afraid to take.

Massachusetts men's basketball coach Derek Kellogg is just as confident in his freshman, even with the game on the line. But no matter how sure Kellogg (or any of the other Minutemen) were that one of Riley's two potential game-winning shots was going to go in, mind wasn't over matter, and St. Bonaventure squeaked out a 70-69 win.

Riley's second shot came at the buzzer on a pass from senior Rieky Harris who passed up an opportunity of his own in hopes that his wide-open teammate would convert.

"He's a great shooter. I've got confidence in him," Harris said, who finished with a game-high of 22 points.

UMass (7-11, 1-4 Atlantic 10) climbed back from a 10-point deficit in the second half to tie the game with 2 minutes, 36 seconds left. However, center Sean Carter fouled the Bonnies' leading scorer, Andrew Nicholson (26 points, seven rebounds, five blocks), who converted both free-throw attempts.

The forward then fouled guard Anthony Gurley on the next possession, who made 1-of-2 from the line.

The Minutemen then went scoreless until they called a 30-second timeout. When play resumed, Riley took a 3-pointer at the top of the key, which fell short. His second opportunity came after guard David Gibbs rebounded SBU guard Michael Davenport's missed shot from beyond the arc, which turned into Riley's second attempt at winning the game.

"We missed on some little things that we're going to work on that I thought was the difference in the game," Kellogg said on his team's loss.

It was a back-and-forth affair the entire first half with the lead changing eight times, but SBU had a three-point lead going into the locker room by controlling second chance points, 11-6. Nicholson made an impact early with 15 points and four blocks in the first half.

UMass tried to counter from beyond the arc, but ended up 1-of-12.

The first time the Bonnies (9-8, 2-2 A-10) led by more than three was almost five minutes into the second half when Chris Matthews rebounded Harris's missed layup and set Michael Davenport up for a fast break basket at the other end.

See UMASS on page 8

Shooter woes from outside

Living and dying by the three has hurt UMass this season

By David Brisch
Collegian Staff

Some teams live by it, others die by it.

For the Massachusetts basketball team, it's been a staple of their success the past few seasons, as senior guard Ricky Harris is fourth in career 3-point shots made (240) and third in career 3-pointers attempted (682) in UMass history, even surpassing UMass coach Derek Kellogg.

However, the long ball has not found its way into the bottom of the net as of late for not only Harris, but for the rest of the Minutemen, who made just 4-of-24 shots from beyond the arc in a 70-69 loss to St. Bonaventure Wednesday night at the Mullins Center.

Freshman guard Freddie Riley, known for his scoring ability, especially from long range, took the most important 3-pointer of his young career in the closing seconds of the game. But the shot was short, as Riley finished the night just 2-for-8 from the 3-point line, while Harris made only two 3-point shots on eight attempts.

Four other UMass players attempted 3-point shots, but freshman forward Terrell Vinson (0-for-2), redshirt junior guard Anthony Gurley (0-for-4), junior guard Gary Correia (0-for-2) and freshman forward Sampson Carter (0-for-2) were not able to score from beyond the arc.

Like other opponents UMass has faced recently, the Bonnies were effective in forcing the Minutemen to take open shots from the 3-point line by collapsing in the middle of the lane, preventing players from getting easy lay-ups. UMass, however, was unable to knock down shots from deep, a problem that has plagued them in their past four contests.

"We do 3-point shooting everyday in practice, for the majority of practice," Harris said. "We shoot the ball, its basically just us raising up and shooting the ball with confidence, being able to stand up there and knock down shots, and that's just something that we have to do so that teams can respect our 3-point ball, because we have shooters all across the ball, we just have to start making them."

Riley was impressive from 3-point range in losses to Richmond and Temple Jan. 13 and last Saturday, going 7-for-14 in both games, including a 6-of-14 performance en route to 22 points in a loss to La Salle Jan. 20. In that three-game stretch, Harris was just 2-of-17 from beyond the arc, and is just 4-of-23 in his last

See BASKETBALL on page 8

JEFF BERNSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

Lone senior Rick Harris has led UMass in points (17.3) and assists (2.9) this season. In the loss to St. Bonaventure, Harris scored 22 points in 32 minutes of action, and nearly picked up the assist on freshman Freddie Riley's shot as time expired.

Short-handed Minutewomen lose to Duquesne in overtime

JEFF BERNSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

Captain Kim Benton started the game for the Minutewomen in their 63-54 loss to Duquesne, but failed to play in the second half because of a stomach virus.

By Neil Carroll
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's basketball team rallied from an 11-point second-half deficit to send the ballgame to overtime, but could not complete the comeback and fell on the road to Duquesne, 63-54, in Atlantic 10 play.

Samantha Pollino led the Dukes in scoring and rebounds with 18 points and 11 boards, but was outplayed by her teammate Rachel Frederick in overtime. Frederick sparked Duquesne with five points and three rebounds in overtime including clutch free-throws.

Stephanie Lawrence's 3-point shot in the corner with 2 minutes, 6 seconds left in the second half evened up the game at 51, and neither team scored for the rest of regulation.

The Minutewomen had finally brought back a rally in the second half, but like the games against Maine and Rhode Island, lost the game at the free-throw line. Down the stretch, the UMass forwards could not convert from the charity stripe and UMass shot 9-of-14 for the game.

"We had opportunities in regulation to knock down some buckets and we didn't shoot well from the foul line," Coach Dacko said. "We got to the foul line and just could not finish."

UMass' leading scorer Kristina Danella had 18 points on 5-of-6 three-point shooting, but again was not at full strength. The sophomore was held out of the starting lineup as head coach Marnie Dacko chose to start Kim Benton, Diatiema Hill, Megan Zullo, Jasmine Watson, and Lawrence for the second straight game.

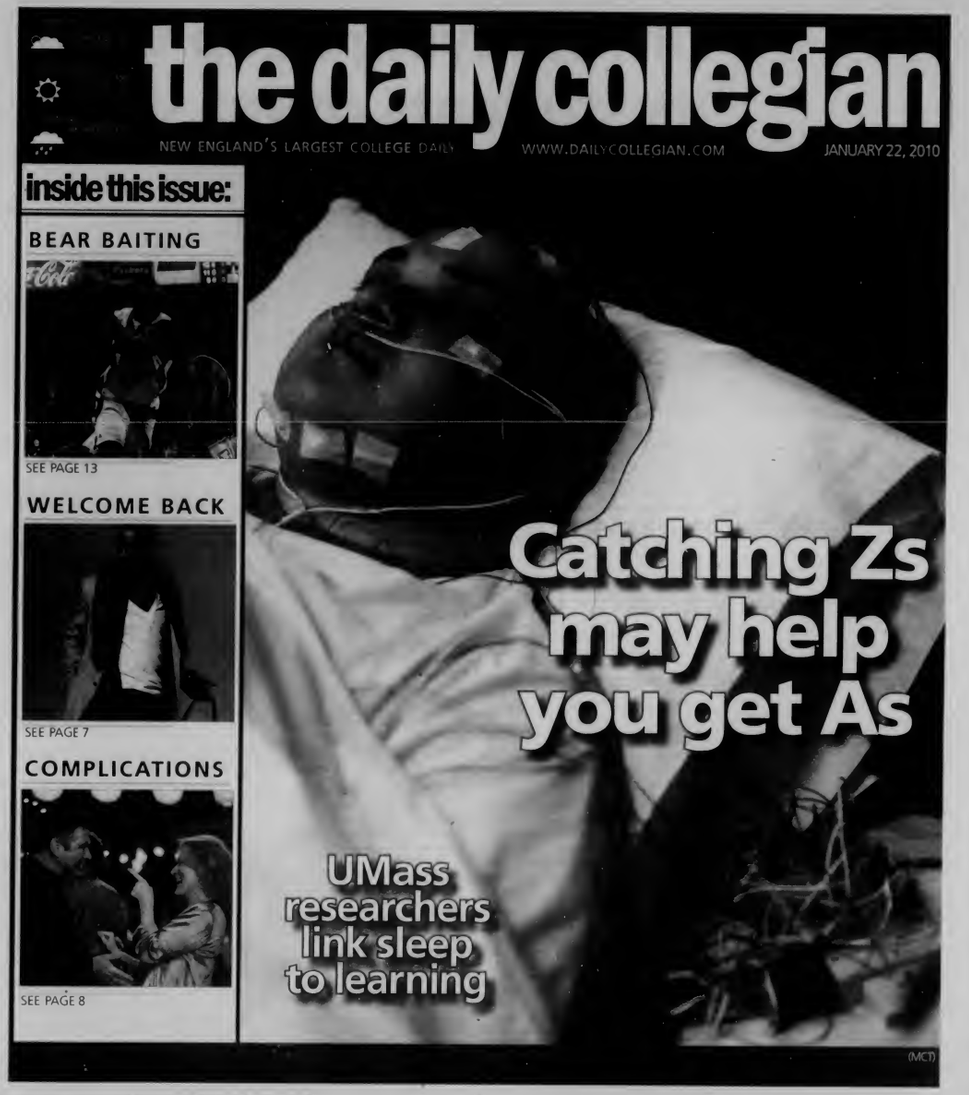
Although UMass primarily used a lineup with both Watson and Nicole Jones in, the team was still outrebounded 51-40 in the contest.

"We gave up too many offensive rebounds" Dacko said. "We had an opportunity to win in regulation but we were playing with two bigs and we are not as comfortable playing with that, but it was our best defensive unit, and we played without a point guard."

The team was also without captain Kim Benton who was held out of the second half because of a stomach virus. Hill struggled playing the true point guard position for UMass but still played tough. The senior had 11 points, seven rebounds, three assists, and one steal in the game.

The overtime period started out at a back-and-forth pace, as Watson hit a layup early. Duquesne, though, fired back with a three, and then on the next possession UMass tied it up on a free-throw shot by Watson. However, after a minute without any points from either side, the Dukes went on a 9-0 run to finish overtime.

UMass was inconsistent from three-point range, which is usually strength for this year's team. Zullo and Cerie Mosgrove were a combined 1-of-8 from that distance, but Danella found success.



This marks UMass' first loss in overtime this season in the team's third game. The loss also drops the Minutewomen to 7-12 overall and 1-3 in the A-10. On the other hand, the Dukes improve to 14-5 on the season, and places them atop the A-10 standings with a 4-0 start.

"We lost to a team that is lucky because they have had three other overtime games to gain experience in. We defended extremely well but the shots weren't dropping," Dacko said of the positives her team can extract from the loss.

Duquesne's Alex Gensler finished the game second in scoring for her team with 14 points on 3-of-8 shooting from three-point range, but the forward also dished out five assists.

In the road game, UMass turned the ball over 19 times, most of those coming off of entry passes into the low post. The Minutewomen will try to recover next Wednesday at home against George Washington.

Neil Carroll can be reached at nacarrol@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN

CXX
ISSUE 4

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief William McGuinness
Managing Editor Matt Rocheleau
Managing Web Editor S P Sullivan
Business Manager Daniel Jette
Production Manager Michael Sarkes
Night Supervisor Kirsten Swenson
Advertising Manager Michael Tortorici
Advertising Production Amanda Joinson
Arts & Living Editor Shayna Murphy
Comics Editor Andrew Witts
Editorial Editor Alyssa Creamer
News Editor Nick Bush
Sports Editor Jeffrey R. Larnard
Photo Editor Matthew Harrison
IT Manager Victor Jacek
Asst. Business Manager Matt Zolnierz
Assistant Advertising Nicole Jacinto
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Distribution Manager Norman Provost
Classified Manager Katelyn Tamilio
Asst. Arts & Living Justin Gagnon
Asst. Arts & Living Elyse Horowitz
Asst. Arts & Living Cal Scannell
Assistant Editorial Benjamin Moriarty
Assistant Editorial Michael Phillis
Assistant Editorial Matthew M. Robare
Assistant News Samuel Butterfield
Assistant News Chris Shores
Assistant News Jenn Heshion
Assistant Sports Jay Asser
Assistant Sports David Brinch
Assistant Sports Adam Miller
Assistant Photo Maxwell Sparr
Assistant Photo Samantha Webber
Assistant Multimedia Sara Cody
Assistant Multimedia Pete Rizzo

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ACGE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914, AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
ON STAFF TODAY

NIGHT EDITOR
SAM BÜTTERFIELD

COPY EDITOR
ELIZABETH TRAN

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
MICHELLE ABBASCIANO

UM studying sleep while its students count sheep

By Tim Jones
Collegian Staff

Researchers at the University of Massachusetts have been watching students while they sleep – all in the name of science. A recent study conducted at UMass has been attempting to clear up the sometimes murky connection between aging, memory and sleep.

According to principal investigator Rebecca Spencer, sleep is very beneficial to memory.

"We have looked at healthy young adults and see that when you learn something and sleep before being tested, you do better than if you learn the material and are awake before being tested," said Spencer, who is also an assistant-professor in psychology and Director of the Cognition and Action Lab.

Spencer claims that part of the research includes what effect aging has on the memory of an individual. There is a possibility that motor learning, which is important for the quality of body movements, may be heavily affected during sleep.

"Our recent results suggest that it's because they aren't getting enough continuous time in the critical sleep stages," she said of people with decreased motor learning.

The problem as a person ages may not be with the amount of sleep a person gets on a given night, but the overall quality of the sleep.

Sleep can be broken up into five different stages, ranging from light sleep to deeper slumbers. Most dreaming occurs during Rapid Eye Movement, which accounts for about 20 percent of a night's sleep.

Motor learning is heavily influenced during Non-Rapid Eye Movement (nREM-2) sleep. Younger people are less interrupted during that cycle of sleep compared to aging adults, which may provide connections between sleep and memory.

Part of the issue is that adults may get the same amount of sleep as a typical college student, but the information and memory isn't being retained as well. However, most adults get less sleep as they age. Although adults may sleep less as they get older, the nREM-2 stage of sleep may actually be maintained, or can even increase.

Spencer also added that the benefits are important for college students as well.

"This seems really useful for college students to know," she said. "Having healthy sleep habits is really important to optimal academic performance."

She also noted that continuous interruption during nREM-2 stage of sleep will have negative outcomes.

"If you were learning lyrics to a song and the CD kept skipping or you stopped and started at a different place, it would be pretty hard to learn," she stated.

Not only is sleep deprivation harmful to individuals, but sleeping right after learning will actually enhance the retention of the material processed.

The test currently being conducted includes having a subject perform a single task a night.

(MCT)

UMass sleep researchers have found that depriving yourself of Zs can have serious negative effects on your retention of learning material.

The individual is then asked to repeat the same task in the morning, and the results are compared between the two times.

The research, which was funded through a grant by the National Institute on Aging, seeks to determine why adults lose out on the benefits of sleep as they continue to age. The total aid awarded was $750,000.

Part of the research also includes a look into emotional memory, where sleep will enhance the storage of the memory depending on the overall importance. This advantage is primarily seen in younger people, and research is being done to determine if neutral and emotional memories are benefited by sleep in older adults.

The grant was awarded last February, and the researchers have about two more years of work remaining. After the results have been determined, a new question will be posed, and the research will be taken on again from there.

"For instance, are there ways we can enhance this weak sleep benefit in older adults, for example, with exercise or providing memory cues during sleep?" pondered Spencer.

The National Institute on Aging is a division of the National Institute of Health, and conducts research relating to aging processes and special diseases and problems related to aging.

The Cognition and Action Lab is still looking for individuals between the ages of 50 and 80 to take place in the tests. People who are interested must exhibit typical sleep patterns, with no sleeping disorders and must sleep over five hours of sleep a night.

All interested may apply at siestalab@gmail.com or by calling 413-545-4831.

Tim Jones can be reached at timothyj@student.umass.edu.

Honors College cooking up charity work

By Kat Manser
Collegian Staff

On December 10, faculty, staff and students at the Commonwealth Honors College held a "Goodie Auction" that was open to all and raised $362 for the Amherst Survival Center.

The center, which provides community services to low-income and homeless people from Franklin and Hampshire counties, serves an average of more than 125 people a day. The money will be used to support programs such as the center's Emergency Food Pantry, Soup Kitchen, and Free Health Clinic. With recent economic troubles, the center has seen an increase in people needing food, clothing, and free health care.

Those who participated in the event experienced what it means to "reach inside and make an event out of something you love," in the words of Debra Lapointe, assistant director of academic programs at the Commonwealth Honors College. "Raising money can be a fun experience," she said.

This was the first year that the college hosted such an event, but Lapointe, who enjoys baking, said she felt this function would be a good means of bringing the Commonwealth Honors College together for one event.

"I thought this event would be a fun way to have everyone in the college participate," Lapointe said.

According to Shonda Pettiford, assistant director of communication for the College, the event will likely become annual.

Pettiford explained that the goodie auction successfully brought out members from all facets of the Commonwealth community.

"In essence, the entire college was involved," she said. "Staff and faculty provided input for planning the auction, while students joined staff and faculty in preparing for and supporting the actual event," Pettiford added. "The money collected through the auction was a donation on behalf of the entire college."

The Goodie Auction was held in the form of a silent auction, with bidding open from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. At the end of the day, the person who had placed the highest bid on an item got to take home their treats. Pettiford described the auction as, "a fun event," elaborating that "everyone had a good time; the competition was fun and it was great knowing it was for a good cause."

The $362 raised went to the University of Massachusetts Amherst Community Campaign (UMACC) and was donated to the Survival Center, which receives half of it support through private donations. According to the Center, due to increased demand for services, financial support is especially crucial at this time.

For students looking to get more involved in community service, Pettiford had some simple advice.

"Do good for others, with others," she said.

Pettiford explained that the Commonwealth Honors College is dedicated to community service.

"As one of its core values, Commonwealth Honors College promotes community engagement," she said. "Since its inception, the college has supported Community Service Learning courses and programs."

"First-year honors students have the opportunity to participate in IMPACT! an honors residential academic program for students with an interest in community service," she continued. "Through the Citizen Scholars Program, our two-year service learning and leadership program, honors students can develop the knowledge, skills, and vision to build community, be effective citizens, and advocate for social justice," she furthered. "In addition to these long-standing honors programs, students can participate in community service learning courses designed to connect community service with academic content," she said. "There are a full range of CSL honors courses as well as CSL (non-honors) courses offered through other departments."

For students interested in service learning, the office of Community Service Learning in Whitmore is open to all. The Amherst Survival Center also has volunteer opportunities which are listed on their website, http://people.umass.edu/support/asc/.

Kat Manser can be reached at kmanser@student.umass.edu.

MATTHEW HARRISON/COLLEGIAN

Commonwealth Honors College recently baked up $362 in donations for the Amherst Survival Center.

SAVE MORE

We have the most used textbooks

UMass AMHERST University of Massachusetts
University Store and Textbook Annex
Amherst Campus Center • 413-545-2619
www.umass.bkstr.com
790_JBTS10
Powered by efollett.com

Police Log

SATURDAY, JAN. 16

Modesto A. Montero of 130 Pulaski Blvd., Bellingham, Mass. was arrested Saturday, Jan. 16th at 1:45 a.m. on North Pleasant St. as a result of a traffic stop.

Montero was pulled over when a police officer noticed him speeding and crossing over the marked traffic lanes. Once stopped, the arresting officer noticed signs of Montero being under the influence. Montero was charged with violating marked traffic lanes, and operating under the influence of alcohol.

SUNDAY, JAN. 17

Alexis M. Mongo of 14 Bussey St., Dedham, Mass. was arrested Sunday Jan. 17 at 12:24 a.m. on North Pleasant St. as a result of a traffic stop.

Mongo was pulled over when the arresting officer noticed Mongo crossing over marked traffic lanes. Mongo was charged with violating marked traffic lanes, and operating a motor vehicle with a suspended license.

Sean T. Sullivan of 51 Woodbridge Ter., South Hadley, Mass. was arrested Sunday Jan. 17 at 2:22 a.m. on Massachusetts Ave. as a result of a traffic stop.

The arresting officer viewed Sullivan crossing over the marked traffic lanes. When pulled over, the UMPD officer noticed signs of Sullivan being under the influence of a substance. Sullivan was charged with violating marked traffic lanes, and operating under the influence of alcohol.

WEDNESDAY, JAN. 20

Peter Paul Douglas of 50 J. Faber Hts., 04-70 Singapore, was arrested Wednesday Jan. 20 on North Pleasant St. by Mark's Meadow as a result of a traffic stop. Douglas was viewed by the arresting officer speeding as well as violating marked traffic lanes.

When the officer attempted to pull Douglas over, he failed to stop for police until forced to the side of the road. Once pulled over, the officer believed Douglas to be under the influence of a substance. Douglas was charged with speeding, violating marked traffic lanes, recklessly operating of a motor vehicle, failure to stop for police and operating under the influence of alcohol.

Dude, where's my mountain?

RYAN TRZPIT/COLLEGIAN

A snowboader on Fearing St. makes the best of the weak winter mix Amherst has received so far this season.

555 deal

Three Medium One-Topping Pizzas
$5.55 Each!

Domino's Pizza
413 - 256 - 8911
OPEN LATE NIGHT TILL 4 AM!

The Daily Collegian needs YOU on News.

Share your tips with us at:

massdailycollegian/submit-a-tip

SOS

editorial&opinion

"FREE SPEECH IS THE WHOLE THING, THE WHOLE BALL GAME. FREE SPEECH IS LIFE ITSELF." - SIR SALMAN RUSHDIE

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Print media ruined by one man's absence

Matthew Robare

The old print-based news media are dying. We all know that. Some of us who are not journalism majors might even be concerned. However, if you're not concerned when the possibility of the government funding our newspapers is raised, as The Washington Post's Ezra Klein, The New York Times' David Carr and Rep. Henry Waxman of California have all suggested, then you need to go to Wikipedia and look up "samizdat."

Basically, the industry is dominated by a bunch of Generation Xers who remember where they were on both days a Kennedy was shot but can't remember where they put their keys (in their breast pocket, if male; underneath an unidentifiable wrapper and maybe a dollar bill in their purse, if female).

Between the complex and revolutionary developments in technology like the ability of a 900 channel satellite TV system to have absolutely nothing worth watching on at any given time and the enormous sociopoliticoeconomic changes affecting their unique generation (read: their children became teenagers and began taking umbrage at being treated like toddlers), they haven't had time to be overly concerned about the profitability and long-term stability of their industry and the business model it was based on.

But then they started losing money when the stock market tanked and they had to work full days and even some nights so they could afford to keep up with their attempts to deny the inescapable truth: that they were all getting old. For years now, editors, publishers, writers and assorted others have been attempting to stave off the inevitable collapse. But, well, to coin a proverb: by the time the dinosaur can see the comet it's too late to evolve.

It also has not helped that they have all been missing the true reason for the decline of newspapers. Sure, there are debates about revenue and relevance, but it is quite obvious that the reason newspapers are in free fall is that Dave Barry retired from writing a regular column in 2005.

Back in the day, he would write an insightful weekly column on a pertinent topic like taxes, reducing the federal budget deficit, exploding animals and why there haven't been more politicians named after amphibians.

Back in the day, he would write an insightful weekly column on a pertinent topic like taxes, reducing the federal budget deficit, exploding animals and why there haven't been more politicians named after amphibians. More to the point, he was funny. No, scratch that, he was freakin' hilarious.

His column was syndicated in newspapers around the country and on the day it ran, millions would flock to whichever section it was in, read it and then read the entire newspaper so they would have something to do while checking back on the column in case they missed something - or the paper had suddenly become equipped with an internet connection and an update was made about exploding amphibious politicians in an obscure Midwestern town and how it can help reduce the deficit. This is how he is responsible for the decline of newspapers.

People would go out and buy the paper every single day, even though they knew in their minds that his column only came out once a week. As a result, they ended up subscribing to newspapers, where they bought products advertised in them and were just better informed than people who read Maureen Dowd.

Then, in 2004, he went on a leave of absence (I distinctly remember crying when I read that column), and the next year announced he would not be returning to his regular schedule. He still does his holiday gift guide and year in review columns, but the void his retirement created in the newspaper business has not been filled. Instead, people have moved on to Stephen Colbert and the Daily Show with Jon Stewart. So, while newspapers continue to wither and die, Stewart and Colbert continue to be the country's most trusted sources of news.

But that leaves so much undone. Without Dave Barry, we have no reputable source to keep us informed about exploding animals or teach us about proper grammar. I realize that he has his own life to live, but the Japanese, having just made a breakthrough in sexbot technology, have not announced plans to build a robotic version of him. And research into humor columnist robots is unlikely to continue in the wake of sexbots and the newspaper death spiral.

Sic transit gloria mundi, as the Romans used to say.

I think I hear a ticking sound coming from my dog.

Matthew M Robare is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mrobare@studentumass.edu

Ware wonders where all of its students are

Ware students stand shivering in the morning twilight at 5:45 a.m., waiting for a bus to take them to schools in the Quabbin Regional School District, 12 miles away in Barre, Mass. A lack of funding in the Ware public schools has caused many fretting parents to look elsewhere for their children's education - even if it means an hour less sleep.

Evan Haddad

But School Committee Chairman Christopher Desjardins blames poor marketing for Ware's scholastic unpopularity over any other reason.

As a result, he and other committee members are attempting to hoist Ware schools out of the mire with radical – if not hacking – logic: change the school choice-law in Massachusetts which allows parents to send their children to schools in other towns, the Springfield Republican reported.

The law, which was passed in 1991, is one of convenience. But for Ware, school-choice has turned education into a financial competition between neighboring schools, and it seems to be losing.

Last year, according to the Republican, Ware witnessed an exodus of 159 students to the Quabbin Regional School District in Barre. Ware would have received $5,000 in state aid for each student, amounting to some $857,780. But state-aid accompanies students to whichever school their parents choose for them to go, regardless of where they actually live. There lies the controversy and dilemma.

Of course, the demographics don't tell of a weak infrastructure in Ware High School; in fact, parent reviews of each school are about equal, according to greatschools.org. But for parents hesitating between the two, the profile of Quabbin Regional would likely clinch their decision.

Despite the grim statistics, Desjardins believes that Ware schools aren't any worse than Quabbin ones. His message to parents is clear:

"They have to get on a bus at 20 of 6 (in the morning), and they get no better education than they could get here," he told the Springfield Republican.

In an attempt to tether students to local schools, Ware has added music programs at middle and high school levels and extended communication with parents.

But with dwindling resources, Ware schools can only do so much. That's why Desjardins asked School Committee Representatives from Easthampton, Southwick, North Brookfield and Greenfield to support their case against the school-choice law.

"We've done pretty much all we can marketing-wise, now we need to start thinking about something with the law. It's going to be a bear of a fight," Desjardins said.

Desjardins knows that his committee has a long shot at the school choice law.

He and other supporters hope that Ware'scry for help will at least lead to a revision in the law, which might alleviate some of the financial burdens on towns like his.

In an attempt to tether students to local schools, Ware has added music programs at middle and high school levels and extended communication with parents.

According to the Massachusetts Department of Elementary and Secondary Education web site, Quabbin regional school district received 407 students from surrounding communities and $2.2 million in state aid.

While 24 students did come into Ware's district last year, bringing with them $167,391 in state assistance, the trend is painfully apparent.

Only 438 students attend Ware High School, with a teacher-student ratio of 1:17; at Quabbin Regional there are 1,014 students, with the same ratio.

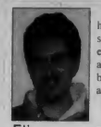
Thirty-six percent of Ware High students receive some form of discounted lunch, while only 10 percent of Quabbin Regional students do.

The median income of a Quabbin Regional student's household is nearly $13,000 more than a student at Ware High.

Whether parental alarm owes to a crumbling Ware school district or to a "keeping up with the Joneses" mentality is unclear; but if the profile of Quabbin Regional High is any indication, the downtrend will probably continue for Ware schools.

But no amount of money can efface the reputation Ware High School will have if another 159 students leave next year. The drop off rate from grade 8 to grade 12 already sways close to 50 percent, with only 65 seniors in a class once 120 strong.

No amount of poster-boarding or teary-eyed PTA's will rake in students to schools that have been branded as discreditable by the omniscient parental majority.



So what happens to Ware students who can't make it to Quabbin Regional schools? Do they get stuck sharing books and a bad reputation?

Not necessarily. If Ware parents keep sending their kids to local schools, money and confidence will return-like the stock market. But students leaving Ware High leave it more cash-strapped and bereft of aplomb than it already was.

If it's just a matter of marketing like Desjardins says, Ware can afford to run out this rough patch in the road. If it's something more, the school committee will be receiving a lot of angry phone calls.

Evan Haddad is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at ehaddad@student.umass.edu.

The new SPIRE racial identity survey is racist

Eli Gottlieb

I noticed recently that we have a new racial identity survey on SPIRE. It supposedly will improve students' ability "to identify [our] backgrounds with greater accuracy."

I think it's racist.

After all, its modern, multi-faceted notions of race make the same error as the old one: it categorizes me as "white."

"Big deal," replies my inner ALANA Caucus, "why complain about my white privilege?"

Simple: "white" does not describe who I am or what I act like. I don't belong to the composite culture of the American white. Neither I, my family, nor any people of my ethnicity whom I know meet the stereotypes of "white people."

White culture doesn't want me either. When my family moved from Brooklyn to New Jersey people began to say, "those Jewish people are moving in." A friend of mine from freshman year suffered harassment for his Jewish origins here in Massachusetts, despite not looking Jewish, acting Jewish, or practicing Judaism.

Race does not exist.

"Well then," my inner ALANA retorts, "why not put myself down as 'Jewish' on the SPIRE survey?" I proceed to consider the racial categorizations given me by society, which define a white person as "having origins in any of the original peoples of Europe, the Middle East, or North Africa." This plainly marks me as white because my ethnicity's origin rests in the Levant in the Middle East.

Apparently, when Yousuf the Plumber – whose Christian father came to America to escape the Lebanese Civil War – has to suffer a so-called random screening at the airport because of his skin pigmentation and facial features, it doesn't count as racism. The security officer is white and Yousuf is white. How can white-on-white racism exist?

My mental ALANA Caucus shouts to me, "no, that's racism against Arabs. Arabs suffer discrimination for their origins. They count as a separate race for anti-racism purposes despite the National Center for Educational Statistics considering them to be of the same race."

However, I point out we Jews still suffer quiet racism. We come from the same geographical region as the Arabs and we share the Semitic linguistic and religious families with them. Moreover, I ask the voice in my head, why doesn't the ALANA Caucus include a single student group for any kind of Middle-Eastern heritage? I think it is more than a little hypocritical to consider Jews and Arabs minorities when we suffer for it, but white when self-proclaimed "anti-racists" like the Caucus want a larger target.

That shuts up my schizophrenic personality. I should really have that checked out.

Now, as simple as it might seem to call ALANA hypocrites, I can see a better moral to this story.

Race does not exist. Everyone has a multifaceted identity based on the different components of their background, the upbringing they received and the choices they make themselves. Any racial, religious, ethnic or cultural classification we don't assert ourselves exists only as something imposed on us by someone else. And, in my opinion, imposing an identity on someone without their consent just because of their appearance is the core and essence of racism.

The National Center for Educational Statistics, however, has not seen this light. It surveys us based on early 20th century racial models, which have about as much factual and scientific basis as the Intelligent Design Theory.

In addition to its bogus definition of "white," it defines an Asian-American as "a person having origins in any of the original peoples of the Far East, Southeast Asia, or the Indian subcontinent, including, for example, Cambodia, China, India, Japan, Korea, Malaysia, Pakistan, the Philippine Islands, Thailand, and Vietnam."

Notice how they share a suspicious similarity with the regions the "Yellow Peril" was supposed to come from and we keep being told that our jobs are being stolen and taken to the Indian sub-continent Afghanistan belongs neither to the Indian subcontinent nor to the Middle East: only God knows what race an Afghan-American should check.

It gets even more curious. Being an African-American means "having origins in any of the black racial groups of Africa," but its indirect meaning of African-American being a "descendant of black slaves" leaves out the people with dark skin who immigrated from Africa or the Caribbean more recently than the slave ships as well as designating Moroccans and Algerians as not African-American despite coming to America from Africa.

To top it all off, NCES defines Hispanic/Latino as "a person of Cuban, Mexican, Puerto Rican, South or Central American, or other Spanish culture or origin, regardless of race."

This means that if you grew up in any culture which spoke Spanish as a first language, like my father, who spent his first seven years of life speaking Spanish in Argentina, than you are Hispanic no matter what you look like. By that standard, I should lobby the government to allow Jews, Arabs, Ethiopians, and Maltese to note Semitic as a secondary race. I can't, however, because in the United States talking about race means hatred and victimization rather than heritage, culture, or pride.

Why don't we all just agree that this latent hatred and victimization is the real problem and scrap all the pigeon-holing surveys and interest groups?

Eli Gottlieb is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at egottlie@student.umass.edu.

UPC gives warm Welcome to Spring

COURTESY MYSPACE.COM

UMass' University Programming Council will put on its Welcome Back Concert tonight at the Fine Arts Center. Ryan Leslie headlines, preceded by B.o.B. and Vicci Martinez.

By Garth Brody
Collegian Staff

School is back in session, which means that the music of your soul will soon be slowly, systematically drained until you are nothing but a husk, gasping under the crushing weight of higher learning. The University of Massachusetts University Programming Council has seen fit to stave off your spirit's inevitable suffocation with the upcoming Welcome Back Concert, Jan. 22 at the Fine Arts Center.

The performance lineup will be comprised of rapper B.o.B. (aka Bobby Ray), singer/songwriter Vicci Martinez and headlining R&B artist Ryan Leslie.

B.o.B., hailing from Atlanta, arrived on the hip-hop scene in 2007 with the club-ready single, "Haterz Everywhere." Releasing since then a slow but steady stream of singles, EPs and free mix-tapes, B.o.B. is signed with T.I.'s Grand Hustle Records and is scheduled to finally release a proper album – "B.o.B. Presents the Adventures of Bobby Ray" – May 25.

His music ranges from big, synthy anthems to mid-tempo R&B jams, often featuring melodic background vocals. His rapping recalls that of fellow Atlanta native Andre 3000, full of controlled slurring and funky bended cadences. Three of his songs are currently featured, respectively, on the Madden '10, Fight Night Round 4 and NBA Live '10 soundtracks.

Vicci Martinez, from Seattle, has been writing and playing folk blues based music since she first picked up a guitar in 1996, at the age of 12. She went on to audition successfully for both American Idol (in 2002) and Star Search (2003), but declined the American Idol contract and was eliminated from Star Search's second round.

Through the rest of the 2000s she recorded several albums, both live and in the studio, with and without her backup band. As a solo artist (or in duets), her music tends to be gentle and acoustic, complemented by her smoky vocals. Such is the style of the sweeping "Break Away" with Blaire Hansen featured in

See WELCOME BACK on page 9

FRIDAY

COURTESY IRON HORSE ENTERTAINMENT

CAROLINA CHOCOLATE DROPS
AN AFRICAN-AMERICAN STRING BAND, THE DROPS "STRIVE TO CARRY ON THE... TRADITIONAL MUSIC OF THE BLACK AND WHITE COMMUNITIES."
WHERE: IRON HORSE
DOORS: 7 P.M.
PRICE: A $17.50 - D $20

SATURDAY

COURTESY IRON HORSE ENTERTAINMENT

RANI ARBO & DAISY MAYHEM
LED BY SINGER, FIDDLER AND FOUNDER, THE MAYHEM DESCRIBE THEIR SOUND AS ANYWHERE FROM "AGNOSTIC GOSPEL" TO "HOMEOPATHIC BLUEGRASS."
WHERE: IRON HORSE
DOORS: 7 P.M.
PRICE: A $16 - D $19

ALL INFORMATION IN "THE SOURCE" IS COURTESY OF IRON HORSE ENTERTAINMENT

It's not that 'Complicated'

By Kate MacDonald
Collegian Staff

COURTESY UNIVERSAL PICTURES

An All-Star cast including Meryl Streep, Alec Baldwin and Steve Martin give audiences a different kind of love story in their latest romantic comedy, "It's Complicated."

Picture a 50-something Alec Baldwin slinking around a bedroom post-romp, rubbing his portly, significantly hairy torso, muttering not so seductive words of love. The newest mid-season horror movie to hit the silver screen? Try again. Baldwin, along with Meryl Streep, Steve Martin and John Krasinski, stars in 2009's last romantic comedy, "It's Complicated."

Streep portrays the main character, Jane, who vows to start life over once her ex Jake (Baldwin) reveals he's going to start a new family with his new wife, who happens to be about 20 years Jane's junior. Streep, however, holds her own. With help from a band of friends, she shows the personality of the character easily early on, not leaving the viewers guessing about anything to do with her aspect of the storyline.

Jane's been taking care of their three nearly-grown children almost alone. She's made her life about everyone around her for so long that she simply wants to begin anew. Jane decides, then, to begin renovations on her home, and continues with her love life.

Enter: Steve Martin. An actor known for great films, such as "Planes, Trains & Automobiles," "Father of the Bride" and "Bowfinger," he fails to showcase his talent in Nancy Meyers's "It's Complicated." His character Adam is extremely bland, to put it nicely, and viewers only see his real personality after he partakes in smoking weed with Streep's uptight Jane. Adam, though a central element to the story, is unmemorable to the audience and, apparently, Jane, alike.

Things in Jane's life, however, were looking up. That is, until her son's college graduation, where one pinot noir too many leads to a drunken hookup with Jake. Trying to relive the glory days of their youth and their marriage, the two then begin planning clandestine meetings in various locales. Seems like Jane has a choice to make - Adam or Jake? This is where Alec Baldwin, a man known for playing the highly amusing Jack Donaghy on the hit show "30 Rock," shows his comedic chops.

Though clearly a man going through some sort of mid-life crisis, Jake is somewhat well-intentioned; torn between his new wife and the mother of his children. Praise needs to be given to Meyers, who also wrote "It's Complicated," as she kept the situation extremely amusing. Baldwin is completely on-point with his comedic timing, and with a few swarthy looks, he keeps the audience amused throughout the majority of the film. If only Steve Martin could have taken a few tips from him.

As great as the two major stars were, John Krasinski steals the show. As Harley, the fiancé of Jane and Jake's oldest daughter, this "The Office" star holds the audience in the palm of his hand. Where Jake can be a cad, Jane sometimes comes off as whiny or stiff, and viewers have already forgotten about Adam, Harley is lovable and hilarious. As the one who uncovers the tryst, Harley too has a central role in this kooky family. It would have been nice if Harley had some more scenes, not because the character was undeveloped, more so because he's obviously a fan-favorite.

On a more technical note, the scenes were just right - not choppy, simple camera work, believable settings. Even the soundtrack and score were just right for "It's Complicated," giving it that generic romantic-comedy feel.

However, "It's Complicated" is no generic movie. There is no 20-something leading lady trying to find love in a city, a plotline that's been played out one too many times. Instead, a seasoned, classic actress shows a mature, normal woman that everyone knows, who's just trying to do the best thing for her children, while coming to the realization that she needs to live her own life. .

"It's Complicated" is all about life choices and trying to keep some control over a life that's already significantly underway. There's a sharp contrast between old and new, and the thought that maybe, even in America's evolving society, maybe the newest model isn't always the best fit. Meryl Streep, Alec Baldwin and John Krasinski amazingly manage to get this across in just under two hours, a message everyone should take to heart.

On second thought, after seeing the older version, a la Jake's "come hither" scene, maybe the newest model isn't so bad? But that's for Jane to decide.

Kate MacDonald can be reached at kaitlynm@student.umass.edu

Fine Dining Notebook: Sierra Grille

Alex Tillotson

If you're looking for a great atmosphere, décor that includes dark wood furniture, a fantastic ambiance with small votives on every table and even better food made from a variety of local ingredients, look no further than Noho. The Sierra Grille, at 41 Strong Ave. in Northampton, is by far one of the best restaurants in the city. There truly is something for everyone on the menu.

When I ate here, I was with a group of my friends celebrating another friend's birthday. It is one of her favorite spots as well, so it was an obvious choice. I should mention that all of these friends are also members of the professional modern dance company, Eclipse, and the dinner we enjoyed took place after a four hour dance rehearsal on a Saturday night, so we were a little bit hungry . . enough said.

The great thing about the menu options at Sierra Grille is the fact that you are paying very (and I mean very) low prices for an incredibly high-quality product. One of the best ways to go is to start off with a sampling of any or all of their "Small Bites." Each of these are $2 to $3, which means that you can sample five different items for just $10, the same price that it'd cost you to get one appetizer at other restaurants. We started with the sourdough loaf, which is baked especially for the Sierra Grille by The Old School Bakery in Northampton. The tangy and tender dough of the bread paired really well with another item from the "Small Bites" section, the whole roasted garlic cloves in olive oil, which were sweet and spread perfectly on the bread. Other items on this list include sweet and salty vegetable crisps, which are flash fried, paper-thin slices of beets, sweet potatoes and Yukon Golds as well as the olive and garlic tapenade and the spicy hummus. All of these are great ways to start off your meal, because, similar to Spanish tapas, they're little bites of food that pack a big flavor punch and are great for sharing.

Although you could easily make an appetizer out of one or many of the items listed above, the Sierra Grille also has an appetizer section on the menu. But unlike most restaurants that serve food of this quality, they start at a very low price of $4 and end at a still very low price of $6. These choices range from Belgian fries and smoked chicken wings to an assorted

See SIERRA on page 9

Off The Wall Games

Worldwake pre-release tournament on Thursday, January 28 at 6 PM -Sealed Deck - $20 Entry Fee
First prize a box of Worldwake, scan www.offthewallgamestore.com for details and more prizes!

Discount role-playing games, Collectible card games (CCGs), Miniature war games and board games, fun for everyone!

Hours: 10-10 Wednesday-Sunday, 12-10 Monday, Closed Tuesdays - 41 Russel St (Hampton Village Shops) Rt. 9, Hadley 413-586-5451

A 'Welcome Back' at FAC

WELCOME BACK from page 7

the 2009 LGBT film "Hannah Free."

With her band, the folk influence is still there but augmented with bluesy electricity. Her energetic live shows have continually sold out venues in the Northwest and elsewhere. She has shared a stage with, among others, Sting, Annie Lennox, Avril Lavigne and The Presidents of the United States of America.

Ryan Leslie, from Harlem, forms the third and final corner in the pan-American mainstream musical triangulation of this concert's lineup. After B.o.B.'s pulsing Atlanta hip-hop heat and Martinez's rainy Seattle serenades, he will offer up some bona fide urban funk, steeped in the sacred tradition of Prince and the more recent synthesizer-heavy R&B culture. The beats are infectious and danceable, the synth is retro and trendy, and his vocals are as soulful as any contemporary R&B artist.

He graduated high school early, enrolling at Harvard University. There, he performed with an a capella group and honed his production skills in the school's studio. Not to be distracted from his academics, he graduated at the incredible age of 19, delivering the distinguished Harvard Oration at his commencement.

From there, he was educated by the Boston music scene. After a few years in and out of independent and small scale studios, he landed a production internship that jumpstarted his career and garnered the attention of his soon-to-be manager, Sean "Diddy" Combs. He released his first single – "The Way That U Move Girl!" (featuring Clipse) – in 2005. In 2009, he released his self-titled debut album, followed up later that year with "Transition." He has another album, entitled "Les Is More," planned for sometime this year.

So, before you fully succumb to the cruel cycles of academia, celebrate the semester to come (and finish ringing in the new decade) with B.o.B., Martinez, Leslie and your fellow students.

Tickets are free to UMass students with proper ID, $10 for Five-College students, and $20 forueveryone else.Ttickets may be purchased at the Fine Arts Center Box Offic . which can be reachen for more informatiue at 413-545-2511. Doors open at 7:30 p.m.

Garth Brody can be reached at gbrody@student.umass.edu

Cheap eats in Noho

SIERRA from page 8

cheese plate with fresh fruit and crackers and even shrimp with chocolate sauce, reminiscent of a classic mole. The girls and I tried to opt out of the appetizer, but the men at the table just had to get the fries. They are classic, twice-fried and come with homemade catsup, aioli and, for a dollar extra, the Sierra Grille's infamous homemade duck gravy. The boys spent the extra dollar, the girls had to try "just one" and it was well worth it.

They also offer four types of paninis, ranging from $6 to $8 which include a duck confit panini with goat cheese, arugula, spinach, caramelized onions, and a balsamic reduction for $8, which is to die for. The duck is succulent and rich and it pairs wonderfully with the creamy goat cheese, the peppery bite from the arugula and the sweetness from the onions. They also have a chicken breast panini with gruyere cheese and whole grain mustard. And the paninis are so cheap that you can even order one of their two salads to round out the meal. The garden salad rings in at only $5, while the spinach salad costs $7, and you can choose from balsamic vinaigrette, lobster avocado vinaigrette, tahini ginger or smoked cheddar ranch.

One of the best things that the Sierra Grille has to offer is the way in which they have set up their entrée menu. We all know what it's like to go to a snooty restaurant and want to order something on the menu, but are turned away from said item because it comes with a sauce that you don't think you'll be crazy about. Here, you will never have this problem. All entrées, which range from $10 to $18, come with your choice of grilled protein, sauce and two sides. So, if you're a vegetarian, you can get the marinated grilled tempeh with grilled vegetable kabobs, royal basmati rice and a Thai hot basil coconut sauce all for $10. By the way, all of their vegetarian items are cooked on a separate grill. But, if you're looking for a meal with some meat, fish or seafood, try one of these two: the tuna with grilled asparagus, roasted potatoes and the citrus salsa for $18 or the hanger steak with potatoes au gratin and the ale, caramelized onion and mushroom sauce for $14. I tried the tuna, which was cooked to perfection, seared perfectly on the outside and rare on the inside, with the sweet and citrusy salsa that made for the perfect counterpart. In a nutshell, you can choose from one of nine proteins, two of nine sides and one of eight sauces. This provides for a variety of options and allows you to really customize your meal so that it suits your dining personality to perfection.

The Sierra Grille is undoubtedly one of the best restaurants in all of Northampton. The fact that they offer a variety of choices (from upscale bar food to the truly decadent and gourmet) at incredible prices in a quiet atmosphere is something that is hard to find.

Alex Tillotson can be reached at atillots@student.umass.edu

Conan finds a pot of gold

By Meg James and Joe Flint
Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — Ending his brief reign as host of one of television's longest-running shows, Conan O'Brien on Thursday finalized a rich severance deal with NBC that releases the comedian from "The Tonight Show" and frees him to join another network in time for the new fall season, an NBC spokeswoman confirmed.

The settlement, hammered out over the last week, brings to an abrupt end O'Brien's nearly 20-year career with NBC, where he began as a staff writer for "Saturday Night Live" in the late 1980s. His separation from NBC includes a payout that will go down as one of the most eye-popping in the annals of Hollywood. O'Brien, who has 2 1/2 years remaining on his contract, will walk away with about $32 million, according to people close to the negotiations who spoke on condition of anonymity because they were not authorized to discuss the matter publicly.

Overall, NBC will have to shell out $40 million to $50 million to close the book on its late-night drama.

NBC agreed to compensate the show's staff

See CONAN on page 10

Write for Arts&Living!

Interested? Let us know...
arts@dailycollegian.com

WANNA HOOK UP?

Free High Speed Internet and Expanded Cable

Sugarloaf Estates
28 River Road, Sunderland
665-3856
www.sugarloafestates.com

- Deluxe 2 bedroom apartment homes
- FREE Heat & Hot Water
- Basketball, Volleyball & Refreshing Pool*
- Washer/Dryers in selected styles
- Pet Friendly Community
- Free On-Site Parking
- On-Site Storage Facilities*
- Minutes from UMASS on FREE Bus line

Aspen Chase & Alpine Commons Apartment Homes
133 Belchertown Road, Rt. 9, Amherst
256-0741
www.aspenchaseapartments.com
www.alpinecommons.com

- Spacious 1, 2, 3 & 4 bedroom apartment homes
- All UTILITIES INCLUDED*
- Patio or Balcony in selected styles
- On-Site Laundry Facilities
- Pet Friendly Community
- Off Street Parking
- On the PVTA Bus line
- Minutes from UMASS & the Center of Amherst

*Restrictions apply

NBC drops Conan

CONAN from page 9

members, including executive producer Jeff Ross. About 190 people worked on the show, including nearly 70 people who relocated to Los Angeles from New York early last year to work with O'Brien at the program's newly built studios on the Universal lot. NBC and O'Brien's team spent the last few days ironing out severance packages for all the show's workers.

O'Brien's manager, Gavin Polone, said the talk show host would kick in some of his own money for his staff as well.

O'Brien's final "Tonight Show" appearance will be Friday. But he may not be off the air for long. The comedian will be allowed to work on a competing network by September. Jay Leno will be back in his old time slot even sooner. Leno, who surrendered "The Tonight Show" to O'Brien last spring and then was handed his own prime-time show on the network at 10 p.m., will return to late night after NBC's Olympic coverage concludes at the end of February.

The costly resolution ends two weeks of high drama that damaged the images and reputations not only of NBC executives, but also of Leno, who was painted as the villain by many in the media, including CBS' David Letterman, who took numerous jabs at Leno over the last week. He was also the target of a grass-roots Internet campaign to demonstrate support for the embattled O'Brien. Earlier this week, Leno provided his side of the story on his program, saying he told NBC executives that he was skeptical that a prime-time show would work.

It was an undignified end to O'Brien's long career at NBC — he spent 16 years as host of "Late Night With Conan O'Brien" — and his short tenure at "The Tonight Show." Certainly this was not how NBC anticipated O'Brien's run with "The Tonight Show" playing out when it declared him the "king of late night" in June after he made his debut as host.

Ironically, NBC looked to avoid this exact scenario when it decided in 2004 to make O'Brien host of "The Tonight Show" in 2009. That move, engineered by the company's chief executive, Jeff Zucker, was done to keep O'Brien from jumping to Fox. NBC also was betting that by 2009 Leno would be ready to exit the stage and that O'Brien, who appealed to younger viewers, would be ready to take over. But as his retirement loomed, Leno became increasingly unhappy at the prospect of stepping aside while still No. 1 in the ratings.

Moreover, with rival networks expressing interest in hiring Leno, Zucker faced a difficult choice: Renege on his promise to give O'Brien "The Tonight Show" — and pay him a $40-million breakup fee — or follow through with his plan and nudge Leno out the "Tonight Show" door.

Instead, Zucker crafted a quick fix: Give Leno a 10 p.m. show, which would keep both comedians in the NBC fold. O'Brien went along with Zucker's "Leno in prime-time" plan when it was announced in 2008. He moved his family to Los Angeles to prepare to inherit the late-night institution previously hosted by Johnny Carson and, before him, Jack Paar. But Leno's show at 10 p.m., which launched in September, drew weak ratings and critiques by TV critics that Leno seemed off his game.

(MCT)

Late night talk show host Conan O'Brien signed a severance deal with NBC which officially ends his short reign on "The Tonight Show." He will recieve $40 - $50 million.

The low viewership level hurt NBC's affiliates, who count on a large audience at 10 p.m. to boost their late local news programs, a big revenue generator. Many local stations experienced ratings declines of more than 20 percent, and NBC was facing a mutiny as many affiliates threatened to push Leno to 11 p.m. and run their local news at 10 p.m. NBC executives decided they needed to make a switch and told O'Brien they were pushing the start time of his show half an hour later, to 12:05 a.m., to make room for Leno at 11:35 p.m.

NBC expected that O'Brien would go along. But he refused, triggering a firestorm of controversy and rich material for other comedians.

Now O'Brien is free to decide his future. Most industry observers are betting that Fox, which has struggled in the past to get into the late-night game, is his next stop. Indeed, O'Brien has a history with Fox, where he spent two years as a writer on "The Simpsons" in the early 1990s. Just last week, Fox Entertainment President Kevin Reilly expressed enthusiasm for O'Brien — but the network may face a hard sell with its affiliates, some of whom are locked into contracts to run syndicated sitcom reruns in the 11 p.m. time period.

But if Fox really wants O'Brien, odds are it would find a way to make it happen. The earliest he would be on the network would be in the fall, but next January is more likely.

Meanwhile, Leno, whose prime-time show ends Feb. 11, will face the challenge of improving on O'Brien's ratings. NBC has been trailing CBS' David Letterman and is tied with him in the coveted demographic of adults ages 18 to 49. During the last week, O'Brien's ratings have nearly doubled. Whether the backlash against Leno, fair or not, will hurt him when he returns to his old 11:35 p.m. time slot remains a question mark.

And finally, NBC, which is already enduring a tough season, now has to spend heavily to develop new shows for the 10 p.m. hour, at a time when the General Electric Co.-owned network already conceded that it would lose about $200 million on its coverage of the Winter Olympics in Vancouver.

THE
BOLTWOOD
PROJECT™

Serving others since 1969 -- and STILL making a difference!

A STUDENT / COMMUNITY SERVICE LEARNING PROGRAM
(an RSO and Dept. of Landscape Architecture & Regional Planning sponsored prog.)

REACH OUT—AND BECOME A SPECIAL FRIEND TO PEOPLE WITH SPECIAL NEEDS

Your life will NEVER be the same!

••EARN 1-2 CREDITS ••GAIN VALUABLE EXPERIENCE ••REWARDING, CHALLENGING, and FUN

Spring Semester 2010 — Recruitment Nights
You must attend ONE of these meetings. No exceptions, even if you have participated before!
6:00-8:00 PM (Note: Prompt starting time!!!)
Campus Center Basement • Room 101 • Jan. 25 (Mon) • Jan. 26 (Tues) • Jan. 27 (Wed)

•Assignment notification ONLY thurs. Jan. 28 @ Boltwood table CC Concourse
No telephone inquiries. YOU (or a friend) must pickup the notification letter!!!

Volunteer, while earning credit!

Minutemen close break with 3 wins

By Jeffrey R. Larnard
Collegian Staff

Despite a No. 15 ranking and a 10-5-0 record after a recent three-game skid, the Massachusetts hockey team faced questions about how the team would do come January, even before winter break began.

As UMass' (14-8-0, 9-6-0 Hockey East) winter break comes to a close with a three-game winning streak and a hold on third place in the Hockey East standings, the questions were silenced.

It's been well-documented that over the past couple of years that the month of January has been a sort of Achilles' heel of the team, often sending them into a downward spiral for the rest of the season. In 2008 and 2009 combined, the Minutemen managed to go 2-9-3 in January, and 9-13-0 in the following months.

The first month of 2010 did not start out any differently as the team began with two losses at Boston University, 7-3, and at New Hampshire, 7-2. Coupled with a 4-1 loss to Bentley in the championship game of the UConn Hockey Classic, and the three-game skid before winter break, UMass was 2-6-0 in eight games.

It almost appeared as if what many deem the annual January collapse was beginning even earlier, but a closer look at the losses, combined with a home-and-home sweep over sister school UMass-Lowell, told a different story.

Its three-game losing streak before break came to three top 15 teams, with two of the losses coming on the road. The box score for the loss to Bentley shows the Minutemen dominating the game in almost every aspect, but a 42-save performance by the Falcons' Kyle Rank was enough to stop the Minutemen.

Then there were the two multiple-goal losses to the Terriers and the Wildcats. BU is still the defending national champions, despite a poor first half to the season, and the Terriers are known for being a second-half team. UNH lost just once – to then-No. 4 Cornell on Jan. 3 – since UMass took one back in overtime on Nov. 13.

For No. 19 UMass coach Don Cahoon, the losses were due to a lack of focus, not an annual January collapse. Though, the team was well-aware of its past struggles during the month.

"It's very much on every ones' minds, but we're trying to put the focus on the performance and the execution, rather than all the things that are being said that really don't have really influence on our performance or execution," Cahoon said at practice before the Minutemen took on No. 15 UML.

Cahoon has seen his team regain its focus, as it responded to a three-game losing streak by winning three in a row, propelling the squad into third place in the conference standings.

"I think that there was a consistent physicality where guys finished checks," Cahoon said of UMass' 4-1 win at Northeastern, the first win of the streak. "We didn't go out of our way to take penalties. It wasn't excessively forceful, but every time someone touched the puck, we finished the play that we started."

After the win at Northeastern and the home-and-home sweep of the River Hawks, the Minutemen have begun to take steps toward building an identity for themselves, and helped avoid the collapse they feared.

"[The most difficult thing a coach does] is to lead the team in a direction where they establish what their identity is," Cahoon said. "That is what most coaches are searching for endlessly.

"The question is always, when the game is over what did [the outside world] see, and what did they say. And, when it can be a consistent response, then you know the team has figured out what their identity is."

For Cahoon, talk of a collapse did not benefit his team. The coach believes the team needs to look ahead and regain focus.

"We just have to move forward. We've got to put it aside. It does us absolutely no good for us to talk about it," Cahoon said before sweeping UML. "That's for the media, for the people, for the naysayers. We don't have time for it. It doesn't solve anything for us. You guys can talk about it until you're blue in the face. We've got to solve it with performance and execution."

After the past week's play, it's clear the Minutemen have moved forward, ignoring any thoughts of a collapse and focusing on their play instead.

Jeffrey R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@dailycollegian.com.

MATTHEW HARRIGAN/COLLEGIAN

Forward James Marcou looks to clear the puck away from a defender during a game against UMass-Lowell. The Minutemen's next game is Jan. 23 against Vermont.

Kansas edges out Baylor

By J. Brady McCollough
McClatchy Newspapers

LAWRENCE, Kan. — Sherron Collins gathered the Kansas starters around him with 3 minutes, 13 seconds left, the game tied and KU reeling from a 10-0 Baylor run. His message?

"I told 'em we're all right," Collins said.

Once again, the Jayhawks were going to be OK because they had Collins. At the first sign that he had done his job, after he had swished a three to give the Jayhawks a five-point lead and drawn a foul while grabbing a defensive rebound, Collins flexed his arms around the ball and yelled. Walking down the court to shoot free throws, he motioned to the students on the far end to make some noise. They obliged, and for another night, Allen Fieldhouse was Sherron's World.

"Sherron's a competitive dude," KU coach Bill Self said.

Collins scored 21 of his game-high 28 points in the second half as the Jayhawks finally put down Baylor, 81-75, on Wednesday night, which was quite an accomplishment considering the Bears' temperament.

From the start, they were not interested in the tradition of this program and this place. They made that very clear when they walked out on KU's pregame video that makes the hair stand up on the back of your neck and highlights the Jayhawks' rich history, from Naismith to Allen to Self.

"I think it was disrespectful," Collins said. "I think Coach probably would agree. I've never seen a team do that in my four years."

Coach agreed.

"We wouldn't do that," Self said.

Team after team has walked into the old barn during the Jayhawks' 53-game home-court winning streak — the longest in the country — and watched that video with eyes wide and mouths open.

The Bears didn't even bother staying in the building. Hey, just because you aren't watching — as some teams have chosen to do — doesn't mean you can't hear the music and the booming voice of Larry Brown saying, "There is no better place to coach, there is no better place to go to school, there is no better place to play." When the Bears returned to the arena, the KU fans showered them with boos.

Baylor took it to No. 3 Kansas, now 17-1 and 3-0 in the Big 12, from the opening tip. Sharpshooter LaceDarius Dunn appeared the least fazed by the Phog, nailing four of five three-pointers in the first half. The only way to stop Dunn was to keep him from getting one of his patented quick-fire threes, and luckily for the Jayhawks, Brady Morningstar was up to the challenge. Morningstar, who started in place of Tyshawn Taylor and lived in Dunn's shorts, got his hands on three Dunn shot attempts before Dunn could even bring the ball up.

Morningstar got some help from Xavier Henry, who came up with five steals in the first half and seven for the game. Henry, who had another tough shooting night, going three of 13 from the field for 12 points, found another way to contribute for the Jayhawks.

Still, despite standout efforts from Morningstar and Henry that led KU to force 14 turnovers in the first half, Baylor made 10 of 19 shots (53 percent) and tied KU 30-30 at halftime.

The Bears lost because they didn't value the basketball, wasting a phenomenal shooting performance (25 of 48 for a 52-percent clip) with 20 turnovers. Baylor became the first team since the season-opener against Louisiana-Monroe in 2007-08 to shoot better than 50 percent against KU.

CINEMARK
For advance tickets & showtimes visit
cinemark.com
or call 1-800-FANDANGO + Exp Code 1118#
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
FIRST MATINEE SHOWTIME (7 DAYS A WEEK) $5.00
ADULT MATINEE BEFORE 6PM $6.25 • STUDENT $7.00 (WITH ID)

AVATAR - REAL D 3D ($2.75 SURCHARGE) [PG13] 110 440 810
◆ EXTRAORDINARY MEASURES [PG] 115 415 720 1005
◆ LEGION [R] ⓘ 135 445 730 1015
◆ TOOTH FAIRY [PG] 125 420 650 930
◆ THE BOOK OF ELI [R] ⓘ 120 410 710 955
◆ THE LOVELY BONES [PG13] 100 400 700 1000
◆ THE SPY NEXT DOOR [PG] 145 435 655 915
ALVIN AND THE CHIPMUNKS: THE SQUEAKQUEL [PG] 200 425 645 905
IT'S COMPLICATED [R] ⓘ 130 450 735 1020
LEAP YEAR [PG] 150 725
SHERLOCK HOLMES [PG13] 105 405 705 1010
UP IN THE AIR [R] ⓘ 140 430 715 955
YOUTH IN REVOLT [R] ⓘ 440 950
◆ NO PASSES-NO CLASSIC SUPERSAVERS

Minutemen open 2009-10 season

Laorenza, Miller expected to lead experienced team in tough A-10

By Michael Wood
Collegian Correspondent

With an experienced core group of returning athletes and a veteran coach at the helm, the Massachusetts men's track and field team looks poised to contend in each event it partakes in this spring. Entering his 43rd season, UMass coach Ken O'Brien is confident in his team, and said he is excited to lead the Minutemen through another season with hopes of competing for a national title.

O'Brien categorizes his team as focused, versatile and seasoned. With 14 returning seniors, O'Brien is looking forward to the type of leadership and experience the team should bring to the blocks each day.

"If there's one thing we know in sports, it's that they are a marathon, not a sprint," O'Brien said. "With experience, you usually end up with people who are more advanced technically, and psychologically they know how to get themselves through the grind of a season."

O'Brien looks towards leaders

Senior sprinters Sam Laorenza and Brian Miller each return with a wealth of knowledge under their belts, and will be expected to lead the team. Laorenza typically competes in longer sprints like the 400- and 500-meter dash, and is the team's strongest long-distance sprinter. Miller, who also competes in jumping events, gives the team a degree of flexibility it has been lacking in the past.

"Brian can do any one of the sprints, and he is a long-jumper and a high-jumper, so he is very versatile," O'Brien said. "So not only does he bring valuable experience to the team, but he's very versatile and as a coach of a team that has 22 positions, you love to see someone who can do more than one or two."

Tough schedule ahead

In a competitive Atlantic 10 conference, nothing is a guarantee, even for a coach as decorated as O'Brien. With a meet each weekend, the Minutemen will attend about 50 percent of their meets within New England, competing against three to five schools per meet. This allows them to compete at a high caliber without travelling across the country. The rest of the schedule includes a few larger meets where about 30-40 universities will be in attendance, with three championship meets at the end of the spring: New England Championship, Eastern College Athletic Conference Championship, and the A-10 Championship.

O'Brien describes his schedule as a good opportunity to face schools it wouldn't otherwise because of the indoor facilities in the A-10.

UM hopes to improve from 2008-09

Last season was a growth and development time for UMass. While there were some great individual performances throughout the year at each meet, the team was ultimately too inconsistent to achieve what it would've liked. O'Brien hopes a plethora of upperclassmen will motivate the Minutemen and guide them through their workout regimen throughout the season.

"This season we hope to improve on our consistency and how we finish out the season," O'Brien said. "We had some great performances last year, but in the weeks that we needed them, we were inconsistent. I have some ideas to correct that this season, and we want to build on what we did well."

Minutemen shaking off rust

After winter break, most student-athletes find themselves a little rusty on their technique and stamina. The track and field team is no different. The challenges of finding proper track and field facilities outside of the University affect how each athlete trains over the winter months, depending on the climate they return to over break.

Most athletes lift weights and sprinters run along roads or indoor tracks to try to keep in shape. O'Brien realizes these challenges, and admits it generally takes about two weeks for the team to get back into proper shape, but said it's something every team must deal with.

"Everybody needs a break," O'Brien said. "There's a physical and a mental need to get away from practice everyday and often times some time away can refuel an athlete's competitive desire," he continued. "We understand this and we deal with it and move on when we get back."

UMass fares well at BU

Upon returning to campus in January, the track and field season began immediately. Last weekend, the Minutemen traveled to Boston University without much practice to compete in a meet, their first since early December. Despite this expedited return, they fared well, qualifying four athletes for the ECAC Championships, and eight for the New England Championships in their first event out of the blocks. O'Brien was proud of his team's accomplishments.

"I was happy with the quality of the performances we put on the board," O'Brien said. "We qualified 12 kids for championships right out of the gate, and that speaks to their hard work and training over break. We will be inspired to step it up a little now."

Rhode Island next

This weekend, UMass travels to Rhode Island in its second competition since returning from winter break. The facilities at Rhode Island are top-notch, and O'Brien says his team is always excited to compete there. Unlike many other facilities like BU which allow for better track events but leave something to be desired in the field events, these allow for much better performances in each field event.

"We're really excited to go down to Rhode Island this weekend," O'Brien said. "BU is notoriously bad for track events, and going down to Rhode Island is like going to a hitter's ballpark. We should have some better performances in field events, and our guys are excited."

Michael Wood can be reached at mcwood@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Senior Andrew O'Donnell gets set for a sprint during a race last season. The Minutemen finished the Boston University Quad Meet on Jan. 14 in second place.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

Need to spread the word?

Reach more than 18,000 readers every day!

IT'S CHEAPER THAN YOU THINK!

On-Campus & Local Business Ads for $10 per column inch

R.S.O. Ads for $6.70 per column inch

CONTACT PAMELA:
thecollegian@gmail.com
413-545-3500
or stop by our office in the Campus Center basement

Jeff Bercovici/Collegian

Ricky Harris tries to drive to the lane during UMass' game against Cornell. The Minutemen head to Texas Saturday hoping to snap their four-game losing streak.

UM hoping Harris finds shot, Riley stepping up

By Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

One of the questions surrounding the Massachusetts men's basketball team this season was going to be who could step up if captain Ricky Harris wasn't having a good game or was injured.

Since Harris's ankle injury before the game against Grambling State, the Minutemen (7-10, 1-3 Atlantic 10) have needed an answer to that question. While he's been healthy enough to play in games, he had his second- and third-lowest scoring games of the season against Boston College (12) and Memphis (13).

In those two games, he finished a combined 7-for-27 from the field.

Since the loss to BC, Harris improved his scoring with three games with at least 20 points and a 17-point effort against La Salle. However, his shot is still not as good as it was prior to the injury, specifically from 3-point range.

After missing the game against Grambling, Harris is 7-for-41 from beyond the arc. UMass coach Derek Kellogg believes the health of his team's leader is between 95 and 100 percent, but is battling issues with his lift and confidence.

Before the Minutemen headed to Richmond, Harris said his inability to jump as high as he usually does is a big reason why his shot is a little flatter.

"My shot hasn't been falling as I'd like, but I just have got to focus and continue to play hard," Harris said.

As much as the injury may have plagued Harris during the first part of winter break, Kellogg believes that Harris's low 3-point percentage may be due to a lack of confidence rather than lingering ankle pain.

"I'm not saying [his injury] is totally why he hasn't shot the ball well, but I think mentally, it may have had some affect," Kellogg said. "I have the utmost confidence that when he raises up, [the ball] is going in, and I want him to feel the same way."

While Harris is trying to get his shot back, some of the Minutemen's younger players have stepped up. In their win against the Tigers at the TD Garden in Boston, freshman Terrell Vinson finished with 21 points.

Guard Freddie Riley is also starting to pick up some of the production after returning from knee surgery. The freshman is averaging 14 points per game in his first four games back. In the games against La Salle (22 points) and Richmond (20 points), he was the team's leading scorer.

While UMass has been 2-6 since the start of winter break, Kellogg is still impressed with the way his freshmen are playing because of how competitive the team's schedule is.

"You're talking about five high-level games against very good teams and I think we've performed well, which maybe hasn't shown up in the final score," Kellogg said. "To have such a young team and play such a tough non-conference schedule, compiled with the way the league's going, I think it is a little bit of a task for us."

As Kellogg tries to find other players to take on the scoring load, Harris continues to work during practice in order to regain his confidence back.

Adam Miller can be reached at amiller@dailycollegian.com.

UMass looking to snap 4-game skid

By David Brinch
Collegian Staff

It doesn't appear to be getting any easier for the Massachusetts men's basketball team.

After suffering its fourth straight loss Wednesday night to St. Bonaventure, 70-69, at the Mullins Center, the Minutemen face another nationally ranked team Saturday at 4 p.m., when they travel to No. 25 Baylor in their final non-conference game of the season.

"It's a total building process, to have so many young guys, we just have to stay focused on the task at hand which is to build this program and to just get better everyday," UMass coach Derek Kellogg said regarding the game. "In the process of doing that, you would like to add some W's and win some close games, because we've been in a bunch of them, and I'm anticipating many, many more tough games, and ones that will come down to the wire, and as we mature, we will pull them out at the end."

Freshman guard Freddie Riley missed a 3-point attempt that would've won the game for UMass (7-11, 1-4 Atlantic 10), who came back from a 10-point deficit with four minutes to go in the second half. Senior guard Ricky Harris sprinted the ball up the court, drove and then dished to Riley on the right wing, but the ball hit the rim and fell short.

"He's fine, I mean, shooters, I don't think those things bother them too much," Kellogg said. "I know he's looking forward to the next time he's put in that situation, and I'm confident that the next time, he will knock it down."

Riley leads the team in 3-point field goals made (39), good for a 2.8 made average, while posting a .375 3-point percentage.

UMass has faced a tough schedule, including No. 6 Michigan State and No. 16 Temple earlier this season. The Minutemen fell to the Spartans back on Nov. 28, 106-68, in the Legends Classic Championship, while dropping their third straight conference contest against the Owls last Saturday, 76-64.

"You know this gets us on national television, but it's probably not a great time to be playing a team with how they're playing and where they are rated," Kellogg said of the Temple game. "But at the same token, it gives our guys one more test to see where they are against I think one of the top-15 teams in the country."

The Bears (14-3, 2-2 Big 12) are coming off a near upset at No. 3 Kansas Wednesday night, losing 81-75. Junior guard LaceDarius Dunn had 27 points in the effort, while Tweety Carter added 17.

"They have a ton of height, and they play a ton of juniors and seniors and guys that were highly rated out of high school," Kellogg said, noting that he recruited a number of players to come to Memphis, where he was an assistant prior to UMass.

Baylor starts Josh Lomers (7-feet), Ekpe Udoh (6-10) and Anthony Jones (6-10) in its backcourt, and has a pair of quick guards in Dunn and Carter.

The Bears have had success against A-10 opponents so far this season, beating Xavier 69-64 behind 27 points from Carter.

If the Minutemen are given the opportunity to take open 3-pointers, they must convert them, as the Bears allow an average of 7.6 three-pointers per game.

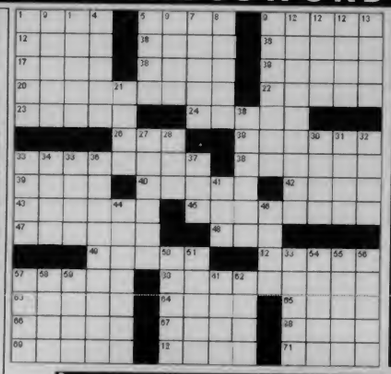
"I think going 4-for-23 with an outside shooting team is not conducive to winning basketball, so we have to get in the gym, and shoot more," Kellogg said.

The game will be air on ESPNU. It will be UMass' 100th all-time game against a ranked opponent. The Minutemen have gone 30-69 all-time against Associated Press Top 25 teams.

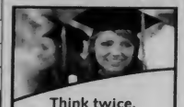
David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu.

Are you a PHOTOGRAPHER?

Get your photos published in The Daily Collegian!



-No photojournalism experience needed
-Must own digital SLR camera
-Great opportunity to get photos published



Send an email to photos@dailycollegian.com for more information!

comics

CROSSWORD

Think twice.
Borrow once.
Apply once and secure financing for your entire college career! Rest assured your local not-for-profit cooperative will be with you every step of the way.
UMassFIVE COLLEGE FEDERAL CREDIT UNION
800.852.5886
umassfive.org
Student Choice

WE WANT YOUR COMICS

Put your comics in front of thousands of readers!

E-mail: comics@dailycollegian.com

ACROSS
1. Fancy or frilly
5. Mop
9. Concealed explosive devices
14. Look amorously
15. A very small amount
16. Angry
17. Fertilizer ingredient
18. Hammer or saw, for example
19. Keyboard instrument
20. Found on some ocean beaches
22. Social status
23. Gossiper
24. Tied
26. Bark
29. Riddle
33. Wicked
38. Approached
39. Biblical first man
40. Tantalize
42. Rubber wheel
43. Zodiacal twins
45. Vikings
47. Meadow or pasture
48. Born
49. Representative
52. Drifts
57. British Association of Film and Television Arts
60. Listen in
63. Expect
64. Cain's brother
65. Present (at a show)
66. Forfeit
67. Anagram of "Rose"
68. Scallion
69. Stringed instruments
70. Achy
71. Nature of being

DOWN
1. Rotten
2. Consent
3. Not dirty
4. Leavening agent
5. Location
6. Grows on sheep
7. Coral island
8. A strong lightweight wood
9. An epoch dating back about 20 million years
10. Expose to radiation
11. Bothers persistently
12. French for "State"
13. Western Samoan monetary unit
21. Fodders
25. Middle (British spelling)
27. Clothing
28. A legumi-nous plant
30. Harshly sinister
31. Being nothing more than specified
32. City in Yemen
33. Droops
34. Concept
35. What you're called
36. Not genuine
37. Hurry on foot
41. French for "No"
44. Cancels
46. Stitches
50. Approaches
51. Forbidden
53. Confuse
54. Liberates
55. Books
56. Talked
57. Cry loudly
58. At a distant place
59. Reasonable
61. Swerve
62. Otherwise

SUDOKU

	3
					3		1	6
				7	9	4
		6	2					7
	5			8		9		4
3							6
		1
		2	9	5		6
4				6	7	2

snicklefritz

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Online Bookkeepers needed. To earn $200 per duty, contact john.culcer@gmail.com.

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necessary. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

WANTED

Wanted Part-Time Personal Care Attendant about 10-12 hrs/week. Flexible Hours. Please call Patrick 413-275-7928

FOR RENT

How Suite it is! $650 includes all. 10 mins. from UMass, free parking share w/father, 8 yr old daughter & 2 cats. Quiet, private, friendly. Furnished bedroom, seperate bathroom, deck entrance in 2 story house. Free cable/wifi. Short/long term lease option. Jonathon 413-222-3006

SERVICES

Textbooks buybacks, multiple buyers gets you the most cash for your books, even no longer used editions. Buy, sell, rent at cheapbooks.com (260)399-6111, Espanol (212) 380-1763 www.presidentobamapics.com Over 1,000 vivd pics of President Obama. Get prints made & framed!

FOR SALE

WE WANT YOUR COMICS!
Put your comics in front of thousands of readers.

Questions? Submissions? Concerns? Suggestions?
email us: comics@dailycollegian.com

Mr. Gnu by Travis Dandro

Hark! a Vagrant by K. Beaton harkavagrant.com

Pictures for Sad Children by John Campbell picturesforsadchildren.com

BASIC INSTRUCTIONS — How to Watch a Movie You Are Told You Will Love — by Scott MEYER

Chainsawsuit by Kris Straub Chainsawsuit.com

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20 -
If you keep this up then I am going to write a book about you called, "How to Enjoy Dining Alone."

pisces Feb. 19 -
In light of recent events, we should all be paid millions of dollars to stay away from our jobs.

aries Mar. 21 -
Not all people can be that bad. John Malkovich genuinely smiled once or twice in his lifetime.

taurus Apr. 20 -
Do not look at the old woman twice and then compliment on her whiskers. Love, your future self.

gemini May. 21 -
When Tiger Woods gets out of sex rehab, what color jacket do you think he'll get?

cancer Jun. 22 -
Jwoww is launching her own clothing line, free weave clippings and voice changer included!

leo Jul. 23 -
Have more faith in big-name companies. That Taco Bell burrito will go perfectly with your diabetes.

virgo Aug. 23 -
Speak the words that are on every American's mind, "I miss Paula Abdul."

libra Sept. 23 -
Somehow watching plastic surgery, when action figures have more points of rotation, will benefit you.

scorpio Oct. 23 -
Soothe your way into the subconscious by listening to the soundtrack of the Fast and Furious: Tokyo Drift.

sagittarius Nov. 22 -
"Cool and ridiculous aliases are steps on the path to enlightenment" - Waldo Von Weinervixen.

capricorn Dec. 22 -
Little Red Riding Hood escaped because of a Woodsman. You can now find him outside nightclubs as a bouncer.

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
COLLEGIAN

HIGH: 51 LOW: 30 www.DailyCollegian.com MONDAY, JANUARY 25, 2010

Do university professors lean left?

Educators perceived by many to be liberal; study finds more moderates than believed

By Michelle Williams
Collegian Staff

Some believe that college professors are raging liberals, dead set on converting you into a peace-loving activist. Your one uncle is convinced you went off to college and came back a communist. The leftists got to you. Or did they?

Instead of asking why so many professors lean towards the left, a new study asks why so many liberals want to be professors.

The research was completed by Neil Gross, an associate professor of sociology at the University of British Columbia, and Ethan Fosse, a doctoral candidate in sociology at Harvard University. Gross has authored numerous other studies of professorial politics, including a 2007 study that found liberal faculty members were often more moderate than believed. Gross and Fosse based their analysis on data from the General Social Survey from 1974-2008.

Fosse and Gross do not disagree that those in academia are more liberal than the population at large, but their study seeks to explain why this is the case. The survey finds that 43 percent of the political rift in the professors' politics can be explained. When compared to the American public, professors are more likely to be either secular in their religious beliefs, or a member of the Jewish faith or a Protestant faith not engaged in conservative politics. Professors are also more likely to be open to controversial ideas, and more willing to risk their professional integrity to study an issue, the research finds.

The study also found that in comparison to most Americans in terms of educational attainment (a doctorate or master's degree), professors are willing to accept a much lower salary. A study of 1,259 institutions by the American Association of University Professors showed that the average salary was $85,827 during the 2008-09 academic year.

One influence the pair found on professors' political paradigm was their existing ideas.

Gross and Fosse state in the paper that "the theory we advance ... holds that the liberalism of professors is a function not primarily of class relations, but rather of the systematic sorting of young adults who are already liberally or conservatively inclined into and out of the academic profession." When the image of a professor comes to mind, adjectives individuals used to describe professors included wearing a tweed jacket, glasses, rambling, and being non-religious and liberal, according to the study. Even though this isn't

See FACULTY on page 2

IDEOLOGY AT WORK

Professors are more likely to identify themselves as liberals than those in any other occupation, according to an analysis of General Social Survey data from 1996 to 2008.

Professors 43% Liberal • 48% Moderate • 9% Conservative
Authors & Journalists 37% Liberal • 52% Moderate • 11% Conservative
Creative Artists 33% Liberal • 54% Moderate • 13% Conservative
Social Scientists* 29% Liberal • 53% Moderate • 18% Conservative
Social Workers 28% Liberal • 48% Moderate • 14% Conservative
Bartenders 27% Liberal • 68% Moderate • 5% Conservative
All Workers 14% Liberal • 66% Moderate • 20% Conservative
Law enforcement officers 11% Liberals • 60% Moderate • 29% Conservative
Physicians & Dentists 17% Liberals • 52% Moderate • 31% Conservative
Natural Scientists* 20% Liberals • 48% Moderate • 32% Conservative
Building Managers 10% Liberals • 58% Moderate • 32% Conservative Graders & Sorters 10% Liberal • 55% Moderate • 35% Conservative
Religious Workers 15% Liberal • 39% Moderate • 46% Conservative

*Non-academic
Moderate includes "slightly liberal" and "slightly conservative."

Students at the University of California protested tuition hikes in large numbers in 2009. UMass' Student Government Association (SGA) has plans to create awareness of the University's budget cuts.

SGA planning Day of Action to protest budget cuts, fee hikes

By Alyssa Creamer
Collegian Staff

On Thursday, Jan. 21, members of the University of Massachusetts Student Government Association (SGA) met to decide on a course of action for the March 4 National Day of Action to Defend Education.

The National Day of Action to Defend Education is an attempt at a national movement by students to raise awareness of the problems that educational institutions are faced with during the nation's economic crisis.

Members of the SGA discussed possibilities to aid this national effort such as creating fliers and posters outlining facts and statistics about the University's budget cuts, working with other registered student organizations to plan awareness events and creating a word-of-mouth campaign. In order to hear out the views of all those present, the committee sat in a circle and each individual was given the opportunity to speak in a "go around."

One member suggested that a rally outside of UMass' Whitmore Administrative Building be thrown; another individual suggested that a message could be sent to administrators by having a proposed 'sit-in' on March 4 inside Whitmore or a 'study-out' protest during which students would bring desks and chairs outdoors.

The group formed five subcommittees to tackle the responsibilities of planning this event. The subcommittees were pedagogy and consciousness, action planning, outreach and education, continuing organization and media.

Although plans were not finalized, the group agreed to convene again next week to flesh out more of the details.

See ACTION on page 2

Sociology professor awarded Fulbright to study in Taiwan

By Sam Hayes
Collegian Staff

Retired University of Massachusetts professor of sociology Dr. Suzanne Model was awarded a Fulbright Scholarship to study immigration in Taiwan. She began work at The Institute of Sociology at Academia Sinica on Jan. 15, hoping to answer the question "How do those returning to Taiwan after emigrating differ from those emigrants who remain abroad in developed countries like the U.S. and Canada?"

Model said that winning the Fulbright was an accomplishment that made her happy and showed that others saw the importance of her research.

"As with achieving anything competitive, it feels good," she said.

The award she received was the Faculty Research Award which she described as "awards for American faculty who wish either to teach or to do research (or to combine the two) abroad."

"The research that I am doing involves two strategies," said Model in an e-mail interview from her Taipei, Taiwan apartment.

"First, I do computer-based work; computer files created from the answers that Taiwanese people have given to questions on surveys and censuses," she said. "These files distinguish people who never emigrated from people who emigrated and returned to Taiwan and people born in Taiwan who are still in the U.S. My computer-based research involves trying to identify the similarities and differences among three groups of people," said Model.

Dr. Suzanne Model was recently awarded a Fulbright Scholarship.

Model said her research, in essence, is working to determine why people leave or return to Taiwan.

"My second strategy is to conduct personal interviews with these three types of people," said Model.

"Here in Taiwan, I want to ask people about their reasons for never leaving or their reasons for leaving and returning," she said.

Model has traveled for research before, visiting Australia, the United Kingdom, the Netherlands, France and China.

She said Taiwan, while culturally distinct from the West, is, in her opinion, easier to navigate than China.

"Taiwan is much less Western than Australia or Europe, although lots of Taiwanese speak English.

"At the same time, compared to China, Taiwan is cleaner, richer, freer and more user friendly," she said.

Model also added that Taiwan's weather is a welcome change from Amherst's.

"Compared to Amherst, the weather is terrific; winter temperatures rarely drop below 50 [degrees]," she said. "If there's a downside, it's the weather ...

See TAIWAN on page 3

UMass splits with UVM

Casey Wellman, the nation's second leading goal scorer, notched two goals in UMass 3-1 victory on Saturday over No. 17 Vermont. On Sunday, the sophomore was held scoreless as the Minutemen fell 3-0.

ARTS & LIVING
Epic dance battle ensues at FAC
The University Programming Council hosted "UMass' Best Dance Crew" at the Fine Arts Center Thursday night.
SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS
Minutemen fall at No. 25 Baylor
UMass faced its third ranked opponent of the season and found similar results as the Bears handed Kellogg and Co. a 71-45 loss on Saturday.
SEE PAGE 8

EDITORIAL & OPINION
Collegian columnist Nick Milano has some advice for President Obama as he prepares for Wednesday's State of the Union address.
SEE PAGE 4

DailyCollegian.com
Head to DailyCollegian.com for an exclusive slideshow of one reporter's adventures while wearing Jesus boxers

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM FRIDAY, JANUARY 22, 2010

Bigger in Texas

UMass to face tall Baylor lineup Saturday

HOCKEY

The Minutemen have been known to struggle over winter break. This season, Don Cahoon and Co., have ensured those struggles wouldn't continue, as his team is on a three-game winning streak.

SEE PAGE 11

TRACK AND FIELD

UMass coach Ken O'Brien has big expectations for his track and field team, as the Minutemen opened up their season Jan. 14 at Boston University.

SEE PAGE 12

DAILY COLLEGIAN
sports
WEEKEND EDITION

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXX
ISSUE 5

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
413-545-3500
Fax 413-545-3699
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF William McGuinness
MANAGING EDITOR Matt Rocheleau
MANAGING WEB EDITOR S.F. Sullivan
BUSINESS MANAGER Daniel Jette
PRODUCTION MANAGER Michael Sarkes
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Kirsten Swenson
ADVERTISING MANAGER Michael Tortorici
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Amanda Johnson
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Shayna Murphy
COMICS EDITOR Andrew Witts
EDITORIAL EDITOR Alyssa Creamer
NEWS EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS EDITOR Jeffrey R. Larnard
PHOTO EDITOR Matthew Harrison
IT MANAGER Victor Jacek
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Matt Zolnierz
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Nicole Jacinto
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Norman Provost
CLASSIFIED MANAGER Katelyn Tamilio
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Justin Gagnon
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Elise Horowitz
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Cal Scannell
ASSTANT EDITORIAL Benjamin Moriarty
ASSTANT EDITORIAL Michael Phillis
ASSTANT EDITORIAL Matthew M. Robare
ASSISTANT NEWS Samuel Butterfield
ASSISTANT NEWS Jenn Heshion
ASSISTANT NEWS Chris Shores
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jay Auser
ASSISTANT SPORTS David Brinch
ASSISTANT SPORTS Adam Miller
ASSTANT PHOTO Maxwell Sparr
ASSTANT PHOTO Samantha Webber
SENIOR PRODUCER Sara Cosh
SENIOR PRODUCER Pete Rizzo

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life; became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1965, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1996. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

PRODUCTION CREW
on staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Kirsten Swenson

COPY EDITOR
Caitlin Quinn

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Dan Centola

CAMPUS PERSPECTIVES

What do you have to say about this UMass issue?

UMass recently announced that President Jack Wilson will receive a 15 percent raise this year, bringing his pay to $546,000.

Q: How do you feel about Wilson getting a raise this year?

Tim O'Sullivan
Freshman
Business major

"With limited resources right now, we have to make sure we stay focused on academics and research. It's a big University, and we can't put it all in one place. Everything has to keep improving in order for the school to stay attractive to students."

Henry Yoo
Graduate student
Education major

"Everybody wants to see [UMass] get through this economy. If he has enough money to get a raise, why not use that to take care of other things that relate to the welfare of students?"

Kristin Santangelo
Senior
English major

"I think it is very hypocritical to have someone asking [the campus] to make sacrifices for the betterment of all, and then getting a raise. It all boils down to people looking out for themselves, instead of looking out for the students and faculty."

Keais Pope
Senior
Pre-Med major

"Obviously the money could go towards a lot of better things: Student aid, fewer fees, smaller class sizes or more study space, such as the learning commons. If he donated his raise towards these things instead, it would look much better for him."

BY NICK BUSH, COLLEGIAN STAFF

Student government plans Day of Action

University of California students protest tuition hikes and budget cuts at a rally last year. UMass' Student Government Association (SGA) collaborated to discuss its own plans for the March 4 National Day of Action to Defend Education.

ACTION from page 1

According to the Day of Action to Defend Education: UMass Amherst Coalition Facebook group, created by Don Lippincott, who was present at the SGA meeting on Jan. 21, this movement is in support of the students, faculty and staff of the University of California system who protested the budget cuts announced by California Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger.

According to an article posted on Jan. 1 on the International Labor Communications Association website, the budget cuts in California consisted of reducing "[California State University] funding by $500 million, [University of California] by $800 million and the community colleges by $700 million."

Lippincott's Facebook group used information found on the National Day of Action to Defend Education website, http://www.defendeducation.org/, to elaborate on its relationship to the events in California. According to the website, "in California, students, teachers, workers, parents and faculty have taken action against these attacks."

The site also states that "they took to the streets in a one-day strike on Sept. 24, organized strikes and actions across the state during the University of California Board of Regents meeting from Nov. 18 to 20, and have called for a state-wide day of action on March 4."

The Day of Action site further says that "these actions have created a broad mass movement in California, drawing in students from all over the state to create a powerful struggle. As the effects of the economic crisis continue to spread into the education system nationally, it's time to join our voices with students and workers in California and draw inspiration from their example."

Multiple Facebook groups similar to Lippincott's are dedicated to promoting this movement and summarizing the problems facing American education with the following statement given on The National Day of Action to Defend Education website: "As people throughout the country struggle under the worst economic crisis since the Great Depression, public education from pre-K to higher and adult education is threatened by budget cuts, layoffs, privatization, tuition and fee increases and other attacks."

Alyssa Creamer can be reached at acreamer@student.umass.edu.

New study of professor politics:

Educators more moderate than once thought necessarily the case, such images affect what individuals entering the field of academia aspire to become.

FACULTY from page 1

Gross and Fosse cite past research about how some professions become "sex-typed," and are associated with gender. Much like how the stereotypical image of a professor comes to mind, for the occupation of a nurse, individuals inherently assume the job is held by a woman. Beyond gender, the authors explain that certain fields of work attract those of a specific political stance.

"We argue that the professoriate, along with a number of other knowledge work fields, has been 'politically typed' as appropriate and welcoming of people with broadly liberal sensibilities, and as inappropriate for conservatives," the study holds. Gross and Fosse cite such fields as art, fashion, journalism and social work as attractive to liberals, whereas law enforcement, farming, medicine and the military attract conservatives.

The issue of salary not equating to jobs held by comparably educated individuals does not seem to influence professors' decision to join the academy, according to research.

Daniel B. Klein, an economist at George Mason University and Charlotta Stern, a sociology professor at Stockholm University published a study titled, "By the Numbers: The Ideological Profile of Professors." Klein and Stern state that the political homogeneity of academia today is due to the structural changes that progressive reformers made in the 19th century to higher education.

Essentially, they maintain, professors choose peers with similar dispositions to themselves. It was their view that teaching should not be about salary, and the only way to ensure this was for professors to choose their co-workers.

Klein and Stern argue that when hiring, "the majority will tend to support candidates like them in the matter of fundamental beliefs, values and commitments."

Michelle Williams can be reached at mmwillia@student.umass.edu.

A new study found that people commonly connote certain characteristics with professors, such as wearing tweed coats and liberal political beliefs.

UMass' Model studies migration in Taiwan

TAIWAN from page 1

it is very wet, it rains a lot and the air is very humid."

Taiwan is known as one of the four Asian Tigers, the four most powerful economic powers in Asia.

According to Dr. Model, "all four are known for their relatively high standard of living," and joked about Taiwan's healthcare standards relative to America's.

"You know legislation that would give every American affordable health care insurance? Taiwan already has that," Model said.

Taipei is the capital city of Taiwan, housing about 15 percent of the country's 22 million residents, with a steadily-growing population of almost three million people.

Model describes the city as "very clean" and says that "there are fewer cars than in the U.S. and lots of motor scooters."

Model also commented on the island nation's bullet train connecting Taipei and Kaohsiung, the capital to the second largest city, as one of the fastest trains in the world.

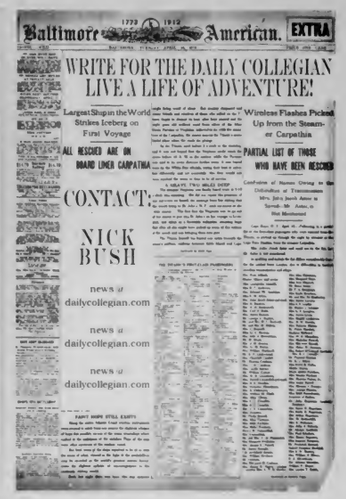
The capital city is a green city, so recycling is a high priority.

Taipei was also home to the world's tallest skyscraper, the Taipei 101 (which stands at 1,671 ft.), until this past year when Dubai's Burj Khalifa surpassed it, clocking in at 2,717 ft.

The positive aspects of Taiwan may be among the reasons that Model said a "large proportion of [Taiwan's] emigrants spend some years abroad, usually going to school, but also sometimes working, and then return to Taiwan."

Model added that "many developing countries wonder what they can do to be more like Taiwan; that is, to increase the percent of those who study abroad who also return home."

Sam Hayes can be reached at sdhayes@student.umass.edu.



University of Massachusetts professor of sociology Suzanne Model is researching migration trends in the city of Taipei, Taiwan.

B.o.B goes crowd–surfing at the Fine Arts Center

Atlanta, Ga. rapper B.o.B. livens things up by stepping into the enthusiastic crowd at UPC's Welcome Back Concert on Friday night in the Fine Arts Center.

BLUEBERRY TREATS!
• Blueberry Bakery Specialties
• Blueberry Salads featured at lunch
• Blueberry & Thyme Crusted Salmon
• Double Berry Chicken
• And more!
JANUARY 25 – 30
ALL DCs
7AM – 9PM
Blueberries are ranked #1 in Antioxidants and are high in Vitamin C and Fiber
Blueberries
HIGH-BUSH BLUEBERRY COUNCIL
RESTAURANTS & INSTITUTIONS
Ivy
A WORLD OF CHOICES YOUR CAMPUS MEAL PLAN
THE BEST VALUE ON CAMPUS RESIDENTIAL MEAL PLAN
UMASS DINING
UMassAmherst
umassdining.com

THE BIGGEST & NEWEST BACK TO SCHOOL
POSTER SALE
1000's of Choices
Where:
Cape Cod Lounge
Student Union
When:
Mon. Jan. 25 thru Fri. Jan. 29
Time:
9 A.M. - 4:30 P.M.
Sponsor:
WMUA 91.1 FM
Incredible Selection
CHECK OUT OUR GREAT POSTERS AND PRICES!!
Most Images Only $7, $8 and $9

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

MONDAY, JANUARY 25, 2010

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Proud to be 'Team Conan'

As I watched Conan O'Brien host his final episode of "The Tonight Show" on Friday, I instantly recognized the broadcast as a spectacle I will regale my children with someday when they ask me the oddly specific question of what the late-night television climate was like during January of 2010. Partially, this is due to the fact that not only did O'Brien provide his audience and fans with a phenomenal final episode, but also ended it with – I couldn't make this up if I tried – a full-fledged rendition of Lynyrd Skynyrd's "Free Bird" performed by Max Weinberg and "The Tonight Show" band, with Conan playing guitar beside the likes of Billy Gibbons of ZZ Top and Beck on guitar, Ben Harper on slide guitar and Will Ferrell on lead vocals.

Yeah, they went there. But the other reason I will remember this iconic broadcast forever is because it demonstrated, in the clearest possible manner, why NBC is the proverbial whipping boy of the current broadcast stations.

Dave Coffey

I instantly recognized the broadcast as a spectacle I will regale my children with someday when they ask me the oddly specific question of what the late-night television climate was like during January of 2010.

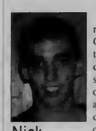
While the details concerning the NBC late-night situation are both numerous and complex, I have come to one conclusion: Conan has been ousted from his deserved position of hosting what he calls, "The greatest franchise in broadcast history." When NBC asked Conan to move his broadcast of "The Tonight Show" from 11:35 p.m. to 12:05 p.m. to accommodate for the floundering "Jay Leno Show," he immediately recognized the damage the time slot change would do. As he said in his statement concerning the matter, "Some people will make the argument that a time slot doesn't matter. But with 'The Tonight Show,' I believe nothing could matter more." Following NBC's decision to finalize the schedule change, Conan decided to leave instead of being pushed out of a position he earned by dedicating most of his adult life to producing quality content for the network.

Since his work as a writer for SNL in the late 80s and early 90s (you know, when it was actually good), O'Brien has been both a diligent worker and successful personality for NBC. As host of "Late Night with Conan O'Brien," he served for 16 years, mostly at the top of the ratings for that time slot. Now, after only seven and a half months and a mere 146 episodes, NBC has bullied him out of a job that, "Every comedian dreams of," as Conan said in his final address on "The Tonight Show" Friday.

As I watched one of the all-around funniest people on TV get forced out of the job he has not only sought for as long as he can remember but also worked two decades to earn, I realized this decision pretty much spells out why NBC is pretty much the Los Angeles Clippers of the broadcast television league. If one couldn't tell before, it was extremely clear following the late-night schedule chaos that the overwhelming majority of viewers support Conan.

This is demonstrated by the outpouring of fan support for Conan following the debacle, including staged rallies outside Universal Studios and the, "I'm with Coco" Internet movement.

So in light of all this, why in the name of Ringo Starr did NBC think it was a good idea to push around one of its most popular personalities until he had no choice but to leave the network?



It seems like NBC hasn't even been paying attention to its own broadcast history over the past two decades. Yes, when Conan O'Brien took over for "The Tonight Show," ratings began to slip, but this entire fiasco was the opposite of the appropriate response.

Perhaps as proof of the treasure being carelessly cast away by the undeserving hands of NBC, Conan delivered a speech on his final show in which he refrained from bashing the network, instead praising and thanking them for the opportunity and work they were able to create together.

Yes, even though he was mistreated and discounted by a network that he gave so much of his time and energy to, he had the class and grace to part ways with NBC with the kind of dignity and intelligence the network itself is clearly lacking. In 1993, NBC hired Jay Leno to do "The Tonight Show" mostly on the grounds that he was not only tremendously funny, but a team player as well. Now, when they perhaps need a man of similar character more than ever, they throw Conan away. The only thing I can say is this: I'm with Coco.

Dave Coffey is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at dscoffey@student.umass.edu.

Dems need to regain initiative

Nick Milano

On Wednesday night, President Obama will face the nation in delivering his second State of the Union address. With his domestic political agenda in a state of disarray, he must pivot off of the results of Massachusetts' special election to reintroduce himself and his goals to a nation of weary voters. He rolled into office over a year ago with more momentum and more of a mandate than President Bush ever had, and yet a year later, the only major legislation that made it through Congress was a stimulus bill derided by many as too small and too dependent upon tax breaks. Obama has demonstrated none of the must do attitude that defined Bush's presidency. Taking back control of his presidency and his platform will have to start with Wednesday's speech.

As a young voter and a liberal Democrat, I represent two important demographics that the president has begun to lose. Young voters came out in hordes to vote and volunteer for him. Liberal Democrats perceived the Democratic control of Congress and a Democratic president as a sure sign that progressive policies would be forced upon the Republicans, much like Bush's conservative policies were forced on Democrats and he never had the numbers in Congress like Obama does.

On the stimulus, Obama wanted a bipartisan bill, so he made the package much smaller than what many economists thought was needed. He then backed down when Republicans demanded that much of it be based in tax cuts, even though the evidence proved they are less efficient than government spending. When the bill passed Congress, no Republicans in the House voted for it.

President Obama's second year, beginning with the State of the Union address, must be ground in determination – determination to not let Republicans seize and water down his message.

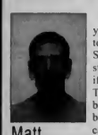
In the Senate, only three Republicans did and since then, one (Arlen Specter) switched his enrollment to the Democratic Party.

On health care, President Obama dictated a hands-off approach and let Congress control the fate of the bill. The result has been disastrous. Sen. Baucus' Gang of Six guided the bill to the middle and even after it was sent to the Senate floor, conservative Democrats forced the bill further to the middle. Obama never cracked the whip and the delays have doomed the bill. Now, there is increasing doubt over whether any of it will ever pass since state Rep. Scott Brown became the 41st Republican senator, thus enabling a filibuster. The future of health care reform is doubtful, at best.

If someone told me this is what would take place in his first year, I would have been in shock. President Obama's second year, beginning with the State of the Union address, must be ground in determination – determination to not let Republicans seize and water down his message.

He must shift to a more populist message. If the election in Massachusetts has any lasting impact, it will be that the Republican who believes in tax cuts and big business won the populist vote. Coakley's ineptitude at campaigning and a shocking inability to connect to voters lost to Scott Brown's pick up truck. Not much of a surprise.

President Obama's second state of the union must mark a return to his populist campaign style. Despite his Ivy League education, his ability to connect with and inspire people sets him apart from most politicians. He must be able to connect to them on a different platform – his recent announcement to tax banks and to enact legislation to limit their sizes are two very populist messages that must be repeated ad nauseum. He must focus on job creation. He must lose his hopes for bipartisanship – when he controls both Houses of Congress, it means more people support the Democratic Party platform than do the Republican platform.



The State of the Union address must be just the beginning. President Obama cannot hope to give one good speech and hope that Congress does the rest. He chose bipartisanship over what many thought was best for the country. By focusing on populist messages and seizing the initiative, Obama can whip Congress into action and limit Democratic losses in the 2010 mid-term elections. Obama has to follow the State of the Union address with a tour around the country, detailing the many ways that banks have taken advantage of lax regulation. Half-measures and letting Congress dictate terms of legislation will only continue to result in watered down attempts at reform. Obama must change the direction of his presidency before it is too late.

Nick Milano is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at nmilano@student.umass.edu.

Five reasons why you should support unlimited campaign spending by corporations and unions:

1) Politicians won't have to get fat at the public trough anymore.
2) Old: pickup truck, new: pickup Ferrari.
3) We can get rid of elections, auction off federal offices and use the proceeds to pay off the national debt.
4) Politicians will be required to have patches on their suits identifying their sponsors.
5) John Olver and Richard Neal need their solid-gold toilet seats.

Nine years of fighting and still no clear idea

Matt Kushi

Almost nine years since the terror attacks of Sept. 11 and we still don't know if the "War on Terror" is winnable. It is the most basic question we can ask when we consider military action, and we have no answer.

This "War on Terror" has been taken up on several fronts. We started on the soil of Afghanistan. Then we inexplicably nearly abandoned Afghanistan to go to Iraq. Now we find ourselves back in the land of Afghanistan. But we have no answer to the question of whether or not we can be successful.

This question seems like it should be so easy to answer. Instead, it is a rather challenging and complex question. This is because we have yet to establish clear objectives on a large scale, like what winning the "War on Terror" actually means. Yes, President Obama has outlined clear objectives, but has not yet established what those objectives are supposed to accomplish.

We have yet to establish clear objectives on a large scale, like what winning the "War on Terror" actually means.

In order to deem this war winnable, we need to clarify what our objectives are in a broad sense. They can't constantly be changing. In recent history, controversy over the role of our military has come from exactly this problem – unclear objectives.

In Vietnam in the 1960s and 1970s, the objective changed from containing communism to creating a democracy, though democracy was the minority faction within the country. The objectives went from getting rid of the influence of Ho Chi Minh to killing as many of his followers as we could, and hoping that brute strength would change the country. It did not.

In Iraq, we have more problems. We claimed to have left Afghanistan to go to Iraq to stop the terrorist movement. However, in doing so we left Afghanistan and our initial target to eliminate in Osama Bin Laden. The Bush administration claimed it was because of "weapons of mass destruction" and Saddam Hussein. Then it was suspected that we had gone for Iraq's oil. In order to justify our mission to Iraq, whatever it was, we claimed we needed to democratize Iraq.

When we invaded Iraq, I felt that we needed to only be fighting in Afghanistan. I do not feel Iraq is justified. Afghanistan was where the fighting started and though it is true that fighting can spread to different regions, as the recent activity in Yemen has shown, there was no reason to abandon Afghanistan.

While I still support the reasons that we are in Afghanistan, I believe we need to clarify our overall objective. What are we trying to accomplish through these defined objectives that we keep outlining? We are fighting to eliminate the leaders of al-Qaeda and the Taliban. This can help contain terrorism.

However, if we are to succeed in this war, it will not be a victory with a decisive end like World War II. It will be something that we will need to continue to monitor.

In order to have a chance to accomplish this, we need to stay focused on our goals. Looking out for these countries' inhabitants is important. The commander in Afghanistan, Gen. Stanley McChrystal, claimed in an ABC News interview with Diane Sawyer that the Afghans support the United States because they believe in us. We must not be reckless as we were in Vietnam and Iraq. We must be supportive without being domineering.

One of the biggest reasons for our failures in Vietnam and Iraq is that we tried to convert the population to democracy.

In Vietnam, this failed because the democratic faction in South Vietnam was the minority. We came in and tried to dictate and guide this faction against the will of the people. Thus, it failed.

In Iraq, we again tried to convert the population to democracy. Some will say it works but it is fractured at best. A large reason why this hasn't worked smoothly is that we are fighting against religious cultures. One can change a heart or a mind given the right circumstances but one country alone cannot change a culture. That is just what we are fighting – a culture. Although there is a president of Afghanistan, how pure is their system?

Despite the differences of opinion on policies, one thing that we must continue to do is support our troops. In the end, they are fighting for the United States of America and are not the ones deciding the policies that we are for or against.

It is still too early to tell if this push into Afghanistan will succeed. It has a chance to, but we need to stick the course of what President Obama has detailed in his objectives, including the withdrawal plan, and we need to establish what those objectives will accomplish in the larger picture. Only then will we be able to determine if this war was a success or not.

Matt Kushi is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mkushi@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, JANUARY 25, 2010

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Epic dance battle ensues at FAC

By Elyse Horowitz
Collegian Staff

This weekend marked what some would call the official start to the semester, with events sponsored by the University Programming Council (UPC).

Thursday night's kick-off event, "UMass' Best Dance Crew," brought crowds that packed every corner of the Fine Arts Center, which holds approximately 19,000 students. According to Wing Lau, a representative from UPC, students began to line up for the event at 6:30 p.m., over an hour before it was set to begin. Once the doors were opened, squeals and shrieks could be heard from the herd of students trying to rush to their seats.

Once inside the auditorium, students were able to appreciate the on-stage disc jockey spinning live hip-hop, and most were seen dancing in their seats before the show began. After a delayed start of about 10 minutes, it seemed that the audience was growing increasingly anxious to see the upcoming performances.

First onto the stage were UPC members Charles Flowers and Josh Dodds, who were forced to fight with the DJ's volume before getting the attention of the crowd. After making a point to mention the table set up in the FAC lobby collecting donations for the victims of the recent earthquake in Haiti, Flowers and Dodds introduced the four upcoming student dance groups, as well as the special guests of the evening, MTV's "America's Best Dance Crew's" first-season finalists, Kaba Modern.

The first dance group to hit the stage was made up of five girls clad in fitted white T-shirts and black spandex shorts or pants. The most impressive talent of this group, who call themselves Straight Hip Hop, was the amount of gymnastics incorporated into their three-song mix of music, though the crowd seemed more excited by the girls' shaking hips. While Straight Hip Hop certainly brought strong moves and attitude to the competition, they were not invited back for the second round of dancing later on in the evening.

Charles and Dodds came out again to give an introduction of the next performing group, Insanely Prestigious, calling them "award winning." The audience soon realized that these six girls and one male made up a step team, who successfully stomped their way into the second round.

Each performer's moves were well synchronized with the other members of the team, some even managing to step and keep the beat while sitting down on the stage. They were able to rhyme and chant throughout their short performance.

The third group of the night was the all-female Dynamic Motion Dance Team, who bounded onto the stage in matching DMDT tank tops and black spandex pants. Their performance consisted of a slower selection of music, and their movements resembled more of a jazz and lyrical stream than the previous two sets. While the girls impressed the audience members with their show-quality leaps and flexibility, the Dynamic Motion Dance Team failed to secure a spot in the finals.

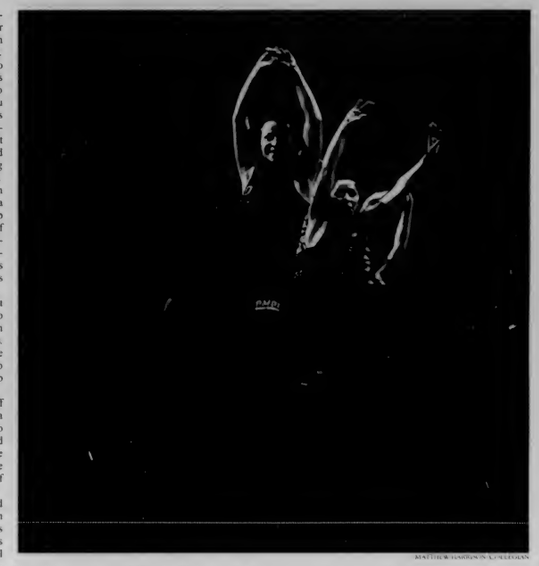
In an effort to keep the crowd's enthusiasm, Charles and Dodds once again hit the stage, this time with free T-shirts to distribute to the screaming swarm of students in the FAC. In an effort to keep the evening moving along smoothly, the boys quickly brought out the final student dance group, Salsa Fusion.

Seven girls in different colored hooded sweatshirts immediately came onto the stage, beginning their dance routine with movements to match the sounds of a car engine revving up at the start of their mix of songs. Their movements were synchronized, and seemed almost interpretive in nature.

After the first half of their routine, four male dancers ran onto stage in silver vests, and the girls exited for a costume change. When they returned, the set seemed transformed into a Bollywood feel, both in dance style and apparel, which was complete with small bells on the sides of the girls' wide-legged pants. Their broad steps and precise arm movements rose loud cheers from the crowd, ultimately leading the group into the final round.

Finally, the MCs rewarded the audience with what they had been anxiously awaiting all night. The six members of the California-based dance group Kaba Modern were welcomed to the stage with deafening cheers. Their set began with The Whispers' Rock Steady, a slower selection so that they could showcase their precise movements, which varied from small arm pumps to an entire body roll.

While the judges collaborated to tally their results, Charles and Dodds called upon the audience members to come up to the stage for an impromptu dance-off, where more free T-shorts were distributed. This happened at various points throughout the night, and it seemed as if the boys were ill-prepared for the situation, as some of the dancing would have made pole dancers squirm.



The second round of dancing began with three of the male members of Salsa Fusion, who pumped their bodies up from the floor in time with the sound of heartbeat. The rest of the routine consisted of broad hip movements and constant jumping from all of the members of the group, which seemed to impress the student audience.

Insanely Prestigious showed that they had a singer amongst them, who introduced the group's next routine with her vocals as well as her dance moves. Their performance involved lifting one member in the air as she continued to keep in time with the rest of the step team.

After another audience dance-off which brought break dancers and a few "worms" onto the stage, the two final dance crews held a head-to-head competition, and Salsa Fusion came out with their own step dance routine in an attempt to show up the talent of Insanely Prestigious.

Once again, Kaba Modern graced the audience with their talents in an encore performance with movements that were as strong and as smooth as if they were performed by Michael Jackson, smiling all the while and making their actions seem as easy as walking down the street. One Kaba Modern member broke into the robot with ease, which brought shrieks from the crowd, amongst many calls of, "I love you!" and various marriage proposals.

As a surprise feature, Arnel Calvario, Kaba Modern's founder and manager, came out onto the stage to start of a round of solos for each group member. When asked later about this section of the night, the group members revealed that they each still become nervous when performing improvisational dance moves, as they did during their solo sets.

MATTHEW HARRISON/COLLEGIAN

Inspired by the hit MTV show, "America's Best Dance Crew," the University Programming Council hosted its own spin on the competition. The Dynamic Motion Dance Team were one of the many featured acts.

After some additional announcements made by UPC members regarding upcoming UPC events, such as UMass' Last Comic Standing and Battle of the Bands, two trophies were awarded to the top two finalists in UMass' Best Dance Crew, Insanely Prestigious took second place, as Salsa Fusion was crowned the winner. Both groups got to share the stage with Kaba Modern, and Calvario once again mentioned the great need for financial support for the victims of the earthquake in Haiti. At this point, students were standing in clumps on the sides of the stage to get a closer look at the guest performers.

According to Calvario, performing in shows at universities, such as UMass, brings the Kaba Modern crew back to their roots, as they started dancing together in college. As for their stint on MTV's America's Best Dance Crew, "it just happened," said Calvario in an interview after the show. "It is a blessing to keep doing what you do."

The Jan. 21 event was also special to the six dancers because it was the first time they had been together onstage since one member had spent time as a back-up dancer for Britney Spears' Circus tour.

Calvario stressed that it is most important for younger dancers and developing groups to "always keep an open mind for different styles" and that the essence of dancing is through the connection to music.

Elyse Horowitz can be reached at ehhorowi@student.umass.edu.

Martinez, B.o.B. and Leslie impress crowds

By Garth Brody
Collegian Staff

Friday night's Welcome Back Concert at the Fine Arts Center kicked off the spring semester with a bang (not to mention more than a few unintentional feedback squeals). Hosted by the University Programming Council (UPS) at the University of Massachusetts, and anchored by two of its most enthusiastic members, the concert maintained a uplifting atmosphere from beginning to end.

The first performer, Vicci Martinez, hit her vocal climaxes early and often. Armed with an acoustic guitar and a voice that betrayed her tiny stature (which was revealed when she was dwarfed by the equipment crew), she performed soulful folk blues for a short but powerful set.

With big, open chord progressions under soaring, top-of-her-lungs vocals, and lyrics like "Believe in all of your dreams, and live out your destiny," Vicci's performance was fit for a self-help show. She closed with a haphazard cover of "Billie Jean," apologizing about halfway through because she "forgot the chords to the song."

This left the crowd understandably confused, but they were all back on the same page soon enough, thanks to the UPC ladies' crash course in "Jersey Shore" fist-pumping. Appropriately energized, they welcomed B.o.B. (a.k.a. Bobby Ray) with immediate and near-constant dancing, which is even more impressive considering the concert hall venue, fully furnished with rows of seating.

He opened with "I Feed These Streets," wherein he shared rapping duties with a recording of himself. The effect was, fortunately, more Run-DMC than Ashley Simpson, summoning a hype man from the speakers to aid the one on stage with him.

From there, the set did some unexpected things. In the middle of another contemporary hip-hop track (in the dime-a-dozen style of T.I. or Young Jeezy), the DJ cut the beat and B.o.B. began a disarming freestyle. Carefully building suspense for the jarring transition to come, he removed his aviators and lyrically confessed his transgressions against (in so many words) keeping it real – wearing a trendy grill to fit in, etc.

In the closing moments of the freestyle, the four members of his backing band took the stage, and Bobby Ray himself (it is safe to say that at this point, he was no longer B.o.B.) turned and grabbed an electric guitar. In a fluid, crow-pleasing transition, the band struck up on some rousing, high-tempo arena rock.

The unexpected musical styles kept coming, as Bobby's tunes ranged in influence from Gnarls Barkley to Björk to Coldplay. This, along with a goofy and mobile sense of showmanship, helped keep his set fresh and entertaining. He moved among the front row spectators during one song, and during another, brought a girl up on stage to serenade her.

After Bobby Ray (and a seemingly endless parade of interim antics like a "jimmy-shoe" demonstration and audience dance contest), headliner Ryan Leslie trotted out to an epic rock overture. He continued the spectacle with Usher-inspired dance moves, big-beat synth funk and a stage presence that had the audience swooning.

One girl in particular was so enamored with him that she attempted numerous times to pull him from the stage into her open arms. Though unsuccessful in this endeavor, she did succeed in winning Leslie's heart to a certain extent – convinced by her passes, he changed the order of his set and moved right into his particularly steamy "Valentine."

And it only got sexier and sexier; he one-upped Bobby Ray and sang a very tender "Happy Birthday" to one of the UPC hosts, who literally shook at the touch of his hand. The rest of his performance merited several collective swoons from half of the crowd, and his undeniably bombastic grooves floored the other half.

Of course, they were only floored as long as Leslie allowed them to be. With a cool confidence, he asked the seated audience if they were "ready to do it for real" right before busting into the bassy, slinking "Addiction," bringing the suddenly energized and mobile crowd right along with him.

In keeping with Vicci Martinez and Bobby Ray's inspirational messages of individuality and following one's dreams and the like, Leslie preceded one of his songs with the declaration: "Students of UMass – if you believe that anything is possible, make some noise."

Okay, it was all pretty cheesy, but the performers sold it beautifully. Massively palatable and inescapably uplifting, this Friday's concert was a thoroughly satisfying reminder of how far a professional studio backing band, plenty of stage experience, and well-designed concert hall acoustics can take a show.

Garth Brody can be reached at gbrody@student.umass.edu

MATTHEW HARRISON/COLLEGIAN

Vicci Martinez, B.o.B. and Ryan Leslie impressed audiences at the Fine Arts Center on Friday night. The University Programming Council arranged the concert, along with other events, to start off the new semester.

Check out our EXCLUSIVE slideshows from "UMass' Best Dance Crew" and the Welcome Back Concert on www.dailycollegian.com

Vampire Weekend's latest album "Contra" was number one on the Billboard Top 200 just before this past weekend. The self-produced CD is nearly flawless, but could have arrived on the scene a bit sooner.

CD Review: Vampire Weekend's 'Contra'

By Kevin Gallagher
Collegian Correspondent

Just before the weekend, Vampire Weekend's (VW) "Contra" album hit number one on the Billboard 200. In order to understand this achievement, we might require a cursory glance at their first effort – the self-titled Vampire Weekend album was largely simplistic in its verses, choruses and instrumentation. This formed part of its appeal – it was, after all, clever and refreshing melodic pop. As soon as some tracks hit the blogosphere, VW found themselves the darlings of both mainstream and indie media. They were immediately signed to XL Recordings, and many commentators, such as Spin magazine, named them the best new band of 2008. But the greatest question of all was whether they could repeat their success – make whatever formula they were using work again.

In fact, their new album, "Contra," shouldn't be properly understood except in direct contrast with its predecessor. Back when it came out, the most immediate objections people could think of about VW were the Ivy League clichés and playfully obscure references of frontman Ezra Koenig's lyrics. One of the problems their debut suffered is that songs which tend to get stuck in your head are ultimately liable to be perceived as annoying. Other detractors chose to see the genre they'd created – "Upper West Side Soweto" in a long tradition of Westerners appropriating third-world indigenous cultural art forms. Critics made easy and lazy comparisons to Paul Simon's 1986 album "Graceland." But as other reviewers will likely note, VW have made a point, which they've stated in interviews, not to repeat the work of their debut. And it turns out that the band we hear on "Contra" is nothing like the one we previously knew.

The cool-down period of post-touring which resulted in this sophomore effort was clearly a fruitful one. The band has evolved from four college graduates seemingly messing around, not really being sure of what they're doing, to four proficient musicians who complement each other flawlessly and foster bold experimentation with sound and songwriting. VW is now a real band, which no one should be embarrassed of admitting to like, who are engaged in the constant reinvention that is essential to keeping music new and interesting. Their keyboards, composed and performed by member and producer Rostam Batmanglij, have graduated from Casio to Korg. What was previously accompanied only by strings is now adorned with various mallets, synthesizers and odd electronic rhythms. The songs also benefit from substantially more parts, bridges and interludes. As before, virtually every track has the potential to be a hit; there is very little filler here.

One can admire how "Contra" was entirely self-produced, and therefore not beholden to any interference, and the basic rock ensemble (guitar, bass, drums) complemented by electronics seems a logical extension of how pop music should sound in this new decade. Their potential reminds one of the Talking Heads in the early 1980s; continuing to bear the diverse influences of Afro-pop, various world music, and even Ska and Trance. Obvious singles like "White Sky" and "Cousins" continue a pattern of eccentric vocals, hooks and intricately composed instrumental patterns. Koenig's lyrics are often strikingly clever and imaginative. The band's appeal is largely built on genre-bending and exploration. While they became known and popular faster than most bands, they are evidently determined to hold on to the attention, with the success of "Contra" therefore affirming that VW is eager to stay relevant and worthy of out ears.

In view of all this praise, you might be wondering: What is there to criticize? In a world where slightly avant-garde acts like Animal Collective and Dirty Projectors, (Koenig once toured with them as a member) are easily becoming popular, the revelation that is "Contra" only seems a little too late. The liberal inclusion of synthesizers, which sometimes borders on kitsch, has its precedents in the synth-pop of the 1980s or electronica of the 1990s. The tracks on "Contra," especially their idiosyncratic rhythms and melodies, are highly constructed entities, which feel like a reaction against the background music that challenge or demand attention. One can only wonder why "Contra" hadn't arrived sooner. The answer is that Vampire Weekend is a direct beneficiary of the new media explosion – which has allowed more artists to reach more people, at the cost of the destruction of the music industry's former profit model.

Kevin Gallagher can be reached at kmgal0@student.umass.edu.

Short swaps silly for sinister in 'Damages'

By Neal Justin
Star Tribune (Minneapolis)

Martin Short first practiced law in 1979 as the naive, bumbling Tucker Kerlin in the short-lived but beloved sitcom "The Associates."

Five years later, he slipped into the snakeskin of Nathan Thurm, a chain-smoking, paranoid corporate attorney who made regular appearances on "Saturday Night Live." So you'd expect that the comic's latest legal turn on TV would have him greasing his hair into a pompadour and pratfalling into the jury box.

But the appointment is "Damages," one of the chilliest, darkest series on the air. His character, Leonard Widmore, the consigliere for a Bernie Madoff-inspired con man (Len Cariou), has no time for shtick.

Take his introductory scene. While walking briskly through New York City with a producer for Diane Sawyer who's eager to talk to his client, he points out some dog poop on the sidewalk, but the warning is so off-putting, so curt, that she thinks he's smearing her – and steps right in it.

With just a hint of modulation, Short has turned the smile that made us sympathize with Ed Grimley and Jiminy Glick into a smug, sarcastic weapon.

It's not the first time "Damages" has cast against type. Producers helped Ted Danson take a giant stride away from his Sam Malone image by putting him in the role of Arthur Frobisher, a billionaire who would throw his employees under the bus for an extra nickel. They also challenged "SNL's" Darrell Hammond to perform his most daunting impression: The Deacon, an assassin so cool and collected that Dracula could jump out of a closet and he'd merely yawn.

This season producers have cast Lily Tomlin as the con man's wife, but that's not a complete shocker. Anyone who has seen her onscreen work with Robert Altman or her offscreen temper tantrum on the set of "I Heart Huckabees" knows Edith Ann can play grownup roles.

It's Short who throws you for a loop – and that's exactly the intent.

"One of the things we strive for on 'Damages' is that nothing is as it seems," said Todd Kessler, who co-created the show with his brother Glenn and Daniel Zelman. "It continues to just amaze us to work with actors and performers who aren't always given the opportunities to do something other than what they're primarily known for."

In Short's case, that would be over-the-top outcasts – the accidental cowboy who's practically swallowed by his hat in "Three Amigos," the store clerk injected with courage (and Dennis Quaid) in "Innerspace," the synchronized swimmer who can't swim on "Saturday Night Live." But Short doesn't see a huge chasm between comedic and dramatic roles.

"I think of myself as a character actor, and you play characters in a sincere fashion," said Short, who also went dark for a 2005 appearance on "Law & Order: Special Victims Unit."

"Even if you're playing Franck from 'Father of the Bride,' if you're trying to be funny, you won't be. But if you sincerely play him as this eccentric person who exists in the world, than you're basically acting the character, who happens to be unusual. To me, it's just what the role is and how you can effectively give the author what he had hoped to achieve."

Short did play for laughs, when the cameras were off. Tomlin, a pretty quick wit herself, said she almost had to throw a blanket over her head to keep from cracking up before a big scene. Glenn Close, who plays the complicated cutthroat attorney Patty Hewes, said having comics around makes sense for a lot of reasons.

"I can't tell you how invigorating, inspiring and fun it is," said Close, who has won back-to-back Emmys for her starring role in the show. "You have actors that can do anything that's asked of them and have a million ideas.

"Because of the pace we work at, in many ways it's like improv because you have to be quick on your feet. You have to be able to learn lines very fast, and then to be able to kind of move around in those lines and make it authentic and believable."

Anyone who's still skeptical should keep the show's track record in mind: In just two seasons, "Damages" has collected seven Emmy nominations for acting, and Short is poised to join the likes of William Hurt and Zeljko Ivanek in that club.

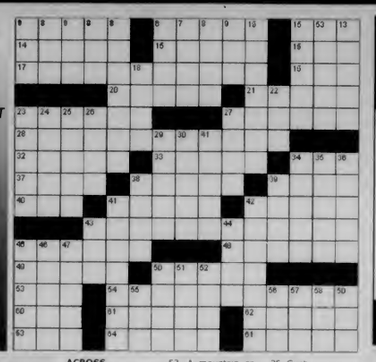
So who might be the next member?

"Carrot Top," Short said. "He's in the next season."

SPRING BREAK
JAMAICA
Once you go you know.
Spring Break comes to life...
Live Concerts
Awesome VIP Parties
Beautiful Beaches
Scenic Cliff Jumping
Spectacular Sunsets
Book Your Trip Today! Contact:
Sun Splash Tours
www.sunsplashtours.com
1.800.426.7710
STS Student Travel Services
1.800.648.4849
www.ststravel.com

THE BOLTWOOD PROJECT™
Serving others since 1969 – and STILL making a difference!
A STUDENT / COMMUNITY SERVICE LEARNING PROGRAM
(an RSO and Dept. of Landscape Architecture & Regional Planning sponsored prog.)
REACH OUT—AND BECOME A SPECIAL FRIEND TO PEOPLE WITH SPECIAL NEEDS
Your life will NEVER be the same!
••EARN 1-2 CREDITS ••GAIN VALUABLE EXPERIENCE ••REWARDING, CHALLENGING, and FUN
Spring Semester 2010 — Recruitment Nights
You must attend ONE of these meetings. No exceptions, even if you have participated before!
6:00-8:00 PM (Note: Prompt starting time!!!)
Campus Center Basement • Room 101 • Jan. 25 (Mon) • Jan. 26 (Tues) • Jan. 27 (Wed)
•Assignment notification ONLY Thurs. Jan. 28 at Bollwood table CC Concourse
••Telephone inquiries YOU (or a friend) must pick up the notification letter!!!
Volunteer, while earning credit!

Don't make your girlfriend mad at you... WRITE FOR ARTS!
EMAIL arts@dailycollegian.com



Off The Wall Games
Warhammer 40,000
Worldwake pre-release tournament on Thursday, January 28 at 6 PM -Sealed Deck - $20 Entry Fee
First prize a box of Worldwake, scan www.offthewallgamestore.com for details and more prizes!
Magic the Gathering
Discount role-playing games, Collectible card games (CCGs), Miniature war games and board games, fun for everyone!
Hours: 10-10 Wednesday-Sunday, 12-10 Monday, Closed Tue
413-586-5451

COMICS

WE WANT YOUR COMICS!
Put your comics in front of thousands of readers.
Questions? Comments? E-mail us: comics@dailycollegian.com
Friend us on Facebook: "Collegian Comix"

CROSSWORD

SNOWZEES Bar & Guitar
Formerly Seven O's
WESTERN MASS #1 LIVE MUSIC SPOT
WE'RE LOOKING FOR STUDENT BANDS!!!

CITY FOOTWEAR
Students and Staff of the five Colleges Eligible for 10% off with ID
nike New Era Clarks Timberland
34 Pleasant Street · Northampton
413.341.5581

SUDOKU

	5			8	1
						7
2						5		1
	2	7	4
3			2				6
9				6		2
4	1		9
				1			8	7

NEW OPEN SECTION: GEN. ED.

SCANDIN 376
VIKINGS AND THEIR STORIES: SAGA LITERATURE
Tu-Th, 9:30-10:45, Herter 224
Readings (in translation) of classic Old Icelandic sagas. Nonfiction narratives about families, battles, and politics in a blood feud society a millennium ago. Taught in English.
umass.edu/german UMASS AMHERST

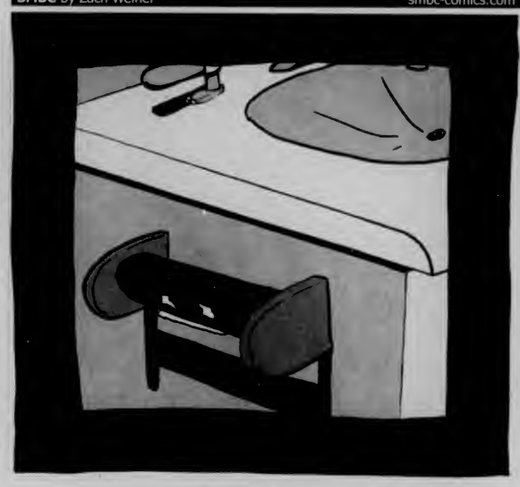
ACROSS
1. French for "After"
6. Scour
11. Rodent
14. Sag
15. Home
16. How long something has existed
17. Depressed
19. Lair
20. Sharp sides of blades
21. The remains of buildings after destruction
23. Crave
27. Anagram of "Sortie"
28. Insertion of a fertilized egg
32. A long-handled oar
33. Gale
34. Perceive visually
37. Not his
38. Pauses
39. Serene
40. So far
41. Lawful
42. Anagram of "Brush"
43. Cease association with
45. Bushes
48. Bowman
49. Vassal
50. First letter of the Greek alphabet
53. A mountain on Crete
54. Declarations of intent
60. Conditioned Emotional Response
61. American aloe
62. Weeps
63. S
64. Ran easily
65. A medieval serf

DOWN
1. Increase
2. Not amateur
3. Propel a boat with oars
4. Anagram of "One"
5. Harmonious (archaic)
6. A fabric with a long coarse nap
7. The center of an object
8. Furrows
9. Utilize
10. Where one sleeps
11. Half-diameters
12. Spy
13. Taut or rigid
18. Biblical garden
22. Vase
23. Good-looking (British slang)
24. Master of Ceremonies
25. Gush
26. Ails
27. Term of address for men
29. Genus of hemlock spruce
30. Collection of maps
31. Fees
34. Abraham's wife
35. Wash out with a solvent
36. A piece of hot glowing coal
38. Not more
39. Stylish
41. Not conservative 42. Scrape or rub
43. Excavated
44. An island of central Hawaii
46. Cut
46. Conceals
47. Raises up on the hind legs
50. As Soon As Possible
51. Strong affection
52. Appealed earnestly
55. Self-importance
56. Anger
57. Petroleum
58. Prefix indicating recent or new
59. Supersonic transport

DON'T FORGET TO SUBMIT YO COMICS, FOO!
COMICS@DAILYCOLLIGIAN.COM

DEW TOUR WINTER
mount snow
February 4-7, 2010
ALLSPORTS.COM

QUOTE OF THE DAY



In my sentences, I go where no man has gone before ... I am a boon to the English language.

George W. Bush

Chainsawsuit by Kris Straub chainsawsuit.com

SMBC by Zach Weiner smbc-comics.com

God doesn't love you.

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

A GREAT JOB! Spend your summer in a lakefront cabin in Maine. If you're looking to spend this summe outdoors, have fun while you work, and make lifelong friends, then look no further.
CAMP MATAPONI, a residential girls camp in Maine, has female/male summertime openings for Land Sports, Waterfront (samm crafts, skiing, life guarding, WSI, boat drivers), Ropes Course, Tennis, H.B. Riding, Arts & Crafts, Theater, Cooking, Gymnastics, Dance, Videography, Group Leaders and more. Top salaries plus room/board & travel provided. Call us today at 1-561-748-3684 or apply online at www.campmataponi.com.

Online Bookkeepers needed. To earn $200 per duty, contact john.culcer@gmail.com.

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necessary. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

EMPLOYMENT

Town of Amherst seeks swim instructors and lifeguards for swim program at Totman pool. Must have LG,FA and CPR 9.26 Hr Tues and Thurs 4:45-6:45pm and Sat 10-noon, Feb- April. Applications: www.lsse.org or email resume to bilzb@amherstma.gov

WANTED

Part-Time Personal Care Attendant about 10-12 hrs/week. Flexible Hours. Please call Patrick 413-275-7928

ZoasOutdoos is seeking adventuresome people to be summer guides for whitewater rafting and zip-line canopy tours. Join our training program and spend the summer splashing through rapids or zipping through trees. Apicants should be great with people, have a positive attitude and be comfortable working as a team or independantly. Application dealine: Feb. 15th. Call 800-532-7483 or see www.zoaroutdoor.com/jobs.htm for an application.

FOR RENT

28 Stockbridge St: 4 bedroom house- 2 baths, living room, eat in kitchen, pantry, laundry, finished basement, yard, 2 car garage, 1.5 miles from campus! $2,575/mo + www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

How Suite it is! $650 includes all. 10 minutes from Umass, share with father, 8 year old daughter, 2 cats. Quiet, private, friendly. Furnished bedroom, seperate bathroom, deck entrance in 2 story house. Free cable/wifi. Short/long term lease option. Jonathan 413-222-3006

SERVICES

Pregnant? Want to talk? Call birthright 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 Hour hotline 1-800-550-4900 www.birthright.org

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20 - Feb. 18
You will never experience the level of love that Jim Nantz has for Peyton Manning.

pisces Feb. 19 - Mar. 20
Your days are much better spent finding out if the spongy white stuff on an orange peel is edible.

aries Mar. 21 - Apr. 19
For everything you have not earned in life, you can buy on eBay! Interesting trades may be accepted.

taurus Apr. 20 - May. 20
Whenever you are are in a hostage situation, do not forget to set your DVR on your cell phone.

gemini May. 21 - Jun. 21
Do you think there were punch-buggy games in the 1800s? It's fun to think of bruised knees and crumpets sometimes.

cancer Jun. 22 - Jul. 22
There is only one explanation for your grades. It must be because of some hot tub time machine.

leo Jul. 23 - Aug. 22
How many times do you need to play Dead or Alive: Extreme Beach Volleyball? Though physics engines have come along way.

virgo Aug. 23 - Sept. 22
People with terrible tans and morals are making more money than you can dream of.

libra Sept. 23 - Oct. 22
You much choose between team sudoku or team crossword? Only the true puzzle will survive this deadly matchup!

scorpio Oct. 23 - Nov. 21
Whatever happened to jerry curls? Aren't you sick of buying Chia Pets for nostalgia?

sagittarius Nov. 22 - Dec. 21
There is no need to verbally assault your pizza. Please, think of the pizza.

capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 19
One day you will be trapped in a room and tormented by Frank Caliendo's terrible impressions.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, JANUARY 25, 2010

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Vermont takes second contest

Four-game winning streak snapped with 3-0 shutout loss

By Jay Asser
Collegian Staff

Returning back home to the Mullins Center, the Massachusetts hockey team recorded its fourth straight victory before getting its winning streak snapped by Hockey East foe Vermont in a physical, penalty-filled contest.

Vermont	3
UMass	0
UMass	3
Vermont	1

The No. 15 Minutemen (15-9-0, 10-7-0 HEA) received a strong performance from goaltender Paul Dainton in their 3-1 win Saturday, only to be shut out, 3-0, by the Catamounts' Rob Madore on Sunday for the first time this season.

Unlike the contest the previous night, the second game of the series saw more penalties whistled, beginning in the first period. A total of seven penalties were called in the first 20 minutes with UMass getting the edge in power-play opportunities.

The Catamounts (12-8-2, 6-7-2 HEA) were the team to capitalize however, as sophomore defenseman Drew MacKenzie scored his first goal of the season 12 minutes, 31 seconds into the game to give Vermont the early lead.

The second frame crawled along sluggishly as eight more penalties were whistled. Neither team's power-play unit was able to score, as both penalty kill squads played well.

Vermont, however, added to its lead with an even-strength goal from Wahsontiio Stacey 7:40 into the period, putting it up 2-0 heading into the final 20 minutes.

In the third period, UMass outshot Vermont, 12-6, but couldn't find the back of the net. Madore, whose uncle passed away earlier in the week, played well with a heavy heart, making 31 saves to hand the Minutemen their first shutout loss.

After only four penalties being whistled on Saturday, special teams played a larger role in Sunday's contest. Entering the weekend, the Catamounts penalty kill disarmed 40-of-42 previous opponent man-advantage chances. Despite giving up numerous opportunities Sunday, Vermont managed to kill off all 11 Minutemen power-play opportunities over the weekend.

"Last night was not a story of special teams, but tonight was a story of special teams," Vermont coach Kevin Sneddon said. "I think our penalty kill did a fabulous job tonight. [UMass] is one of the best power play units in the country. To limit their opportunities, that was probably the difference in the game."

On Saturday night, the Minutemen got things started quickly as junior forward James Marcou put UMass ahead, 1-0, with a goal in the first 21 seconds of play. Despite only scoring his eighth goal of the season, Marcou added on to his nation-leading 39 total points.

The Minutemen got their first power-play opportunity 3:16 into the contest, but failed to score on the stingy Vermont penalty kill.

Nearly midway through the first period, the Catamounts answered with a score of their own as senior forward Jay Anctil beat Dainton for his first point of the season.

Towards the end of the second frame, the Minutemen received another power-play opportunity when Vermont had too many players on the ice. UMass created chances to score and pelted Madore, but failed to come away with a goal as the Vermont penalty kill once again kept the puck out of the net.

With five seconds remaining in the period, though, the Minutemen received a goal from sophomore forward Casey Wellman, who caught the Catamounts in an untimely line change, to head into the final frame with a 2-1 lead.

In a mostly uneventful third period where no penalties were whistled and the only goal scored was a UMass insurance goal by Wellman with a minute remaining, the Minutemen held off Vermont for a 3-1 victory.

The two goals for Wellman give him a total of 19 for the season, placing him first in the nation ahead of Nick Johnson of Sacred Heart.

Despite the Catamounts' penalty kill keeping the UMass power-play unit under wraps, the Minutemen received enough offense for Dainton, who played well for the fourth consecutive game, allowing only one score while making 25 saves.

After splitting the weekend games, UMass is now tied with Boston College for second in the Hockey East, five points behind conference-leader New Hampshire.

The Minutemen return to action this weekend when they head on the road to face Boston University and Providence.

Jay Asser can be reached at jasser@student.umass.edu.

Bob Bernstein / Collegian

UMass goaltender Paul Dainton guards the Minutemen's net in Saturday's 3-1 victory over No. 17 Vermont at the Mullins Center. Saturday's win placed UMass in a second-place tie with Boston College in the Hockey East Standings with 20 points.

Nation's top scorers lead UM

By Jeffrey R. Larnard
Collegian Staff

With James Marcou, the nation's leader in points and assists, and Casey Wellman, the nation's second leading goal scorer, it is an uncommon thing to see the Massachusetts hockey team go a game without one of the two scoring a point.

Saturday night saw the two combine to score five points on two goals by Wellman and a goal and an assist by Marcou as the No. 15 Minutemen came away with a 3-1 victory over No. 17 Vermont.

When Marcou (eight goals, 31 assists) and Wellman (19 goals, 13 assists) each score in a game and combine for five or more points in a contest, the Minutemen (15-9-0, 10-7-0 Hockey East) have gone 4-0 this season.

But on Sunday afternoon, the Catamounts (12-8-2, 6-7-2 HEA) shut down UMass' biggest scoring threats in their 3-0 victory. Surprisingly, the loss was the first of the season by the Minutemen when neither Marcou nor Wellman notch a goal. Prior to the loss UMass was 2-0 when neither scored a point.

So far this season, when the two both score at least one point for the Minutemen in a game, it has brought results as UMass has gone 11-5 in those games.

But when the two have combined for four points UMass has played just above .500 at 4-3 and 3-2 when the two combine for fewer than four points. On the other hand, when only one of UMass' leading point scorers notches a point, the team has managed a 3-4 record.

Not quite an advantage

Despite a combined 22 penalties over the weekend between UMass and Maine, neither team seemed to find much of an advantage while on the man advantage.

Saturday night both teams committed two penalties, but neither squad was able to take advantage of the ensuing power-play chances. Sunday afternoon saw more penalties – 11 by the Catamounts and seven by the Minutemen resulting in five and nine power-play opportunities for each team, respectively – but just one power-play goal.

With seven minutes, 29 seconds remaining in the second period of yesterday's 3-0 Vermont win, the Catamounts's Drew MacKenzie took advantage after UMass' Rocco Carzo was called for boarding. Besides that lone power-play goal allowed by the Minutemen, UMass' penalty kill held Vermont scoreless on its other seven power-play opportunities on the weekend.

Vermont, who came into the weekend killing the last 40-of-42 power-play chances of its opponents, continued its dominance, as it was a perfect 13-for-13 on the penalty kill this weekend against the Minutemen.

Just can't sweep it

With its 3-1 win over No. 17 Vermont on Saturday, the Minutemen hoped to become the first team in the Hockey East to have two series sweeps on their resume.

But completing a series sweep has been a rare occurrence this season in the conference. Besides UMass' home-and-home sweep of UMass Lowell last weekend, the feat has only been accomplished one other time this season; back on Dec. 4 and 5 when Maine swept Providence with two 3-1 victories in Orono, Maine.

With Vermont grabbing a 3-0 win on Sunday, the first time the Minutemen have been shutout all season, it kept that total at two.

The fact that completing a series sweep is so difficult shows the toughness in the conference this season. Just a total of eight points separates the top five teams in the conference, with first-place New Hampshire leading the way with 25 points and fifth-place Maine not far behind with 17 points.

Boston College and UMass are currently tied for second place with 20 points, just two points ahead of UMass Lowell (18 points).

The top five may end up even closer with Maine only playing 15 games and UMass Lowell and New Hampshire playing 16 games compared to BC and UMass' 17 games.

Jeffrey R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@dailycollegian.com.

Vinson records double-double in Minutemen loss to Baylor

By Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's basketball team had its worst shooting night of the season (24.2 percent from the field, 17.2 percent from 3-point range) as Baylor overpowered the Minutemen, 71-45, with its size-up front.

Baylor	71
UMass	45

Guard Ricky Harris finished with a game-high 15 points on 6-of-14 shooting while freshman Terrell Vinson came through with a double-double (14 points, 12 rebounds). However, UMass (7-12, 1-4 Atlantic 10) couldn't find production from anyone else.

Excluding Harris and Vinson, the Minutemen shot 16 percent from the field. The Bears (15-3, 2-2 Big 12) shot much more efficiently (45.7 percent) while controlling the game with their size.

The loss extended UMass' losing streak to five games dating back to the Jan. 10 loss against La Salle.

The last time the Minutemen went on a five-game skid came at the beginning of last season, when they started with a loss to Southern Illinois on Nov. 12, 2008 and lost six straight games before eventually defeating Holy Cross nearly a month later.

UMass coach Derek Kellogg said after the game that having to go up against three players nearly 7-feet tall made it difficult for his team to be effective offensively.

"They do a good job in that zone," Kellogg said. "It allows the guards to kind of pressure the ball and play out and the big guys to stay home. I mean, when you are 6-foot-10, 7-feet and 6-foot-11 it is tough… Their length obviously bothered us."

Baylor forward Ekpe Udoh was the most effective of the big men as he tied guard Tweety Carter for a game-high of 23 points to go with seven blocks. He sat out last season after he transferred from Michigan, where he averaged six points and five rebounds.

This year, he's averaging 14.3 points and 10.8 rebounds for the Bears.

"That is a nice guy to pick up as a transfer," Kellogg said. "I mean, as much as anything, he dominates the game just by being out there. His presence is really what separates him."

The main positive for the Minutemen was rebounding. They outdid the Bears, 42-33, on the glass.

"That is one of our main focuses coming into every game," Kellogg said. We want to rebound the ball well and hopefully that can lead to transition baskets, but tonight we really couldn't get too many."

Center Hashim Bailey was the other main rebounding force with 11 in 21 minutes, but scored no points on six attempts.

As much as the Minutemen controlled the glass, it wasn't enough to make up for a poor shooting night. Despite outrebounding Baylor, 22-6, in offensive rebounds, they finished with six second-chance points.

The Bears also proved to be better in transition with nine fast break points and none coming from the Maroon and White.

Even with UMass struggling, it kept the game within single digits until the seven minute, 45 second mark when LaceDarius Dunn hit a 3-pointer to put the Bears up 12 points.

The Minutemen were down 34-20 at the end of the half, but 3-pointers by forward Sampson Carter and Harris cut the deficit to eight points. Baylor rolled right back with an 11-0 run to increase the lead to 19 points.

UMass never came within 15 points the rest of the game. The Bears' biggest lead came in the final two minutes when they increased their lead to 28.

"Baylor is a very good team," Kellogg said. "I have played and coached a lot of different NCAA Tournament teams and they are a good ball club. If they can continue to improve and get better, I think they can make a nice run in the NCAA Tournament."

The Bears mark the third ranked opponent to play UMass this season, however it has not found much success, with the closest loss coming to then-No. 19 Temple in a 12-point loss.

The last time Kellogg and Co. beat a ranked opponent was last year in a one-point victory over then-No. 25 Kansas.

The Minutemen's next game is on the road against Saint Joseph's on Wednesday. The Hawks are on a two-game winning streak with victories against Towson and Dayton.

Game notes

Harris moved to sixth in career scoring at UMass. He now has 1,656, passing current UTEP coach Tony Barbee (1,643). The senior captain is 95 points away from passing the No. 5 scorer Lorenzo Sutton (1,731).

The Minutemen's 42 rebounds were the most any team has rebounded against Baylor this season… UMass' 45 points were the fewest its scored in six years when it lost, 64-44, against Xavier on Feb. 14, 2004.

Adam Miller can be reached at amiller@dailycollegian.com

Senior Ricky Harris takes a shot against St. Bonaventure last week. The guard had 15 points against Baylor.

Jeff Bernstein / Collegian

Freshman Terrell Vinson fights through two defenders against St. Bonaventure last week. The forward recorded his second career double-double with 14 points and 12 rebounds against Baylor on Saturday.

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY

COLLEGIAN

HIGH: 42 LOW: 27

www.DailyCollegian.com

TUESDAY, JANUARY 26, 2010

When it rains, it pours ...

Matt Rowbotham / Collegian

Flash flooding in parking lots surrounding the Robsham Visitors Center formed a small lake by mid-afternoon, flooding nearly a dozen vehicles including senior Adam Nadeau's 2000 Nissan Altima.

UMass rallies Haiti support

Haitian Student Association leads local fundraising charge

By Jessica Bonheur
Collegian Staff

In the wake of tragedy, students at the University of Massachusetts have created an alliance called "UMass Haiti Relief" to raise and provide needed support for the country rocked by a magnitude-7 earthquake two weeks ago.

Led by the Haitian American Student Association, the coalition formed quickly and has worked over the past two weeks to raise funds through tabling in the Campus Center concourse and collecting monetary donations.

"As time progresses, people may begin to forget the issues in Haiti and how much help they really need," said Haitian Student Association (HASA) president Leo Jean-Louis. "The disaster was of epic proportions and Haiti, an already struggling country, will need our help for a long time."

Haiti's capital city of Port-au-Prince was devastated on Jan 12. An estimated 150,000 people died as a result of the natural disaster and millions have been left without homes, food and water.

Participating student organizations included representatives from the National Pan-Hellenic Council fraternities and sororities, members of the Program for Undergraduate Mentoring and Achievement and the Student Government Association.

These groups joined forces with the Residence Leadership Association. Associate Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs and Campus Life Byron S. Bullock, Center for Student Development employees Lydia Washington, Lloyd Henley and Allen Brainerd and Auxiliary Services Senior Manager Doug Warka.

In addition, under Jean-Louis' leadership, the relief alliance has expanded to include members from the Five College community. A "UMass Haiti Relief" Facebook event has over 1,400 members involved in planning upcoming events and fundraisers.

A benefit concert will be held on Thursday, Feb. 11, at the Fine Arts Center. The following day, students are encouraged to wear red or blue to show their support.

In addition, each college will be selling red and blue "Support Haiti" wristbands. A candle light vigil is still being planned.

According to Jean-Louis, the relief effort has been a success.

"Students have been donating clothes, food and money to support the relief efforts on campus," he said. "Bins [in Coolidge Hall] are overflowing with clothes as we speak."

"It's truly a blessing to see the support and generosity of the UMass Community as a whole," he added.

UMass has set up a bank account that any student group can donate their raised funds towards, said Jean Louis. This has ensured that the correct, secure procedures are taken, and that donation transactions go smoothly.

Within the Pioneer Valley, other organizations have been working diligently to provide necessary help to Haiti.

Paige Thayer of the Pioneer Valley Red Cross said that their Valley chapter has been working to raise funds to support American Red Cross International Response Fund and Haiti Relief Efforts. So far, the chapter has raised $170,000 from the Pioneer Valley community.

In addition to raising money, relief efforts of the Red Cross include "water distribution, first aid, medical assistance, provision of supplies, assistance with shelter and sheltering supplies, distribution of hygiene kits, blankets, water containers," said Thayer.

The American Red Cross is now partnering with many large humanitarian organizations, she said. These groups include the global Red Cross community, local Haitian Red Cross, the Red Crescent Society and the United Nation's World Food Program.

Due to the extent of the damage caused by the earthquake, and in addition to the help that Haiti previously needed, Thayer said that the Red Cross will most likely continue to help Haiti for years to come.

Thayer added those that wish to make immediate contributions could text HAITI to 90999 to make a $10 donation. Participants can be certain that their donations will be going to specifically the Haiti Relief program through donor intent.

"If someone designates their gift to Haiti relief, it will be directed to the Haiti Earthquake Relief efforts," Thayer said.

Jessica Bonheur can be reached at jbonheur@student.umass.edu.

UM scientists discover cell transcription secret

Collegian File Photo

Professor Craig Martin created an interactive display called the "Molecular Playground" earlier this year in the Integrated Sciences Building. He recently discovered a new find about RNA synthesis.

By Matthew M. Robare
Collegian Staff

Two scientists in the University of Massachusetts Amherst's Chemistry Department have discovered how DNA and RNA form a stable enough structure to allow for transcription, the process where information stored in DNA is copied out to RNA, according to a recent press release.

The discovery by the chemists, Professor Craig Martin and graduate student Xiaoqing Liu, was found during a preliminary phase of transcription, called elongation. During this phase, the DNA strand opens up and a molecule called RNA polymerase forms a loop around both the DNA strand and the RNA strand that the information is being copied to. According to the release, this process had been previously thought of incorrectly in two-dimensional terms. It was believed that the RNA polymerase inserted itself between RNA and DNA, where in reality, in a three-dimensional model, the RNA wraps around these two strands.

Transcription, a vital step in the life of the cell, occurs in several different ways. When the DNA is transcribed into RNA codes for a protein, the RNA is called messenger RNA. DNA can also code for ribosomal RNA and transfer RNA.

DNA, deoxynucleic acid, is a double helix-shaped molecule that stores genetic information in cells. Its primary components are thymine, adenine, guanine and cytosine. RNA, which stands for ribonucleic acid, is involved in making use of the information stored in the DNA, especially for manufacturing proteins. It has all the same molecules as DNA, except that thymine is replaced with uracil.

Martin and Liu call the structure a topological lock. According to the press release, the topological lock concept helps to explain two key features that had been mysteries to scientists before. One mystery is why most transcription processes involve eight base pairs. The release explains that the topological lock model has determined eight to be the most efficient number for accurate transcriptions. The model also explains how the "transcription bubble" that forms when all the various molecules are doing their jobs remains stable instead of breaking apart and scattering their pieces.

Their findings have appeared in the Journal of Biological Chemistry and the two chemists will continue their research. Martin will focus on RNA polymerase and RNA synthesis.

Matthew M. Robare can be reached at mmbare@student.umass.edu.

AP

United Nation troops from Uruguay try to control a crowd waiting for humanitarian aid in Port-au-Prince, Haiti, yesterday.

ARTS & LIVING

Here comes the... RAIN

The Mullins Center will host the Beatles cover band, RAIN, tonight at 7:30. Come together, right now.

SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS

Swimming and Diving

Both the Minutemen and Minutewomen had impressive wins over Colgate this past weekend

SEE PAGE 8

EDITORIAL & OPINION

Charlie Felder doesn't think "Kick a Jew Day" is harmless, he thinks it is anti-Semitism

SEE PAGE 4

DailyCollegian.com

Check out more photos of yesterday's flood in the Robsham Visitors Center parking lot.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXX
ISSUE 6

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
413-545-3500
Fax 413-545-3699
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief William McGuinness
Managing Editor Matt Rocheleau
Managing Wire Editor S.P. Sullivan
Business Manager Daniel Jette
Production Manager Michael Sarkes
Night Supervisor Kirsten Swenson
Advertising Manager Michael Tortorici
Advertising Production Amanda Joinson
Arts & Living Editor Shayna Murphy
Comics Editor Andrew Witts
Editorial Editor Alissa Creamer
News Editor Nick Bush
Sports Editor Jeffrey R. Larnard
Photo Editor Matthew Harrison
IT Manager Victor Jacek
Asst. Business Manager Matt Zolnierz
Assistant Advertising Nicole Jacinto
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Distribution Manager Norman Provost
Classified Manager Katelyn Tamilio
Asst. Arts & Living Justin Gagnon
Asst. Arts & Living Elyse Horowitz
Asst. Arts & Living Cal Scannell
Assistant Editorial Benjamin Moriarty
Assistant Editorial Michael Phillis
Assistant Editorial Matthew M. Robare
Assistant News Samuel Butterfield
Assistant News Jenn Heshion
Assistant News Chris Shores
Assistant Sports Jay Asser
Assistant Sports David Brinch
Assistant Sports Adam Miller
Assistant Photo Maxwell Sparr
Assistant Photo Samantha Webber
Senior Producer Sara Cody
Senior Producer Pete Rizzo

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967. The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1996. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

PRODUCTION CREW
on staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Matt Rocheleau

COPY EDITOR
Chelsea Whitton

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Shaina Jackson

Community Clips

University Without Walls information session

The UMass Amherst University Without Walls is a bachelor's degree completion program in which students design their own degree using background and interests that reflect their creative and interdisciplinary connections.

Tuesday, Jan 26, 2010, 5:30 p.m.
Mass Venture Center Room 235

Concert: RAIN - A Tribute to the Beatles

Come enjoy a repertoire of nearly 200 Beatlemaniac favorites, ranging from such beloved songs as "Yesterday" and "Hey Jude" to classic hits including "Revolution" and "Come Together."

Tuesday, Jan. 26, 2010, 7:30 p.m.
Mullins Center

Salvatore Macchia and Lanfranco Marcelletti Jr. Faculty Recital

A faculty recital featuring Salvatore Macchia (double bass), with Lanfranco Marcelletti, Jr. (piano) and Gary Smulyan (baritone saxophone).

Tuesday, Jan. 26, 2010, 8 p.m.
Bezanson Recital Hall

Study Abroad Australia info table

Interested in studying abroad in Australia? Stop by this info table and pick up some information on studying abroad opportunities all throughout Australia.

Wednesday, Jan. 27, 2010, 9 a.m. Campus Center Concourse

Weekly UMass Sports Luncheon

This week's buffet luncheon features softball coach Elaine Sortino and also honors Women's Basketball Field Trip Day.

Wednesday, Jan. 27, 2010, 11:00 a.m. Mullins Center Massachusetts Room

Winter Warm-Up Activities Expo

The Activities Expo is a great way to find out how to get involved at UMass Amherst. Come to recruit new members, join an organization, meet new people, or just have fun.

Wednesday, Jan. 27, 2010, 4:00 p.m. Student Union Ballroom

Lecture: "16 Tons: The Caseros Prison Demolition"

AIAS and UMass Amherst's Department of Art, Architecture and Art History invite you to a talk by artist Seth Wulsin.

Wednesday, Jan. 27, 2010, 7:00 p.m. Studio Arts Building – The Commons (2nd Floor)

Wicked Pitch Auditions

Wicked Pitch is holding auditions for all male singers and vocal percussion.

Wednesday, Jan. 27, 2010, 7:30 p.m. Bartlett 301

RefWorks Workshop

Learn to use RefWorks, a program that manages citations and creates quick bibliographies.

Thursday, Jan. 28, 2010, 9:30 a.m. W.E.B. Du Bois Library – Calipari Room

Visiting Writers Series Presents Jedediah Berry and Lily Hoang

A reading of fiction by UMass alumnus Jedediah Berry, author of "The Manual of Detection," and Lily Hoang, author of "Changing."

Thursday, Jan. 28, 2010, 8 p.m. Memorial Hall

Lecture: "Shifting Firm Boundaries in Global Services Sourcing"

Dr. Stephan Manning of the University of Massachusetts Boston College of Management speaks at this week's Management Department Seminar.

Friday, Jan. 29, 2010, 1:00 p.m. Isenberg School of Management 106

Philosophy and Open Thought Group Meeting

If you're looking to take part in a philosophical conversation, this is the group for you.

Friday, Jan. 29, 2010, 4:45 p.m. Bartlett 274

Black Rhose Back-to-School Dance Party

Sigma Gamma Rho Sorority, Incorporated welcomes students back to school with a dance party filled with rap, reggae, and more.

Friday, Jan. 29, 2010, 10:00 p.m. Student Union Ballroom

Five College Women's Studies film screening

Special benefit screening of the film "Poto Mitan: Haitian Women, Pillars of the Global Economy." A new documentary that gives a platform to five poor Haitian women whose voices would otherwise not be heard, the screening is a benefit for Haiti earthquake relief efforts.

Monday, Feb. 1, 7 p.m. 9 p.m. at Amherst Cinema

The Silver Chord Bowl 2010

This performance will feature the very best of collegiate a cappella, including the Dartmouth Aires, Los Angeles' Sonos, the Northamptones, NYU N'Harmonics, UMass Vocal Suspects, Syracuse Mandarins, Smith Groove and the Tufts Beelzebubs.

Sunday, Feb. 7, 2010, 2 p.m. at John M. Greene Hall, Smith College.

Where's Love 101: Creating and Sustaining Healthy Relationships

This unique gathering will feature a diverse panel of couples who have been together for between 2 and 20 years, as well as experts who will address a broad range of issues related to creating and sustaining healthy relationships.

Wednesday, Feb. 10, 2010, 7 p.m. in Campus Center room 917

"Producing Eco-Normativity"

Giovanna Di Chiro, Five College Women's Studies Research Associate from the Pioneer Valley Environmental Justice Coalition, will give a talk entitled "Producing Eco-Normativity: Gendered Discourse in Environmental Science and Politics."

Thursday, Feb. 11, 5 p.m. at the Five College Women's Studies Research Center, 83 College St., Mount Holyoke College.

Exhibit: Maggie Nowinski's "Swallowed"

Easthampton-based artist Maggie Nowinski turned her obsession with plastic bottles into a two-year investigation and project that culminates in the exhibition "Swallowed," featuring an installation comprised of thousands of plastic bottles, drawings, and video.

Ongoing all week
Hampden Gallery

2x Tuesday
Domino's Pizza
Buy any large pizza, get second one FREE.
413-256-8911

BLUEBERRY TREATS!
- Blueberry Bakery Specialties
- Blueberry Salads featured at lunch
- Blueberry & Thyme Crusted Salmon
- Double Berry Chicken
- And more!

JANUARY 25 – 30
ALL DCs
7AM – 9PM

Blueberries are ranked #1 in Antioxidants and are high in Vitamin C and Fiber

Blueberries
HIGHBUSH BLUEBERRY COUNCIL

RESTAURANTS Ivy
YOUR CAMPUS MEAL PLAN
THE BEST VALUE ON CAMPUS RESIDENTIAL MEAL PLAN
UMASS DINING
UMassAmherst
umassdining.com

Are you a PHOTOGRAPHER searching for better EXPOSURE?

Get your photos published for over 10,000 people to see each day with
THE DAILY COLLEGIAN
Send an email to photos@dailycollegian.com for more information.

THE BOLTWOOD PROJECT™
Serving others since 1969 -- and STILL making a difference!
A STUDENT / COMMUNITY SERVICE LEARNING PROGRAM
(an RSO and Dept. of Landscape Architecture & Regional Planning sponsored prog.)
REACH OUT—AND BECOME A SPECIAL FRIEND TO PEOPLE WITH SPECIAL NEEDS
Your life will NEVER be the same!
••EARN 1-2 CREDITS ••GAIN VALUABLE EXPERIENCE ••REWARDING, CHALLENGING, and FUN
Spring Semester 2010 — Recruitment Nights
You must attend ONE of these meetings. No exceptions, even if you have participated before!
6:00-8:00 PM (Note: Prompt starting time!!!)
Campus Center Basement • Room 101 • Jan. 25 (Mon) • Jan. 26 (Tues) • Jan. 27 (Wed)
•Assignment notification ONLY Thurs. Jan. 28 @ Boltwood table CC Concourse
No telephone inquiries. YOU (or a friend) must pickup the notification letter!!!
Volunteer, while earning credit!

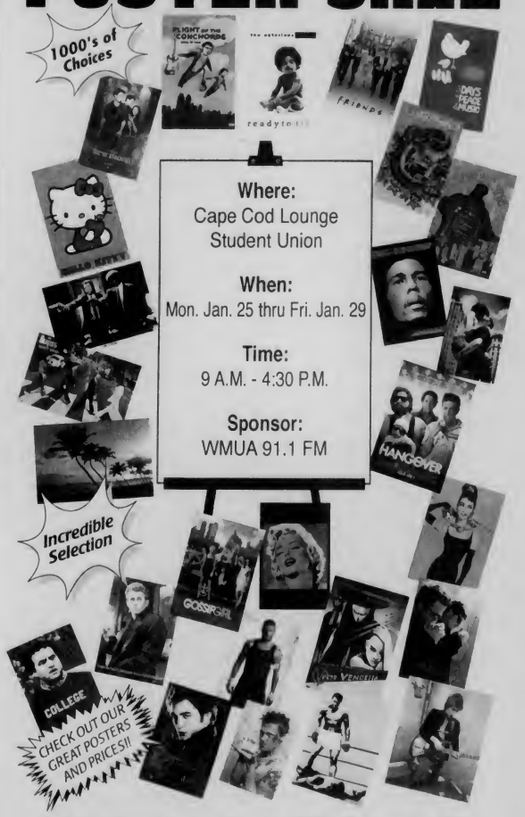
Wet and wild ...

Students were less than excited to return to the parking lots surrounding the Robsham Visitors Center where they found their vehicles submerged in nearly two feet of water. At least 10 vehicles had to be towed.

Abraham Lincoln. The United States' 1st Republican President



Find out what it really means to be a Republican
Republican Club Meetings Every Tuesday -7pm -Student Union, 423B

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
Need to spread the word?
Reach more than 18,000 readers every day!
IT'S CHEAPER THAN YOU THINK!
On-Campus & Local Business Ads for $10 per column inch
R.S.O. Ads for $6.70 per column inch
CONTACT PAMELA:
thecollegian@gmail.com
413.545.3500
or stop by our office in the Campus Center basement

Winter Warm Up Activities Expo
The weather outside might be frightful, but UMass Amherst student organizations are delightful.
Get involved!
Wed, Jan 27
4pm-7pm
Student Union Ballroom
RSOs - Sign up on the CSD page on Campus Pulse!

NEED TO SELL SOMETING?
RENT AN APARTMENT?
ARE YOU HIRING?
Post a Classified Ad with the Daily Collegian!
For students, Only 20 cents a word and 50 cents for non-students. Recieve discounts for Classified Ads running five days or more! Post your ad online, and in the newspaper.
Call us at: 413.545.3501, E-Mail: TheCollegian@gmail.com, or type the advertisement up yourself by visiting our website: www.massdailycollegian.com

THE BIGGEST & NEWEST BACK TO SCHOOL
POSTER SALE

Most Images Only $7, $8 and $9

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, JANUARY, 26, 2010

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
-Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Rain, rain classes away

Matthew M. Robare

Judging by the amount of rain we had yesterday, I wouldn't be surprised if some of us began to seriously consider getting in the business of ark building. Especially if you happened to walk by the Visitor's Center and saw the cars that turned into submarines.

I'm not sure if it's global warming or ozone depletion or El Niño or La Niña. All I know is that our weather is screwed up royally.

One day it's freezing and snowing, the next it's foggy and the day after that we get a flood. It's totally ridiculous. Get with the program, Weather Demons! It's January in Massachusetts. That means snow and ice, not flash floods and days when coats are not necessary. It's only been like this for thousands of years.

The scientific reason weather occurs is because of the whims of the Weather Demons. They are minor elementals, in the parlance of fantasy role-playing games, and act like a kind of meteorological mafia. In exchange for normal weather, we need to perform sacrifices to them as prescribed by the ancient rites. These are the usual sort of sacrifices, involving chanting, doing unusual things with knives, misrepresenting neo-paganism and a Vermont Weather Rock, which is used as the high altar.

For those unaware, Vermont Weather Rocks are ingenious devices capable of both telling time and weather. Go to any Vermont country store and ask for one. A really good one will cost around $40. It looks like an ordinary rock, but it has special properties and can only come from a secret quarry in Bennington County.

A Vermont Weather Rock works thusly: you take your special rock and put it outside where it's visible from a window in your house, and you wait for it to change appearance. If it looks wet, it's raining; if it's white, it's snowing; if you can't see it, it's night. And so on. A complete guide can be purchased with your Vermont Weather Rock for only $10.

In the short term, having campus remain open may benefit the administration by saving on the logistics of rearranging schedules and events, but in the long term, drowned students don't pay tuition.

Anyhow, for the sacrifice to be effective, you need a rubber chicken and some organic material that used to belong to a TV weatherman (hair, teeth, skin, amniotic fluid, and so on).

In the old days we used to sacrifice the entire broadcaster, but in another example of Freedom of Religion being suppressed in the United States, that is now considered first degree homicide. You take the organic material and stuff it in the rubber chicken, then you place it on the Vermont Weather Rock, paint "Yes" and "No" on opposite sides in red paint, have every member of the congregation spit on it, tie it to the Vermont Weather Rock, throw it through the window of the local National Weather Service office and run like hell. Afterwards, everyone enjoys a hearty laugh and a meal at a nearby Chinese restaurant. This should appease the Weather Demons enough for at least one snow day, depending on location.

If the administration of the University of Massachusetts Amherst had a collective brain cell, school should have been canceled yesterday. I first came to that conclusion the previous night, when the ground had virtually become all black ice. It was all but impossible to walk around. I was surprised that the busses were still on time and able to get around instead of turning into mutant rampaging Zamboni's. It reflects very favorably on UMass Transit and their drivers that such a terrifying possibility did not occur. I still almost slipped a few times and got stuck on a patch around the Townehouses.

But when it's pouring all day, very windy and extreme flooding occurs, I cannot do anything but question the University's decision to remain open. With campus underwater and not enough money in the budget for scuba or diving gear, it's ridiculous to remain open. Road conditions were dangerous, cars were flooded and the Southwest Towers were carried away by the current. Who was thinking of those members of our campus community who can't swim? The administration certainly wasn't.

The UMass administration acted with all the intelligence of a treeratops. They were not thinking in the long term, only in the short. In the short term, having campus remain open may benefit the administration by saving on the logistics of rearranging schedules and events, but in the long term, drowned students don't pay tuition.

The safety of the student body must be paramount in the decisions involving bad weather and continuation of classes. I am sure that the University always attempts to act with those considerations in mind, but they undeniably screwed as badly as the weather did this time.

Maybe they need Vermont Weather Rocks.

Matthew M. Robare is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mrobare@student.umass.edu

Do you have opinions?

Do you have editorials?

Do you think you do?

Write for us, please.

Electronic mail address:
editorial@dailycollegian.com

'Kick a Jew Day' needs to be kicked

Twenty-one percent. You can stop me when this begins to sound familiar.

Imagine that it's mid-afternoon and you're only now just several steps away from your front door. Classes ended a little while ago and, normally, you'd be bolting through that door and making a bee line to the kitchen for your long-awaited and well-deserved afterschool snack. Not today.

Charlie Felder

Instead, you walk quietly upstairs to the bathroom where you roll up your pant legs and study the bruises and bloody cuts on your shins and knees. You roll up your arm sleeve and wince as you gently prod the black-and-blue shape forming on your bicep. You stare at yourself in the mirror, and you begin to cry, but it's not from the stinging or the pain.

You thought they were just your classmates. You might have considered some of them your friends, but not after this. They were laughing as they kicked and punched you and chased you from the schoolyard. They called you a Jew. Though you were unaware of it when you awoke this morning, your classmates had declared it to be "Kick a Jew Day."

Oh, and one more thing: as you formulate this image from my description, imagine that you are a 12-year-old girl.

Some of you are currently rolling your eyes and saying, "Oh God, not another one of these articles." You've heard the stories and you're tired of being lectured about something that you really could care less about. You're not an anti-Semite, so why do you have to hear about it every other day? To you, this is simply another generic Jewish sob story; it's a regurgitation and amalgam of all the clichés, a mere rehash.

This, above all else, is the shame, for what I have just described to you is not a cliché. It is not a modern fable concocted out of thin air, nor out of the loose strands of several vague and interchangeable stories. What I have described to you took place only two months ago at North Naples Middle School in Naples, Fla.

This wasn't a group of drunk college idiots. This wasn't a group of uneducated high school thugs. These kids were middle schoolers, and unfortunately, that is not even the most disturbing aspect of this story by a long shot.

Anti–Semitism hasn't changed, it has not evolved, it has not reconfigured, and it certainly has not dissipated as many have hoped it would.

On Naple News' website, where the story was reported, there's a dainty little box where a reader poll asks you to rate the appropriate level of response which should have been taken by the school district as a means of punishment for the students who engaged in this shocking and despicable behavior. Four options are provided, and one may select any of the following choices: suspension, expulsion, nothing, or I'm not sure.

Before I even address what the poll results were, take a moment to reflect on those choices.

Expulsion. Suspension. Nothing. Which would you select?

Your selection is your business. The poll results, on the other hand, are quite public. Out of a total 3367 respondents, 39 percent voted in favor of outright expulsion and 37 percent voted for an immediate suspension of these students, with indecision resulting in 3 percent of people not being able to make up their minds up at all. And lastly, 21 percent believed that "it was just a stupid prank." You know, just a case of kids being kids.

I find such a response both perplexing and disturbing at the same time, and for good reason. I've been that kid. I've taken the unexpected punch to the upper arm in the middle of gym class with the accompaniment of the word "Jew," uttered as if it was a title of guilt and shame which I should wear miserably around my neck.

Just a stupid prank? Tell that to the child who stares at herself in the mirror after school, surveying the damage done to her body as a result of a "stupid prank." Tell that to the middle schoolers who laid in bed that night, asking themselves a single, solitary question: Why?

Anti-Semitism hasn't changed, it has not evolved, it has not reconfigured and it certainly has not dissipated as many have hoped it would. Twenty-one percent of poll respondents think this is just a case of kids being kids. How can you answer that question? What can you tell these children?

The truth is that ultimately, there is nothing you can say or do for these children that will replace the sting of that word, nor the soreness of their bruises when they wake up the next morning, confused and scared about how they'll be treated when they return to school.

Just know that the comments you make in jest add up and trickle down, and that intolerance and hate, whether intended or not, is the ultimate result of the mindless shrug you so casually respond with. Now imagine this entire scenario, only it's your child who has walked in the front door with bloody knee-caps.

Still shrugging?

Charlie Felder is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at charlie.felder@gmail.com

Low income doesn't mean low priority

The media rarely shines a camera light on low-income children, yet many have been affected the worst by the deep recession our nation is in. Fourteen million American children live below the poverty line, 6.2 million of which live in "deep" poverty, meaning their households earn less than half of the poverty line. There were almost one million more children in poverty in 2009 than there were in 2008, and trends suggest that we will set, at the end of 2010, a dreadful record: the first time America will have more than one million children drop into poverty in the post-World War II era.

Scott Harris

Regardless of your political affiliation, regardless of your social philosophy, all Americans can agree that we should do everything within our power to guarantee this goal: every child, no matter what socioeconomic background, should have the tools to reach their full potential. Unfortunately, right now, we are failing. There are so many things that need to be done in order to put children back on the forefront of our national dialogue, with far too many for one editorial, but there are some things that we can do right now to stabilize the situation for low-income children put at an even more severe disadvantage because of the collapse of the housing and financial markets.

First, enhancing the work opportunities and benefits for working-class parents is a proven strategy for combating child poverty. Expanding long-established programs like the Earned Income Tax Credit and the Making Work Pay Tax Credit will be instrumental in placing much-needed money into the pockets of people who spend it overwhelmingly on food and other household essentials. Even a full-time job and a boost from these two tax credits is often not enough to keep low-income families out of poverty, and so one of the most important keys to watch as Congress considers re-authorization for food stamps is that spending stays at least consistent with food inflation over the past year. Increasing food stamp spending is also one of the best ways to stimulate the economy, with a return of $1.72 for every dollar spent according to the non-partisan Congressional Budget Office.

This year, Congress and states around the country should launch an unprecedented effort to expand early education opportunities for low–income children.

As many of us know, subprime lending was disproportionately aimed at low-income families who have now lost their homes. Rent prices in many residential metropolises are on the rise due to higher demand, as well.

So, second, housing assistance programs, though generally administered on the state level, could use a boost from the federal government.

Third, low-income children, by their 10th birthday, are already two grade levels below their middle- and high-income peers in reading and math proficiency. They are even further behind by the time they would be graduating (as far too many never reach that point). Early education and care have become a critical aspect of ensuring that children can reach their potential, and the staffing and facilities needed are there for the taking.

This year, Congress and states around the country should launch an unprecedented effort to expand early education opportunities for low-income children. Early Head Start, a program for infant and toddlers, and Head Start, a program for children generally between age 2 and 5, ought to receive a significant boost in federal funding.

Additionally, increasing subsidies for child care for parents who work more than 25 hours a week, which the Center for American Progress says is "the most vital, yet least funded chain link between family income and child education," means that, even out of school, children can remain in a secure, educational environment.

Congress can also help states and local governments keep after-school youth programs aimed at keeping at-risk children off the streets.

Fourth, stable access to health care throughout the first 18 years of life is also essential.

Currently our country is in the middle of an uncertain period of a year-long insurance reform effort, so it is possible that the situation could change in short order. But, regardless of the outcome of insurance reform, existing programs to keep low-income children insured, healthy and in school must be protected.

The Children's Health Insurance Program (CHIP) should be preserved until 2019 if the current insurance reform legislation passes, in order to give time for federal lawmakers to make sure that children will receive at least as many benefits under the new system as they did under CHIP.

If insurance reform ultimately fails, Congress should take the lead in increasing CHIP federal funding and pushing states to remove unnecessary barriers to entry, like mandatory re-enrollment.

Though a scattered list of proposals may seem like it could not significantly affect the lives of America's next generation of low-income children, the simple guarantees of three meals a day, a roof over their head, access to health care and the chance to start an education on the same level as other income groups is something that has been lost in our current recession.

Perhaps the most startling fact is that these proposals will cost less than a third of what TARP and the auto bailout cost.

If we can bail out Wall Street, if we can keep car companies afloat and if "teabagger" rallies can get wall-to-wall news coverage, we ought to be able to find the time, the willpower and the money to make sure those 14 million American children can keep the promise of the dream that this country guarantees.

As Congress looks toward evaluating these programs in the 2010 budget process, they should pay special attention for to what they can do for their silent constituency.

Scott Harris is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at smharris@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, JANUARY 26, 2010

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

RAIN to honor Beatles tonight at Mullins

The members of RAIN, the Beatles cover band coming to the University of Massachusetts tonight, strive to imitate Paul McCartney, George Harrison, Ringo Starr and John Lennon in vocals, musical accompaniment, and on-stage actions.

By Lindsay Orlov
Collegian Correspondent

A top-notch musical quartet and a living historical tribute combined, RAIN is one of the most critically acclaimed Beatles cover bands.

With a total of 200 songs in their repertoire and an average show length of two and a half hours, RAIN both mimics the original Beatles concert-going experience and brings fans a new organic extension of the legendary band by showcasing songs never performed by the Beatles themselves.

Originally based in Los Angeles, RAIN rose to fame in 1979, when Dick Clark hired them to record the soundtrack for the made-for-television movie "Birth of the Beatles", according to RAIN's website. Ever since, RAIN has been performing in venues across the nation, wowing audiences with their simulation of the British pop sensation.

The musical experience of RAIN encompasses more than simple renditions of Beatles' songs. Each RAIN band member has studied the original Beatles' recordings intensively in order to be able to replicate the minute details of each number. RAIN's set pieces include numbers from post-1966 albums such as "Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band" and "Abbey Road," which were never done live by the Beatles themselves. In lieu of actual Beatles' performances to imitate, RAIN has had to invent an original stage rendition of these fan favorites.

The RAIN band members have also worked to impersonate John Lennon, Paul McCartney, George Harrison and Ringo Starr, with their accents, on-stage camaraderie and charisma. According to Mark Lewis, the off-stage keyboardist and creative mind behind the success of RAIN, this devotion to accuracy helps RAIN connect with audiences "who know the Beatles' music subconsciously."

Along with Mark Lewis and a number of other rotating tour performers, RAIN is made up of four regular performers of incredible talent. Steve Landes, who does vocals, rhythm guitar, piano, and harmonica, has a singing voice dead-on to the young John Lennon's. Joey Curatolo does vocals, bass, piano, and guitar, and is among the greatest artists to portray Paul McCartney on stage. Guitar virtuoso Joe Bithorn plays George Harrison on vocals and guitar, and Ralph Castelli performs as Ringo Starr on drums, percussion, and vocals. All four of these musicians were experts at their instruments at an early age, playing in cover bands or in studio sessions by their mid-teens. Now, as experienced RAIN band members, these musicians bring together their considerable talents to bring the Beatles to life once more on stage.

In addition to the professionalism and quality of the performers' musical and acting abilities, a multimedia aspect that includes historical footage and television commercials from the 1960s enhances every RAIN show.

Beatles enthusiasts, casual fans and curious newcomers to the legacy of the legendary Fab Four alike won't want to miss RAIN, the show that's more than a show, the tribute to end all tributes, coming to the Mullins Center tonight at 7:30. Find out more about student discounts for the show at www.mullinscenter.com.

Lindsay Orlov can be reached at lorlov@student.umass.edu.

Writer turns friend's injury into screenplay for Sundance Festival

By Rachel Abramowitz
Los Angeles Times

HOLLYWOOD — There is faith, the showy display of religiosity that is the trick-of-the-trade of faith healers, and then there is faith, a kind of belief in a transcendent reality.

In a plain Hollywood church, both were on display last February, as actor-turned-director Mark Ruffalo finished filming on his directorial debut "Sympathy for Delicious," an unusual story about a jaded, homeless, paraplegic disc jockey, "Delicious" Dean O'Dwyer, who suddenly finds he has the power to heal, although he can't heal himself.

On stage, John Carroll Lynch, playing a kind of cut-rate faith healer (in the mold of televangelist Benny Hinn) is exhorting that "the holy spirit is upon you" to a congregation of would-be believers, including several rows of men and women in wheelchairs. Among the disabled is writer-star Christopher Thornton, with grimy dark hair, several days of stubble and an air of furious desperation.

The 41-year-old Thornton has been one of Ruffalo's best friends for the last 20 years. Unlike most actors who play the handicapped, like Daniel Day-Lewis in "My Left Foot" or Tom Cruise in "Born on the Fourth of July," Thornton can't just get up from his chair when Ruffalo calls cut; he has been a paraplegic since 1992, when he fell and fractured two vertebrae while rock climbing.

In "Sympathy for Delicious," Thornton channels his complicated feelings about his accident. The film is also the fruit of his long friendship with Ruffalo, a tie that sustained them both through Thornton's accident, as well as Ruffalo's subsequent battle with a brain tumor, let alone the nine years it took to bring "Sympathy for Delicious" to the screen. The $3.3-million film, which also stars Orlando Bloom, Laura Linney and Juliette Lewis, as well as Ruffalo, was scheduled to debut Saturday at the Sundance Film Festival.

During a break, Ruffalo, who has appeared in such films as "Collateral," "Zodiac" and the upcoming "Shutter Island," explains that Thornton first told him of his movie idea as Ruffalo was wheeling him to a liquor store on the fifth anniversary of his accident. The two, then roommates, had met in the early '90s when both attended acting classes at the Stella Adler Conservatory in Los Angeles with such future stars as Benicio Del Toro and Salma Hayek.

After the accident, Ruffalo and other friends had coaxed Thornton back on stage for a part in "Waiting for Godot." Nonetheless, the fifth anniversary was a moody time for Thornton.

"He was upset and sad," says Ruffalo, a woolly, warm presence in jeans and beat-up blazer. "I said, 'Chris, I've known you before and after your accident, and God forbid, I'm telling you this. Maybe I'm the only one who could say something like this to you, but maybe this horrible tragedy is a blessing in disguise. I've seen you become like this amazing, totally inspirational guy over all these years from this thing, just as a human being. Maybe there's a gift in it somewhere.'"

Even today, Thornton gets "annoyed" when Ruffalo says things like that to him, as he explains when he joins the interview. "You hate being told that. It's like, 'Why don't you be the big guy sitting in the chair? I'd rather be the shallow walking dude,' he jokes.

Thornton explains that he had been brooding about the script since he started going out for acting parts in his wheelchair. "I wanted to write a story about a man in a wheelchair that was believable and three-dimensional and flawed," he says, pointing out there have been movies that show the hospital and the first aftermath of a paralyzing accident, but "there's two tragedies that happen with an injury like this."

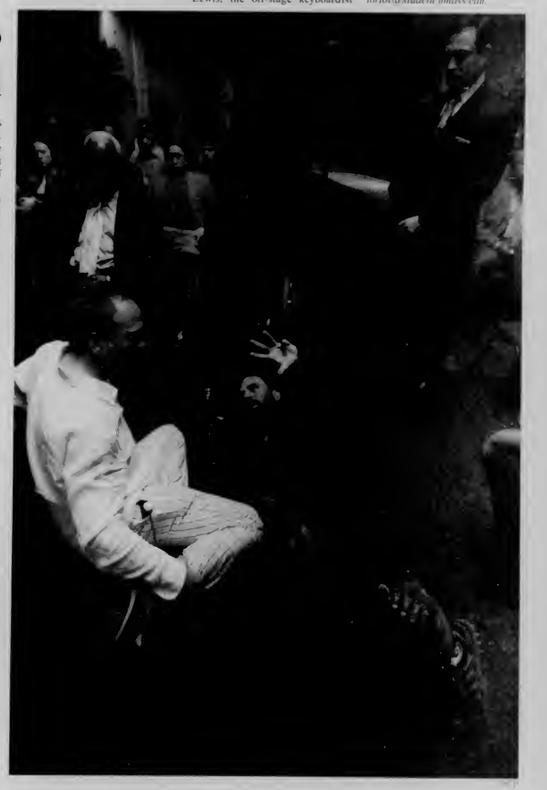
After a person has recovered, he must face the rest of his life. "You're not dying. That circle of friends that was visiting you all the time has gone back, and you're just, like, sitting in a chair. And then what? It's one thing to lose your ability to walk, but if you have a passion in life or an ability in life and you lost that, that's really hard, and even more damaging in a way."

Thornton had zeroed in on a stage he went through about 18 months after his accident, when reckless hope trumped rational thought. "You're ready to believe in miracles," says Thornton, who was dragged to a number of holistic practitioners and faith healers by friends. He was often caught up in the frenzy, but "then you resent it later" and get mad at yourself "for having been duped."

On that fateful walk to a liquor store, Thornton told Ruffalo about his idea of a jerky, selfish guy in a wheelchair with magical faith-healing powers, and the actor perked up. "I was like, 'Oh, my God,' that's a story." In 1999, Ruffalo, who had directed Thornton in a variety of plays, came on officially as the director and the pair began reworking Thornton's script. The hero evolved into a scratch DJ, and they moved the story to the world of rock 'n' roll, a chaotic arena of self-promoting tricksters who have a lot in common with faith-healers. In the film, Bloom and Lewis play druggy punk rockers who create an act featuring Delicious' healings and start a nationwide sensation.

Despite his handicap, Thornton continued to work in theater and TV and shot five pilots that didn't get picked up. After years of struggling, Ruffalo's big break turned out to be the 2000 Sundance hit "You Can Count on Me." In 2001, however, he was diagnosed with a brain tumor. "Chris was the only one I told," Ruffalo says. "I couldn't tell my wife because she was about to give birth" to their first child.

The tumor turned out to be benign, but Ruffalo underwent brain surgery to have it removed, surgery that initially left his face partly paralyzed.



Ultimately, however, Ruffalo made a complete recovery and returned to acting, starring in such films as "13 Going on 30" and "Eternal Sunshine of the Spotless Mind." He and Thornton returned to finessing the script and hunting for financing. "For years, we couldn't get it done. Everybody turned it down who was in a position to finance the film, all the independent houses," Thornton says. "Mark personally brought it to most of them, and they couldn't see the movie or they wanted a star to play Dean."

Along with producer Andrea Sperling, Ruffalo and Thornton cobbled together equity backing from various sources, including the new indie financiers Corner Store Entertainment. As they veered into pre-production at the end of 2007, Thornton and Ruffalo's relationship evolved again, from one of two guys in the trenches who do everything together to that of writer-star and director. "Mark stepped back and said, 'I'm going to separate myself and bring my own point of view to this,'" Sperling says. "There's a lot of love and friendship, mutual respect and admiration between them, and also some torture. They're almost like brothers."

Then another tragedy struck Ruffalo's brother Scott was found in his Beverly Hills apartment with a fatal gunshot wound to his head, a homicide that hasn't yet produced an arrest. They pushed the start date of filming several weeks and as a result lost James Franco and another lead actor. Orlando Bloom and Laura Linney, who played Ruffalo's sister in "You Can Count on Me," were able to step in at the last minute to play the rock star and conniving music agent, respectively.

Not surprisingly, Ruffalo and Thornton related on a profound level to their hero's desire to be healed. Ruffalo says, "If you're going down in an airplane, everybody's all of a sudden like 'Oh, God. Oh, God. Please, God.'"

This said, both take a dim view of the possibility of miracles. "That's all a crock," Ruffalo says. "I've never experienced a miraculous healing. For me, the theme of the movie is that you get the healing that you need. Not the healing that you want."

Mark Ruffalo, center, is the director of "Sympathy for Delicious", which debuted at this year's Sundance Film Festival in Park City, Utah, and promotes the idea of self-healing.

JEFF PENNUTO/COLLEGIAN

Freshman Demitrius Conger of St. Bonaventure defends Anthony Gurley earlier this season. Conger and the Bonnies fell to La Salle, 84-82 on Saturday.

Three double-digit scorers help Flyers roll past Richmond

By Herb Scribner
Collegian Staff

Both sides of the court worked for Dayton, as it rolled over Richmond with an 83-31 victory on Saturday night.

The 52-point victory for the Flyers (15-4, 3-1 A-10) came off the support of three double-digit scorers over the Spiders (14-5, 3-1 A-10).

Senior Kendel Ross led all scorers with 16 points, along with eight rebounds. She was followed by sophomore Casey Nance (10 points, five rebounds) and sophomore Justine Raterman. In her 24 minutes of play, Raterman scored 12 points of Dayton's 48 opening point tally.

In the first half of play, the Flyers shot 17-of-30 from the field and 3-of-9 from beyond the arc. The successful scoring by Dayton was followed by 23 rebounds in the opening half (seven offensive, 16 defensive).

Richmond was another story entirely, as the Spiders shot 6-for-35 from the field and 2-of-10 from the 3-point line in the opening half.

Also during the first half, the Flyers had 28 points in the paint as well as 15 fast break points. Richmond did not fare as well, tallying no points off of fast breaks and four points from the paint.

The second half was a similar story for both teams, as Dayton continued to build its lead. The Flyers once again outscored the Spiders 16-4 from inside the paint, as well as 23-14 in points off the bench.

Xavier collects votes

After a powerful weekend of play, No. 11 Xavier gained some votes from the ESPN/USA Today Coaches Poll which landed them in the Top 10 teams of the nation.

The Musketeers (14-3, 3-0 Atlantic 10) showed their high amount of skill this past weekend with a 62-53 rout over St. Bonaventure on Saturday night.

Juniors Ta'Shia Phillips and Special Jennings used an inside-outside combination to put together a combined 32 points in the game (16 each).

Phillips shot 7-of-10 from the field, and was one rebound shy of her 43rd career double double, while Phillips blocked four shots.

Though Phillips' and Jennings' combination was unmatched, the rest of the Xavier lineup helped out in the victory over the Bonnies (14-6, 2-3 A-10). Senior April Phillips scored 12 points, with a perfect 3-of-3 shooting from the 3-point arc. Redshirt junior Amber Harris also reached double digits (10 points, eight rebounds) in her 21 minutes of play.

After leading 29-18 at the break, the Musketeers found themselves in trouble once play resumed. After extending their lead to 13 points, St. Bonaventure went on an 11-0 run, closing the scoring margin.

With the game's score very close, both April and Ta'Shia Phillips went to work, halting the Bonnies with defensive stops. Xavier closed the game with a 13-5 run over St. Bonaventure to seal the victory.

The Musketeers will travel to Kingston, R.I. on Wednesday to play Rhode Island, who is sitting in eighth place in the A-10.

Special weekend for XU guard

Xavier guard Jennings earned A-10 Player of the Week honors after a stunning performance against both the Bonnies and Saint Louis.

Jennings had both 16 points and six assists in both games this past weekend, going 9-for-17 shooting between the two games. Most impressively, Jennings went 14-of-14 from the free-throw line over the weekend as well.

In 17 games played, Jennings leads the A-10 with 82 assists (4.8 per game). After her perfect free-throw shooting over the weekend, she moves up to seventh in the A-10 with 41-of-51 shooting.

As far as assists/turnover ratio goes, Jennings is in third place amongst her fellow A-10 players. Over the course of the season thus far, Jennings' 82 assists are met by her 51 turnovers (ratio of 1.6).

Jennings is the fourth Musketeer to earn A-10 Player of the Week this season. Along with Harris and both April and Ta'Shia Phillips, Jennings has earned her first Player of the Week award of her career.

Herb Scribner can be reached at hscribne@student.umass.edu.

Owls still ranked in AP

A-10 BBALL from page 8

while freshman Chris Braswell contributed 21 points and a game-high 13 rebounds. Guard Derrio Green added 20 points and seven assists in the victory.

The last time the 49ers had three 20-point scorers in one game was against Massachusetts in 2005. Senior Rodney Green led all scorers with 32 for La Salle.

The victory was the third straight in league play for Charlotte, who is now 5-1 all-time versus La Salle. The 49ers have already surpassed last year's win total (14), tripled their road wins from the previous season, and avenged losses over St. Bonaventure, Saint Louis, Richmond, and the Explorers. They also defeated Louisville on the road when the Cardinals were ranked No. 18 in the country.

Owls route Rams

A group effort led No. 15 Temple over Fordham 62-45. Guard Juan Fernandez led the Owls with 13 points on 3-of-4 shooting from 3-point range. Sophomore Scottie Randall added 12 points off the bench, while Ryan Brooks and Michael Eric contributed nine points apiece.

The Owls kept the ball under control throughout the contest, committing only seven turnovers in the game, shooting well from beyond the arc, posting a 42.9 percent shooting percentage.

After a slow start that saw them shoot 28 percent in the first half, Temple opened the second half with a 16-4 run that sealed the victory, keyed by two 3-pointers from Fernandez.

Temple has won 13 of their last 14 games, and is the only team left unbeaten in A-10 play. Their 17-3 mark is their best since 1993-94.

This is the sixth straight week that Temple has been nationally ranked.

Ben Lambert can be reached at wlambert@student.umass.edu

Xavier guard Special Jennings was named the A-10 Player of the Week after scoring 16 points and adding six assists in two games this weekend. She has helped the Musketeers to a No. 11 national ranking.

Banking for the EGeneration

We work here and bank here too!

eGeneration banking is delivered by eGeneration bankers like Cara and Mike.

Check out mycoolbank.com today!

Get great info, open accounts online and get awesome stuff like eChecking*, eStatements, Online Banking and Bill Pay. It's easy for you to choose your style of banking. There's even online live chat.

*$10 minimum deposit to open eChecking Account. No minimum balance required to maintain account. Other bank's ATM surcharge fees that are charged to the account during current statement cycle will be refunded on the last business day of the current statement cycle. Accounts closed or changed to another product during a current statement cycle will not receive a refund of the other bank's ATM surcharge fees.

EASTHAMPTON SAVINGS BANK
My Bank. My Future.

mycoolbank.com | 413.527.4111
Belchertown | Easthampton | Hadley | Northampton | South Hadley | Southampton | Westfield

Find ESB on facebook

EQUAL HOUSING LENDER Member FDIC

DIF DEPOSIT INSURANCE FUND

FDIC deposit insurance temporarily increased from $100,000 to $250,000 per depositor through December 31, 2013. Accounts above the FDIC limit are insured in full by the Deposition Insurance Fund.

Check tomorrow's issue for The Collegian's coverage of Vladimir Ducasse's journey to the NFL.

Over $25,000 in Scholarships Available!

UMass Amherst ALUMNI ASSOCIATION

The UMass Amherst Alumni Association is proud to offer the following scholarships:

Leaders in the Making Scholarship
Four $2,000 scholarships given to promising sophomores and juniors with diverse records of achievement in scholarship and volunteerism.

Life Member Scholarship for Internships
One $2,000 scholarship given to a sophomore or junior to help defray the cost of a summer internship.

Michael W. Morris Scholarship
One $2,000 scholarship given to a student from Lawrence or Lowell, MA. The scholarship is in honor of Lawrence native and longtime UMass Amherst champion, Michael W. Morris '63.

Senior Leadership Award
A $500 savings bond will be given to twenty-five graduating seniors who have demonstrated outstanding leadership and service to the university community. Students must be nominated by faculty or staff.

The deadline for scholarships is February 4, 2010. For more information on scholarship eligibility and applications visit UMassAlumni.com/students.

You were. You are. UMass.

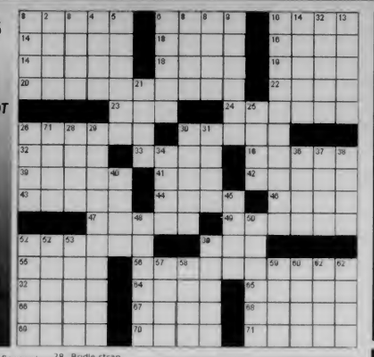
Off The Wall Games

WARHAMMER 40,000

Worldwake pre-release tournament on Thursday, January 28 at 6 PM -Sealed Deck - $20 Entry Fee
First prize a box of Worldwake, scan www.offthewallgamestore.com for details and more prizes!

MAGIC The Gathering

Discount role-playing games, Collectible card games (CCGs), Miniature war games and board games; fun for everyone!



Hours: 10-10 Wednesday-Sunday, 12-10 Monday. Closed Tuesdays - 41 Russel St (Hampton Village Shops) Rte 9, Hadley 413-586-5451

COMICS

WE WANT YOUR COMICS!
Put your comics in front of thousands of readers.
Questions? Comments? E-mail us: comics@dailycollegian.com
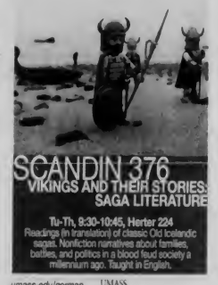
Friend us on Facebook: "Collegian Comix"

CROSSWORD



SNOWZEES Bar & Guitar
Formerly Seven O's
WESTERN MASS #1 LIVE MUSIC SPOT
WE'RE LOOKING FOR STUDENT BANDS!!!

ACROSS
1. Mistake
6. Aviated
10. A native of Poland
14. Annoy
15. Assistant
16. Wickedness
17. Notions
18. Ocean motion
19. Part portrayed
20. Compendium
22. Stars and Stripes
23. Set down
24. Foolishness
26. Ethics
30. Velocity
32. Matures
33. Despise
35. Assistants
39. Long narrow openings
41. Apiece
42. France's longest river
43. Part of a joint
44. Self-satisfied
46. Module
47. 9 9 9 9
49. Haunt
51. Presumptuously arrogant
54. Black gunk
55. Notices
56. The financial means whereby one lives
63. Mormon state
64. Chief Norse god
65. Dig
66. Competition involving speed
67. It smells
68. Heartache
69. Implored
70. Strip of wood
71. Black

DOWN
1. Majestic
2. Start over
3. Whirl
4. Elliptical
5. Sell again
6. Oily
7. Fifty-three in Roman numerals
8. Cocoyam
9. Twerp
10. Treacherous
11. Convex molding
12. Pale purple
13. Mournful poem
21. Money
25. Trade
26. Sail holder
27. Look at flirtatiously
28. Bridle strap
29. Astounded
30. Stalks
31. South American country
34. Basilica area
36. Eat
37. Goddess of discord (Greek mythology)
38. Collections
40. Agitated state
45. Objective
48. Stockings
50. River crossing
51. Take forcibly
52. Flower feature
53. ——— and quiet
54. Article of faith
57. False god
58. Credit card brand
59. Parsley or sage
60. Hodgepodge
61. Roasting appliance
62. Resist

NEW OPEN SECTION: GEN. ED.

SCANDIN 376
VIKINGS AND THEIR STORIES: SAGA LITERATURE
Tu-Th, 8:30-10:45, Herter 224
Readings (in translation) of classic Old Icelandic sagas. Nonfiction narratives about families, battles, and politics in a blood feud society a millennium ago. Taught in English.
umass.edu/german UMASS

DEW TOUR WINTER
mount snow VERMONT
February 4-7, 2010
ALLSPORTS.COM

SUDOKU

		4		5			8
6
2		9
3			7		6		1
				4	3	6	2
4	6		3	7			9
9		2
	8		1				4

Hark, a Vagrant by K. Beaton harkavagrant.com

SMBC by Zach Weiner smbc-comics.com

Nobody would've guessed Superman would die of appendicitis.

Chainsawsuit by Kris Straub chainsawsuit.com

QUOTE OF THE DAY

Tragedy is when I cut my finger. Comedy is when you fall into an open sewer and die.

Mel Brooks

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necessary. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

Town of Amherst seeks swim instructors and lifeguards for swim program at Totman pool. Must have LG,FA and CPR 9.26 Hr Tues and Thurs 4:45-6:45pm and Sat 10-noon, Feb- April. Applications: www.lsse.org or email resume to bilzb@amherstma.gov

Zoar Outdoors is seeking adventuresome people to be summer guides for whitewater rafting and zip-line canopy tours. Join our training program and spend the summer splashing through rapids or zipping through trees. Aplicants should be great with people, have a positive attitude and be comfortable working as a team or independantly. Application dealine: Feb. 15th. Call 800-532-7483 or see www.zoaroutdoor.com/jobs.htm for an application.

WANTED

Part-Time Personal Care Attendant about 10-12 hrs/week. Flexible Hours. Please call Patrick 413-275-7928

FOR RENT

Center of town 1,2,3 bedrooms; hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for June and September. NO FEES www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

How Suite it is! $650 includes all. 10 minutes from Umass, free parking, share with father, 8 year old daughter, 2 cats. Quiet, private, friendly. Furnished bedroom, seperate bathroom, deck entrance in 2 story house. Free cable/wifi. Short/long term lease option. Jonathan 413-222-3006

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 Bedroom Apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug, or Sept. First Come, First Serve. Get Them While They Last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop By Or Call 549-0600

SERVICES

Pregnant? Want to talk? Call birthright 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 Hour hotline 1-800-550-4900 www.birthright.org

WE WANT YOUR COMICS

FO' SERIOUS

E-mail:
comics@dailycollegian.com

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20 - Feb. 18
Your edginess level is the quivalent to the naughty words found in Will Smith's raps.

pisces Feb. 19 - Mar. 20
Today, you will accomplish more than a drug free Andy Dick!

aries Mar. 21 - Apr. 19
The Dining Commons are only worth it half of the time. For everything else, there is YCMP. Brought to you by Morgan Freeman.

taurus Apr. 20 - May. 20
The heavy rain can only be defeated by an umbrella that has been dipped in gold and blessed by the Village People.

gemini May. 21 - Jun. 21
Sugar is best eaten in the morning. Starches are better eaten while under your bed reading dirty literature.

cancer Jun. 22 - Jul. 22
You think you got it bad? Try losing your dignity while removing your bike from a PVTA bus!

leo Jul. 23 - Aug. 22
For every person who got wet yesterday, there was a stoner staying in and playing Modern Warfare 2.

virgo Aug. 23 - Sept. 22
The electrical outlet nearest to your bed speaks to you at night. It wants to get back with your sweet phone charger.

libra Sept. 23 - Oct. 22
We pity you not for a particular reason but for a very peculiar one.

scorpio Oct. 23 - Nov. 21
Capitalism works great with a full stomach. Have you been to the new Taco Bell in Hadley, yet?

sagittarius Nov. 22 - Dec. 21
Do not forget to put some of Snicker's pickle juice in your morning cup of haterade.

capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 19
The key to surviving your morning commute is to think of slapping your favorite ...

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSTUESDAY

TUESDAY, JANUARY 26, 2010 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The Minutemen got impressive performances out of Joey Sbordon, who won both the 1650 freestyle and 200 backstroke Sunday.

Dual meet successful for UM swimming and diving team

By Jefferey Engmann
Collegian Staff

It was a very busy weekend for the Massachusetts swimming and diving teams. Not only did both teams travel on Friday to compete in their first dual meet since Dec. 5, but after a short turnaround, they competed in another race.

On Sunday, UMass traveled to Colgate for their seventh dual meet of the season.

The Minutemen were able to capitalize on yet another strong day off the diving board by sophomore Jason Cook, as well as an impressive day from the UMass Athlete of the Week Joey Sbordon. UMass emerged victorious against the Red Raiders with a score of 182-106. Cook for the second time in one weekend, placed first in both the one and three meter dives.

Sbordon won both the 1650 freestyle and 200 backstroke with times of 16:39.36 and 2:00.91 respectively. The wins on Saturday give him a team best 15 individual wins this season.

The Minutemen were also anchored by significant contributions from their talented freshman class. Freshman Beau Garufi played an instrumental role in Sunday's win, as he took the 100 and 200 breaststroke events. Fellow Freshman Jorge Fortin was victorious in the 100 backstroke, as the Minutemen improved to 5-2 in dual meets this season.

The Minutewomen were defeated by the Red Raiders by a score of 189-110. The Minutewomen had several key contributors, including victories from junior Tavis Potter, and sophomore Hannah Swift on the diving board. The diving team also received a second place finish from Michaela Butler.

The weekend started great for both teams, as they competed against Boston College at Chestnut Hill. Behind strong performances from several swimmers, including sophomore Sarah Kanallas and captain Elizabeth Walsh.

The Minutewomen dominated the Eagles to earn their forth victory in dual meets this season, winning by a score of 174.5-125.5 on Friday afternoon. Kanellas' day included victories in both the 100 and 200 butterfly events. Walsh led her 200 medley relay team, and helped them capture first place, but did so by receiving strong times from junior Jessica Starosielec, freshman Amina Meho and Kallenas. Freshman Julie Magyar performed well, as she won the 1000 and 500 freestyle events. Hannah Swift swept the diving events, as she placed first in both the one meter and three meter events. In all, the Minutewomen won 12 of 16 events.

The Minutemen were in complete control on Friday as well, as they were able to earn yet another victory against BC. In the 19 matchups between the two programs, the Minutemen have emerged as victorious all but one time.

The Minutemen won 15 of 16 events in Friday's meet, and received strong performances by a wide contingent of swimmers. Sbordon won three individual events on Friday, while junior Brian Schmidt made his presence felt in the pool, as he earned victories in both 100 and 200 breaststroke. Both of the Minutemen 200 medley relay teams finished side by side, earning the number one and two slots in the race.

Saturday will be special for both the men and women's swim team, as they will participate in Senior Day against Fordham University at Joseph Rogers Pool.

Jeffrey Engmann can be reached at jengmann@student.umass.edu.

Velez dashes to record

Sprinter leads Minutemen to third place finish

By Michael Wood
Collegian Correspondent

The Massachusetts men's indoor track and field team visited Rhode Island on Saturday and came away with third place overall in a field of seven teams at the Rhode Island Invitational.

Leading the way for the Minutemen was junior sprinter Darius Velez, who etched his name into the UMass record books by winning the 55-meter dash in a time of 6.39 seconds. Velez is currently the second fastest sprinter in the 55-meter in school history, with his first place finish qualifying him for both the New England and Eastern College Athletic Conference championships.

"He's one of our top guys," UMass coach Ken O'Brien said. "He's our fastest sprinter and one of our best athletes, and we're very happy with how he's been able to help us out in his career so far."

In the 55-meter hurdles, senior Tyler Cotto took second place with a time of 7.65 seconds. Sophomore Philip Wellman also earned fifth place in the 200-meter dash, recording a time of 23.27 seconds, as O'Brien was pleased with what he saw from his leaders.

"Tyler and Darius have been a great one-two punch for us," said O'Brien. "They push each other in practice and in meets, and we're excited to see them continue to impress throughout the season."

The Minutemen travel to Roxbury, Mass. on Friday to compete in the Reebok Boston Indoor Games.

On the road in New York, the Massachusetts women's track and field team took fifth place overall in the Great Dane Invitational on Saturday.

After a fast start to the 2010 season, senior Lisa Wilson set her second school record of the year, this time in the weight throw. Her mark of 55.01 seconds was good enough for third place at the meet, helping the Minutewomen finish fifth in a field of 25 teams. Wilson now holds five school records in her career, and has qualified for the New England and Eastern College Athletic Conference championships.

In her second meet as a collegiate athlete, freshman Nicole Pompei placed first in the pole vault competition with a height of 11-11.75 to place as third in school history also qualifying for both the New England and ECAC championships.

Additionally freshman Courtney Baldwin placed second in the 1000-meter run and qualified for the ECAC championship with a time of 2:56.92. She has qualified for the New England Championships in both the mile and the 1000-meter run this season.

The Minutewomen will attend the Boston Indoor Games in Roxbury on Friday.

Michael Wood can be reached at mcwood@student.umass.edu.

A member of the Boston University hockey team prepares for a faceoff against UMass earlier this season. The Terriers scored one goal in the first nine minutes of the third period against UNH.

Overtime win helps Merrimack hault skid

No. 16 UNH downs Boston University 4-1, second period helps UMass-Lowell against BC

By Geena Lombardi
Collegian Staff

After seven consecutive losses, the Merrimack men's ice hockey team bounced back, earning a 2-1 victory over Providence Saturday night. It was freshman Brandon Brodhag who stepped up for his team and scored the game-winner in overtime against the Friars.

The Warriors (8-13-0, 5-9-0 Hockey East) took the lead at the 15 minute, four second mark in the first period. Adam Ross took the first shot, but was denied by Friars' goalie Alex Beaudry. Carter Madsen was close behind and put the rebounded shot into the back of Providence's net.

The Friars (9-13-1, 4-11-1 Hockey East) came back in the second period to even out the score at 1-1. Ian O'Connor scored for his team at the 15:49 mark when he took a rebounded Eric Baier shot and put it past goalkeeper Andrew Braithwaite.

Braithwaite made 34 saves for Merrimack, stopping Providence's offense and keeping the score tied. Beaudry also stood strong in net, stopping 39 shots, 11 in the third period alone, to send the game into overtime. Beaudry's performance for the Friars earned him co-honors of the Pure Hockey Defensive Player of the Week.

It took just over a minute into overtime for Brodhag to score the game-winning goal for the Warriors. Jesse Todd was credited with the assist that set up the goal, passing the puck to Pat Bowen who took the shot, but was stopped by Beaudry. Brodhag waited for the rebound and beat Beaudry to the puck, scoring his eighth goal of the season.

Merrimack's defense clearly played a large role in the victory, keeping Providence's leading scorer Matt Bergland away from the puck. The Friars also went 0-for-4 on power-play opportunities, something that could have sparked its offense.

The Warriors will next host the Hockey East leading New Hampshire on Friday.

Wildcats riding four-game winning streak

No. 16 UNH increased its fourth consecutive game winning streak with a victory over Boston University. Sophomore Damon Kipp and junior Mike Sisko contributed to the win with a goal and an assist each.

The Wildcats (12-7-2, 8-11-3 HE) struck first five minutes into play with a Mike Borisenok goal, assisted by Stevie Moses and Dalton Speelman.

They increased their lead to 2-0 in the second period with a Kipp goal from the right point, while Sisko and Peter LeBlanc were credited with the assists. With five minutes remaining in the second, Kipp and Phil DeSimone assisted Bobby Butler to score again for New Hampshire.

Butler leads UNH with 101 career points, along with 17 goals and 16 assists. He also is second in the conference in both categories, trailing behind Massachusetts wing James Marcou.

The Terriers lone goal came nine minutes into the third period, when Chris Connolly took advantage of a power play and put the puck past Wildcats' goalie Brian Foster. Boston University had another six-on-three power play opportunity in the third, but they could not convert it into a goal.

UNH's offensive attack was not over yet; with three minutes remaining in the game Sisko added a goal for the Wildcats, leading to their 4-1 victory.

Despite only scoring a single goal, the Terriers held a 35-32 shot advantage over New Hampshire.

Foster had a strong showing in net to help out his team, stopping 34 shots from BU's offense. Foster is ranked in the top five in Hockey East with a 2.55 goals allowed average. With the loss, Grant Rollheiser falls to a negative 2-1-3 record while in net for Boston University.

Second period all the difference for UMass-Lowell

Two goals late in the third period gave UMass-Lowell a 3-1 victory over Boston College Saturday night at the Tsongas Arena.

After an inactive first period with no scoring from either team, the River Hawks (14-9-2, 8-6-2 Hockey East) came alive in the second period to take the 1-0 advantage, when Scott Campbell went unassisted down the ice to score his eighth goal of the season.

The Eagles (12-8-2, 9-6-2 Hockey East) had multiple opportunities to take the lead in the third period, including a Ben Smith goal that was nullified due to contact with his hand. However, Smith came back and put BC on the board eight minutes into the third with a goal assisted by Joe Whitney and Brian Gibbons.

Paul Worthington broke the tie for UMass-Lowell at the 12:57 mark, putting the puck past netminder John Muse. With three seconds remaining, the River Hawks ensured a victory with a goal from Kory Falite.

UMass-Lowell's defense also played an important part in the game, stopping the Eagle's main offensive threat, Cam Atkinson. Atkinson has 23 points for the season along with a team-leading 14 goals scored.

UMass-Lowell held a slight shot advantage of 29-26, along with goalie Carter Hutton saving 25 shots for the win. Hutton has had an impressive season in net, ranking No. 1 in the conference with a low 29 goals allowed.

Geena Lombardi can be reached at glombardi@student.umass.edu.

Dukes get past Bonnies on late three-pointer

An'Juan Wilderness hits game-winning shot in lane for Charlotte victory over Explorers

By Ben Lambert
Collegian Staff

Sophomore Melquan Bolding drilled a 3-point basket with 3.4 seconds remaining to lift Duquesne over visiting St. Bonaventure 70-69 on Saturday. Bolding was the third highest scorer for the Dukes on the night, draining 14 points.

Junior forward Damian Saunders and sophomore guard Eric Evans scored 15 points apiece to pace the Dukes. Saunders was injured with 10:56 to go, but returned to the game to assist the game-winning bucket, also leading the Dukes with nine boards.

Defense was important for the Dukes throughout the game, as they forced 16 turnovers, and junior Bill Clark took a charge down the stretch that gave the ball back to the Dukes with 40.2 remaining, who were down a field goal. Clark, a junior, also added 10 points in 23 minutes.

Duquesne was up 15 with seconds left in the first half, but the Bonnies battled back to make the game close in the final moments.

Sophomore Andrew Nicholson led St. Bonaventure with 29 points on 11-of-19 shooting, and guard Chris Matthews also scored 14 points and had three assists.

Wilderness leads 49ers

Junior An'Juan Wilderness hit a runner in the lane as the clock ran out to lead Charlotte over La Salle, 84-82 on Saturday. Forward Shamari Spears led the 49ers in scoring with 22 points.

See A-10 BBALL on page 6

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY

COLLEGIAN

HIGH: 42 LOW: 24 www.DailyCollegian.com WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 27, 2010

UM psychologists offer ADHD counseling

New study aims to aid parents and children

By Alyssa Creamer
Collegian Staff

This February, the University of Massachusetts' Psychological Services Center is hosting its program directed at aiding parents in caring for hyperactive pre-school children.

The program initially began this past fall semester, and parents are instructed to attend 15 weekly group meetings to discuss, according to a release, "how to handle the emotional outbursts that are common among hyperactive preschoolers."

"I was a really hyper and stubborn as a little girl," said UMass freshman Jessica Lee.

"My parents definitely had some hard times controlling my hyperactivity. I basically did what I wanted, when I wanted, all the time. I would run up to strangers randomly while out with my parents and hug them. Or I'd run away from my parents at the mall. I remember this one time, I wanted to read a book, and even though my mom said no, I ran off and did it anyway. My mom had to call for me over the loudspeaker in the mall."

There are arguments that hyperactivity in young children is an almost normal phase children go through before maturing.

However, sometimes, hyperactivity can be a sign that a young child may face issues with their hyperactivity as they age or be diagnosed with Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder [ADHD].

According to a release, "clinical psychology members Lisa Harvey and Rebecca Stowe and doctoral student Sharonne Herbert believe that intervening with these children early on may help them experience fewer problems as they grow."

"This course definitely could have given my parents some useful tips on how to handle a hyperactive child," said Lee.

"I think my parents had a hard time determining whether I was acting out or just hyperactive. And that many other parents might have difficulty deciding whether to punish their kids or treat them differently. If parents know their child is hyperactive or has some sort of hyperactive disorder, it might help them to give their child the best care they need."

According to an article published on the Web site babycenter.com, Meg Zweiback nurse practitioner and family consultant, writes that it is important to understand "the needs of an active, impulsive preschooler."

Needs include placing hyperactive children in locations conducive to their need to move around frequently basically, Zweiback implies that hyperactive children, like bulls, do not fair well in China shops.

"Recognize that your child will be happiest playing in a child-friendly environment where she can run around and touch things, not shopping in a hardware store or going to an art museum," said Zweiback.

"Understand that [your child] won't be able to sit or stand quietly for long periods, so that asking [the child] to wait in line or sit in an office waiting room may be asking too much."

COURTESY WWW.UMASS.EDU

UMass clinical psychology members Lisa Harvey, (left), Rebecca Stowe, (right) and graduate student Sharonne Herbert hope the study will prevent fewer problems for children with hyperactivity as they grow up.

Zweiback also advises parents to ensure their children get enough sleep.

"Any child who is tired will be irritable and "wired" during the day will be harder to deal with than a well-rested child," said Zweiback.

The program is free for families who qualify for its services and agree to take part in assessments before and after participating in the program.

Sessions will be held on Thursday evenings in the Psychological Services Center's facilities in 123 Tobin Hall.

Alyssa Creamer can be reached at acreamer@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY WWW.UMASS.EDU

Cyber security expert Kevin Fu is set to speak in Hong Kong during the 2010 "Make a Difference" conference about how hobbies, including baking artisanal breads, can be scientific and stimulate creativity.

Scientist claims baking breads empowers creative thought

By Michelle Williams
Collegian Staff

Experimenting with flour, salt and yeast, cyber security expert Kevin Fu of the Computer Science Department at University of Massachusetts spends a good deal of time baking up bread.

Fu says that spending time in the kitchen, baking artisanal bread, "helps to keep his creative juices flowing and gives him a great environment in which to mull over thorny research problems."

He will be speaking in Hong Kong on how hobbies, such as baking, are interrelated with scientific topics.

In front of 800 high school and college students Fu will speak at the 2010 "Make a Difference" conference.

His speech, entitled "Cooking Up Scientific Discovery", organizers believe will help the young audience "get inspired by change makers from around the world" as well as, "be empowered through workshops and challenges."

He might even bake bread on stage.

Fu is an assistant professor of Computer Science and in 2009 was honored as Technology Review magazine's Innovator of the Year.

He is one of the youngest cyber security researchers in the field.

The professor's love of bread began years ago.

After a discussion over lunch with a co-worker Fu said he decided to try baking. "When I was a graduate student at MIT, I once boasted about having made a sandwich from scratch. A colleague retorted, 'But did you make the bread?' Because of the challenge, I began baking my own artisanal breads and enrolled in short courses at the Culinary Institute of America and the French Culinary Institute."

He links his work with technology and his culinary skills through video guides.

"I created time-lapsed videos of bread fermentation to appreciate time scales," Fu said.

"I made identical batches of bread with subtle differences in technique for comparative analysis. I planted a small wheat field to better understand how something as simple as bread relies on layers of abstraction and know how."

Specializing in research to enhance privacy and security for such devices as contactless credit cards and implantable medical aids, including wireless pacemakers, Fu has been a member of the UMass faculty since 2005.

In 2008, his team of researchers showed the security community that devices, including implantable cardiac defibrillators, were vulnerable.

As a result, they started to design new zero-power technology, which allows the technology to work without draining the medical aid's batteries.

These chips have already been tested to make the devices more protected.

Fu's lab of Security and Privacy Research remains studying privacy and security faults of medical devices.

As for how his research is guided, Fu said, "My security research is guided by thinking deeply about simple things that society often unknowingly takes for granted. Before my journey into bread making, my research philosophy was only half-baked."

Michelle Williams can be reached at mnwilliams@student.umass.edu

UMass Crime Log: Thursday Jan. 21 through Monday Jan. 25

By Michelle Williams
Collegian Staff

Thursday Jan. 21

Kayleigh E. Ercha of Peabody, Mass. was arrested at 10:27 a.m. as a result of an outstanding warrant.

Having received a notification that there was a warrant out for her arrest, Ercha went to the University of Massachusetts Police Department (UMPD) to learn more information.

The warrant was due to a failure to appear in the Eastern Hampshire District Court where she was transported to from the UMPD.

Emily F. Anderson of 12 Woods Rd. Westminster, Mass. was arrested at 7:13 p.m. in Lot 50 as a result of a traffic stop.

Anderson was charged with possession of liquor while under the age of 21.

Michael C. Bach of 75 Grover Rd. Ashland, Mass. was arrested at 7:58 p.m. in Lot 49 as a result of a liquor law violation.

He was charged with possession of liquor while under the age of 21.

Friday Jan. 22

Spencer Owen Nowokunski of 49 Slack Brook Rd. Leominster, Mass. was arrested at 12:15 a.m. on Sunset Ave.

Nowokunski was charged with disorderly conduct.

Geng Chen of 990 N. Pleasant St. Amherst, Mass. was arrested at 4:00 p.m. in the North Village Apartments.

A UMPD officer was called to the apartments by the victim.

She reportedly had been struck by Chen and had visible scratch marks on her face.

Chen was charged with domestic assault and battery and the destruction of property worth less than $250.

Jon O'Leary of 222 River St. Norwell, Mass. was arrested at 6:23 p.m. on Massachusetts Ave. as a result of a traffic stop.

He was charged with possession of liquor while under the age of 21.

Gabrielle P. Boyle of 1 Raynor Ln. Hingham, Mass. received a summons to arrest at 6:23 p.m. on Massachusetts Ave. as a result of a traffic stop.

She faces potential charges of possession of liquor while under the age of 21.

Kevin John O'Neil of 122 Burnham Rd. Lowell, Mass. was arrested at 8:20 p.m. in Lot 33 for liquor law violations.

O'Neil has been charged with the misuse of false identification and the possession of liquor while under the age of 21.

Richard Paul Sheehan of 146 Ludlam St. Lowell, Mass. was arrested at 8:20 p.m. in Lot 33 for liquor law violations.

Sheehan was charged with possession of liquor while under the age of 21.

Saturday Jan. 23

Kyle Moran was arrested at 2:04 a.m. at the intersection of Governors Dr. and North Pleasant St as the result of a traffic stop.

A UMPD officer saw Moran advance into the intersection before the light had turned green and while following Moran saw him stick his head out the window and yell at pedestrians.

When the officer approached the vehicle the officer smelt alcohol and noticed Moran had bloodshot, glossy eyes.

Moran failed three of four field sobriety tests and blew a 0.11 blood alcohol content both on a portable breath test and a breathalyzer in the police station.

Moran was charged with a liquor OUI, and failure to stop at a traffic light.

Nicholas James Leahy of 65 Mill Creek Rd. Chatham, Mass. was arrested at 2:10 a.m. in Lot 44 as a result of a liquor law violation.

A UMPD officer noticed Leahy fail to stop at the intersection of Thatcher Rd. and Eastman Ln. and signaled for Leahy to pull over.

The arresting officer noticed Leahy had bloodshot, glossy eyes and asked him to perform four field sobriety tests.

Leahy failed all four and blew 0.15 blood alcohol content on a portable breath test.

The officer also found unopened alcohol in the trunk of Leahy's car.

He was charged with a liquor OUI, failure to stop at a stop sign, and possession of liquor while under the age of 21.

Sean Robert Willis of 30 Withrop Rd. Hingham, Mass. as arrested 9:17 p.m. in Lot 32 as a result of a liquor law violation.

Willis was charged with possession of liquor while under the age of 21.

Nicolas Jermyn of 104 Kilby St. Hingham, Mass. was arrested 9:17 p.m. in Lot 32 as a result of a liquor law violation.

Jermyn was charged with possession of liquor while under the age of 21.

Brian Edward Bates of 55 George St. Rockland, Mass. was arrested 9:17 p.m. in Lot 32 as a result of a liquor law violation.

Bates was charged with possession of liquor while under the age of 21.

Sunday Jan. 24

Steven James Ellis of 7 Sergi Ln. Billerica, Mass. was arrested at 1:01 a.m. in Lot 50.

Ellis was arrested on charges of disorderly conduct.

Pierre Davis Payette of 7 Hubbard St. Jamaica Plain, Mass. was arrested in Lot 32.

Payette was arrested on charges of disorderly conduct.

Lisa Anne Dobson of 305 Highland Ave Pittsfield, Mass. was arrested at 1:52 a.m. at the intersection of University Dr. and Fearing St. as the result of a traffic stop.

An officer on patrol noticed Dobson violating marked traffic lanes and fail to stop at a stop sign on University Dr and signaled for her to pull over.

The officer then noticed Dobson was confused and disoriented with bloodshot eyes.

She failed to complete field sobriety tests and blew a 0.12 blood alcohol content on a portable breath test.

Dobson refused to take another breathalyzer test at the police station.

Dobson was charged with a liquor OUI, failure to stop at a stop sign, and violating marked traffic lanes.

Michelle Williams can be reached at mnwilliams@student.umass.edu

ARTS & LIVING

Looking for lunch?

Look no further than Latino's restaurant, located in South Amherst, for a creative spin on authentic Latin dishes.

SEE PAGE 4

SPORTS

UMass hopes to snap losing streak

After getting blown out by Baylor, the Minutemen are hoping to capitalize against a smaller opponent tonight against St. Joseph's.

SEE PAGE 8

EDITORIAL & OPINION

Columnist Sara Crossman explains that President Barack Obama's plan to freeze domestic programs could affect funding for the nation's education.

SEE PAGE 3

DailyCollegian.com

3 Questions: B.o.B

Collegian staffer Garth Brody interviews the recording artist B.o.B

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXX
ISSUE 7

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
413-545-3500
Fax 413-545-3699
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF William McGuinness
MANAGING EDITOR Matt Rocheleau
MANAGING WEB EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
BUSINESS MANAGER Daniel Jette
PRODUCTION MANAGER Michael Sarkes
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Kirsten Swenson
ADVERTISING MANAGER Michael Tortorici
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Amanda Joinson
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Shaina Murphy
COPY EDITOR Andrew Wirn
EDITORIAL EDITOR Alyssa Creamer
NEWS EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS EDITOR Jeffrey R. Larnard
PHOTO EDITOR Matthew Harrison
IT MANAGER Victor Jaork
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Matt Zolnierz
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Nicole Jacinto
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Norman Provost
CLASSIFIED MANAGER Katelyn Tamilio
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Justin Gagnon
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Elyse Horowitz
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Cal Scannell
ASSTANT EDITORIAL Benjamin Moriarty
ASSTANT EDITORIAL Michael Phillis
ASSTANT EDITORIAL Matthew M. Robare
ASSISTANT NEWS Samuel Butterfield
ASSISTANT NEWS Jenn Heshion
ASSISTANT NEWS Chris Shores
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jay Auser
ASSISTANT SPORTS David Brinch
ASSISTANT SPORTS Adam Miller
ASSISTANT PHOTO Maxwell Sparr
ASSISTANT PHOTO Samantha Webber
SENIOR PRODUCER Sara Cods
SENIOR PRODUCER Pete Rizzo

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967. The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

PRODUCTION CREW
on staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Jeffrey R. Larnard

COPY EDITOR
Hannah McGoldrick

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Nick Guarino

Latest setbacks for democrats may strengthen republican support in Nov. congressional elections

By Tom Hamburger and James Oliphant
Tribune Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON The Supreme Court's decision to wipe out most campaign spending limits, coming on top of the Massachusetts Senate upset, was a potentially major blow to Democrats and a boost for Republicans in the November congressional elections.

The Massachusetts vote, which ended the Democrats' filibuster-proof 60-vote majority in the Senate, has already sent shock waves through business-oriented interest groups and lobbyists, forcing some to reconsider their willingness to cooperate with President Barack Obama on such contentious issues as health care and the environment.

Even before Tuesday's special election to fill the Senate seat long held by the late Ted Kennedy, increasingly militant pressure from conservatives had spurred a clear, well funded turn toward supporting Republican candidates, including Massachusetts Sen.-elect Scott Brown.

And the court decision, which ends a long-standing ban on direct corporate spending on political campaigns, is expected to swell the already substantial flow of campaign money from business groups into Republican coffers.

"The Supreme Court just predetermined the winners of next November's elections," an angry Sen. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y., declared.

"It won't be Republicans. It won't be Democrats. It will be corporate America."

Schumer and Rep. Chris Van Hollen, D-Md., the chairman of the Democratic House re-election effort, said they would offer legislation to try and scale back the reach of the decision before this November's congressional elections.

But the fact that the Supreme Court grounded its ruling in basic First Amendment rights – holding that corporations have as much right as individuals to use their funds to express political views – will make it hard for Congress to legislate substantial restrictions even if the votes were available to do so.

Democratic congressional aides said proposals could include tighter monitoring on rules that prohibit coordination between outside groups and campaigns, or increased disclosure requirements that would force companies to be more transparent about their electoral activities to shareholders and others.

The court decision did not strike down the ban on direct corporate giving to individual candidates for federal office; that issue was not raised in the case before the Supreme Court.

But the distinction is not expected to have major importance because most business-related contributions were already flowing through lobbying organizations such as the U.S. Chamber of Commerce and independent groups organized to support candidates on the basis of issues.

It was the latter kind of spending that flooded into the Massachusetts Senate race at the last minute, including more than $1 million spent by the Chamber in support of Brown in the last few days of the race.

The Chamber's spending has come under fire from reformers, but the Supreme Court decision that corporations have as much right to contribute directly to such groups as individuals do likely clears the way for it to spend more freely than ever on the 2010 midterms.

Politically, one of Obama's most notable achievements during his first year in office had been persuading some key Republican-leaning business lobbies to support Democrats and to work with the administration on some of its biggest initiatives.

In particular, Obama's efforts had produced a noticeable shift in the patterns of giving and participation with organizations such as the Business Roundtable, the National Restaurant Association, the National Federation of Independent Business and the pharmaceutical industry.

Last year, following Obama's inauguration, those groups had broken ranks with hard-line business organizations and worked with the administration, especially on health care.

The Roundtable and the NFIB had joined a coalition with organized labor All of them, for example, had refused to join a chamber backed "Start Over" coalition opposing the Senate and House health bills.

But in the days leading up to the Massachusetts vote, when polls showed Brown heading toward a historic upset, some of those groups turned back fitfully toward their Republican roots.

The NFIB, for example, which faced a rebellion from some conservatives who once worked closely with the organization, insisted on more public criticism of the Democrats health care plan.

"Members are wondering why the organization was either AWOL or collaborating for months and months," said Grover Norquist, the conservative activist who heads Americans for Tax Reform.

NFIB President Dan Danner disputes Norquists suggestion that the organization had changed its stripes, but acknowledges that the group's view of health reform has soured.

Danner and conservatives note that the NFIB became one of the first organizations to send personnel and money into Massachusetts to help Brown, starting in early December.

Conservative pressures and responses like the NFIB's are now expected to intensify.

That worries Democrats, as does the effect of the court ruling.

"The decision is a big worry for Democrats," says Michael Meehan, a former DSCC official who has run several Senate campaigns in recent years. "It totally swings the balance.

"In a typical contested Senate race we calculate that one-third of the spending comes from the candidate, one-third from the party and one-third from outside groups. There are still limits on the first two, but unlimited sums are allowed from corporate America. "To the extent that corporations continue to favor Republicans, this is a major concern for Democrats everywhere," he said.

Sen. Russ Feingold, D-Wis., who authored the current campaign spending limits, said the decision gives a big advantage to the corporate world. "Corporations have huge war chests that far exceed current spending in our political system," he said.

Total spending on political advertising in the 2008 election cycle reached a record $2.6 billion.

Republican consultants, in particular, argued that the decision would simply shift spending by PACs and issue-based "front groups" to the corporations themselves.

"I don't believe that the ruling will fundamentally change the outcome of the elections given the obscene amounts of money that was spent independently in the last two years by everyone," said Jim Innocenzi, a GOP strategist in Alexandria, Va.

Rex Elsass, a Republican media strategist in Ohio, said "People will be directly responsible for their message.... Should I choose to run an ad myself as a company, I'm going to be involved in that message."

And some corporate leaders insisted they would not be quick to pump new funds into GOP causes.

President Obama will likely face tough times ahead in trying to gather support for his health care bill following several political blows to democrats, political correspondents say.

Winter Warm Up Activities Expo

The weather outside might be frightful, but UMass Amherst student organizations are delightful.

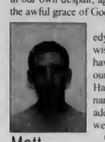
Get involved!

Wed, Jan 27
4pm-7pm
Student Union Ballroom

RSOs - Sign up on the CSD page on Campus Pulse!

Harry Potter arrives at MHC

On Thursday Jan. 28 at 7 p.m. Mount Holyoke College will host "Harry Potter's Worlds: Renaissance Science, Magic, and Medicine," a national traveling exhibition complete with costume contests and games.



THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
-Sir Salman Rushdie

Aid the Haitians

There is an oft-quoted line from an Ancient Greek poet named Aeschylus who once wrote, "even in our sleep, pain which cannot forget falls drop by drop upon the heart, until, in our own despair, against our will, comes wisdom through the awful grace of God."

Matt Kushi

In essence, within the depths of tragedy, we usually find the shining light of wisdom and humanity at its strongest. We have found this to be true during many of our own country's times of need. Pearl Harbor, 9/11 and Hurricane Katrina to name a few. Earlier this month, the world added another event to this list of events we would have rather never happened.

On Tuesday, Jan. 12, the country of Haiti was rocked by a 7.3 magnitude earthquake. Earthquakes are not an uncommon occurrence in our world. What made this earthquake disastrous, as it was stated in news throughout the ongoing coverage of this deadly force, was the fact that the earthquake occurred 5 miles below the ocean's surface.

In a moment of terror that lasted seconds, 45 seconds to be exact, a whole country was transformed from a functioning society into a canvas of destruction and sorrow. According to the CIA Factbook, there are approximately 9 million people who call the grounds of Haiti home. Of those 9 million people, 2 million people reside in the capital city of Port-au-Prince according to National Geographic. The death toll from this earthquake has been catastrophic.

It is the city of Port-au-Prince that took the brunt of the earthquake. What was once a city is now a pile of debris. Much of the city was destroyed and leveled by the earthquake. Many of the buildings simply could not take the volatile shaking of the earthquake.

Over the course of the past few weeks, we have watched the saying that a picture is worth a thousand words, play out in front of our very eyes. There are people, in Haiti, walking around in state of shock.

Haiti, the Western Hemisphere's poorest nation, will not be able to get on its feet alone. They simply do not have the resources. That is where we, the rest of the world, come in. It will be from the aid of the common man and woman that Haiti will be rebuilt.

You can read their thoughts by looking into their eyes. In their eyes, there is despair and anguish. There is bewilderment as they try to comprehend how everything that they knew could have collapsed in 45 seconds of sheer terror. They look at what used to be their world. While it is true that Haiti was poor before the earthquake, the people of Haiti at least had some semblance of a country. Now, it lies in ruins.

Over the past few weeks, we have been forced to see images that many of us would rather want to be spared from seeing. It rips at the strings of the heart to see a small child lying on a gurney out in the street and to know that, even with supplies being shipped in from abroad, medical care for the injured is no where near adequate.

For many, seeing this tragedy unfold turned into a call of action. Seeing fellow humans suffer through no makings of their own has touched the hearts of many to go out and do what they can to help the people of Haiti rebuild their country.

Haiti, the Western Hemisphere's poorest nation, will not be able to get on its feet alone. They simply do not have the resources. That is where we, the rest of the world, come in. It will be from the aid of the common man and woman that Haiti will be rebuilt.

Now, as a University of Massachusetts student, you may be wondering what you can do to help. The answer is simple: donate. Donate whatever you can and want to. You can donate food and medical supplies. You can donate blankets and clothing. Even donating money helps. Haiti needs every ounce of support that they can get.

All you need to do is walk down to the Campus Center. There are student groups on the concourse that are taking donations to send to Haiti. There are also many building-wide initiatives in the Residence Life halls to help raise money for these victims. One can also donate through the American Red Cross.

Anything that you can donate will be of great help. On the official White House website, there is a link to donate to a relief organization set up by former Presidents Bill Clinton and George W. Bush at ClintonBushHaitiFund.org.

In an e-mail sent out shortly following the earthquake, UMass Chancellor Robert C. Holub included an internet link for those interested with working for the International Red Cross. Students can join in relief efforts to gather supplies for Haiti. You could even go down to Haiti to help in the relief effort independently.

Whether you are donating at a national level, local level or simply through support groups on campus, the support that you are giving is just as important as the next person's.

What matters in the end is that we are there to support people who need the most. One can help, even in the simplest form, by keeping the people of Haiti in your thoughts. They need support now more than ever.

Matt Kushi is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mkushi@student.umass.edu.

Liberty and justice only for privileged

Scott Harris

While in high school, I would watch Patriots games at my friend's house. His dad would watch the games with us, and when a black player ran with the ball, he would often yell "He's running like he just stole a TV!" When a white player was making a similar play, he would yell "He's running like the store owner!"

The assumption he made is obvious: blacks are likely to be criminals and wards of the state, while whites are likely to be honest, hard working tax payers. This assumption may be ignorant and racist, but it's easy to understand why many believe it as blacks statistically have higher rates of poverty and incarceration.

There are several ways to explain such racial disparities. The conservative, "personal responsibility" belief contends individuals are responsible for their life situation, and if people work hard enough, they will succeed. Under this idea, the 24 percent of blacks and 10 percent of whites cited by the US Census Bureau as living in poverty in 2006, are only in that situation because they are lazy.

But this "personal responsibility" claim cannot explain wealth differences between blacks and whites. According to "Black Wealth White Wealth," a book by sociologists Melvin Oliver and Thomas Shapiro, blacks earn 70 cents for every dollar earned by whites but possess only 15 cents for every dollar of white wealth.

Individuals have some control over their present socio-economic condition, but they cannot alter history, which has placed severe restrictions on blacks' ability to accrue wealth.

Some people scoff at this notion, erroneously believing 1960s Civil Rights legislation instantly made blacks and whites equal citizens in all respects. Official segregation was made illegal, but de facto segregation – which is even more pernicious, as it is harder to identify and understand – continues to flourish today.

De facto segregation can be seen when comparing Boston with Belmont, a suburb 10 miles away. In the 2000 Census, Boston had a median family income of $44,000, where 20 percent of individuals lived below the poverty line; Belmont had a median family income of $95,057, where only 4.4 percent lived below the poverty line.

A large racial disparity mirrored this income disparity: Belmont's population was 1.1 percent black while Boston's was 25 percent black.

The conservative, "personal responsibility" belief contends individuals are responsible for their life situation, and if people work hard enough, they will succeed. Under this idea, the 24 percent of blacks and 10 percent of whites cited by the US Census Bureau as living in poverty in 2006, are only in that situation because they are lazy.

Suburbs are a relatively recent phenomenon. They grew with home ownership rate, which increased significantly after the federal government started insuring private mortgage loans during the New Deal, making it cheaper to buy a house.

These loans were only available for whites.

The Federal Housing Administration's 1938 Underwriting Manual said "if a neighborhood is to retain stability, it is necessary that properties shall continue to be occupied by the same social and racial groups."

The era's conventional wisdom said blacks decrease property values, meaning they were almost always denied financing for a suburban house. The government outlawed housing discrimination in 1968, but the practice still continues today, which explains the continued existence of Fair Housing centers.

Thus whites, recipients of cheap government insured mortgage loans, left cities for newly built homes in the suburbs as the country experienced a post war real estate boom.

According to historian Robert Self, 99 percent of this new housing went to whites from 1930 to 1952.

Cities shrank while the suburbs boomed. Cities steadily lost population, capital and jobs throughout the post war years to lucrative suburban markets, leaving fewer opportunities for blacks who could not leave. This is how the ghettos of today were created.

For children growing up in poverty with little opportunity, the deck was, and is, stacked against them.

Reducing poverty has been an excruciatingly slow process. In 1966, 41.8 percent of blacks lived below the poverty line, which dropped to 24.3 percent by 2006. This is a far higher poverty rate than the 10 percent of whites who live below the poverty line, especially considering whites comprise 70 percent of the population and blacks only 12 percent.

Persistent poverty levels and de facto segregation cause many urban school districts to underperform. Last year the state average graduation rate was 85 percent; Boston had a 60 percent graduation rate, while Belmont had a 93 percent graduation rate.

Lack of education, poverty and high unemployment rates – currently 15 percent of blacks, nine percent of whites – induce many blacks to turn to the "underground economy" of crime and drugs, resulting in high incarceration rates. In 2008 there were 727 white male inmates per 100,000 white males and 4,777 black male inmates per 100,000 black males.

Blacks are also more likely than whites to lack health insurance, 19 percent to 11 percent, leading to higher rates of disease compared to whites. Blacks are twice as likely to have diabetes, 30 percent more likely to die of heart disease and 60 percent more likely to die of a stroke.

Although unequal distribution of wealth is the largest disparity between blacks and whites, redistributing wealth is not the answer. Instead opportunities for education, health care and housing needs to be redistributed.

For example, Boston Public School students do not have the same educational opportunities as Belmont Public School students. To erase this inequity, more teachers should be hired for the lowest performing school districts, and they should be paid higher salaries. Also, state colleges and universities should be completely free for qualified students coming from poor families. Education is the most cost effective way to raise incomes, living standards, etc., but is useless if those who need it most cannot take full advantage of it.

Finally, blacks deserve access to better quality housing. Last year, 36 percent of blacks were denied a mortgage application, while only 13 percent of whites were. Black homeownership rates have increased in recent years with the help of government programs through Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac, but too often blacks had to settle for predatory loans. In a 2003 federal survey of 331 metropolitan areas, sub prime loans were more prevalent among blacks in 98 percent of these cities, proof that again the government failed to serve the needs of America's black community.

The government insured millions of cheap loans to middle class whites after World War II so they could buy a house and live the American dream. The government denied these same dreams to many others based on skin color. Liberty and justice for all? I have a feeling some people would disagree.

Chris Russell is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at crussell@student.umass.edu.

"Freeze" sends shivers to students

Sara Crossman

Tonight, at 9 p.m., President Obama will be proposing a spending freeze on many domestic programs and departments in his first State of the Union address. Obama will also discuss his budget proposal for the fiscal year 2011, which begins in October, on Monday, Feb. 1. This freeze would reduce spending by between $10 billion and $15 billion if Congress approves the administration's proposal. When President Obama proposed a spending reduction last year of $11.5 billion, Congress approved about three-fifths of it.

Obviously, the Obama Administration is proposing this spending freeze in large part because of the current economic situation, but considering the mounting deficit which is projected to reach $1.35 trillion this year, it is not going to be nearly enough of a reduction to make a significant difference.

Many republicans say that these cuts are not only insufficient, but that they are essentially a joke. Michael Steel, a spokesman for the House Minority Leader John Boehner, said, "Given Washington Democrats' unprecedented spending binge, this is like announcing you're going on a diet after winning a pie-eating contest."

Democratic leaders on the other hand believe that the President's support of a spending freeze would prove to the public that he can make tough decisions in tough times, and that this would pacify the current public belief that government spending is out of control. Many in Washington think that this belief may have contributed to the loss of the previously Democratic Massachusetts Senate seat to Republican Scott Brown last week.

This spending freeze, if approved, will last three years, but should produce an estimated savings of $250 billion over 10 years. Two hundred fifty billion seems like a lot of money, but compared with the additional $9 trillion the government is expected to add to the deficit over the next 10 years, it's chump change.

Certain spending like security and defense spending, foreign aid, Social Security, Medicare, and Medicaid will all be exempt from the freeze. Medicare, Medicaid and Social Security, together, make up the largest part of the current federal budget. These entitlement programs are only growing as the aging Baby Boomers reach retirement and as the number of people in need of assistance grows in the current recession.

So many of us are dependent on some kind of aid, mostly federal, in order to be able to afford to attend college, and the Obama Administration is aware of this.

This is the fastest growing part of the federal budget, and many people believe it will likely increase if the Health Care Reform bill is passed as a result of the bill's intention to create new systems and positions.

The President will announce tonight what the freeze will cover. However, at the moment we know that the programs and agencies that Congress annually allocates specific budgets for, such as air traffic control, farm subsidies, nutrition, national parks and most importantly, education, are up on the chopping block.

Knowing that education is covered under the same funding for domestic programs that will be frozen, cut, or eliminated is scary considering that Financial Aid Services here at UMass helped some 18,000 students attend school last year.

In addition, as a result of the recession, many of those who lost their jobs have returned to school in the hope that additional education will help them get a job when they return to the job market. Most of these new students need help paying for school now that they are unemployed, and so funding for education is particularly important to help these students stay in school.

So many of us are dependent on some kind of aid, mostly federal, in order to be able to afford to attend college, and the Obama Administration is aware of this. Because educational assistance affects so many people in this nation, based on information currently available, education will be a priority area for increased funding.

There is no area that the government could cut that wouldn't negatively affect some people, but the President has made it clear that education, energy, the environment and healthcare are too important for society as a whole to cut any spending in these areas.

Some of the decreases in spending in other areas will be put toward increasing funding in these key areas. This is especially true for student loans and childcare, because they are so important for the middle class to stay on its feet in this recession.

It is the sincere hope of all students relying on financial assistance that education remains untouched and unfrozen.

Sara Crossman is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at scrossman@student.umass.edu.

Brewery brings tasty selection

By Alex Tillotson
Collegian Correspondent

Right in the heart of downtown Northampton sits the Northampton Brewery Bar and Grille. Located at 11 Brewster Court, it is one of the best places to go when you're looking for classic American cuisine with a twist. This establishment is the oldest brewpub in the northeast that is still in operation and it prides itself on serving up some of the most outstanding food to go along with one or many of their home-brewed fine ales and lagers.

The setup of the restaurant includes an outdoor, rooftop beer garden as well as a sunroom. It's made up almost entirely of windows, and where there isn't glass, the walls are made of beautiful wooden plank framing. Although there's often a wait to be seated, the customers are encouraged to walk right up to the bar and grab a drink while passing the time before getting a table. Once you grab a seat, feel free to ask your server for a game, such as dominoes, checkers or cards, to name a few, to play while you wait.

In the evenings, the Brewery's dim-lit interior, coupled with the warm glow of the two giant fireplaces, is a great place to get cozy with a significant other at a small table for two. Once the food is served, however, the night can only get better.

The Brewery is known for having a wide selection of menu items, all at reasonable prices, including dishes like freshly made soups, sandwiches and Black Angus burgers on locally-baked breads, and entrees that range from plates of slow-roasted pork prepared with beer brewed in-house, to a heaping bowl of chicken and tiger shrimp jambalaya complete with smoked andouille sausage, vegetables and long-grain white rice.

The eatery also has a chef's page, which changes seasonally and includes items such as roasted vegetable quesadillas in the early fall and an akara and hummus wrap in the winter, which is made with Nigerian bean cakes in a spinach tortilla with roasted red pepper hummus, mesclun greens, carrots, tomatoes and red onion.

Still, among a multitude of delicious options, the Brewery is most famous for one thing on its menu, other than the beer: their chili.

Unlike the normal ground beef and bean chili that is often found at other restaurants, they slow-cook generous chunks of stew beef with a variety of spices, plump red beans, and their very own amber beer. Serve it up with some tri-colored tortilla chips and you could very well turn your starter into a meal.

As for dessert, you can choose from one of the many classic items such as homemade apple pie, seasonal cheesecakes, or their specialty, the Black Cat Chocolate Stout Cake, made with their very own Black Cat Stout. No matter what you order, the servers are friendly, always ready with drink refills on hand, and willing to answer any questions you might have.

The Northampton Brewery is a great place to go if you're searching for appetizing food, flavorful beer, or even food items that are prepared with beer, served all together in an eclectic and warm environment that is just a few minutes away from campus.

Alex Tillotson can be reached at atillots@student.umass.edu.

In addition to a mouthwatering menu and a vast selection of delectable beer, Northampton Brewery also offers a cozy atmosphere within its walls, as well as a window-encased sunroom and a rooftop beer garden.

Fresh Latin cuisine with creative twist

By Brendan Murphy
Collegian Correspondent

Ever wonder where to get a good Cuban sandwich around Amherst?

Well Latino's restaurant is the place to go. Yes, the sandwich that has taken Miami by storm is now right here in Amherst.

Tucked away behind the Moan and Dove and just to the left of the Hess station in South Amherst, Latino's is a little eatery that is serving traditional and non-traditional Latin cuisine. While most dishes are inspired from the two co-owners' home countries (Mare from Honduras and Pablo from Puerto Rico), influences from Central America, South America and the Caribbean can be tasted throughout most menu items.

When asked how they came up with their recipes, owners Mare and Pablo explain, "Most of our recipes are family inspired, but we have many originals creations as well. We experiment with ingredients a lot in the kitchen. The green banana sandwich was conceived and invented in our restaurant, as far as we know."

Indeed, the green banana sandwich is unique and delicious. Substituting the typical bread for fried green banana slices, Latino's sandwiches beef and cheese in-between and tops it off with lettuce, tomato, avocado, onions, a special house sauce and offer up a generous helping of their homemade Latin coleslaw on the side. This sandwich is only $6.99 and will leave the consumer's stomach stuffed. But the green banana sandwich isn't the restaurant's only unique creation.

According to the owners, their most popular dish is another non-traditional plate called puerco con cilantro (pork with cilantro). Let's be honest, who doesn't like cilantro? This involves cooking up tender, bite-sized pieces of pork and mixing them with a concoction of fresh cilantro, chopped juicy bits of tomatoes, and flavorful onions. A towering portion of yellow rice, black beans and fried plantain slices are served on the side. The sheer amount of food Latino's offers up in this plate can serve as dinner for days to come, and will only set you back by $9.99.

An additional feature that makes Latino's all the more special is that all food is made fresh on site. They prepare authentic Hispanic food using ingredients typically found in their home countries, including plantains, which tend to be less sweet than bananas.

At Latino's, plantains are central to many dishes on the menu. They look like big green bananas, but due to their high starch content, they require cooking prior to eating. Plantains are a staple to many countries and regions around the world, primarily in tropical regions. Pablo explains, "They are very important to Latino cooking. We can incorporate them in breakfast, lunch or dinner." Just a few ways in which Latino's has managed to use plantains in their cooking is by slicing and frying them into chips, making them into a sandwich, and substituting big slices in place of pasta for their own unique spin on lasagna.

The sandwich that simply can't be missed is the Cuban

See LATINO'S on page 5

Breaking down breakfast: strive for nutrition over convenience

By Leonor Vivanco
RedEye

Essence Lindsey was in a time crunch on her way from her home to work on Chicago's Michigan Avenue.

She darted inside McDonald's and minutes later emerged carrying her order. There was no time to waste on sitting down and eating there at 9:40 a.m. on a recent Friday morning. Lindsey, 24, said she buys hotcakes, hash browns and orange juice about twice a week from the Golden Arches when she's rushing.

Why?

"It's convenient."

Nationwide, time and convenience often win out over nutrition for breakfast, estimated to be an $81 billion a year industry. While grab-and-go options are easy, they can come at the expense of too many calories and not enough nutrients, health experts say.

People who don't have time to cook at home look for quick, portable, high-value and low-priced options, said Darren Tristano, executive vice president of Technomic Information Services, a food service consultant based in Chicago. When people buy breakfast during the week, 75 percent take it to go, according to a Technomic report released in November.

"When you're in an urban market, you see that more often. You come out of a train station, you're grabbing something you're going to consume at the office," Tristano said. "If you're coming from the burbs, you're also stopping at drive-thrus on the way in."

And it's likely you're eating a breakfast sandwich. More than 50 percent of on-the-go breakfast orders are breakfast sandwiches, said Harry Balzer, who studies eating habits and is vice president of the NPD Group, a market research company. It's a filling meal that ties in the most popular breakfast items consumed including eggs, toast and meat, he said.

Kevin Lota, 21, prefers a healthier option: breakfast bars. Every day when Lota arrives to work, he stops by a convenience store to pick one up.

"I'm always just tight on time. If I had the chance to eat breakfast, I would," said Lota, a student and public relations intern. He tries to get as much sleep as he can, so he wakes up with enough time to shower before he rushes out the door to get to work by 9 a.m.

At least Lota is eating breakfast. Nearly six out of 10 people say they skip breakfast at least once a week, according to Technomic's Breakfast Consumer Trend Report. Among the excuses: not hungry, time constraints and trying to lose weight.

But skipping breakfast won't help with dropping pounds, local dietitians said.

Those who skip breakfast tend to overeat while people who eat breakfast consume fewer calories throughout the day, said Gretchen Peyton, a registered dietitian at Northwestern Memorial Hospital and spokeswoman for the Illinois Dietetic Association.

And remember when Mom told you breakfast was the most important meal of the day? Nutritionists say she's right.

Dawn Jackson Blatner, a registered dietitian, calls breakfast the "prevention meal" because it prevents overeating and over-snacking. "You have better control of your appetite for the entire day," said Blatner, spokeswoman for the American Dietetic Association.

From parfaits to breakfast sandwiches, the options are endless when it comes to grabbing a to-go breakfast on the run. RedEye took a look at some of the popular eats and examined whether your morning meal is doing your body good.

Breakfast Bars

- The good: They can be a good source of fiber and protein. Blatner said to look for bars with at least three grams of fiber and eight grams of protein. Adding a piece of fresh fruit will boost the nutrition and fullness of the meal, she said.

- The bad: Some bars are "candy-bar like," Peyton said. Make sure your bar contains no more than eight grams of sugar, she said. Eating just a breakfast bar can leave people feeling unsatisfied, Blatner said. And keeping a stash of these bars at your desk also can lead to overeating.

Pastries/doughnuts

- The good: They're so delicious - chocolate, powdered, glazed, oh my. And a box of doughnuts can be cheap.

- The bad: This category is the most common bad breakfast culprit, Peyton said. A blueberry muffin is 500 calories, she said. Blatner said she'd rather have people skip breakfast than eat junk food like doughnuts. "A doughnut is the worst because it's the lethal combination of both fat and sugar without providing any vitamins or minerals," she said.

Breakfast Sandwhiches

- The good: Clearly, this is the cheap option. A buck can get you a breakfast sandwich at many fast food restaurants. For a healthier option, make a breakfast wrap with a whole-wheat tortilla, scrambled eggs, peppers, onions and tomatoes and skip the meat and cheese, Peyton said.

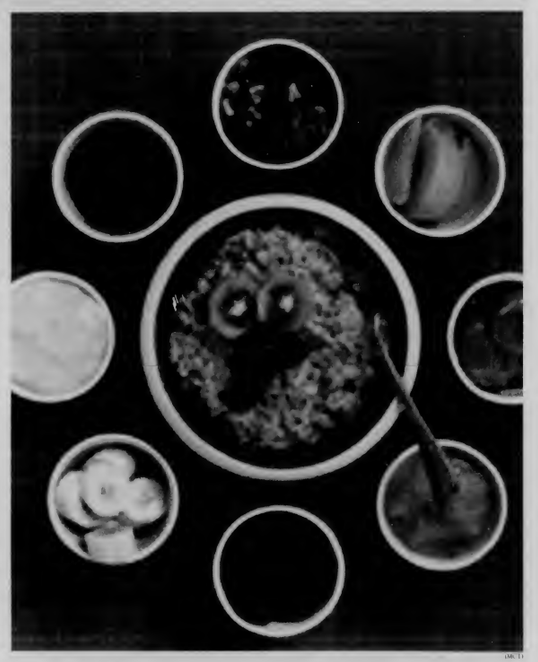
- The bad: Croissants, biscuits and bagels are "belly busters," Blatner said, because they're full of fat and high in calories. Instead, stick to English muffins or flatbreads without sausage or bacon, or choose Canadian bacon because it has fewer calories and fat, she said. Bagels offer no fiber and can be loaded with butter or cream cheese for a whopping 400 calories per serving, making it "not much better than a piece of chocolate cake," Peyton said.

Smoothies/shakes

- The good: Stick to the low-cal menu options that have no more than 250 calories, Peyton said.

- The bad: A liquid breakfast may not be filling and can lead to snacking mid-morning, Peyton said. Avoid super-sized portions because calories can add up fast, Blatner said. Opt for low-fat milk or soy milk as the base instead of high-sugar, high-calorie juices, sherbets, ice cream or frozen yogurt. This isn't the best breakfast choice, she said, because sugar in smoothies tends to run high and protein tends to run low.

Yogurt/parfait



- The good: The best parfaits rely on fresh fruit for sweetness instead of honey, fruit syrups or jellies, Blatner said. Yogurt has calcium, protein and probiotics (which help with digestion). As long as the yogurt is fat-free or low-fat, it's a good choice, but be sure to add fruit, Peyton said. If you're making your own, try a 6-ounce non-fat Greek yogurt, which is high in protein and filling, with two tablespoons of low-fat granola and a half- or three-quarters cup of fresh fruit, she said.

- The bad: The granola topping can be a secret source of added fat, sugar and calories, Blatner said. Keep parfait portions small because even low-fat vanilla yogurt can have a lot of added sugar, she said.

Oatmeal/cereal

- The good: Blatner calls oatmeal the "best breakfast choice." It's full of whole grain nutrition and fiber to keep stomachs satisfied for hours, she said. If you use instant oatmeal packets, make sure there's 3 grams of fiber per packet, Peyton said. When choosing a cold cereal, Blatner said to look for brands that have whole grains listed first in the ingredients, with 150 calories and at least 3 grams of fiber per serving. Top it with low-fat milk and fresh fruit for balanced nutrition, she said.

- The bad: Don't go overboard on the topping portions to keep calories in check, Blatner said. Avoid large amounts of syrup and brown sugar on your oatmeal, Peyton said. If you add nuts or dried fruit, only use one tablespoon of each, she said. Beware of any sugary cereal and avoid ones with more than 10 grams of sugar per serving. Remember: A serving size is one cup, but most cereal bowls hold two to three cups of cereal, she said.

Although breakfast is often a meal that is rushed, if eaten at all, it is important for college students to begin the day with a healthy choice of food, such as yogurt, fresh fruit or hot cereal.

Eatery offers authentic appeal, appetizing and inventive menu sandwich. Heaping piles of succulent, juicy pulled pork shoulder and ham are stacked between two slices of Cuban bread along with Latin coleslaw and cheese, and then pressed like a panini. This sandwich is amazing. Once this sandwich is picked up, it is impossible to put it down.

LATINO'S from page 4

Normally, pork shoulder is tough and chewy, but Latino's pork shoulder falls apart in your mouth. When asked what his secret was to making the meat so tender and juicy, Pablo responded, "I can't reveal too much of our secret, but it is slow roasted overnight in a special blend of spices, then cooled to a certain temperature." The Cuban sandwich goes for $8.39, and is well worth a try. It may just be the best dish they have on the menu.

Although it has only been open since August 2009, Latino's is quickly making a name for itself for its authentic and delicious Latin-style cooking. One critique that can be made is that some dishes may have too many onions, but this is a small afterthought to a wholly satisfying experience with their South and Central American style cooking.

Latino's menu is constantly changing, as the staff is always experimenting with new ingredients and recipes. Starting next week, they will be offering express lunch specials from 11 a.m. until 3:30 p.m. Tuesdays through Fridays, which allow customers to create their own combination of meals. Be on the lookout for Latino classics, such as pinchos and empanadas in the near future.

If that's not enough, Latino's delivers until 3:00 a.m. on Thursdays and Fridays, and are also available for catering. If you're looking for an old-world Hispanic experience with a touch of creativity, head on down to Latino's, where the prices are right and the portions are hearty.

Brendan Murphy can be reached at brendanm@student.umass.edu.

Matthew Harrington/Collegian

South Amherst is home to Latino's, a reasonably priced restaurant that is close to campus with a flavorful menu that brings a Latin flair to ordinary dishes.

Nuclear weapons addressed in Sundance film

By Kenneth Turan
Los Angeles Times

PARK CITY, Utah — When documentary filmmaker Lucy Walker smiles and says, "I can't complain my life isn't varied," she is not kidding. While most directors would be grateful to have one film in Sundance, Walker has two compelling works and they could not be more different.

For "Countdown to Zero," a hair-raising expose of the dangers of rogue nuclear weapons, she spent considerable time talking with world leaders like Jimmy Carter, Mikhail Gorbachev, Tony Blair, F.W. de Klerk and Pervez Musharraf, "more presidents than I could keep track of."

Then, with "Waste Land," a surprisingly uplifting examination of how art came to impact the lives of scavengers at the world's largest landfill in Rio de Janeiro, "I interviewed people who picked through garbage for a living. Between the two films, it was the whole spectrum of humanity."

Yet if there is something that unites all of Walker's documentaries, which include potent works like "Devil's Playground" and "Blindsight," it is her fearless interest in what she describes as "inaccessible subjects or places. If I do have the courage to go, to take the road less traveled, I'll be able to expose something people have not been exposed to."

British-born Walker's interest in garbage turns out to be longstanding, dating from her days as a graduate student at New York University when she visited Fresh Kills, a massive landfill in Staten Island.

"I had the strange realization that everything I'd ever thrown away in New York was there and I was standing on it," Walker recalls. "It was like a conjuring trick gone wrong; it all shows up at once and smells. There were vultures, insects, rats, dogs and the sound of millions of plastic bags. I didn't remember ever seeing it in a movie, so I made a note to myself to use it someday."

So when Walker met Brazilian artist Vik Muniz, "who'd done amazing pieces with junk as well as social projects with kids," the talk turned to Rio's massive Jardim Gramacho, which receives 7,000 tons of garbage daily, and to the people called catadores, who make a living recycling what they find.

"I was in love with that idea: I stuck to it like glue," says Walker, while Muniz was initially more resistant "because he knew more about the scary aspects of the situation than I did. Brazilian gangs control many of the dumps and use them to run drugs and dispose of bodies. There was the danger of kidnapping, dengue fever, horrible stuff too scary to contemplate."

After a relatively safe landfill was found, Walker started to wonder "what kind of people must those be. But as you spent time with them, you get past the horror and the distaste and you realize they are not garbage monsters at all but people who tackle their job with dignity and pride." People like Tiao, an autodidact who saves all the books he finds and began to organize the catadores after reading a scavenged copy of Machiavelli's "The Prince."

One unexpected problem Walker faced was the insistence of her Brazilian producers that she needed an enormous crew. The director, who usually does her own sound and believes that "being super light on your feet, super intimate, results in the best footage," didn't know how she would function with an entourage of "40 designer-clad Brazilians with clipboards." So she initially left them in the bus, shot some footage and said to the producers "this is what we get when nobody's with us." It worked.

If "Waste Land" was in Walker's words "a character-driven, verite-driven work that feels like my natural rhythm," "Countdown to Zero" was different. It was an interview-driven piece (Walker talked to 84 people on camera and more off) that did not originate with her but started with a phone call from Diane Weyermann of Participant Media asking the director if she was interested.

"I knew enough about nuclear weapons to know that the danger was still there, and I knew we should be thinking and talking about them," Walker says. "I've always been fascinated by that threat."

Walker also knew that she "didn't want the film to be a history lesson. It was going to be nuclear weapons today, present-day realities, not historical relics. Iran, Pakistan and North Korea have gotten much noisier, the alarm clock has been ringing."

Some of the most compelling parts of "Countdown to Zero" are its descriptions of how vulnerable to theft countries' arsenals are and its interview with Oleg Khinsagov, a smuggler of nuclear material.

After Walker discovered "how easy it would be for terrorists to stage attacks," she found that she had to walk a very difficult line. "I didn't want to do a how-to manual; but I wanted to wake people up and I worked hard to do that responsibly. It's so unimaginable, how do you communicate that?"

Walker also chose to end "Countdown to Zero" with a sense that this terrible threat can be overcome. "I remember when the Berlin Wall fell and suddenly intractable problems get solved," she says. "I wanted to encourage the public to raise their voice. A breakthrough is closer than we think."

"Countdown to Zero" is premiering at this year's Sundance Film Festival. The film, directed by Lucy Walker, promotes the idea of dismantling nuclear weapons throughout the world, and asks audience members to take part in the campaign to do so.

Over $25,000 in Scholarships Available!

UMass Amherst ALUMNI ASSOCIATION

The UMass Amherst Alumni Association is proud to offer the following scholarships:

Leaders in the Making Scholarship
Four $2,000 scholarships given to promising sophomores and juniors with diverse records of achievement in scholarship and volunteerism.

Life Member Scholarship for Internships
One $2,000 scholarship given to a sophomore or junior to help defray the cost of a summer internship.

Michael W. Morris Scholarship
One $2,000 scholarship given to a student from Lawrence or Lowell, MA. The scholarship is in honor of Lawrence native and longtime UMass Amherst champion, Michael W. Morris '63.

Senior Leadership Award
A $500 savings bond will be given to twenty-five graduating seniors who have demonstrated outstanding leadership and service to the university community. Students must be nominated by faculty or staff.

The deadline for scholarships is February 4, 2010.
For more information on scholarship eligibility and applications visit UMassAlumni.com/students.

You were. You are. UMass.

Write for Arts&Living!
Interested?
Let us know...
arts@dailycollegian.com

THE BOLTWOOD
PROJECT™
Serving others since 1969 -- and STILL making a difference!
A STUDENT / COMMUNITY SERVICE LEARNING PROGRAM
(an RSO and Dept. of Landscape Architecture & Regional Planning sponsored prog.)

REACH OUT—AND BECOME A SPECIAL FRIEND TO PEOPLE WITH SPECIAL NEEDS
Your life will NEVER be the same!
••EARN 1-2 CREDITS ••GAIN VALUABLE EXPERIENCE ••REWARDING, CHALLENGING, and FUN
Spring Semester 2010 — Recruitment Nights
You must attend ONE of these meetings. No exceptions, even if you have participated before!
6:00-8:00 PM (Note: Prompt starting time!!!)
Campus Center Basement • Room 101 • Jan. 25 (Mon) • Jan. 26 (Tues) • Jan. 27 (Wed)
•Assignment notification ONLY Thurs. Jan. 28 @ Boltwood table CC Concourse .
No telephone inquiries. YOU (or a friend) must pickup the notification letter!!!
Volunteer, while earning credit!

Off The Wall Games
WARHAMMER 40,000
Worldwake pre-release tournament on Thursday, January 28 at 6 PM -Sealed Deck - $20 Entry Fee
First prize a box of Worldwake, scan www.offthewallgamestore.com for details and more prizes!
MAGIC The Gathering
Discount role-playing games, Collectible card games (CCGs), Miniature war games and board games, fun for everyone!
Hours: 10-10 Wednesday-Sunday, 12-10 Monday, Closed Tuesdays — Russell St (Hampton Village Shops) Rt. 9, Hadley 413-586-5451

UM battling injury bug, bench earns time

Dacko looking forward to team at full health

By Steve Levine
Collegian Staff

Over the last few games, the Massachusetts women's basketball team has been dealing with a series of injuries.

As of two weeks ago, a total of five players have struggled with injuries.

It started two weeks ago against Saint Louis, when the Minutewomen were forced to play against the Billikens without star player Kristina Danella. The sophomore injured her ankle prior to the game, but the Minutewomen (7-12, 1-3 Atlantic 10) came away with a 62-59 victory. The victory was bittersweet, though, as freshman standout Jasmine Watson suffered an ankle injury of her own.

Although Watson came back strong with 19 points in UMass' next game against Richmond, Danella continued to miss time and UMass went on to lose, 73-62.

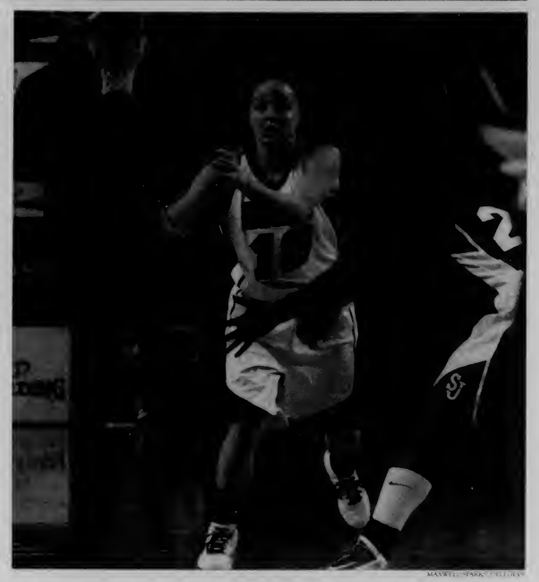
UMass had both players back for their last game against A-10 leading Duquesne, but lost forward Stephanie Lawrence when she also injured her ankle. UMass lost in overtime, 63-54.

"Lawrence tried to score against Duquesne and went down," UMass coach Marnie Dacko said. "We were making a nice comeback and she was playing great, but she hasn't practiced since."

Continuing the injury barrage was Kim Benton who fell ill before the Duquesne game. Benton registered 15 minutes of play, but no points. Dacko figures to have her back in the starting lineup for UMass' next game against George Washington on Jan. 27.

"It will be nice when we're at full strength, but the team has been extremely resilient," Dacko said. "We're right there and we just have to get over the hump. I'm hoping we can have Watson and Danella for the George Washington game. Kids that get hurt have to get used to playing with a little pain as well."

The most serious injury belongs to freshman guard Dee Montgomery, who suffered a concussion during the team's first practice. She received some playing time, but has yet to be completely healthy.



Montgomery's injury has had a ripple effect throughout the roster, especially in the backcourt. The guard positions have struggled to produce all season, and Montgomery's absence puts added strain on the healthy guards.

Overall, the plague of injuries has given the roster's non-starters additional minutes on the court.

"I think there's added pressure," Dacko said. "But you know, when one door closes, another one opens. It gives another opportunity for somebody else. When Danella went down, Steph Lawrence came in and did a great job and so did Diatema [Hill]. Heart beats talent when talent doesn't have any heart. If we can get these kids to play with a lot of heart, I think we'll be fine."

Today, the Minutewomen look to field a much healthier roster against George Washington, which sits very low in the A-10 standings.

Steve Levine can be reached at slevine@student.umass.edu.

MAXWELL-SPARK / COLLEGIAN

Redshirt junior Megan Zullo tries to make a pass against St. John's earlier this season. The Minutewomen host George Washington this morning with 4,000 elementary school students expected to fill the arena.

Ducasse looks to impress NFL despite earthquake at home

Lineman focuses on Senior Bowl despite disaster in Haiti

By Howard Ulman
AP Sports Writer

AMHERST, Mass. (AP) — Vladimir Ducasse was focused on his workouts for the Senior Bowl – maybe the most important game of his football career – when the earthquake struck his native Haiti.

It was two days before he learned that his family was safe. The home he grew up in suffered only minor damage. He knows his relatives are the lucky ones in an impoverished nation devastated by the Jan. 12 disaster.

Now the offensive tackle from the University of Massachusetts is especially determined to impress pro scouts as he takes the last few steps in an unusual journey toward the NFL.

"That's the only way I can help like I want to help," Ducasse said Friday. "I'm going to the Senior Bowl, combine, NFL draft. Now people are not going to see just me, they're going to see the whole country. I'm representing the whole country."

That's just the latest twist in a life that took him from Port-au-Prince to Stamford, Conn., at age 14 to live with an aunt and uncle, to a state university that never will be confused with a football factory.

The last player from the school who was drafted was linebacker Khari Samuel in 1999 by the Chicago Bears in the fifth round. Ducasse, an agile 6-foot-5, 330-pounder, could be drafted higher than any player from that Football Championship Series school since 1968, when quarterback Greg Landry was chosen in the first round by the Detroit Lions.

Several draft predictions have him going in the top three rounds. Bob Otrando, the team's strength and conditioning coach, said, "I've got a buddy of mine with an NFL team, who runs the scouting department. He said if he was making the calls, (Ducasse) would go in the first round."

Ducasse was scheduled to leave Saturday for Mobile, Ala., where the Senior Bowl will be played the following Saturday. It's a showcase for seniors to try and improve their draft prospects in front of pro scouts and coaches.

"It's a blessing to come from Haiti and be here right now," Ducasse said. "I never thought it could have been possible."

When he was five, his mother died. He was about six when he first heard what would become a frequent nighttime sound — shooting outside his home. He was eight or nine when a man put a gun to his father's head and stole the family's new car and money.

Delinois Ducasse is an accountant with the Banque de la Republique d'Haiti. He sent Vladimir and his other son, MacArthur, to Connecticut to get a good education. Vladimir hasn't been back since. He had never heard of football before the move.

"He was just so raw," said Stamford High football coach Kevin Jones, who praised Ducasse as a very hard worker. "Everything was at ground zero when he started."

But Ducasse had played soccer and basketball and had taken tennis lessons in Haiti. He had the size and athleticism that Jones liked. Still, he didn't start for the varsity until his junior season.

He eventually developed into an FCS All-American and appears headed for a lucrative NFL contract.

"He probably wishes the draft were right now so he could get money and send it right away to Haiti," Jones said. "Everything about the kid says he's a quality human being."

Otrando doesn't expect a much bigger bank account to go to Ducasse's head or change his dedication.

"When you've come this far," Otrando said, "why change?"

Soft-spoken and quick to smile, Ducasse has a serenity about him even with all the death and destruction in his homeland.

"I know what happened is a real tragedy back there," he said. "I know that making the NFL pretty much is the only way for me to help them. So I'm really calm. I'm just waiting for everything to come my way and make everything happen and, hopefully, when everything settles down, I'll be able to help."

Ducasse and teammate Jeromy Miles, who is from New Jersey, were spending time there working out during the semester break when the earthquake struck. Ducasse was in his bed, about to go to sleep, when he received a text message with the news. He turned on the television and saw video of what should have looked familiar.

"From the pictures, I was able to tell where some of the streets were, but others you couldn't tell," he said.

He called his brother in Stamford who eventually talked with their father, who is still in Haiti. Ducasse's stepmother, stepbrother and stepsister left later for Miami.

Ducasse still hasn't talked with his father, the man who taught his children independence.

"He tried to do everything for us to be comfortable enough, but not too comfortable," Ducasse said. "He trusted us to do the right thing."

Once he knew his family was safe, Ducasse could continue to dedicate himself with minimal distraction to preparing for the Senior Bowl practices and game.

"I still look at the news sometime and see what's going on and it hurts me," he said, "but you've just got to stay focused."

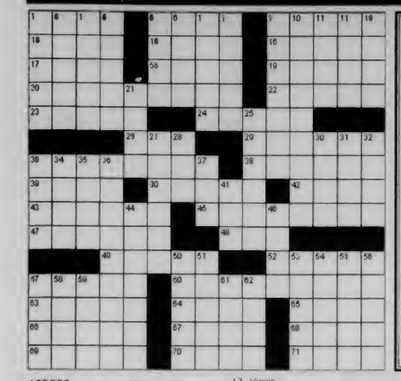
COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Offensive lineman Vladimir Ducasse will participate in the Senior Bowl in Mobile, Ala. on Saturday.

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Senior Vladimir Ducasse lines up. While Ducasse prepares for the Senior Bowl, he checks the news everyday to get updates on Haiti, his home country.

Check upcoming issues for The Collegian's coverage of Vladimir Ducasse's journey to the NFL.



COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Senior Vladimir Ducasse helps out with a block up front. The offensive lineman could be the drafted higher than any other Minuteman in team history.

The Daily Collegian asks,
"Are you a
SPORTS FAN?"
THEN GO WRITE FOR THE COLLEGIAN!
Contact Jeff Larnard at
sports@dailycollegian.com

COMICS

CROSSWORD

ACROSS
1. A prisoner's room
5. Exchange
9. Showers
14. Found in skin lotion
15. Sheet of glass
16. Endow
17. A thorny flower
18. Chief Norse god
19. Robbed
20. A medical procedure
22. Blabs
23. Aquamarine
24. A synthetic fabric
26. American Medical Association
29. Soothsayer
33. An adulterous woman
38. Take into confinement
39. Corn Belt state
40. Underpants resembling a G-string
42. Matured
43. Stop the flow of a liquid
45. Reckless
47. A design on the skin
48. Refinable rock
49. Relative of the birch tree
52. Liberates
57. Odor
60. 4 times per year
63. Sprite
64. Eardrum
65. Stab or thrust (archaic)
66. Astound
67. Cain's brother
68. Cocoyam
69. Spermal fluid
70. Tardy
71. Marsh plant

DOWN
1. Chocolate substitute
2. Run off to marry
3. Not a winner
4. Apprehensive
5. Blemish
6. Dry riverbed
7. Negatively charged particle
8. 1 cent coin
9. Fix up
10. Existing before birth
11. False god
12. Void
13. Views
21. Winged
25. Boarder
27. System
28. Residue from a fire
30. Hamster's home
31. Prevaricates
32. Concludes
33. Spray
34. Bit
35. Smack
36. Tease or torment
37. Fifth note in do-re-mi
41. Prefix meaning "New"
44. An Irish girl
46. Skillful
50. Having the same value
51. Cuban dance
53. Direct elsewhere
54. Chip away at
55. Leave out
56. Church council
57. Resorts
58. Marcel Marceau was one
59. Test
61. Assist
62. Part portrayed

WE WANT YOUR COMICS
Fo'shizzle
E-mail:
comics@dailycollegian.com

SUDOKU

	4					8	6
			2					5
	7				9
	1
3	2		6				8
4	8			1	3		2
						3
			1	6			4
				5	4	1		2

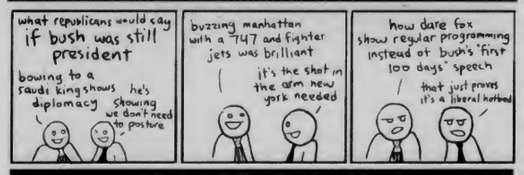
DEW TOUR WINTER
mount snow. VERMONT
February 4-7, 2010
ALLSPORTS.COM

APARTMENTS AVAILABLE
PUFFTON VILLAGE
Excellent location!
1/2 Mile from UMass
Spacious Apartments!
1, 2, & 3 Bedroom Townhouses
All rents include: heat, hot water, and cooking gas!
On site laundry,
off street parking.
Basketball and Tennis Courts.
Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.puffonvillage.com

NEW OPEN SECTION: GEN. ED.

SCANDIN 376
VIKINGS AND THEIR STORIES: SAGA LITERATURE
Tu-Th, 9:30-10:45, Herter 224
Readings (in translation) of classic Old Icelandic sagas. Nonfiction narratives about families, battles, and politics in a blood feud society a millennium ago. Taught in English.
umass.edu/german UMASS AMHERST

SMBC by Zach Weiner smbc-comics.com



Superman's speeches all end the same way.

Hark, a Vagrant by K. Beaton harkavagrant.com

Chainsawsuit by Kris Straub chainsawsuit.com

Mr. Gnu by Travis Dandro

Quote of the Day

"The two basic items necessary to sustain life are sunshine and coconut milk."

Dustin Hoffman

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necessary. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

Positions available for talented/energetic/fun-loving students as counselors in team/individual sports, waterfront/pool activities, and specialty activities including dance & gymnastics. GREAT SALARIES, room/board/travel. 6/19-8/14 Prepare for an unforgettable summer. For information and to apple: www.danbee.com: 1-800-392-3752. Interviewers on-campus for Summer-Camp Jobs Fair 2010, Thursday 2/11, from 10-3 in Campus Center.

Zoar Outdoors is seeking adventuresome people to be summer guides for whitewater rafting and zip-line canopy tours. Join our training program and spend the summer splashing through rapids or zipping through trees. Aplicants should be great with people, have a positive attitude and be comfortable working as a team or independantly. Application dealine: Feb. 15th. Call 800-532-7483 or see www.zoaroutdoor.com/jobs.htm for an application.

A GREAT JOB! Spend your summer in a lakefront cabin in Maine. If you're looking to spend this summe outdoors, have fun while you work, and make lifelong friends, then look no further. CAMP MATAPONI, a residential girls camp in Maine, has female/male summertime openings for Land Sports, Waterfront (samm crafts, skiing, life guarding, WSI, boat drivers), Ropes Course, Tennis, H.B. Riding, Arts & Crafts, Theater, Cooking, Gymnastics, Dance, Videography, Group Leaders and more. Top salaries plus room/board & travel provided. Call us today at 1-561-748-3684 or apply online at www.campmataponi.com.

WANTED

Part-Time Personal Care Attendant about 10-12 hrs/week. Flexible Hours. Please call Patrick 413-275-7928

FOR RENT

Hobart condos 3 bedrooms, hardwood floors, study in basement. Cable & Phone in all bedrooms & Study. NOW SHOWING for June & September. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

How Suite it is! $650 includes all. 10 minutes from Umass, free parking, share with father, 8 year old daughter, 2 cats. Quiet, private, friendly. Furnished bedroom, seperate bathroom, deck entrance in 2 story house. Free cable/wifi. Short/long term lease option. Jonathan 413-222-3006

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 Bedroom Apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug, or Sept. First Come, First Serve. Get Them While They Last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop By Or Call 549-0600

SERVICES

Pregnant? Want to talk? Call birthright 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 Hour hotline 1-800-550-4900 www.birthright.org

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20 - Feb. 18
One can always smash things with a rock. Try using more elegant objects like a log or your iPod.

pisces Feb. 19 - Mar. 20
There are erasers in many colors and sizes but none of which have the power to get rid of that thing you call a smile.

aries Mar. 21 - Apr. 19
Step to the right and slap your nose three times. You are now haunted by the ghosts of Jose Canseco's steroid needles.

taurus Apr. 20 - May. 20
Can you feel that? It's Leonardo DiCaprio getting thrown off of his throne by the children of Lion-O and Papa Smurf.

gemini May. 21 - Jun. 21
You should not be daydreaming that your are destroying legions of zombies while in a bikini. Actually, nevermind.

cancer Jun. 22 - Jul. 22
Always remember to check your lettuce.

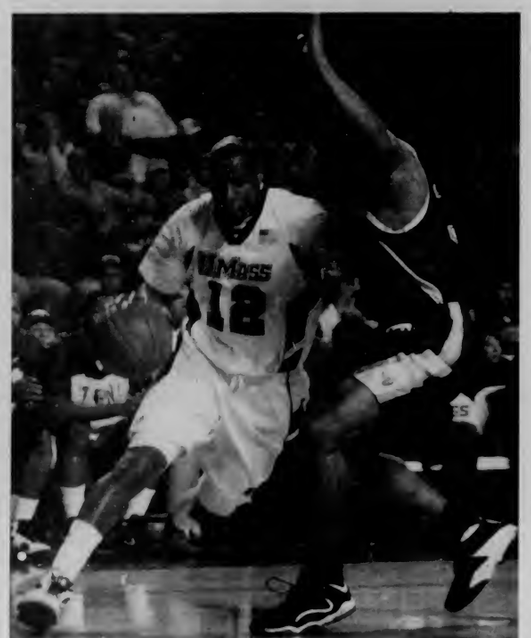
leo Jul. 23 - Aug. 22
Today you will make everyone put on a sour–face. Years of hoarding Warheads candy have finally paid off.

virgo Aug. 23 - Sept. 22
Why is it that we always find you here? Have you no other place to go, like the zoo or Wonka's Factory?

libra Sept. 23 - Oct. 22
Stop staring, it is not polite. Instead directly inform them that you watch them from afar, at least you will be virtuous!

scorpio Oct. 23 - Nov. 21
Alright, it has come down to this. Who would you take home to mom, the red ranger or the green ranger?

sagittarius Nov. 22 - Dec. 21
Excessive daytime television causes scabies and dunkleweiss whose definition is strictly forbidden. Yup, like Voldemort.



capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 19
Explain to your closest friend how you want to wreslte polar bears in a ring full of candy corn. They will totally understand.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSWEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 27, 2010

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

BEN BERNSTEIN / COLLEGIAN

Guard Anthony Gurley looks to drive to the lane against a St. Bonaventure defender during the Minutemen's one-point loss on Jan. 20. UMass is looking for its first A-10 win since defeating Fordham.

Minutemen head to Philly to play Hawks

UMass looks to reverse 5-game losing streak, cool off smaller, speedy team on the road

By Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

Call it a cliché, but the Massachusetts men's basketball team is only thinking about tonight's game against Saint Joseph's.

Then again, when a team loses five straight games, it has to worry about winning one game before it can look ahead. UMass (7-12, 1-4 Atlantic 10) is looking to turn its season around against the Hawks (7-11, 2-3 A-10), who had their own struggles this year, but who are starting to turn things around.

St. Joe's is currently on a three-game winning streak, beating Towson, Dayton and Penn. UMass men's basketball coach Derek Kellogg believes the Hawks' win over the Flyers, who were pre-season favorites to win the A-10, proves that they are tougher than their record indicates.

"They're playing better," Kellogg said. "They have a good view of how they're playing and they've got a couple guys that have been around a little while to make it easier on the young guys."

If there's anything Kellogg and Co. can take comfort in, it's the fact that SJU is nothing like No. 25 Baylor. The Hawks are a guard-oriented team with senior Darrin Govens leading the team in scoring (12.9 points per game).

The Bears featured a frontline of three players 6-foot-10 or taller and caused problems inside with their size. UMass finished the game 24.2 percent from the field.

The forward who caused the most problems for the Minutemen was Ekpe Udoh (23 points, seven blocks). His presence forced the guards who were used to driving to the lane to take more outside shots because of his length.

"That is a nice guy to pick up as a transfer," Kellogg said following the 71-45 loss to Baylor. "I mean, as much as anything, he dominates the game just by being out there. His presence is what really separates him."

The Hawks aren't going to give UMass nearly as much trouble inside as the Bears did. Center Todd O'Brien (6-11) is the only player taller than 6-foot-7 to average at least 20 minutes a game.

Kellogg said he looks forward to playing St. Joseph's because he is more comfortable having his team play against a smaller, quicker team than a team with a lot of size.

"They have to play fast, we're going to play fast and I kind of like coaching that way," Kellogg said. "I think it's a fun way to play and it's a fun way to coach."

The Minutemen have a similar style to the Hawks because of their guard trio consisting of Ricky Harris, Anthony Gurley and Freddie Riley. All of them average at least 10 points per game and can push the ball up the floor.

UMass is also hoping to capitalize against its smaller opponent on the boards. Against Baylor, the Minutemen finished with a 42-33 advantage.

However, Kellogg's team has not done as good of a job with second chance points as he would like. Despite finishing with 22 offensive rebounds, the Maroon and White totaled six second-chance points.

Kellogg believes that the Minutemen's shots will start to fall once again as soon as they become more confidene in themselves.

"The one thing about shooters is that you want them to stay confident," Kellogg said. "I'm trying to instill in them that the next one's going to go down, don't worry about the last shot and I have a good feeling that once we make a few and get on a little run here, the balls are going to start falling the way they're supposed to."

Adam Miller can be reached at amiller@dailycollegian.com.

UM strong on glass, Carter leading team

By David Brinch
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's basketball team is currently in the midst of a five-game losing streak, including to two nationally ranked opponents in No. 19 Temple and No. 25 Baylor.

But the Minutemen have dominated opponents, including the Bears and Owls, in the category of rebounding, despite their struggles from shooting from the field as well as from beyond the 3-point line.

"We're doing a great job on the boards, and normally I say that if you win the rebounding battle, you win the games, that's usually a bench mark," UMass coach Derek Kellogg said. "But, you have to compile that with taking care of the basketball, and doing some other things."

In both losses to Temple and Baylor, the Minutemen (7-12, 1-4 Atlantic 10) held a 37-33 and 42-33 advantage in rebounds. Specifically against the Bears, the 42 rebounds were the most allowed by a Baylor opponent so far this season, as the Bears were leading the NCAA in rebounding margin at the time (plus 11) thanks in most part to a big front court that starts players that are seven feet, 6-foot-11 and 6-foot-10.

Against both teams, the Minutemen could not find their shots, and couldn't pull out victories.

"We've done a good job on the boards, I think Hashim Bailey has done a great job in the minutes he's played," Kellogg said. "When Terrell Vinson and some of our guards rebound the basketball, we're a very good rebounding team. Especially in the Baylor game, when he rebounds that way, we've been able to control the boards a little bit."

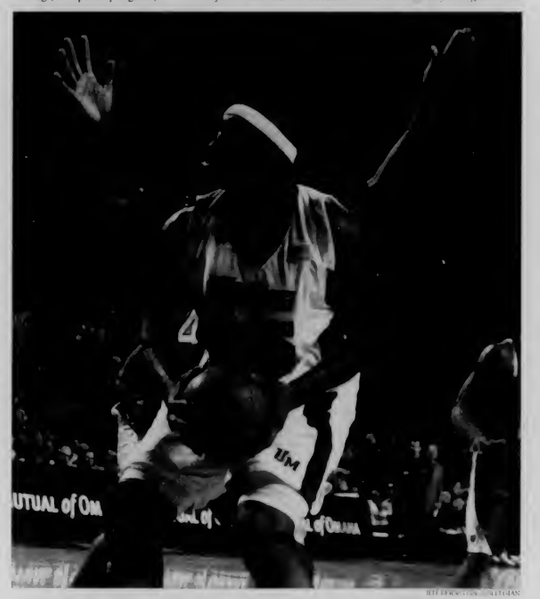
UMass has outrebounded 12 opponents so far this season by an average of 3.4 rebounds per game, including margins of 25 against Grambling (55-30), 20 versus Memphis, (44-24), seven at Boston College (50-33) and the game against the Bears.

On the offensive glass, the Minutemen have been just as impressive, leading the A-10 in offensive rebounds (15.2 per game).

"The big thing for us is just connecting as an offense, just getting offensive and defensive rebounds," redshirt sophomore Sean Carter said. "We give ourselves chances to win games when we rebound well, so it's going to be a point to rebound the ball and get extra possessions for us."

Against Baylor, Carter scored just two points in 11 minutes, while the Minutemen scored 14 points in the paint and just six second-chance points.

"Last game, we had a lot of offensive rebounds, but we didn't really convert on any of them, so this game, I want to get second chance rebounds and score on them," Carter said.



Carter leads the team with 6.1 rebounds per game, while the redshirt junior center Bailey is second with 5.8 rebounds per game in just 13.6 minutes played per game.

"Sean and I have to grab boards, and that's the bottom line in order for us to be successful, so I need to grab rebounds, block shots and play defense in order to help us win" Bailey said.

Behind Carter and Bailey, freshman Terrell Vinson is third on the team with 5.3 rebounds per game, and is second behind Carter (3.1) in offensive rebounds (2.8).

The Minutemen, who travel to take on Saint Josephs on Wednesday, have the worst rebounding margin in the conference, with a -8.8 margin. The Hawks are dead last with an average of 9.1 offensive rebounds per game in conference play and are second to last with 23.2 defensive rebounds per game in conference play.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu

BEN BERNSTEIN / COLLEGIAN

Center Hashim Bailey looks to get a shot off against a St. Bonaventure defender. In his last game against Baylor, the Memphis transfer finished with 11 rebounds.

Sophomore Emilie Teuscher drives for a layup against a St. John's defender.

Minutewomen host Colonials

By Steve Levine
Collegian Staff

Injury plagued and down on its luck, the Massachusetts women's basketball team looks to gain some momentum today when it welcomes George Washington into the Mullins Center.

The Minutewomen (7-12, 1-3 Atlantic 10,) have lost three of their last four games, while also enduring a barrage of injuries.

UMass hopes to have all of its players back in uniform for today's game after suffering injuries to Jasmine Watson, Kristina Danella and Stephanie Lawrence.

Today's game against the Colonials (4-14, 1-4 A-10,) could set the Minutewomen straight, although they don't play well at home.

"This is a very big game for us," UMass coach Marnie Dacko said. "We've got to win at home. It's important for us to do well in the Mullins Center. This team seems to be much more relaxed on the road. It's just a matter of coming out with intensity and focus for 40 minutes."

The Minutewomen were close to pulling off an upset against conference-leading Duquesne a week ago, but ultimately lost in overtime, 63-54. The game highlighted certain things that Dacko wanted to practice before hosting George Washington.

"We're trying to work with two big players in [at the same time]: a combination of Nicole Jones, Jasmine Watson, and Shakia Robinson," Dacko said. "It's advantageous for us to go with bigger players, and when we add the size, we get more rebounding inside. However, it also disrupts our offensive tempo. But we're spending more and more time being able to play with two bigs on the floor."

UMass generates most of its scoring from its post players. Receiving more production from the guard positions would be a huge plus.

"Kim [Benton] and Diatema [Hill] really do a good job running the backcourt and making everything click," Dacko said. "I would like to see Danella have a good game shooting and also Megan Zullo to come in and have a good game."

Dacko, aware that her team leads the league in turnovers, has been preaching slower play and overall ball control as well.

After playing two of the strongest teams in the A-10 in Richmond and Duquesne, UMass is happy to welcome George Washington, which sits second to last in the standings.

UMass has one more thing working in their favor today — a stadium full of fans. The unusual 11:45 a.m. start time is due to "Field Trip Day", where numerous local elementary schools will fill the seats at the Mullins Center.

"It's going to be a great day for us because 4,000 kids are coming," Dacko said. "The Mullins Center will be very, very loud. It's always fun to have the young kids come in and get them excited."

Aside from the large crowd, Dacko is also excited to play the Colonials, but she will not take them lightly.

"They like to run and play fast," Dacko said. "They just beat La Salle, 58-50. They're the ones on the road so we have to be able to take them down a notch."

George Washington boasts one of the superior centers in the league in Sara Mostafa. In 18 games this season, the 6-foot-5 Mostafa averages 9.3 points and 6.3 rebounds per game. She also leads her team in blocks, with 22.

"They've got Mostafa inside who is really good," Dacko said. "We have to take her game away, push the ball up in transition, get up and just play smart basketball."

Steve Levine can be reached at slevine@student.umass.edu.

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY

COLLEGIAN

HIGH: 38 LOW: 12 www.DailyCollegian.com THURSDAY, JANUARY 28, 2010

UMass spared budget cuts for 2011

Funding up by $25 million as Patrick releases proposal

By Sam Butterfield and Nick Bush
Collegian Staff

With the release of Gov. Deval Patrick's 2011 budget Wednesday, it appears as if the University of Massachusetts has been spared any major cuts to funding — for the time being, at least.

In a press release announcing the budget proposal Wednesday, Patrick stated that "our fiscal year 2011 budget blueprint reflects the simple notion that we must continue moving forward. No matter how challenging the economic climate, we cannot afford to retreat from the important progress we have made over the last several years."

The proposed budget would give the UMass system $451,272,589 and would also allocate $49,317,776 in federal stimulus funds for the five-campus system.

The $500,590,365 total budget is up from the $475,026,934 the University received last year. The University's funding was slashed to $379,900,504 last year, but an infusion of stimulus money allowed the system to weather the cut.

According to a press release from University of Massachusetts spokesman Robert Connolly, UMass President Jack Wilson found "hope and opportunity" in Gov. Deval Patrick's 2011 budget for the University system.

According to the release, the Fiscal Year 2011 budget is "a strong expression of support for the UMass system and provides hope and opportunity for students all across the Commonwealth."

Wilson said that the budget proposal illustrates awareness by Gov.

See BUDGET on page 2

Gov. Deval Patrick unveiled his $28.2 billion budget proposal for Fiscal Year 2011 Wednesday. The proposal increases funding to the University of Massachusetts system to $451,272,589 plus $49,317,776 in federal stimulus funds, up from $475,026,934 last fiscal year.

MATTHEW HARRIS / COLLEGIAN

Student Judiciary Chief Justice Robert Weed swears in new Student Government Association senators Erica Nyer and Justin Thompson in front of the SGA's meeting Wednesday night.

SGA votes to approve course for its members

By Alyssa Creamer
Collegian Staff

Last night, Jan. 27, members of the University of Massachusetts Student Government Association (SGA) passed a resolution to support a proposed course designed specifically for SGA members.

While UMass' Faculty Senate still needs to approve the course — titled "Legal Issues in Student Governance and Higher Education" — for the coming fall semester, a syllabus has already been drafted by Student Legal Services Directing Attorney Chuck Dimare and Associate Director Corey Carvalho. SGA advisor Lydia Washington also aided in the creation of the tentative course's syllabus.

The SGA's acting Administrative Affairs Committee Chair and Orchard Hill Senator Jared Rose, a sophomore, created the basic plans and ideas for the potential course after finding the SGA a "very demanding and intense" extra-curricular activity his freshman year.

"I was in the marching band last year," said Rose. "And marching band members receive two [academic] credits just for being in the marching band."

"One of the things I noticed after I dropped out of marching band so that I could focus all my attention on being in the SGA Senate is that the Senate takes up more time than two classes put together. And that's fine with me because I'm willing to put in the time, but one of the ideas of creating a course for SGA members is that the SGA is a real service to the University, and those students deserve to get credit for all of their work."

During Rose's presentation

See SGA on page 2

Obama focused on economy during first State of the Union

By Nick Bush
Collegian Staff

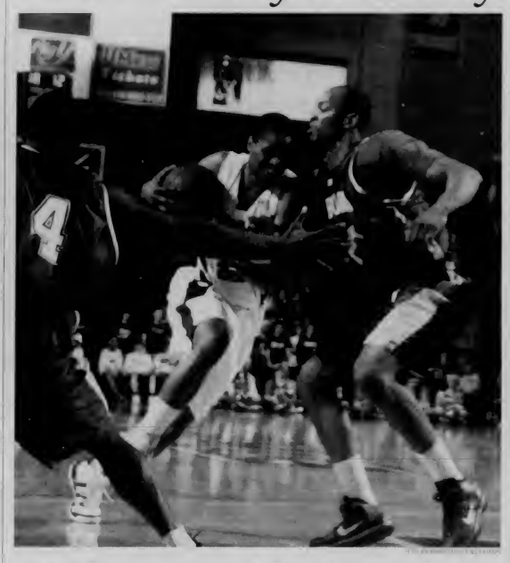
In Barack Obama's first State of the Union address Wednesday, nationally televised before a joint session of Congress, the president hoped to restore plummeting confidence among Americans that Washington can work effectively to produce a cure for the current economic downturn.

Just one week after the surprising victory of Republican Scott Brown in the Mass. Senatorial special election that sent political reverberations across the country, President Obama looked to convey to Americans that he is focused on tackling the economic recession that has left the United States with unemployment hovering over ten percent.

The president told his fellow Democrats to not "run for the hills," despite increasing resistance to the party's political agenda from Republicans and lobbyists and rising skepticism amongst the electorate.

Obama admitted that he did not enjoy the much-denigrated bailouts of the financial sector, noting that they "were about as popular as a root canal." He stated that while the government has recovered most of the money given to banks, he was not yet finished, and pressed for support in his recent campaign to tax the nation's largest banks to obtain the rest.

President Barack Obama targeted reviving the economy as his main priority in his first State of the Union address Wednesday night.



In his 71-minute speech, the president also defended the stimulus package, which passed as one of his administration's first achievements.

"Without it, unemployment could be double what it is today," said Obama. "It saved more than two million jobs," he claimed, and stated that it should save another 1.5 million jobs before the end of 2010. The president also pushed Congress to fight unemployment further, stating that he would like "a jobs bill on my desk without delay," so that America can "lay a new foundation for long-term economic growth."

Obama's rhetoric at moments suggested that legislation capping-down on the Wall Street business practices that led to the economic downturn could be in the pipeline. He referred to the 2000s as a "lost decade" whose "prosperity built on a

See UNION on page 2

Freshmen key in victory

Along with fellow Baltimore native Ricky Harris, freshman forward Terrell Vinson scored 16 points to lead the Minutemen to their first victory in their last six contests.

ARTS & LIVING

Dr. Parnassus has too many faces

Terry Gilliam directs a visually imaginative — yet inconsistent — spectacle in "The Imaginarium of Dr Parnassus."

SEE PAGE 4

SPORTS

Minutewomen drop third straight

The Massachusetts women's basketball team dropped its third consecutive game on Wednesday to George Washington, 64–54.

SEE PAGE 8

EDITORIAL & OPINION

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board questions the wisdom of UMass President Jack Wilson's raise given the economy's current state

SEE PAGE 3

DailyCollegian.com

Three questions with B.o.B.

Collegian staffer Garth Brody interviews the recording artist B.o.B, who recently performed at the Welcome Back Concert.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXX
ISSUE 8

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
413-545-3500
Fax 413-545-3699
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief William McGuinness
Managing Editor Matt Rocheleau
Managing Web Editor S.P. Sullivan
Business Manager Daniel Jette
Production Manager Michael Sarkes
Night Supervisor Kirsten Swenson
Advertising Manager Michael Tortorici
Advertising Production Amanda Jonnson
Arts & Living Editor Shayna Murphy
Comics Editor Andrew Witts
Editorial Editor Alyssa Creamer
News Editor Nick Bush
Sports Editor Jeffrey B. Larnard
Photo Editor Matthew Harrison
IT Manager Victor Jacek
Asst. Business Manager Matt Zolnier
Assistant Advertising Nicole Jacinto
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Distribution Manager Norman Prowse
Classified Manager Katelyn Tamilio
Asst. Arts & Living Justin Gagnon
Asst. Arts & Living Elyse Horowitz
Asst. Arts & Living Cal Scannell
Assistant Editorial Benjamin Mortarti
Assistant Editorial Michael Phillis
Assistant Editorial Matthew M. Robare
Assistant News Samuel Butterfield
Assistant News Jenn Heshion
Assistant News Chris Shores
Assistant Sports Jay Asser
Assistant Sports David Brinch
Assistant Sports Adam Miller
Assistant Photo Maxwell Spurr
Assistant Photo Samantha Webber
Senior Producer Sara Cody
Senior Producer Pete Rizzo

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Bi-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 1:30 p.m.

PRODUCTION CREW
on staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Sam Butterfield

COPY EDITOR
Chelsea Dugan

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Sarkes

Obama addresses dire economy Wednesday

UNION from page 1

housing bubble and financial speculation," and noted that the country needs to expand into the emerging green sector to create jobs before other nations beat America to it, including introducing "a new generation of safe, clean nuclear power plants," along with bio-fuels and other clean energy.

Obama suggested that "there is no reason why Europe or China should be developing high-speed trains" and other green jobs, while the U.S. settles for less, and announced a new high-speed railroad funded by the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act (ARRA).

"I do not accept second place for the United States of America," said the President, one of the only instances he elicited full applause from the joint session of Congress.

Despite the bitterly partisan political climate, Obama still attempted to reach across the aisle to Republicans on some issues, including when he enthusiastically stated that he had been able to cut taxes for millions of Americans, noting that "we haven't raised income taxes by a single dime on a single person. Not a single dime."

Republicans chose to decline joining the Democrats in clapping for the line, leading Obama to joke briefly with his tough congressional crowd.

"I thought I'd get some applause for that one," said Obama.

Nick Bush can be reached

President Barack Obama focused on the economy, and had few moments of universal applause in his first State of the Union address as Washington remains divided on much of his ambitious agenda.

UM avoids massive cuts in 2011 budget

Gov. Deval Patrick released his budget proposal for 2011 Wednesday. The proposal would maintain public education funding at its Fiscal Year 2009 levels.

BUDGET from page 1

Patrick of the University's importance.

"At a time when the Commonwealth continues to face challenges, Gov. Patrick has made the decision to invest in the University of Massachusetts, knowing that UMass provides opportunity and serves as a critical economic engine for the state," he said.

The Governor's release noted that the Commonwealth's public universities will be funded at their 2009 levels, thanks to aid from both the federal government and state rainy day funds.

"Massachusetts public colleges and universities [will be] funded at levels equal to fiscal year 2009 appropriation levels" in 2011, which was "possible due to state investment and the use of one-time federal stimulus funds."

The release added that "in Fiscal Year 2010 and Fiscal Year 2011, Massachusetts' colleges and universities will continue to receive funds through the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act (ARRA), State Fiscal Stabilization Fund (SFSF) to preserve budgets at the campuses."

"Although the state budget reflects lower appropriations for higher education campuses," said Patrick Wednesday, "federal stimulus funds will be used to ensure each campus remains at fiscal year 2009 levels." The Governor's office expects that from 2009-2011, approximately $380 million in State Fiscal Stabilization Fund (sometimes referred to as the "rainy day fund") dollars will be distributed to campuses.

However, it remains to be seen whether the UMass system will be able to maintain this funding stability in 2012 in the absence of an economic turnaround or another federal stimulus. Gov. Patrick's remarks seemed to suggest that a second stimulus package could be in the pipeline.

"The Commonwealth is expected to receive approximately $14 billion through the federal American Recovery and Reinvestment Act, including funding for education, life sciences, transportation, clean energy and health care that builds on our own initiatives and provides direct relief to our state's residents," said the Governor's release. "Our fiscal year 2011 budget likewise benefits from 'use or lose' federal funds that have already been secured through our efforts and anticipates further federal support in the coming fiscal year [2012]."

President Wilson emphasized that UMass is particularly significant in a weak economic climate, as more Massachusetts residents are applying to state universities for their lower price tag than other schools.

"This is a moment when more and more citizens of the Commonwealth are looking to UMass, with applications and enrollment up on our campuses," said Wilson. "State funding is critical to our ability to serve the growing numbers of students who are coming to us for an affordable, high-quality university education."

Sam Butterfield can be reached at sbutterfield@dailycollegian.com. Nick Bush can be reached at nbush@student.umass.edu.

SGA plans new class that will award credit at the SGA meeting. Rose also emphasized the need for SGA members to meet with one another in more "informal" settings "to discuss ideas," and how in the past, it has been difficult to match up members' varying schedules.

SGA from page 1

Essentially, the resolution passed stated that "whereas in the past, the Student Government Association officers have found that their elected or appointed positions require vast amounts of time that often conflict with academic schedules. And whereas, the time it takes to do these jobs to their fullest often cause academic sacrifices and little compensation of any kind, therefore, be it resolved that the [SGA] fully supports the syllabus for the proposed class..."

"By passing this resolution, members of the SGA are sending a message to the Faculty Senate," said Rose. "We're saying, listen, we really think it will help us, and we really want to work with the faculty and administration at UMass to make the school better, and this class will help us do that."

Currently, the course's syllabus would require its students to write a six to eight page policy proposal for UMass.

Rose said he believes that the most beneficial aspect of this course would be its ability to get Senate members to meet informally, and that it is likely the policy proposal papers will spur many progressive ideas.

The resolution passed almost without opposition or abstentions, and many members were vocal about their support of it.

"I think this class is a great idea," said Tina Kennedy, Senate member and SGA Finance Committee chair. "For a long time, senators have been trying to get credit for the program, and I think it's awesome that someone finally stepped up and did it.

I think it's great it's not a required class," Kennedy continued. "But it is a great opportunity because senators do put in a lot of time and effort. There are a lot of unsung heroes and it's good they'll be able to receive at least credit for their hard work."

The meeting also swore in several new members to vacant Senate seats, including Michael Fox and Justin Thompson as Commuter Senators and Erica Nyer, who moved from being a Southwest North Senator to a Southwest South Senator. Two members, Zachary Dawson and Rachel Tumin, were voted into the Elections Commission. Tumin served as an Elections Commissioner last semester.

"I'm willing to work to improve helping to straighten out the situation with online voting," said Dawson. "I'm very excited to be on the Elections Commission."

Members of the SGA will be meeting tomorrow at 5:30 p.m. in the SGA to discuss online voting. UMass' student voting-population voted in favor of online voting for elections by 87 percent last fall, but the referendum was determined invalid by the Judiciary Committee.

Alyssa Creamer can be reached at acreamer@student.umass.edu

Student Government Association senators gathered for a group photo late last semester. The SGA is currently planning a new course which will be available to members looking to get credits for their work.

Dance the night away

The UMass SASA Dhadak Fusion Dance Team, winners of UPC's "UMass' Best Dance Crew," holds tryouts in the lobby of Herter on Wednesday night.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, JANUARY 28, 2010

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
– Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Wilson's raise miscalculation

Although University of Massachusetts President Jack Wilson may not be one of the highest paid public university leaders, it is unfortunate that he accepted a 15 percent increase in compensation during a period where the school faculty, students and his counterparts at other universities are all enduring the pains of the current economic recession.

With the Commonwealth and UMass still struggling to develop strategies to close a budget gap that could top $100 million, it reflects poorly on his commitment to his own rhetoric that accompanied the sacrifices seen on campus over the past year.

The Daily Collegian reported last week that Wilson's $546,000 compensation package for the 2008-2009 fiscal year includes a $425,000 salary, a $45,000 housing stipend, $25,000 in deferred compensation, $51,000 towards retirement and the use of a car, which ultimately boosts his salary by $72,000 this year.

Wilson had the chance to turn down the raise in the same manner as he did the year before, and considering the state and nation's dire economic reality, he missed a symbolically important opportunity to show solidarity with his faculty and students during a time when many are collectively forgoing pay increases.

Students are staring down a $1,500 fee hike, departments are maneuvering around budget cuts and hiring freezes and professors and state employees are facing layoffs, unpaid furloughs and diminishing salaries.

Administrators should lead by example in these trying times, and not consider themselves above making the same sacrifices they expect of others.

Wilson has made such sacrifices in the past, including passing on the raise entitled to him last year, and taking a pair of two-week unpaid furloughs over the past 18 months.

It is also important to note that quality leadership for any university does not come cheaply in this day and age, and with a ranking at number 50 on the list of top-paid public university administrators, Wilson's compensation is approximately in line with his contemporaries.

However, if he had declined his second chance at a raise, he would not have been alone among university leaders.

According the Chronicle of Higher Education, more than one third of public universities froze salaries for executives in 2009, and about ten percent have cut their compensation packages for administrators.

UMass has received more than $39 million in federal stimulus money so far, but as administrators have noted numerous times, once stimulus funds run out, the University is facing a "funding cliff" in a year or two.

If this perfect storm of a situation occurs, it would no doubt lead to millions of dollars of cuts to essential faculty and services, with the consequence of destroying many of the positive gains the UMass system has made over the past decade.

Considering how unconscionable that scenario is to those here at the Amherst campus, Wilson and the rest of UMass' administrative leadership should be weary of increasing their pay before the economic ship is righted, lest they lose the respect of the faculty and students whom are now burdened with sacrifices of their own; sacrifices that when considered collectively, are of enormous magnitude, and not to be taken for granted.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian's Editorial Board

Gender, race, and the Census

Leigh Greaney

This morning I drank my coffee from a Census 2010 mug that was completely in Spanish that just happened to be in my house. Not so ironically, they don't make these mugs in Chinese or any other language than English or Spanish.

This choice of multi-lingual mug is most likely aimed to warm up the Spanish speaking crowd for Question 8 on the new Census. The Census doesn't ask about a person's race or ethnicity – it only asks if a person is Hispanic, Latino or of Spanish origin. Apparently Question 9 that asks what a person's race is just isn't enough. Being Spanish puts you in a whole other category and a whole other question. Strange?

According to the official website for the 2010 Census, this is done to "monitor compliance with anti-discrimination provisions." I guess separating people out and blatantly pointing out ethnic differences could not possibly be an act of discrimination in and of itself. The website also claims that the data will "help plan and administer bilingual programs for people of Hispanic origin."

Maybe those programs should exist regardless. For that matter, why don't they set up bilingual programs for native English speakers to learn Spanish? What a thought.

Favoring a language over another language causes discrimination. Education on both sides will create harmony, shared knowledge, and understanding. Pigeon holing people into racial, lingual and ethnic categories will only create discrimination, ignorance and misunderstanding.

Moreover, it creates a glass ceiling on achievement.

The social psychology of race and racism leads to the idea that genetic and cultural discrimination causes poorer educational achievement when individuals are constructed to believe racial stereotypes suggesting inferiority.

In a study done by Joshua Aronson and Claude Steele in 1995, the social phenomenon became fact.

After giving the Graduate Record Examination to both European Americans and African Americans, they measured each group's intelligence after splitting each group in half.

The African Americans who were told they were only being tested for their intelligence – which they have been socially programmed to believe is inferior – did much better on the test when they were not told what was being measured.

Steele told The Atlantic Monthly in 1999 that "when capable black college students fail to perform as well as their white counterparts, the explanation often has less to do with preparation or ability than with the threat of stereotypes about their capacity to succeed."

If students are not asked to provide their race on their forms before they fill them out, then the pressure is off; they can be invisible to the prying eyes of stereotyping.

So, how is race identification helping? It seems to only cause mental harm.

Furthermore, how is Census 2010's sex identification helping? Question 6 asks for a person's sex and makes it clear that only one box may be marked.

What if this person in question is going through a sex change? What if they aren't and still identify with a gender that isn't their own? What if they think the entire idea of gender is oppressive?

According the Census website, "Census data about sex are important because many federal programs must differentiate between males and females for funding, implementing and evaluating their programs." Why don't they fund, implement and evaluate based on something like – necessity and merit? Equal opportunity will come as soon as people stop looking at women as inferior.

Favoring a language over another language causes discrimination. Education on both sides will create harmony, shared knowledge and understanding.

Once sex becomes less important than skill, then change for the better can be invited in.

Psychologist Mara Cadinu did an experiment on the role of negative thinking within women's minds and how it could act as a potential threat to performance. Sixty participants were either threatened with stereotypes or not during a mathematic evaluation. Women under the stereotype who were asked to write their sex showed a sharp decline in performance. The negative thinking and social conditioning directly caused them to hit the glass ceiling society has built for them.

Women are bred to believe that they're worse at math than men just the same way black people are conditioned to believe that they're academically outwitted by white people. This is poisonous. This "stereotype threat," as Joshua Aronson calls it, is psychologically crippling the nation.

Minorities and women have been looking through the veil of double consciousness for too long. Every individual knows their own ability to succeed lives within them and it's their own fire to fan.

When societal stereotypes and constant obsession with labeling of identity becomes more important than a person's self worth, nothing is gained. White males will continue to claim superiority. Understanding of others will wither.

Minorities and women will keep wearing the chains of mental oppression until differences become too inferior to cause feelings of inferiority.

Keep that in mind this April when you're spilling stereotyped identity all over the Census.

Leigh Greaney is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at lgreaney@student.umass.edu.

After a few years, I'm now happy at UMass

Nick Milano

The University of Massachusetts has never really been good enough for me. It is hard to explain. Since high school, I thought this random, giant collection of ugly concrete buildings in the middle of a valley – surrounded by farms and so far from Boston it might as well be New York State – was just some school I had to get through for four years.

I planned on transferring not once, but close to three times. Once a false stereotype gets implanted, it is near impossible to develop a different impression. Still, after three and a half years, things assuredly changed.

As UMass was last on the list of schools I wanted to attend – I was sent here because of financial considerations instead of any desire to go to UMass – I was reluctant to accept the University for what it is.

Now, I see it as a gem of a public university that deserves more praise, appreciation and funding than it currently gets.

There are certainly many things that can be improved, but overall UMass has been the perfect fit – and I know I am not the only one whose college decision worked out in such a fashion.

My misconceptions about packed lectures, mean professors and TA-run classes were eventually all disproved. My political science professors, particularly Dean Robinson and Tatishe Nteta, were engaging and involved in incredibly interesting research. The general education requirements, though certainly tedious, have a worse reputation than they really deserve. Nothing can be taken away from the quality of the student body, and class discussions are almost always inspired. In fact, I have come to view UMass as everything I hoped a college could be; comprised of engaged students, taught by exciting professors and offering a diverse course load.

Then, I took two classes at Amherst College.

Suddenly, UMass professors did not look so great. None of them were like one Amherst professor whose feedback would match the length of his students' papers.

Hand in a three pager? Get back three pages of criticism, argument and congratulations. For both courses, the first day of class was spent as an advertisement.

This is what we are going to cover; this is why I think it is important; this is why I think you should take my class. Both times, I was sold.

I have come to view UMass as everything I hoped … Then, I took two classes at Amherst College.

A history class in which I am currently enrolled is all of 100 students and will maybe fill to be 130 students. To make up for the "out of hand class size," which must be of epic proportions for Amherst College, the class is going to be taught by three professors, each of whom will be responsible for a few discussion sections.

I quickly arrived at the logical conclusion: all Amherst professors must be this good and all their classes must be this awesome.

David Foster Wallace describes this kind of feeling with uncanny skill in a piece about a luxurious trip aboard a cruise ship.

After spending 18 pages going into minute detail about absurd levels of pampering available on his ship, the Nadir, he throws it all away when another, newer, bigger ship pulls up next to his. Suddenly, this new ship, the Dreamward, puts everything about the Nadir to shame. It looks whiter than his impossibly bleached Nadir; there must be more pools; the towel guys must be more professional.

He imagines the Dreamward's food being even more varied and punctiliously prepared, its casino less depressing, its stage entertainment less cheesy…its pillow mints bigger. Standing in the Caribbean, Wallace could not help but feel this surge of envy.

All of a sudden, nothing on his cruise liner is good enough, most shockingly because "they don't even have Mr. Pibb; they foist Dr. Pepper on you with a maddeningly unapologetic shrug when any fool knows that Dr. Pepper is no substitute for Mr. Pibb, and it's an absolute goddamned travesty, or – at best – extremely dissatisfying indeed."

It is this comparison that is so striking and true. He had everything he needed on the Nadir, but once he saw the Dreamward, it all became inadequate. This is what it is like to sit in a class at Amherst College.

In an instant, every single positive facet of UMass gets thrown out the window. It was not until – as the bored nerd I am – I reread David Foster Wallace's "Shipping Out: On the (nearly lethal) comforts of a luxury cruise," when I placed my newfound misgivings about UMass in the trashcan where they belonged.

I had come full circle: entered UMass with silly stereotypes about the school and then reformed them senior year. After rereading, the absurdity of it all became apparent. For all its faults, UMass ain't that bad. I have been to the "promised land" of a liberal arts college and made it back alive. If nothing else, it beats being tens of thousands of dollars in debt.

Nick Milano is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at nmilano@student.umass.edu.

Write for Ed/Op:

editorial@dailycollegian.com

Correction: A column in yesterday's paper misstated the author of "Liberty and justice only for privileged." The author was not Scott Harris; it was Chris Russell.

Even in college, a little investing and some foresight can do a lot

Massachusetts lost 55,000 jobs between 1999 and 2009, according to a recent article in the Boston Globe. The "dot-com" bust, outsourcing and two economic recessions in the last ten years – among other factors – have all contributed to an inhospitable environment for job growth in the Commonwealth. At least we're in good company. Massachusetts finds itself in the same dither as a dozen other states including Michigan: home of the precarious American auto industry.

Shane Cronin

I'd love to be able to tell you with certainty that 2010 is going to reverse the downward trend, but it's not looking good.

That being said, there are things you can do to subsidize your minimum wage job … if you're willing to take a few risks.

Last March, in addition to handing out 11 resumes, I decided to take a proactive step toward supplementing my income by capitalizing on what was then the nearly dilapidated stock market. With no financial experience whatsoever and a small insurance check from a minor car accident, I stacked a few chips on the poker table. Nine months later, a couple of my investments paid off, specifically Ford.

For those of you who monitor the markets, you know the only U.S. car maker to forgo government bailout funds has proved to be as lucrative an investment as it was a crap shoot.

Aside from investing your money with dicey auto manufacturers, here is what you and every student should do; open a Roth IRA, which stands for Individual Retirement Account, sponsored by the late Senator William Roth (R - Delaware) in the 1990s. Roth IRAs, unlike standard IRAs, grow tax free, and the money invested in them is withdrawn tax free. The money you dispense into the account comes from your pay check, which has already been raided by both the state and federal governments. There are a few key rules to owning a Roth, however.

You can only contribute earned income to the fund. In other words, you have to have an on-the-books job to participate. So if you work just a few hours a week loading the dishwasher in Franklin, have a work study, or lifeguard at a summer camp, you're in luck! In addition, the maximum annual contribution you can make is $5,000 until you reach your golden oldies. If your finances so much as remotely resemble mine, this shouldn't be an issue for you.

With no financial experience whatsoever and a small insurance check from a minor car accident, I stacked a few chips on the poker table.

"I realize it's tough to scrape up any money to save for retirement when you're young and still in school… But if you can, you should. I wish I had done this with some money from my summer jobs," said Chris Farrell, an investment advisor with Northstar Investment Advisors.

The interest that accrues in ordinary savings accounts generally amounts to pennies in the well. But a Roth IRA can generate tangible income. Farrell breaks it down like this: "Assume you fund $5,000 into a Roth IRA while in college for each of the four years. The total contribution is $20,000. Assume that money grows at 7.5 percent a year until age 65. The $20,000 would grow to more than $530,000, and it would all be tax-free. And if the money grew at 8.5 percent, it would be worth over $820,000."

Unlike a typical savings account, a Roth isn't linked to a debit card for all of you shopaholics. The money is not entirely off limits. Medical emergencies and first time home purchases are acceptable uses for the fund. So long as you don't withdraw any profits from the account, there are no penalties. For example: let's say you deposit $4,000 into the Roth.

After a few years it is worth $6,000. Other than the reasons I previously cited, you can withdraw no more than $4,000 – your contribution – or risk a penalty.

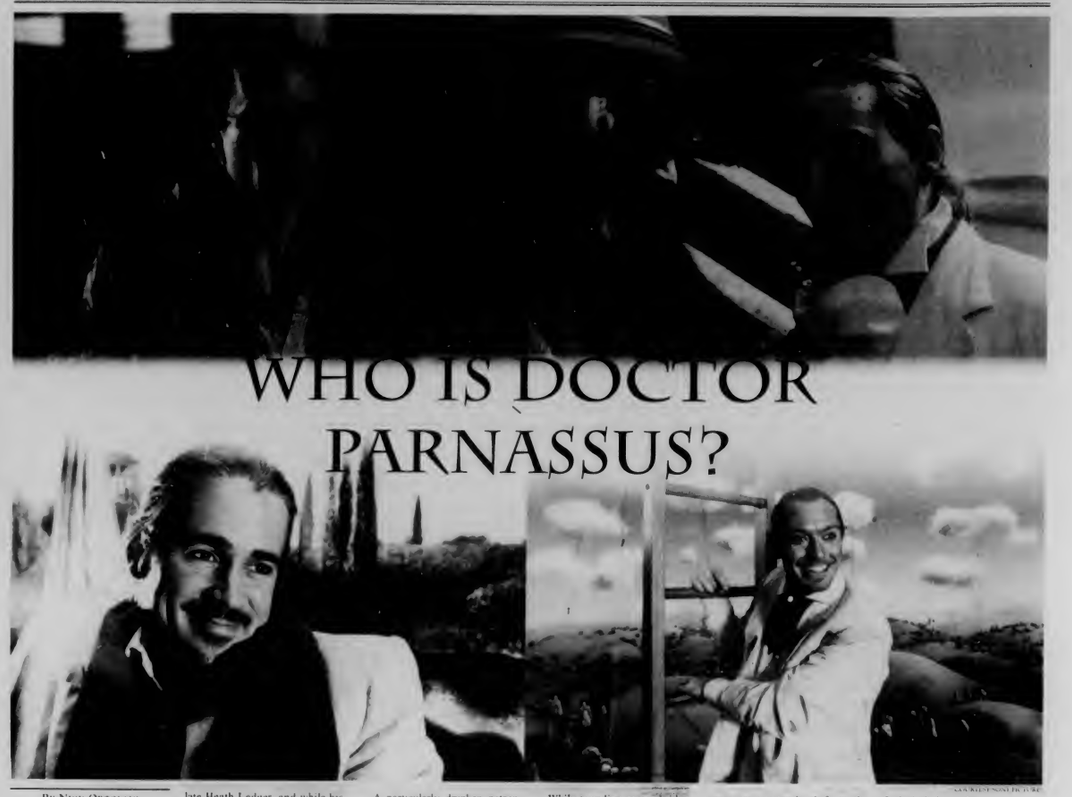
Conveniently, you can bridge your checking account and Roth IRA, and have a certain amount transferred into the Roth on a monthly basis. It can be as little $25 or as much as a few hundred bucks.

Remember I asked you if you were willing to take a few risks? Here's the catch. Roth IRAs typically mirror the stock market. Therefore, when stocks are down, so is your Roth. But when stocks are up, you're making profit!

I'm an English major who is looking to be a high school teacher. There will be no multi-million dollar contract for me. With every passing day, my dream of being a celebrity surrounded by adoring fans appears slimmer and slimmer. But that doesn't mean I can't be rich. The same applies to you. This is my advice.

Set up an appointment with a broker.

Talking is free, and there are a ton of firms out there. I invest with Edward Jones. I have friends that use Fidelity. Do a little research to find the best company to manage your money. Start saving now, and you'll be laughing tomorrow.



Shane Cronin is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at scronin@student.umass.edu

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS LIVING

THURSDAY, JANUARY 28, 2010

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

WHO IS DOCTOR PARNASSUS?

By Nick Ortolani
Collegian Correspondent

"The Imaginarium of Doctor Parnassus" is a film with endless vision, and very little sight as to where it's going. The latest project by director Terry Gilliam (of Monty Python fame) continues his legacy of creating unique worlds which operate only within themselves. The film also marks the last cinematic appearance of the late Heath Ledger, and while his performance is substantial, the film is a lackluster curtain call.

As the film opens, a rickety horse-drawn cart pulls up under a bridge in a seedy section of London, outside a local pub. As patrons of the bar stumble out, the cart transforms into a Victorian-esque stage. Passers-by are invited to enter the mind of Dr. Parnassus (Christopher Plummer).

A particularly drunken patron attempts to enter without paying the entrance fee, and runs through a "mirror." When he emerges on the other side, he has been transported to a dream-like world. It is at this point that the film proves that nothing is what it seems. "Imaginarium," however, isn't content to remain subtle on this fact: it continues to beat it into the heads of each member of the audience.

While traveling over a bridge, a group discovers a man dangling by a rope. Parnassus' daughter, Valentina (Lily Cole), and his assistant Anton (Andrew Garfield) rescue the hanging man. While he at first has amnesia, the audience later learns that his name is Tony (played variously by Ledger, Johnny Depp, Jude Law and Colin Farell).

Tony joins the troupe's traveling show, assumedly to repay them for saving his life, but it's hard to tell. With the help of Tony, they transform their act and begin to attract more customers than ever. Their formerly meager profits soar. Yet, all is not well.

In addition to the Doctor's financial woes, he has made a wager with the sinister Mr. Nick (played by Tom Waits with suspicious ease). Whether or not Mr. Nick is a representation of the devil is of little importance, as are many of the details of the story. And this is the film's main downfall.

There are so many twists and turns in the plot that not only are they hard to keep track of, but sometimes they can be missed altogether. The nature of Mr. Nick and Parnassus' wager seems to constantly shift, to the point where it is difficult to distinguish which one is winning. Gilliam presents a world that seems very concerned with rules, yet the film seems to have none.

In addition, "Imaginarium" has no sense of logical progression. It backs up, flashes forward, switches worlds, doubles over on itself and back again. The film is like a mobius strip, frequently starting in one place, but never traveling to a logical endpoint. And the audience can never be expected to understand how it got there.

This is not to say the film is entirely bad. The performances are quite effective, particularly with the various Tony characters. Gilliam's visuals, however, steal the show.

Parnassus' traveling theatre looks like the love-child of a Victorian playhouse and Howl's moving castle. Each imagination presented in the mind of Parnassus provides a hallucinogenic – and often comic - feast for the eyes. Yet it is easy to tell that these aesthetics were the primary focus of the movie's production. No other component of the film is composed with the same attention to detail, and as a result, it feels imbalanced.

"Parnassus" is best suited to an audience with godlike suspension of disbelief. The film not only travels to a fantasy world unlike our own, it also abandons a logical sense of cause-and-effect. As a result, it is near impossible to follow. If only one could enter the mind of Terry Gilliam, maybe "Parnassus" would be more enjoyable.

Nick Ortolani can be reached at nortolan@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY WIKIMEDIA COMMONS

No stranger to flights of fancy, director Terry Gilliam ("Brazil") treats viewers to an extended sojourn in the fantasy realm with his latest film, "The Imaginarium of Doctor Parnassus."

Avid partygoers need not hide their faces in shame - with Photo Booth and creative sites such as ourblogoflove.com, users can ensure that flattering pictures turn up every time.

Saving face with Photo Booth

By Ellie Rulon-Miller
Collegian Staff

If you're an avid partygoer, you've probably been tagged in your fair share of embarrassing photos. You may have woken up on Saturday afternoon, logged onto your Facebook and gone through photo upon photo removing said tags so nobody would know how much of a hot mess you were the night before.

What if there were a way that you could take all the party photos you wanted while maintaining a more flattering appearance - if the person with the camera wasn't only stealing your soul at your most unattractive moments? Fortunately for you, there is a solution: the do-it-yourself party photo booth.

You can get as detailed as you want with this project – whether you want to take the steps to actually construct a booth or take the easier route to make a cheap (but still functional) "booth" wherever you choose to get down. A photo booth feel is easy to achieve in any setting, assuming you have a backdrop and someplace to hang it from.

For a more authentic-feeling booth, use a corner of a room or a closet. For the backdrop, a simple sheet or tapestry will suffice.

All you really need to do to set up the booth is clear out the area you'd like to use for it and hang your chosen backdrop from the ceiling, or from any support that is out of view from your camera's lens. For lighting, you can set up a desk light so that it's pointing towards where your subjects will be standing.

With your "booth" and lighting set up, all you need now is your camera and any necessary support for it. You can set up your camera on a table or a tripod; you could even find a steady-handed friend to help out, or get your friends to take turns shooting. Relatively cheap tripods are available at Best Buy for as low as $15.99, and camera attachments are universal so whichever one you choose to buy will work for any camera.

I wanted to try this idea at a party on New Year's a few weeks ago. I planned to find a tripod and a remote control for my camera, thinking that I could set it up, leave it on and carry the remote around with me so I could take photos from around the room. But alas, I could not afford the tripod or the remote, and I didn't want to impose in a house other than my own by hanging my own backdrops on the walls.

The DIY photo booth is not unlike the method used by two wedding photographers, Jesse and Whitney, on their website ourblogoflove.com. They call it their "smile-booth." Each photo is impeccable and captures the pure excitement that radiates from each bride, groom and wedding guest who ventures into the room where the photographers have set up shop. They come prepared with a slew of props for their subjects to use in their pictures. (The photos are made even more fun by the varying levels of clear intoxication in a lot of photo subjects.)

Check out ourblogoflove.com to see even more of the indescribably creative and entertaining photography from the smilebooth and make your own at your next blowout.

Ellie Rulon-Miller can be reached at erulonmi@student.umass.edu.

No backbone in Jackson's 'Lovely Bones'

Pathos-laden drama lacks the verve of book, Weisz founders while Ronan, Sarandon soar

By Kate MacDonald
Collegian Staff

In making "The Lovely Bones," director Peter Jackson ventures perilously into the land of risk – a land traversed when moviemakers try to make a wildly popular book into a movie. Many have done it right – take "Twilight," "Harry Potter," and for instance, even Jackson's own "Lord of the Rings" trilogy. Given his pedigree, it's easy to assume that Jackson would be a pro at this by now. The audience of "The Lovely Bones," however, would have to disagree.

"The Lovely Bones" is essentially a movie about death and not wanting to let go. The main character, Susie Salmon - played by newcomer Saoirse Ronan - doesn't want to let go of her life, which was snuffed out tragically at the start of the film by her creepy neighbor, George Harvey (Stanley Tucci). Harvey tries to keep his identity a secret from Susie's biggest advocates, her father (Mark Wahlberg) and sister (Rose McIver). While Susie copes with her situation in a limbo of her own making, she won't move on until her death is avenged.

For a movie about murder, the plot is rather backward. The audience is introduced to the killer within the first few minutes, and the bulk of the story is played out before the movie is half over. It is more akin to a social commentary on how family members and close friends deal with death than a murder mystery. Some seem to obsess, making every aspect of their own lives about vengeance, while others simply deny what has happened and try to forget as quickly as possible. The draw to "The Lovely Bones," however, is supposed to be waiting around to see if Susie's family and the police pick up on the obvious clues that her killer leaves along the way.

Anyone who sees "The Lovely Bones" after reading the novel will be sorely disappointed in many respects. Many scenes, including the first long shot of the film, could have easily been cut to make room for more relevant parts from the book. Huge plotlines aren't even touched upon, while some characters aren't introduced at all, and many of the characters that are lucky enough to make an appearance aren't developed as much as they should be.

That being said, the actors in Jackson's film do the best they can with the choppy storyline he has given them. As the antagonist, Stanley Tucci does a great job at playing an average, quiet next-door neighbor who happens to be a psychopath behind closed doors. Then there's Ronan, whose only other notable role was in "Atonement," and who obviously has a talent for acting. Susan Sarandon also shines, though her role was far too minor. She plays the kooky grandmother who is supposed to help the family recover from the devastating loss of their daughter. She's a reckless alcoholic who can't seem to do normal house chores, but succeeds in bringing life back into the house, as well as into the faltering "Bones."

Other members of the A-list cast don't live up to their reputations. With palpable talent in movies like "Enemy at the Gates" and "About a Boy," Rachel Weisz has proven her bankability in Hollywood. However, this star fails to shine in "The Lovely Bones," playing a character who seems too young to be the mother of teens. She comes off as an unconvincing figure, particularly when Susie first goes missing, opting instead to wait for the police to find her. No mother would do that.

Mark Wahlberg comes off as a bit young for his part as well, though at least he brings pathos to the part that his counterpart seems to lack.

Thankfully, the setting keeps things interesting. Meg Everist and George DeTitta Jr. do an amazing job of recreating the1970s Technicolor era. The furniture, the bellbottoms and even the loud use of color - all of it is impeccable. Susie's limbo is a visual delight, though it might be a rip-off. Evidently, Jackson sees heaven as a cross between Narnia and the Middle Earth of his more famous films. The trippy scenes keep the audience guessing what will happen next on Susie's journey.

Due to faulty characters and big plotline gaps, it's unlikely that "The Lovely Bones" will be hailed as a classic or work its way onto any best movies of the year lists. If the story is intriguing, instead of paying the $10 to go see this mediocre film, head to the nearest Borders and just pick up the book instead.

Kate MacDonald can be reached at kaitlynm@student.umass.edu.

Well-versed in the art of the adaptation, director Peter Jackson is at the helm of the suprisingly mediocre big screen version of "The Lovely Bones," starring Saoirse Ronan and Stanley Tucci.

Renowned auteur 'Embraces' drama

By Mark Schiffer
Collegian Staff

"Broken Embraces" takes full advantage of its place on the screen. It's like a delicious Georgia peach, begging to be bitten into. The sheer sumptuousness of the images it contains are almost overpowering, at times threatening to overwhelm the narrative. But director Pedro Almodovar manages to pull them off, allowing for a near-perfect synthesis of narrative and spectacle.

We are told the story of a blind film director named Mateo Blanco (Lluis Homar), and the experiences he had 14 years previously when he worked with and loved the tempestuously beautiful Lena (Penelope Cruz). He lives with his assistant Judit Garcia (Blanca Portillo) and her son, Diego (Tamar Novas). The conflict is seemingly reignited (for all of the events in this film relate to what happened 14 years before) when an obituary for millionaire Ernesto Martel (Jose Luis Gomez) is published and a mysterious man who requests to be called only by his pseudonym, "Ray X." (Ruben Ochandiano) re-enters the life of Mateo. It seems to be a case for blackmail, but there may be more here than meets the eye.

Not much else should be said about the plot, due to the fact that the film's melodramatic structure means that up to a certain point, anything the characters could possibly choose to do - no matter how over-the-top, villainous, or manipulative - will be done. This commitment to melodrama permeates the film, remitting only in an about-face ending that is almost shocking in its gentleness. It's not just that it is a happy ending. It is the right ending, and nothing else needs be said about it.

Almodovar ("Volver," 2004's "Bad Education") has once again made a film for people who love film, which may prove to be a negative aspect for casual filmgoers. Obvious influences abound in this film, including to Jean-Luc Godard's "Contempt," which is distinctive for its nearly abstract treatment of seemingly mundane images, rendering them beautiful. The preparation of kielbasa by Cruz on a film set becomes a subtly glorious image, worthy of framing and hanging on a wall. But of course, the so-called titular "Broken Embraces" aren't simply those of the lovers in this film. They are also those of the viewer's with these gorgeous images. The camera can only linger for so long on one image. To lend them meaning, and so we can truly appreciate them, they must fade in time with the memories of these characters.

In addition to Godard, we can see traces of references to Hitchcock and Douglas Sirk (1955's "All That Heaven Allows"). One sequence practically has Almodovar listing off influences ("'Fanny and Alexander,' '8 ½,'" intones Diego, reading movie titles off of Mateo's shelf).

"I want to hear the sound of Jeanne Moreau's voice," says Mateo, later explaining that he wishes to watch "Elevator to the Gallows."

"I'll look up her number," replies Diego, not understanding. While this may mean little to somebody who has not had exposure to these films, for students of the greats, this sequence (and most of the "Broken Embraces") plays out beautifully.

Penelope Cruz is a revelation, at least for this reviewer. She is a beacon of melodramatic crimson. She is a shot of gin directly to the system. One could almost say that her place in this film says just as much about Almodovar's vision of her as that of the characters. We the audience are consequently privy to a world that exists continually both as a narrative and as a self-reflexive piece. By this, I mean that the film exists as a story in itself, and as a commentary on the full implications contained by the story in their cinematic space. Is there any other reason to go to the movies?

Mark Schiffer can be reached at mschiffe@student.umass.edu.

Oscar winner Penelope Cruz is a revelation as the tempestuous love interest of Mateo Blanco (Lluis Homar) in director Pedro Almodovar's "Broken Embraces."

Lincoln Real Estate
25 N. Pleasant St • 413-253-7879 • www.amherstlincolnrealty.com
Providing the best off campus living experience
24 hour maintenance
Safe Apartments
Friendly Staff
Two Great locations:
Amherst Center and Hobart Lane
We start showing apartments
Feb. 3rd from 11:30am – 4:30pm M-F

Domino's
2 or More 2-Topping Medium Pizzas
$5.99 Each
Order Online!
(413) 256-8911
Route 9, Hadley

SPRING BREAK
JAMAICA
Once you go, you know.
Spring Break comes to life...
Live Concerts
Awesome VIP Parties
Beautiful Beaches
Scenic Cliff Jumping
Spectacular Sunsets
Book Your Trip Today! Contact:
Sun Splash Tours
www.sunsplashtours.com
1.800.426.7710
STS Student Travel Services
1.800.648.4849
www.ststravel.com

BOOT
ZANNA
downtown Amherst

Warhammer
Off The Wall Games
Warhammer 40,000
Worldwake pre-release tournament on Thursday, January 28 at 6 PM -Sealed Deck - $20 Entry Fee
First prize a box of Worldwake, scan www.offthewallgamestore.com for details and more prizes!
Magic the Gathering
Discount role-playing games, Collectible card games (CCGs), Miniature war games and board games, fun for everyone!
Hours: Tu - Sa - 41 Russel St (Hampton Village Shops) Rt. 9, Hadley 413-586-5451

JEFF BERNSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

Freshman Freddie Riley dribbles past a defedner earlier this season. On Wednesday, Riley's 4-of-8 shooting from outside propelled the Minutemen in a 87-80 win over Saint Joesph's.

Riley shooting down Hawks

BASKETBALL from page 8

while junior forward Idris Hilliard had 14 points and six rebounds.

Midway through the first half, the Minutemen built a lead of 12 points several times, but the Hawks stormed back, going on a 17-4 run to regain the lead early on in the second half, 42-41, with a three-point play from Darrin Govens.

Later on, Riley hit a 3-pointer, but the Hawks came back with a run of their own, scoring seven straight points, going up 56-54. UMass again answered with a pair of 3-pointers from Riley and a Carter dunk, putting the Minutemen up by seven points.

The Hawks came back, cutting the deficit to four, but missed a number of opportunities at the foul line, while the Minutemen sunk 12-of-14 free throw shots late in the game to secure the A-10 road contest.

"We were able to withstand their runs because we actually shared the ball, played good defense, and rebounded," Kellogg said. "They made some good runs in the first half when they knocked down 3's."

SJU was 4-of-9 from beyond the arc in the first half, but were just 2-of-10 in the second half.

The Minutemen return to the Mullins Center for the first time in more than a week to take on Charlotte, Saturday at 6 p.m. This will be the second-straight week that UMass will be featured on ESPNU.

"We needed this win bad, and now we need to get the win on Saturday and put two wins together and start rolling," Vinson said.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu.

Watson gets double-double despite losing

MINUTEWOMEN from page 8

Tiana Myers hit a jumper to start a 10-1 run for the Colonials. She later hit a 3-pointer to conclude the run and give her team a 22-17 advantage.

Freshman center Jasmine Watson, after missing five of her first six attempts, combined with fellow freshman Shakia Robinson for 10 points in the half's final seven minutes to bring UMass back within one. George Washington then responded with a 3-pointer to take a 31-27 advantage heading into the half.

UMass limped into the second half, missing eight of its first nine shots from the field. Watson hit a free throw within the first 40 seconds of the period, bringing the Minutewomen within three.

That is the closest UMass would get the rest of the way. George Washington took advantage of the Minutewomen's struggles from the field and went on an 11-6 run and stretched its lead to nine points.

Watson led UMass in scoring and rebounding for the third time this season, notching her second career double-double in the process, with 16 points and 10 boards. Jones finished second on the team with 10 points, while grabbing four rebounds and blocking three shots.

Throughout the game, UMass showed spurts of strong defense and forced George Washington into bad shots with the shot clock winding down. However, the Minutewomen could not sustain these spurts long enough to have a lasting impact on the game. Due to UMass' inconsistency and its collapsing defense, the Colonials found many easy looks in the shot clock's waning seconds.

The Colonials also did an effective job of shutting down UMass standout Kristina Danella. The sophomore shot 0-of-3 form the field, and made one of her two free throw attempts. She also tallied three turnovers and received the game's only technical foul.

Sipe led all scorers with 18 points on 8-of-12 shooting for George Washington. Myers and redshirt freshman Brooke Wilson rounded out the double-digit scorers for the Colonials with 17 and 12 points, respectively. Wilson also tallied six assists and 10 rebounds to give her a double-double, while Myers added four rebounds and five assists.

After the game, the Minutewomen ventured into the crowd of school children to thank the fans and signed autographs before heading into the locker room.

Mike Mastone can be reached at mmastone@student.umass.edu.

JEFF BERNSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

Senior Diatiema Hill shoots in a game earlier this season. Hill scored eight points in 37 minutes Wednesday.

UMass playing much better since last matchup against BU

By Jeffrey R. Larnard
Collegian Staff

When the Massachusetts hockey team traveled to Agganis Arena at the beginning of the month to face the defending national champions, it would be fair to say things did not go according to plan.

After the Minutemen (15-9-0, 10-7-0 Hockey East) upset the then-No. 2 Terriers, 3-2, back on Oct. 16, it was BU (8-11-3, 6-9-2 HEA) who got the best of UMass in a 7-3 victory in Game 2 of the season series.

Now with the series tied up at one apiece and the final game coming this Friday in Boston at 7 p.m., the No. 15 Minutemen have something to prove to themselves against the Terriers after they handed UMass one of its worst losses of the season.

"I wouldn't say [there is a sense of] revenge, but I think we have to prove to ourselves that we can get up," Justin Braun said before Tuesday's practice.

"They weren't having such a good go at the start of the year, so maybe we looked past them a little bit, but this time we have to have the focus and the right mentality to go in there and come out with a win."

Focus has been a point of emphasis for UMass coach Don Cahoon over the past couple of weeks, and it is something the Minutemen have really honed in on in their last couple of games. After the loss to the Terriers, UMass suffered another big loss to UNH and then went on to win four in a row before falling to Vermont in the second game of last weekend's series.

The Minutemen are set to play at Providence – another against whom the season series is tied – on Saturday night following the matchup with the Terriers, but UMass' attention is turned primarily to Friday's game.

Despite BU's lackluster season compared to their expectations entering the year, the Minutemen know they have to pay full attention to Friday's game if they want to take the season series.

"They are a very skilled team, they have a lot of talent on that team and we can't look past Boston University," Will Ortiz said. "Right now, they are not having their best season as they should or as they expect, but we all know that they are a great team and Coach [Jack] Parker has done a great job with them."

Braun and Ortiz both credit BU for playing well in the 7-3 victory earlier this month, but also say that UMass did their part to contribute to the loss.

"They played their game, worked hard and took advantage of their opportunities, we just weren't prepared and we didn't make very many clean plays. We were just sloppy all around, if we just clean that up we'll be alright," Braun said.

"I don't think we were ready to play, I think we were flat footed and they were just ready to play," Ortiz said of the previous meeting. "They got up for the game, we had a bulls eye on our backs because we took it to them in the first meeting earlier this season and now it is a 1-1 series and whoever is going to perform and put the best 60 minutes together is going to come out with the win on Friday."

The Minutemen also have a greater sense of confidence this time around against BU, as they have won four of their last five compared to losing four of their previous six prior to the last time the two schools met.

"Confidence is a big thing, but I think right now we have the mentality knowing that we can do this and bearing down and sticking to the detail that we need to do and executing our game plan," Ortiz said.

Jeffrey R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@dailycollegian.com.

JEFF BERNSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

Casey Wellman, the nation's leading goal-scorer, takes a faceoff against Vermont this past weekend. In the two contests against the Catamounts, Wellman scored two of UMass' three goals.

Hockey East road tests against Terriers and Friars this weekend

HOCKEY from page 8

cally took us out of the game, they finished every check, knocked us around, they tried to intimidate us in their building, and we're playing in their building again so I expect much of the same. How we stand up to that and how we perform under those conditions will go a long way to determine what we're able to get done."

Cahoon, however, dismissed the idea that the loss to the Terriers will have any effect on the matchup this weekend. As far as he is concerned, that loss is well behind the team.

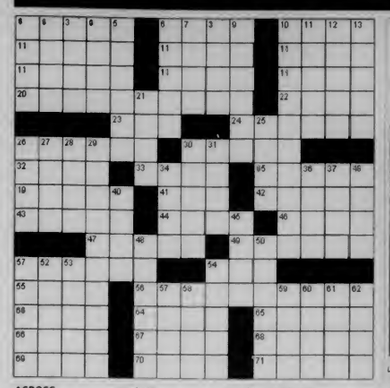
"We know what the reasons were for playing that way, so now what we have to do is to make sure that doesn't happen again," Cahoon said. "That clearly is out of our minds now, it's not about that game anymore, it's about Friday night."

Providence, meanwhile, enters the weekend in the midst of a three-game losing streak, having dropped nine of its last 11 contests. The Friars sit in the basement of the Hockey East, one point behind Merrimack.

In their last meeting, Providence handed UMass its first loss of the season at the Mullins Center, after the Minutemen began the season with three consecutive victories, including a win in Rhode Island the previous night. The score was tied after the first two periods of play, but the Friars overpowered UMass in the final frame, outscoring the Minutemen 3-1 to take the 5-3 win.

Despite this seeming like a game that UMass should win, Cahoon isn't dismissing the possibility of a challenge on the road.

"In the Providence game, we'll both be coming off games the night before and it's hard to even envision what our mind-set is going to be based on the night before," Cahoon said. "They're a solid team and they're particularly tough at home, so we'll have to be playing really well. Whatever transpires on Friday against BU, we'll have to put it aside and be able to go out and take care of business the next day."



Jay Asser can be reached at jasser@student.umass.edu.

WANT TO WRITE FOR SPORTS?
Contact Jeffrey R. Larnard at
SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

APARTMENTS AVAILABLE
PUFFTON VILLAGE
EXCELLENT LOCATION!
1/2 MILE FROM UMASS
SPACIOUS APARTMENTS!
1, 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouses
ALL RENTS INCLUDE: HEAT, HOT WATER, AND COOKING GAS!
ON SITE LAUNDRY, OFF STREET PARKING.
BASKETBALL AND TENNIS COURTS.
OFFICE HOURS: 8AM TO 4PM MONDAY - FRIDAY
(413) 549-0145
WWW.PUFFTONVILLAGE.COM

COMICS

CROSSWORD

ACROSS
1. Put off
6. Tallies
10. Part of a book
14. Palm cockatoo
15. 53 in Roman numerals
16. X X X X
17. Grasping tools
18. Heredity carrier
19. Ill
20. Affiliates
22. Bring
23. President Lincoln
24. Seamster
26. Capable of moving
30. Physically weak
32. Ends a prayer
33. 17 in Roman numerals
35. Triangular formation
39. Directs from the front
41. Autonomic Nervous System
42. Contemptuous look
43. Eskimo
44. Gather leaves
46. Concern
47. Shiny flexible plastic
49. Chaperone
51. Clothing
54. Collection
55. Not easy
56. The quality of excellence in manners
63. Jacob's brother
64. Conceited
65. Cowboy sport
66. Largest continent
67. Feudal worker
68. Impulses
69. Hollow
70. Ragout
71. Beginnings of plants

DOWN
1. Information
2. Greek god of love
3. Air movement devices
4. Therefore
5. Mischievous one
6. Seaweed
7. Meal plan for weight loss
8. Eat
9. Afternoon snooze
10. Any epidemic disease
11. Lengthwise
12. Tropical lizard
13. Glacial ridge
21. Wild goat
25. Boosts
26. French Sudan, today
27. Portent
28. Boyfriend
29. Someone
30. Last
31. Hazard
34. Deviate
36. Not fat
37. Cousin of a gull
38. Region
40. Mix
45. Biblical garden
48. Jitters
50. Womb
51. Not behind
52. Piece of armor for a thigh
53. Hiker's path
54. Muscle
57. Where the sun rises
58. Monetary penalty
59. "Encore!"
60. Border
61. Require
62. Throw

WE WANT YOUR COMICS!
Questions? Comments?
E-mail us: comics@dailycollegian.com
Friend us on Facebook: "Collegian Comix"

NEW OPEN SECTION: GEN. ED.

SCANDIN 376
VIKINGS AND THEIR STORIES: SAGA LITERATURE
Tu-Th, 9:30-10:45, Herter 224
Readings (in translation) of classic Old Icelandic sagas. Nonfiction narratives about families, battles, and politics in a blood feud society a millennium ago. Taught in English.
umass.edu/german UMASS AMHERST

LA PIAZZA
Sundays Open at NOON
Best Deals in Town!!
ALL CALZONES $4.99
ALL 12" SUBS $4.99
ALL SALADS $4.99
ALL ENTREES $5.99
10" CHEESE PIZZA $4.99
Each X-Tra topping .75
12" CHEESE PIZZA $5.99
Each X-Tra Topping $1
16" CHEESE PIZZA $8.99
Each X-Tra Topping $1.25
16" CHEESE PIZZA + 10 WINGS (BONE) $11.50
16" CHEESE PIZZA + 1/2lb WINGS (BONELESS) $11.50
OCMP Free Delivery
(413) 253-6444
www.lapiazzaristorante.us

"Club Nights" at the MONKEY BAR
Thurs. 1/28 DJ BIGGZ Hip-Hop, Dance, Top 40, and Techno
Fri. 1/29 DJ Hott Sizzle Lounge, Vinyl, Hip-Hop, Dance, Brazil - Electro
Sat. 1/30 DJ Construc Hip-Hop, Dance, Top 40, Mash-Ups
Tues. 2/2 DJ BIGGZ Techno Tuesday
Need we say more???
413-259-1000
63 North Pleasant Street
Amherst, MA 01002
www.mymonkeybar.com
21+

WHAT'S ON TAP AT THE AMHERST BREWING COMPANY
Thursdays Starting January 28th
DOWNSTAIRS 9 PM - 12 AM
JOHN SHELDON'S MASTERS OF THE STRATOCASTER
Wednesdays starting February 3rd
LOST IN HD
UPSTAIRS ON THE BIG SCREEN
Monday February 1st
DOWNSTAIRS 8:30-11 PM
AMHERST JAZZ ORCHESTRA
Saturday January 30
RYAN HOMMEL TRIO
GUITAR PHENOM
Keep updated on ABC events on facebook
24 NORTH PLEASANT ST. AMHERST
WWW.AMHERSTBREWING.COM

Hark! a Vagrant by K. Beaton harkavagrant.com

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"I find television very educating. Every time somebody turns on the set, I go into the other room and read a book."

Groucho Marx

MONDAY - SATURDAY
Happy Hour -
1/2 Price Appetizers 9:30 - Close
EVERY THURSDAY:
Promo & Trivia Night
EVERYDAY:
$1.00 Drafts and $5 Movie Tickets!*
21ST BIRTHDAY:
Free Entree or Small Pizza with ID*
Hampshire Mall
Across from Cinemark
413-549-0077
FREE Delivery
ARIZONA PIZZA

SUDOKU

6					7		3	5
	9	4				1
1						4
5
		7	2	1				9
					2		5	1
		6	1		4	9
		3				8

DEW TOUR WINTER
mount snow. VERMONT
February 4-7, 2010
ALLISPORTS.COM

SMBC by Zach Weiner smbc-comics.com

We managed to solve obesity and overpopulation in one move.

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20 - Feb. 18
No matter what happens, your friends are never going to give you up, they're never going to let you down ...

pisces Feb. 19 - Mar. 20
Your shadow puppet acts are getting way too out of hand. How can the alligator be cheating on the bunny with the hark?

aries Mar. 21 - Apr. 19
It is now you who must inherit the power of one of the greatest heroes on the planet. You will be the next Gee Fontano!

taurus Apr. 20 - May. 20
Your old bag of bones wouldn't last a hundred yards up river. Which is why I'm at the store getting you some swimmies.

gemini May. 21 - Jun. 21
A day is not complete without broken promises. Free punch and pie at Blue Wall.

cancer Jun. 22 - Jul. 22
I know the kind of person you are. How can I prove it? I have seen what you do with the butter and stuffed animals.

leo Jul. 23 - Aug. 22
Only Keanu Reeves is allowed to answer a question with a question. Know your place in the universe, young one.

virgo Aug. 23 - Sept. 22
Your blood pressure has been a little high lately. Zac Efron does not have anything to hide behind his terrible hair cut.

libra Sept. 23 - Oct. 22
Rest assured that your physical attributes are common to those terrible British stereotypes regarding poor oral hygiene.

scorpio Oct. 23 - Nov. 21
Someone is bound to grab your ball and kick it away from you. If this happens, please seek a doctor immediately.

sagittarius Nov. 22 - Dec. 21
I know, all that hype over Apple's new product and all you get is iSad.

capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 19
Your clumsiness in the dorm room might provoke a local version of TMZ. Follow Christian Bale's handbook accordingly.

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necessary. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

Zoar Outdoors is seeking adventuresome people to be summer guides for whitewater rafting and zip-line canopy tours. Join our training program and spend the summer splashing through rapids or zipping through trees. Aplicants should be great with people, have a positive attitude and be comfortable working as a team or independantly. Application dealine: Feb. 15th. Call 800-532-7483 or see www.zoaroutdoor.com/jobs.htm for an application.

A GREAT JOB! Spend your summer in a lakefront cabin in Maine. If you're looking to spend this summe outdoors, have fun while you work, and make lifelong friends, then look no further. CAMP MATAPONI, a residential girls camp in Maine, has female/male summertime openings for Land Sports, Waterfront (samm crafts, skiing, life guarding, WSI, boat drivers), Ropes Course, Tennis, H.B. Riding, Arts & Crafts, Theater, Cooking, Gymnastics, Dance, Videography, Group Leaders and more. Top salaries plus room/board & travel provided. Call us today at 1-561-748-3684 or apply online at www.campmataponi.com.

EMPLOYMENT

WANTED

Part-Time Personal Care Attendant about 10-12 hrs/week. Flexible Hours. Please call Patrick 413-275-7928

FOR RENT

28 Stockbridge St: 4 bedroom house- 2 baths, living room, eat in kitchen, pantry, laundry, finished basement, yard, 2 car garage, 1.5 Mi to campus! $2,575/Mo + www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

How Suite it is! $650 includes all. 10 minutes from Umass, free parking, share with father, 8 year old daughter, 2 cats. Quiet, private, friendly. Furnished bedroom, seperate bath room, deck entrance in 2 story house. Free cable/wifi. Short/long term lease option. Jonathan 413-222-3006

FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 Bedroom Apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug, or Sept. First Come, First Serve. Get Them While They Last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop By Or Call 549-0600

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Montague-2 bedroom, 1 bath, dishwasher, deck, yard, laundry on site, gas heat, off street parking. 413-367-2461 $825+

SERVICES

Pregnant? Want to talk? Call birthright 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 Hour hotline 1-800-550-4900 www.birthright.org

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSTHURSDAY

THURSDAY, JANUARY 28, 2010 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Native Baltimore duo help Minutemen win

Win over Hawks snaps five-game losing streak

By David Brinch
Collegian Staff

Players from the Charm City stepped up big Wednesday night in the City of Brotherly Love.

Behind huge performances from Baltimore natives Ricky Harris and Terrell Vinson, the Massachusetts basketball team defeated Saint Joseph's, 87-80, snapping its five-game losing streak while winning its first Atlantic 10 road game of the season.

UMass	87
SJU	80

"I thought we did a nice job of sharing the basketball," UMass coach Derek Kellogg said. "You know, if a guy got hot, we did a great job of really moving it and getting them involved, and we had some guys step up tonight."

The Minutemen (8-12-2-4 A-10) used a 15-2 second half run to get away from the Hawks (8-12, 2-4 A-10), who saw their three-game winning streak come to an end at the hands of Harris and Riley, who combined for 39 points and 17 rebounds in the game.

Along with Harris (23 points, career-high eight rebounds) and Vinson (16 points, nine rebounds), redshirt junior Anthony Gurley added 10 points, while freshman guard Freddie Riley netted 14, and the Minutemen had a season-best 11 scorers in the game.

"I thought Ricky played a great game, Freddie Riley made some shots in the second half, and I think Terrell was very, very good," Kellogg said.

UMass continued to dominate opponents on the glass, outrebounding SJU 44-31, as redshirt sophomore Sean Carter added nine rebounds and six points. The Minutemen also found their shot, going 47.6 percent from the field and 8-of-21 from 3-point range. Riley went 4-for-8 from beyond the arc, while the rest of the team hit just four other 3-pointers, including Harris, who was 1-for-3. Harris went 8-for-10 from the line, while the Minutemen went 19-of-25 from the charity stripe.

The Hawks were led by senior guard Garrett Williamson, who had 16 points, 10 assists and three blocks.

See BASKETBALL on page 6

Lone UMass senior Ricky Harris combined with freshman Terrell Vinson to score 39 of the Minutemen's 87 points. Harris also grabbed eight rebounds in 32 minutes, helping UMass end a five-game losing streak.

UMass freshman Jasmine Watson scored 16 points and grabbed 10 rebounds in her second career double-double in the loss Wednesday.

UM struggles with turnovers

Minutewomen fall to George Washington on Field Trip Day

By Mike Mastone
Collegian Staff

With 2,521 fans filling the lower sections of the Mullins Center for its annual Field Trip Day, the Massachusetts women's basketball team dropped a critical turnover-plagued game to George Washington, 64-54, snapping its three year Field Trip Day winning streak.

UMass	54
GW	64

Much to the displeasure of UMass coach Marnie Dacko, the Minutewomen (7-13, 1-4 Atlantic 10) continued a season-long problem by failing to keep possession of the basketball. George Washington (5-14, 2-4 A-10) easily took advantage of the Minutewomen's mistakes, turning 19 UMass turnovers into 22 points.

"I'm just disappointed with our team, that we're really minus a heart right now," Dacko said. "Our perimeter people turning the ball over, post people not making layups, you combine that and we lose to not a great GW team."

Trailing by 12 with 7:40 remaining, senior Diatiema Hill ignited a quick 10-2 run for UMass with a 3-pointer, which sophomore Nicole Jones followed up with a layup 35 seconds later.

George Washington freshman Megan Nipe hit a layup with 5:30 remaining to give the Colonials a 51-42 lead, but UMass senior Kim Benton responded with a 3-pointer. Jones capped off the run with another layup, cutting the George Washington lead to four with just under three and a half minutes remaining.

However, the run proved to come too late. The Colonials scored the game's next six points and made seven-of-eight free throws down the stretch to lock up the victory.

UMass led the game through the first seven minutes, leading by as many as four points. Redshirt junior Megan Zullo knocked down two 3-pointers during that span, with Benton also contributing a basket from beyond the arc.

However, at the 10:59 mark, George Washington sophomore

See MINUTEWOMEN on page 6

Sophomore Kristina Danella, who leads the Minutewomen this season in points, scored one point in 17 minutes of play in a losing effort.

Coaching staff not counting injuries as excuses

By Neil Carroll
Collegian Staff

After a 10-point loss on Wednesday afternoon to George Washington, the Massachusetts women's basketball team did not get any sympathy from its coaching staff.

"We have injuries," UMass coach Marnie Dacko said after the game. "But we've got to step it up in spite of our injuries in order to put it together."

The 64-54 loss to the Colonials (5-14, 2-4 Atlantic-10) was one of the team's toughest losses of the year and dropped the Minutewomen (7-13, 1-4 A-10) out of the top 10 teams in the A-10, but also sent a message to the team.

"It definitely hurts," UMass' Jasmine Watson said after the loss. "I think this game was a wake-up call."

UMass has now not won a home game since Nov. 22 against Villanova, the team's fourth game of the season. Now halfway through the 2009-2010 campaign, the Minutewomen are struggling to stay afloat because of injuries and inconsistencies.

"[The loss] is a tough one, but we have to come back and band together as a team," Megan Zullo said.

After the loss, the attitude around the UMass locker room was one of remorse and regret, but after a 25-minute post-game talk between coaches and players, the Minutewomen will have to rebound in order to save their A-10 season.

Tough love

Although Watson finished with 16 points, 10 rebounds and three steals, the second double-double of her career, the freshman was not satisfied with her statistics because of the loss.

"I feel like I played hard, but at times I didn't give enough for my team," Watson said of her performance. "Offensively, I might have hit some shots from open passes but I didn't do all I could on defense, which is really eating at me now."

The forward was consistently able to get past her defenders, but struggled at times to finish close to the hoop. Coming into the game, Watson was shooting 71 percent from the free-throw line, but finished Wednesday's game 4-of-8 from the charity stripe.

Dacko thought that while Watson did finish as the team's leading scorer, she should have done more.

"I would like to see [Jasmine Watson] finish up with 25 points," Dacko said of the forward. "There are no excuses right now. We're midway through the season, freshman or no freshman, she's getting the minutes and she has to be able to put the ball in the basket.

"It's kind of like tough love," Dacko said. "We're getting great position down low, and with the balls coming in down low, you have to finish."

Fundamentals

The Minutewomen came into the game second in the A-10 in free-throw percentage, shooting 76 percent on the season.

On Wednesday, however, UMass struggled to convert from the foul-line late in the game. Meanwhile, George Washington, who came into the contest shooting 63 percent from the foul-line, shot 12-of-14 and was able to fend off a UMass comeback.

"You have to make your free-throws," Dacko said. "We were one of the better free-throw shooting teams in the conference, and you have got to step it up and knock it down from the [foul] line."

Dacko was also disappointed with the way her team lost its composure in the second half. The rhythm of the team was disrupted when Kristina Danella was called for a technical foul halfway through the second half.

"I'm disappointed that we're not playing as a unit right now," Dacko said. "When you have Danella getting a technical foul, that is playing selfish. That is not playing team basketball."

Neil Carroll can be reached at nacarroll@student.umass.edu.

After his worst performance of the season against Boston University in the second game of the season series, goaltender Paul Dainton has helped the Minutemen win four of U Mass' last five contests.

UMass must win back-to-back games to claim both season series

By Jay Asser
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts hockey team will seek revenge and will attempt to claim the rubber match of series against Hockey East opponents Boston University and Providence this weekend.

Both the Terriers (8-11-3, 6-9-2 HEA) and Friars (9-13-1, 4-11-1 HEA) handed the No. 15 Minutemen (15-9-0, 10-7-0 HEA) losses in their last matchup after UMass got the better of both teams in the first meeting.

After defeating then-No. 2 BU, 3-2, in their second game of the season, the Minutemen had one of their worst performances of the year in a 7-3 loss to the Terriers. Though UMass scored three power-play goals in the contest, BU equaled the amount in half the chances (six). Goaltender Paul Dainton had his worst performance, giving up six scores while making 22 saves.

Since that game, the junior has played well and was a major factor in a four-game winning streak for the Minutemen prior to their loss to Vermont.

UMass coach Don Cahoon realizes his team was out-played and physically beaten by the Terriers in their last meeting, but feels they are playing much better of late.

"The difference in the last BU game and the first game was the physicality," Cahoon said. "They physi-

See HOCKEY on page 6

the daily collegian

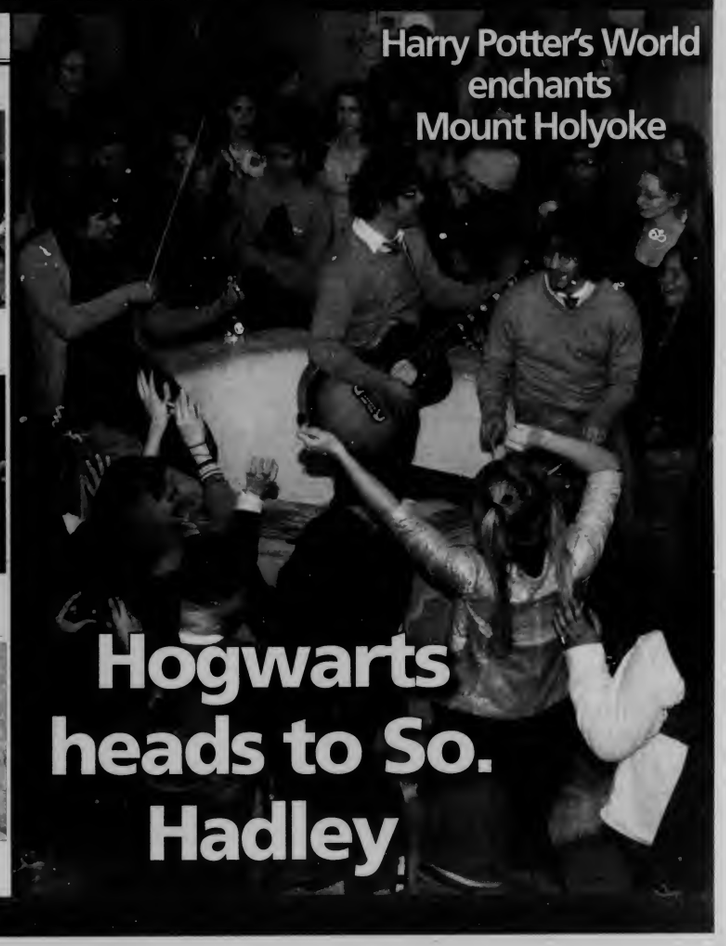
NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM JANUARY 29, 2010

inside this issue:

Facing the 49ers

SEE PAGE 13

Git-R-Done!



SEE PAGE 7

New Dirt

SEE PAGE 3

Harry Potter's World enchants Mount Holyoke

Hogwarts heads to So. Hadley

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN

CXX
ISSUE 9

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief William McGuinness
Managing Editor Matt Rocheleau
Managing Web Editor S P Sullivan
Business Manager Daniel Jette
Production Manager Michael Sarkies
Night Supervisor Kirsten Swenson
Advertising Manager Michael Tortorici
Advertising Production Amanda Johnson
Arts & Living Editor Shayna Murphy
Comics Editor Andrew Wittis
Editorial Editor Alyssa Creamer
News Editor Nick Bush
Sports Editor Jeffrey R. Lanilard
Photo Editor Matthew Harrison
IT Manager Victor Jacek
Asst. Business Manager Matt Zolnierz
Assistant Advertising Nicole Jacinto
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Distribution Manager Norman Prowost
Classified Manager Kateiyn Tamillo
Asst. Arts & Living Justin Gagnon
Asst. Arts & Living Elyse Horowitz
Asst. Arts & Living Cal Scannell
Assistant Editorial Benjamin Moriarty
Assistant Editorial Michael Phillis
Assistant Editorial Matthew M. Robare
Assistant News Samuel Butterfield
Assistant News Chris Shores
Assistant News Jenn Heshion
Assistant Sports Jay Asser
Assistant Sports David Brinch
Assistant Sports Adam Miller
Assistant Photo Maxwell Sparr
Assistant Photo Samantha Webber
Assistant Multimedia Sara Cody
Asusstant Multimedia Pete Rizzo

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE. BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914, AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
ON STAFF TODAY

NIGHT EDITOR
NICK BUSH

COPY EDITOR
ELIZABETH TRAN

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
MICHELLE ABBASCIANO

Potter-palooza

Harry Potter's World exhibit casts a spell on Mount Holyoke Thurs.

By Phoebe Glick and Michelle Williams
Collegian Staff

Thursday night at 7 p.m., Mount Holyoke College opened it doors to witches and wizards alike, dressed in their finest spellbinding garb. Upon entering, the atmosphere was filled with a deep, cavernous hall packed with a loud and bubbly audience, clearly brimming with anticipation of a truly magical night.

This was the opening party for a new exhibit – Harry Potter's World: Renaissance Science, Magic, and Medicine. Held in Williston Library Court surrounded by gothic architecture at Mount Holyoke, with its quintessentially enchanting stone buildings and generally mystical ambiance, the setting felt like a real-life replica of the Hogwarts castle.

"I think it's great," said Johanna Rogers, a freshman at Mount Holyoke, of the spectacle. "I heard about the event through advertisements on Facebook, and I was excited for weeks."

Another Mount Holyoke student, Lisaurel Winfree, dressed as a Gryffindor student for the night's events, "I actually just found out about this a couple of nights ago, so I threw this together. Everyone was getting really into dressing up."

The Party featured an acoustic performance from Harry and the Potters, an indie rock band from Norwood, Mass., which categorizes its music as "wizard rock." The two brothers who make up the band looked, perhaps intentionally, like good-natured fifteen- year-old boys, dressed in white oxford shirts and wearing gold and maroon striped ties, much like the fabled uniform of Hogwarts. The crowd was mesmerized, as they loudly chanted their Harry Potter series-inspired lyrics.

One of the brothers, Joe DeGeorge, spoke as though he were Harry Potter himself about the group's lyrics. "This is about a book I met in my sixth year." The chorus of the lyrics included the lines "this book is awesome, I can become a Potions King." Another song about Ginny Weasley included the lyrics "Are you petrified of being petrified?"

Though Harry and the Potters was able to excite the crowd, Caitlin Utter, a student at Mount Holyoke felt the duo were less than wizards when it came to music.

"I mean, they're pretty funny to watch perform, but I think one of them forgot the lyrics at one point and that's why he asked the crowd to sing along," she said.

The Potter World opening night also featured a costume contest, with categories ranging from Best Witch or Wizard to Best Death Eater and Best Magical Creature. Each winner was rewarded with a prize from the school.

A woman wearing a pig nose and holding a wand acted as the Master of Ceremonies for the night. As she announced the Best Witch category, a small group of girls wandered timidly to the stage. The microphone was passed through the line of contestants as they introduced themselves. Costumes included Luna Lovegood, Tonks, Cho Chang, and two Hermiones, one of whom was only eight-years-old. The winners were judged based on the volume the crowd reached as their name was called. The eight-year-old Hermione won by a landslide.

After the costume contest, Harry and the Potters took the stage once more. They ended the night with a lullaby about the tender relationship between Harry and his mentor Dumbledore. As they chanted "Dumbledore will fight for you tonight," the crowd erupted into applause.

Mount Holyoke's Williston Library Court was one of 12 libraries nationwide selected by the American Library Association Public Programs Office to host the Potter-palooza. The American Library Association partnered with The National Library of Medicine to create a traveling version of the exhibit to send to each library.

Nora Mariano, the curator of primary sources at Mount Holyoke, spoke on why her school was chosen.

See POTTER on page 4

MATTHEW HARRISON-COLLEGIAN

One lucky muggle went home happy Thursday, winning Best Witch at Harry Potter's World.

MATTHEW HARRISON-COLLEGIAN

Students look on excitedly during a costume contest Thursday night to crown such important champions as "Best Witch" at the Harry Potter's World exhibition at Mount Holyoke College in South Hadley.

From concrete jungle to urban oasis

Southwest gets green clean-up

By Chelsea Whitton
Collegian Staff

The Southwest residence area of the University of Massachusetts has been called the concrete jungle by students for years, but that wilderness is now planned to turn from barren cityscape to college metropolis, ripe with vegetation.

Trees and plants will bloom in Southwest starting in June, marking the beginning of planned new aesthetics for the largest residential area on campus. The Southwest outdoor concourse will be landscaped with various trees, pathways, plants and new ground materials to create a fresh environment, making it similar to the greener residential areas on campus.

The $12 million project, funded by state bonds, is being directed by Bruce Thomas of the University of Massachusetts and the Stephen Stimson Associates, Landscape Architects of Falmouth, Mass.

Thomas said he hopes the final results of the concourse will be a more visually pleasing, environmentally sustainable Southwest. He said he hopes "to improve the tired plant materials and hardscape, to create a more contemporary and sustainable environment that embodies the Pioneer Valley, to create user friendly spaces and to install a landscape as a classroom."

Southwest houses 5,000 students in 16 buildings, including five towers, each reaching over 20 floors. There are also 11 low-rise buildings in the residential area. The project's planners hope the low-rises will provide a greener view of campus for the fall of 2010. Though the current concrete standing buildings will stay intact, new lush gardens and plants will give way to what the planners believe will be a new appreciation for nature in an urban environment.

The new concourse landscape is expected to be complete by the end of the upcoming summer. Thomas stated he feels students will come to appreciate the setting of Southwest more and enjoy their surroundings to a greater extent than Southwest currently facilitates.

"It's a nicer environment to live and learn. It is about the quality of life in Southwest," he said. "Southwest is getting old and tired, it's just plants and trees that will revitalize."

The Berkshire Dining Commons has a poster on display depicting the landscaping plans, though word about the upcoming renovations has not been widely discussed.

Annie Oakman, a UMass freshman and Melville resident, said she believes the new nature will help make Southwest a more appealing spot.

"I think it'll help Southwest right now, it will be appealing to prospective students," she said.

Anastasia Zolides a freshman Patterson resident said she feels the development will alleviate what she sees as Southwest's current sparseness.

"With new vegetation it will be more welcoming," she said. "It's barren right now, it will make it feel more clean."

Sam Billings, a UMass student who researched the concourse for a sustainable agriculture project last semester was at first skeptical of the amount of money being used to update Southwest. After studying the plans, however, he believes the renovations will realistically improve quality of life for students in Southwest.

"Southwest has so much concrete and brick everywhere," he said. "After living there for five semesters, I know how dreary, windy and brutally cold or hot it can be depending on the season. Aside from aesthetics, which is enormously overlooked when considering quality of life, the trees and infrastructure will help break up the wind, and thereby the cold in the winter and provide shade in summer."

Billings said he wishes there had been more opportunity for student involvement in the development.

"The students should be involved, they're going to be the ones living there, and I know so many that know an awful lot about planting and growing food," he said. "However, since the project is in the summer, and the university has a professional crew prepared, I don't think that will be much of an option - especially since there are strict time requirements."

Billings described how he felt student involvement could have been incorporated in the project. "With $12 million, one would like to imagine that as an agricultural school, some agricultural, horticultural, permacultural, pharmacultural students and or faculty could have been involved in producing some low-maintenance food [with vegetation]."

The project was initiated in Nov., 2008. Most Southwest residents will not see the progress this summer, but in the fall semester there will be major changes and improvements for the Southwest area and prospective students.

Chelsea Whitton can be reached at cwhitton@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY UMASS.EDU

Renovations to the Southwest residence area aimed at beautifying the aesthetically imposing, city-like corner of campus include planting trees, creating new pathways, and utilizing new ground materials to help residents appreciate their surroundings more.

The Daily Collegian wants ... YOU

The Collegian is currently looking for a business correspondent.

Do you have what it takes? Contact Nick Bush at news@dailycollegian.com

CINEMARK
For advance tickets & showtimes visit
cinemark.com
or call 1-800-FANDANGO + Exp Code 1118#
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
FIRST MATINEE SHOWTIME (7 DAYS A WEEK) $5.00
ADULT MATINEE BEFORE 6PM $6.25 • STUDENT $7.00 (WITH ID)

AVATAR - REAL D 3D ($2.75 SURCHARGE) [PG13] 110 440 810
◆ EDGE OF DARKNESS [R] 150 440 725 1015
◆ WHEN IN ROME [PG13] 155 445 740 1005
◆ EXTRAORDINARY MEASURES [PG] 115 415 720 1005
◆ LEGION [R] 135 445 730 1015
◆ TOOTH FAIRY [PG] 125 420 650 930
ALVIN AND THE CHIPMUNKS: THE SQUEAKQUEL [PG] 425 915
IT'S COMPLICATED [R] 130 450 735 1020
SHERLOCK HOLMES [PG13] 105 405 705 1010
THE BOOK OF ELI [R] 120 410 710 955
THE LOVELY BONES [PG13] 100 400 700 1000
THE SPY NEXT DOOR [PG] 145 655
UP IN THE AIR [R] 140 430 715 955
◆ NO PASSES-NO CLASSIC SUPERSAVERS

Amherst prepares for Town Meeting

Nominations due by Feb. 2

By Michelle Williams
Collegian Staff

Although Amherst's demographics have more than 50 percent of residents falling between the ages of 18 and 24, this overrepresented population bloc is underrepresented in one place that counts: Amherst's 240 Town Meeting members.

This March, Amherst will be holding Town Meeting member elections.

A Town Meeting member is an elected member of the community, one of 240 from the town's ten precincts. These members are allowed to attend the biannual Town Meetings. At such meetings, issues including zoning bylaws and town funding are discussed.

Town Meetings can also result in new developments in town bylaws. As a result of a 2009 Town Meeting more than four unrelated persons were banned from living together last spring.

In a community where more than half the population is between younger than 24, surprisingly there is only one Town Meeting Member in this category. That member, Daniel Melick, an alumnus of the University of Massachusetts, hopes this representation will change.

"A lot of the laws that the town deals with affect students, and upset them," Melick said. "I want to see them represented at the town meetings."

According to Amherst's Town Clerk's office, all are invited to run for the position of Town Meeting member, a position that currently has 80 full-term seats up for election, as well as many more partial term seats. A full term is three years, while a partial seat is one or two years.

Any person registered to vote in Amherst can seek election. Nomination papers, available at the Town Clerk's office, require at least one signature of a registered voter of the precinct from which they are running. This one signature can be that of the candidate running. The nomination papers must be filled out quickly, though, as the deadline is Feb. 2 at 5 p.m.

At Town Meetings, members discuss warrants, or issues that citizens have brought to the legislative body.

"The time commitment is minimal. Each session starts at 7:30 at night and lasts for about two hours" Melick said. "Since my own election last May I think I've been to ten meetings and spent maybe 20-30 hours on Town Meeting related work."

According to Melick, this spring, he plans to bring a revision to the current housing ban on having more than four unrelated persons living in the same house.

"I plan to bring an amendment to the meeting," said Melick, "yet without backing, it won't pass."

For more information on how to run for Town Meeting member, contact the Town Clerk's office by calling 413-259-3035 or by e-mail: townclerk@amherstma.gov.

Michelle Williams can be reached for comment at mnwillia@student.umass.edu.

Collegian File Photo

Amherst voters will go to the polls March 23 to elect Town Meeting members. Nomination forms to become a member are due by Feb. 2 at 5 p.m. in the Town Clerk's office.

A magical evening at Mount Holyoke

POTTER from page 2

"The libraries chosen had to fulfill certain criteria," she said. "Mount Holyoke was at an advantage because of the gothic look, appearing much like a building out of Hogwarts. The staircases are stone and cavernous. Also, Mount Holyoke has a strong Renaissance Science department."

Jennifer Gunter King, head of archives and special collections at Mount Holyoke, elaborated on what strokes of the wand it took to bring Hogwarts to Mount Holyoke.

"The planning of the event began the spring of 2009," she said. "We hope to see many students, faculty and staff in the first-glimpse of the exhibit."

The exhibit focuses on the connections between Harry Potter's world and links to Renaissance practices, thinkers, and lore. Though the books are fiction, parts of J.K. Rowling's stories are based on traditions of the Renaissance. Traditions such as alchemy, astrology, and philosophy are present in the novels. Mount Holyoke plans to explore the Renaissance history tie-in through primary source. Hosting a seven-part series, the college will explore ethical issues including the desire for knowledge, the responsibility that comes with power, and effects that prejudice has.

The exhibition is free and open to the public. Along with the main exhibit will be other features. This weekend and next weekend, the Abbey Chapel will host a choral performance from Michael Maier's Atalanta Fugiens. Maier was a German alchemist, and the choir will be adapting his Atalanta Fugiens, a published book that held images, poems and fifty pieces of music.

In late February, Associate Professor of Chemistry W. Donald Cotter will be hosting a lecture titled "Alchemy and the Progressive Imagination at Mount Holyoke, 1912." He will speak on the impact of alchemy on progressive and modern chemistry. Other features require early registration. In February will be two Harry Potter Book Discussions. The event is free but requires early registration.

The exhibit will be on display at Mount Holyoke beginning Thursday, Jan. 28 and running through Friday, Feb. 26.

Michelle Williams can be reached at mnwillia@student.umass.edu. Phoebe Glick can be reached at pglick@student.umass.edu.

Matthew Harrison/Collegian

Norwood, Mass. natives Harry and the Potters brought their unique brand of wizard rock to Mount Holyoke Thursday as part of the Harry Potter's World exhibition.

editorial&opinion

"FREE SPEECH IS THE WHOLE THING. THE WHOLE BALL GAME. FREE SPEECH IS LIFE ITSELF." – SIR SALMAN RUSHDIE

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Ben Bernanke wrong person to run Fed

Kevin Gallagher

As the Senate voted to raise the federal debt ceiling to $14.3 trillion and President Obama prepared to deliver his State of the Union address, Federal Reserve Chairman Ben Bernanke was voted into a second term yesterday. Despite Senators on both sides of the aisle pledging to block his reconfirmation, Bernanke won another four years in the position, having been previously appointed by George W. Bush.

The issue of the Fed's independence has long been contentious among political observers in and out of Washington. Since its creation in 1913, the Fed has controlled the nation's money supply without oversight from Congress. In 1978 it received a dual mandate from Congress to combat unemployment and inflation.

The Fed's critics associate Bernanke's reign with an era of easy money and low interest rates, which fueled speculation in the housing bubble. His supporters, such as the president, claim he was given a tough job and has instituted policies that averted a lengthy depression. At a hearing last year, Bernanke himself sympathized with public outrage over out-of-control spending, expressing his anger at the AIG bailout. But to many he is seen as continuing the legacy of Alan Greenspan, whose confidence prior to the recession forced Greenspan to admit that he had overlooked a "flaw" in our economic system.

Bureaucrats at the Treasury and Federal Reserve defended their unprecedented actions with the "systemic risk" and "too big to fail" arguments, but they failed to recognize what got us here.

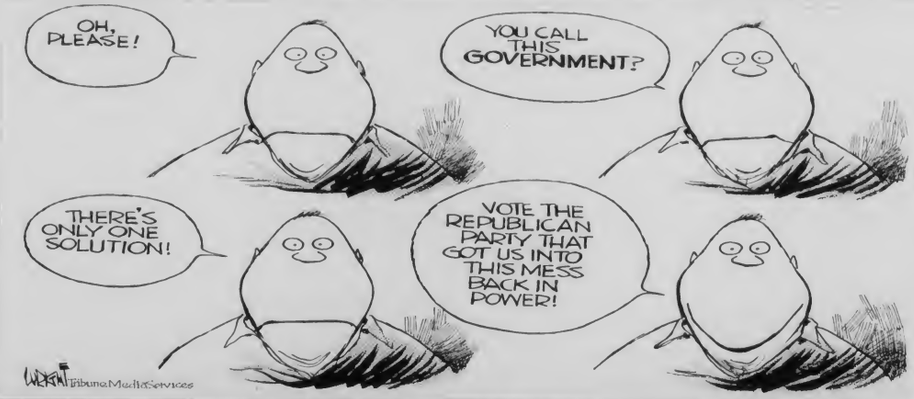
It is without question that we lived beyond our means and borrowed excessively in past decades, with only the illusion of wealth. Sooner or later, a market correction has to occur, despite propping up toxic assets and reinflating the bubble with easy money. Bernanke's academic expertise was the Great Depression, so he should know this.

It is without question that we lived beyond our means and borrowed excessively in past decades, with only the illusion of wealth.

The Austrian School of economics has a theory of the business cycle which explains how artificially low interest rates cause excessive credit and speculative bubbles. The fault that is attributed by this administration to a failure of capitalism or the greedy risk-taking of private banks is more accurately ascribed to the larger force operating behind the scenes, the Federal Reserve. While we should not expect any change in direction from them, fortunately Obama has recently proposed something called the "Volcker rule" which would prohibit commercial banks from owning hedge funds or private-equity firms.

This corrects one of the mistakes that led to the economic crisis - the repeal of Glass-Steagall in 1998. Investors hope the Fed will pursue a sound exit strategy from intervention, eventually raising rates and ending the practice of quantitative easing.

But more decisive measures are needed. Last year, Congressman Ron Paul introduced a bill intended to audit the Federal Reserve, which by now has picked up 317 co-sponsors and bipartisan support.



In particular, the audit is aimed at finding out what kind of agreements the Fed has with foreign central banks, as much of the Fed's most crucial actions are shrouded in secrecy. It is true that since the economic crisis, the Fed has expanded their balance sheet to over $2 trillion. Movements like "End the Fed" coincide with the Tea Party protests and increasing anti-government sentiment as a reaction to deficits and spending in Washington.

The bill's opponents have charged that giving Congress more oversight over the Fed would interfere with the ideal independence of monetary policy from political influence. Supporters responded that, just as the Fed releases the minutes of their meetings months later, that Congress should only be allowed to review decisions in retrospect, and that the proposed audit is not intended to influence or politicize monetary policy.

Many of the founding fathers, including Thomas Jefferson, presciently warned about the dangers of central banks. The Federal Reserve is controversial today for the same reasons that the Second and First Banks of the United States were. Fiat, or paper money, is only money because the government declares it to be, and is not tied to any commodity like silver or gold. We owe that to the breakdown of the Bretton Woods system in 1971.

While the Fed's creation was intended to prevent bank runs and investor uncertainty, they have given us only assurances that they will continue to print money recklessly. There is a concrete question of moral hazard in the trend of bailouts, a risk of future inflation and rising unemployment, and meanwhile the central bankers seem to have forgotten about fiscal restraint - adopting instead whichever stance is most convenient for their buddies on Wall Street. Until we can know what they are doing with our tax dollars, we should not put any faith into the central bankers' ability to manage the economy.

Kevin Gallagher is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at kmgallh@student.umass.edu

POINT-COUNTER-POINT

"Freedom rings where opinions clash." - Adlai E. Stevenson

Town vs gown: Does bylaw go too far?

Communication needed

Eli Gottlieb

Over the past year we've heard a lot about the Amherst town bylaw that disallows a group of more than four unrelated people from living in a single house together. We've heard that it makes some college students homeless, that it has been used selectively to target a single house full of young women and that it constitutes another volley in the never-ending battle between "us" students and "them" townies. After all, if a student rents a portion of a house they ought to have the right to live in the space for which they paid, and if the townies don't like living next to students who perhaps have some friends over on Friday and Saturday nights they can talk to the landlord. Right?

That's what I knew about the subject, until I went to the town planning office to investigate. Unfortunately, our initial conception is not exactly right. The situation actually has far more complexity than a simple conception of renters' or students' rights set, against old townies' desires could portray.

Before we can go further in our discussion of the 'Four-Renter Bylaw,' we need to establish some basic facts and context.

Before we can go further in our discussion of the 'Four-Renter Bylaw,' we need to establish some basic facts and context. This bylaw governs the definition of a "family" with respect to state law on how many people can live in a single "dwelling unit" of permanent or semi-permanent residential housing. It doesn't apply to dormitories, hotels, apartment buildings or hostels, of course, because such mass housing obtains specific zoning permits from the town so as to put it where it can thrive best in the community. A "dwelling unit" refers specifically to a space consisting of a functioning kitchen, a functioning bathroom, and additional living space (such as a living room, bedroom, etc.). Since in Amherst we don't actually have that many specifically-zoned apartment buildings outside of the North Apartments on campus, this bylaw refers to houses that are rented out to groups of students, houses divided into apartments and rented to students or townhouses.

This bylaw has existed for decades, and in fact at least one previous attempt was made to change it on behalf of students in 1991. It is legal and constitutional, and every time students have taken the initiative to have it changed the Amherst community has erupted in backlash against the initiative. Other college towns – such as Northampton, Mass., Fairfield, Conn., and Oneonta, N.Y. have similar laws, and these bylaws exist for a specific purpose.

The community is responsible for maintaining standards of health and sanitation throughout their neighborhoods, and this bylaw exists because college students usually don't rent long-term enough to actually integrate into the neighborhood and develop a rapport with the other residents. It's sad, but without some sense of connection many college students really do cause incredible noise issues. If you don't believe me, just try going to the Townhouses or Hobart Street in North Amherst on a Friday night. If I was married with kids, I wouldn't want to live around that myself. Of course, it doesn't help that college kids throwing parties never invite their non-student neighbors, and it actively hurts the situation that landlords live far away from the students living in their property, out of the reach of neighbors' complaints.

On the other hand, we students really shouldn't need to fight for our right to party, but changing a town bylaw meant to prevent over-renting of housing space won't actually help with that. The fundamental limits on the right to party remain the drinking age, sin taxes on alcohol and the illegality of marijuana.

If we want the fight for throwing our hands in the air like we just don't care, we ought to focus on those issues, closer to the core of things.

Live and let live together

Nick Milano

Two years ago, the Boston Zoning Commission, with strong support from the Boston City Council, Mayor's Office and many college officials, limited the number of college students who could live together off-campus. University of Massachusetts and Amherst College students need to speak up, to overturn the same kind of limit in the town of Amherst. This is just another case of town residents picking on college students who respect their property, pay rent on time and are not responsible for out of hand parties.

There are few ways for students to fight for equal rights.

Moving off campus usually makes college cheaper. By forcing students back to dorms, the effect will be two-fold. First: housing choices will be even further limited – are there even any upper classmen left in Southwest? Second, it will continue to put a dent in too many students' wallets. Living off campus is cheaper, by far. For myself and my five other housemates (don't try to run us out – we technically have two apartments), paying a 12-month rent along with the costs of cable, electricity and heat, is much cheaper than having to live on campus and having to pay to use the Dining Commons.

The main reason why students agree to cram into poorly constructed and old college houses is that the cost of rent is already too high. What used to be seven of us paying a $2000 a month rent was a great deal – we made out. Try forcing that onto just five or even fewer students. Utilities will obviously cost more as a result, as there are fewer residents to spread the damage around. This is the other glaring problem with trying to dictate the number of students who can live in one house. If students agree to live in a newly-refurbished house in the center of town and pay over $2000 a month, that is their choice to make. The vast majority of us, however, end up in older houses with more problems and which are farther from town and our classes.

The determining factor for Boston to legislate the hard limit of four students to a house was that the powers-that-be decided that all houses with many residents must be party houses. In Amherst, we can laugh at that because we know that all houses are Party Houses. It is obvious that quiet students are punished unfairly and lumped in with the rest of the guilty partiers. The town's ability to declare problem houses is a fair one – as much as many of us may hate it – but this rule should not be mistaken for the ability to summarily declare everyone guilty. Sure, houses with many residents like to throw parties, but so do houses with just a few. And that works in reverse as well. There are too many innocent UMass students who are guilty of nothing but being superb students.

If there is no way to overturn such a law (and unlike Boston, enforced), then the town of Amherst needs to throw a couple of bones to the college students who allow it to thrive and grow. Amherst would not be nationally recognized without UMass and Amherst College. In fact, who would know the first thing about Amherst without these two marvelous institutions, except that it wants the prisoners at Guantanamo Bay to move in, probably to replace us students.

So first, I ask the town of Amherst, a law must be passed that all walls in all off-campus college houses be more than quarter-inch drywall. When mice can literally raise their paw and punch (and I have seen this happen) a hole in the side of a house, there's a problem. When insulation is dirt cheap, there's a problem. When baseboard heaters are entirely exposed, there's a problem. Having been to my fair share of houses in the area, this list could continue to grow indefinitely. My housemates and I are lucky to have a good house whose maintenance crew responds as soon as possible – is everyone this lucky?

The town of Amherst was able to pass a housing restriction because it is surely popular among its residents. Who would want to live next door to punk, dirty, loud and annoying college students when a nice quiet family with two children and a cute dog can move in? There are few ways for students to fight for equal rights. We may be invited to the town meetings, but this fact is not advertised. This problem could be rectified by bringing town discussions either to UMass or to social-networking tools, but until then, students have very little voice.

If Boston's housing limit is not even being enforced in such an overcrowded city, there is no place for it in the incredibly vibrant college town of Amherst. Sure, in the quaint Amherst of too many people's fantasies, there is no place for college students, but we students are not going anywhere. Without concessions from every single landlord in this town, inflicting such an unnecessary and ill-founded law upon us was unfair, an abuse of power and senseless.

Eli Gottlieb is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at egottlie@student.umass.edu.

Nick Milano is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at nmilano@student.umass.edu.

arts&living

Larry the Cable guy "Gits-R-Done" in latest comedy special due Sunday

COURTESY MYSPACE.COM

Daniel Lawrence Whitney will release a DVD of his latest comedy appearance on Sunday. The show took place this past July 4, the proceeds from which went to his charity foundation, Git-R-Done. The foundation is in the process of developing a rehabilitation center for children with brain injuries.

By Brendan Murphy
Collegian Correspondent

Whether you like his brand of humor or not, there's no denying that Larry the Cable Guy is one of the hottest comedians around. Daniel Lawrence Whitney, better known as Larry the Cable Guy sells out nearly every venue at which he performs, and his newest special, "Tailgate Party," is no exception.

The special, which airs on Comedy Central at 9 p.m. on Sunday, was performed in front of an audience of more than 50,000 people at Memorial Stadium in Lincoln, Nebraska. He wanted to give a little something back to his loyal fan base, so he set ticket prices at the unprecedented low price of $4/ticket. In addition to being a wildly popular comedian, he is also a philanthropist. He is the founder and figurehead of his own charity, the Git-R-Done foundation. All proceeds from the show went to his foundation. This week, the Massachusetts Daily Collegian got a chance to pick Larry's brain on his upcoming special, his charity, making movies and what's on the horizon for this shining star.

It's no secret that he draws the bulk of his popular support primarily from the South and the Midwest. Whitney was born and bred in Pawnee City, Nebraska. When asked how it was performing for a Midwest fan base in his home state he explains, "It was an amazing experience that I'll never forget. I originally thought it was going to suck, but we ended up selling out the stadium. Three days after we opened up the tickets to the general public, we had sold 37,000. We actually had to add another section to accommodate 53,000 people. It seemed like all of Nebraska came out for me. The show went off without a hitch. It was a blast."

What stands out the most about his show, is the fact that he made the ticket prices so low. To go and see a similarly popular comedian like Jerry Seinfeld, seats would run about $200 a pop in the nosebleed section. But Whitney had a different idea behind his show's $4 seats.

"The economy was in the tank last summer and a lot of people were depressed. It was a 4th of July show so it just made sense to make tickets 4 bucks apiece. I wanted to give something back to the place where I grew up. I didn't want to take any money either for putting on this kind of performance. All proceeds that we got from the show went straight to the Git-R-Done foundation."

Many charitable efforts often go unnoticed, drowned out in the sea of philanthropic celebrities, it is rare indeed to find a celebrity like Whitney who will create such a budget-friendly performance and donate 100% of profits to a noble cause.

So what exactly does the Git-R-Done foundation do? It has recently donated a whopping $1.2 million in order to develop a new 14-bed children's rehabilitation center within the Madonna Rehabilitation Hospital in Lincoln, Nebraska. The new facility will be named "The Alexis Verzal Children's Rehabilitation Hospital at Madonna" in honor of the 13-month old girl who suffered a brain injury at her daycare center in 2008. It is only one of seven facilities in the country that specialize in

See LARRY THE CABLE GUY on page 8

Cable Guy throws "Tailgate Party"

COURTESY MYSPACE.COM

The actor, who has starred in multiple feature films, hardly expects an Oscar nod for his comedic efforts. However, he has published a bestselling book and received Billboard awards and Grammy nominations for his comedy albums.

LARRY THE CABLE GUY from page 7

brain and spinal injuries for children and infants. In undertaking the project, Whitney draws inspiration from all around.

"Ya know, my fans have been good to me and truly blessed me. I started the foundation in order to help families in need. Every little bit helps. You read about things and you hear things and you wish you could help out. I used to write checks to needy individuals and families, but the government sets limits on how much money you can transfer each year. They start taxing the money, whether it's for charity or not and that's BS. I started the Git-R-Done foundation so I can help those in need without the government dipping their hands into the proceeds."

Nobody can disagree that his heart is in the right place, especially after talking with Whitney. He doesn't give to charity to further his image or because it's fashionable, but rather out of a genuine desire to aid his fans or needy individuals. He recognizes the need to help, both on and off the stage.

Whitney also has starred in a number of feature films, which have gotten mixed reviews from critics. But Whitney has kept his perspective, fully understanding that he wasn't going to be winning any Oscars for "Delta Farce" or "Witless Protection."

When asked about the transition from Comedy Central to the big screen, he explains, "I never thought I would do a movie. The producers came up to me one day after a show and asked 'Wanna do a movie?' Honestly, who wouldn't want to do a movie? Although I don't consider myself an actor, the transition was not hard. And compared to what we had for the budget, overall the movies made money. I don't care what the critics have to say about what I do. I do everything for my fans, and based on the DVD sales, they like what I'm doing."

Whitney identifies strongly as a comedian, and admits that his movies weren't meant to clean up at the Oscars; he just wanted to make his fans happy and make people laugh.

As Larry the Cable Guy, Whitney has won awards from Billboard, published a bestselling book and received two Grammy nominations for his comedy albums. He has also been nominated for 4 Razzie awards.

Whether you love him or you hate him, he is one of the most popular comedians around right now, and has twice been named to the Forbes "Celebrity 100" list.

Larry the Cable Guy has the world by the balls, and his star is not fading anytime soon. Catch Larry the Cable Guy's "Tailgate Party" on Comedy Central at 9 p.m. Sunday.

Brendan Murphy can be reached at brendanm@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY MYSPACE.COM

Whitney, who hails from Pawnee City, Nebraska, describes his experience playing in his home state as "amazing." The $4 tickets sold out in just a few days.

"Fab" Beatles cover band plays FAC

COURTESY MYSPACE.COM

Down to their costumes, members of Rain, a Beatles tribute band, hit the perfect pitch in terms of replicating performaces by the legendary Fab Four. The band played this week at the Fine Arts Center to an older crowd, drew material from the Beatles' appearance on the Ed Sullivan show and other notable concerts.

By Lindsey Orlov
Collegian Staff

On any list of the most famous and successful musical performers of the 20th century, the Beatles undoubtedly make an appearance near (if not at) the top. Their presence in the musical history of the world can be described as iconic, to say the least—so iconic, in fact, that their music has spawned a multitude of cover bands. While many popular rock bands have cover bands to celebrate their legacy, very few can claim a cover band as professional and authentic as Rain. Rain's act, however, easily transcends cover band status, just as the Beatles transcend average popular music. As their full title suggests, is a stunning tribute to everything the Beatles stood for, musically, socially and politically.

Rain began its life in Los Angeles as a small-time Beatles cover band known as "Reign." In 1979 they rose to fame when Dick Clark hired them to record the soundtrack for the made-for-television movie "Birth of the Beatles," according to Rain's Web site (www.Raintribute.com). Because of Rain's long history and extensive touring schedule, they have a rotation of talented musicians. Performing at the Mullins Center on Tuesday were David Leon on vocals, rhythm guitar, piano and harmonica; Graham Alexander on vocals, bass, piano and guitar; Tom Teeley on vocals and lead guitar; Ralph Castelli on drums, percussion and vocals; and Mark Lewis on offstage keyboard and percussion.

At first glance, the Rain stage setup in the Mullins Center was simple: a drum set on an elevated platform emblazoned with the word Rain and a few guitars placed around the platform, with four large, white arrows, tilted for the audience to see, placed on the edges of the stage pointing in towards the microphones stands. Three movie screens had been put in strategic locations, one to either side of the stage and a larger one as a backdrop to the performance area. In the half hour before the show, these screens showed a rotation of quiz questions about the Beatles, set to a kaleidoscope background of psychedelic colors.

A soundtrack of music from the 50s and 60s played from the speakers. The audience, whose median age appeared to be somewhere between 45 and 55, exclaimed and cheered as the answers followed the questions on the screen: who was the Beatles' manager (Brian Epstein), which Beatles member got married first (John). By the time the lights went down, everyone in the audience was in the mindset for the trip back in time that Rain was about the deliver.

The first half of the show began with a reenactment of the Beatles' first appearance on The Ed Sullivan Show. Rain took the stage dressed as the Fab Four looked in 1964, with mop-top haircuts and beige suits. Simultaneously, the two screens to the sides of the stage played footage of the original Ed Sullivan Beatles performance, while the backdrop screen showed footage of screaming teenage girls from the Ed Sullivan audience. The resemblance between the real-life performance and the footage of the original was more than striking; Rain mimicked the Beatles with each tap of the foot and tilt of the head, as well as with the stunning accuracy of their musical performance, playing crowd favorites such as "A Hard Day's Night" and "All My Loving," and even getting the audience to sing along to a rendition of "Yesterday." Rain repeated their mimicking act with a reenactment of the Beatles' 1965 Shea Stadium concert. Some of the songs they played included "I Feel Fine" and "Daytripper."

Once the reenactments had ended, Rain changed into slightly groovier costumes from the album cover of "Sergeant Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band" and performed numbers such as "With A Little Help From My Friends," "Strawberry Fields Forever" and "When I'm 64." After a brief intermission, Rain barreled through classics like "Penny Lane," "This Bird Has Flown Norwegian Wood," "Come Together" and "Blackbird" with high energy and bright, colorful accompanying visuals on the screens. Like any good performance, Rain saved the best for last: they finished the concert with an encore of "Imagine," "Let It Be" and "Hey Jude." By the end of the show, the entire audience was on their feet, waving cell phones and the occasional lighter in sync with the music.

Although Rain imitated the Beatles to the best of their prodigious musical and acting abilities, at the same time they remained Rain, never letting the audience forget that their show was a tribute. That, on top of the high quality of the rest of their performance, is what gives them their remarkable reputation as a top-notch musical act.

Lindsey Orlov can be reached at lorlov@student.umass.edu

Local guitar guru plays ABC

JOSH KELLOGG/COLLEGIAN

John Sheldon kicked off the "Masters of the Stratocaster" series last night at the Amherst Brewing Company. He will continue to perform on Thursdays in the downstairs lounge.

Iron Horse to host Americana Punk

COURTESY MYSPACE.COM

Tim Eriksen, former frontman of Cordelia's dad and Pioneer Valley native will perform tonight at the Iron Horse Music Hall. He is reknown for fusing Americana folk melody with hardcore punk sounds and can be expected to play a range of instruments including the banjo, guitar and bajo sexto.

By Garth Brody
Collegian Staff

Tim Eriksen will take the stage the Iron Horse Music Hall in Northampton tonight, although he is no stranger to the venerable venue; Eriksen is a founding member of local legend Cordelia's Dad. He has been performing in the Pioneer Valley, both solo and with his band, since they formed in 1987.

At that time, the hardcore punk scene in Amherst was starting to wind down; the momentum was gone, and new bands had to try something fresh to succeed. That something fresh, for Tim Eriksen and Cordelia's Dad, turned out to be the influence of traditional American folk music in the unlikely context of hardcore punk. Eriksen described this evolution when reflecting on his music earlier this week.

"The things I'm interested in now I got interested in at the same time when it was the early days of when hardcore was kind of getting going," said Eriksen. "I was also interested in acoustic music since I was even younger than that. Partly because it was portable, and I spent a lot of time out in the woods and on the beach, and that's not really ideal settings for playing hardcore punk."

He added that "we also thought we were all going to be living in caves in four years," which helped motivate an affinity for the apocalypse-friendly genre.

When Cordelia's Dad hit the scene in 1987, the initial response to their unlikely blending of genres was, according to Eriksen, "extremely positive."

"It was one of the few times in my life when we didn't have to do anything; everybody loved it," said Eriksen. "It's just kind of convenient when that happens...since the very first show that we did, had this ultra-acoustic side and then this ultra-electric side. And the same audiences really liked both, so playing in kind of underground, indie-rock punk clubs and starting with acoustic music – sometimes not even amplified, just coming out in the middle of the room – people always liked the combination."

COURTESY MYSPACE.COM

Eriksen has released mulitple solo albums after breaking from Cordelia's Dad. He is also currently a PhD. candidate at Wesleyn University studying ethnomusicology.

Even with obstructive skepticism from radio stations and record labels, having been on eight different labels so far, Cordelia's Dad went on to release seven albums from 1990-2002. Their past releases include the critically acclaimed 1992 album, "How Can I Sleep?," which critic Stewart Mason describes as "possibly the finest American folk-rock album of the '90s."

The acoustic-electric folk/punk sound developed for these recordings by Eriksen and Cordelia's Dad mirrors that of the fellow Amherst-based rockers Dinosaur Jr., whose "ear-bleeding country" sound arose from the same hardcore scene. Eriksen acknowledged this connection, but said it was more of a parallel development than a collaborative effort.

"I wasn't really friends with those guys. I would run into them periodically... but it was definitely the ethos of the time. I mean you listen to those early records by those bands and Cordelia's Dad, and clearly the same kind of things were going on, where it was after hardcore and looking to more melodic forms – taking it back, in some ways. But then also preserving some of the fun and the abandon of the punk stuff. I think a lot of people were doing that at that time, in those pre-Nirvana days. And that all kind of came to a head with that grunge bonanza."

Despite this natural progression, it seems easy to describe Eriksen's musical sensibilities as "schizophrenic," a popular critical label for Cordelia's Dad.

"I also feel that everybody's got a million things going on ...especially now, with the iPods and stuff, everybody's jumping back and forth between African music and death metal. That was less the case when Cordelia's Dad was starting out, when people were more segmented based on music; hippies were hippies, and they didn't talk to punks. Now, to me, it seems that it's a lot less like that."

This has, according to Eriksen, led to an increased appreciation of traditional acoustic folk music. He said that "now, it's fairly common to see kids carrying banjos and fiddles around college campuses, which, in the 80s and 90s, just didn't happen at all. There was no interest – zero interest – in my generation in traditional music, folk music."

Eriksen, of course, had been interested in folk music from a young age. When asked what the appeal of the genre was, he responded saying that "it's music that's straightforward and hits hard even if it's quiet. It has a strength to it that's not trying to kiss ass all the time – music that's not trying to suck up to the listener all the time, but is presenting itself honestly."

This kind of strong, straightforward music is exactly what you should expect at tonight's concert.

"It'll be solo acoustic – so banjo, fiddle, guitar, some unaccompanied singing. I might have a few friends join me. Some peppy stuff. Some more pensive stuff. I'll be playing a number of my own songs that I've been working on lately for bajo sexto. Mixed bag, but all acoustic."

The bald-headed balladeer goes on at 7 p.m. at the Iron Horse Music Hall. Tickets are $15 online and $18 at the door.

Garth Brody can be reached at gbrody@student.umass.edu.

Exciting weekend on tap for UMass

By Michael Wood
Collegian Staff

Heading into the third week of competition, the Massachusetts track and field teams will travel to the Reggie Lewis Track and Athletic Center in Roxbury, Mass. on Friday for the annual Reebok Boston Indoor Games.

The meet on Friday offers UMass a chance to compete against the top 10-12 teams on the east coast, and then the spectacle changes over to an international competition involving athletes with Olympic hopes on Saturday and Sunday.

Men's coach Ken O'Brien says his team is excited to perform on the same stage as Olympic athletes and gain valuable experience and tips from watching them train.

"We've done the Boston Games for about the last ten years or so," O'Brien said. "It has always been great for us because not only do we get to compete against the best in the east on Friday, but then the rest of the weekend is spent watching gold medalists train for the Olympics. Our guys couldn't be more excited."

Coming off an impressive third place finish at Rhode Island last weekend, the Minutemen will look to build off their performances thus far.

Leading UMass last week at URI was junior sprinter Darius Velez, who secured his place in the record books with his time of 6.39 in the 55-meter dash. His mark not only places him second all-time in school history, but second in the Atlantic 10 this season. Velez also qualified for both the New England and Eastern College Athletic Conference Championships at the end of the season.

Strong performances from seniors Tyler Cotto and Daniel Barry, as well as freshman Nick Otis, add depth and versatility to the Minutemen, allowing them to contend in every event they enter. Otis and Cotto each finished second in their event while Barry qualified for ECACs with a time of 4:14.46 in the mile run, good enough for first place.

"I'm very happy with the guys so far this season," O'Brien said. "This weekend is one more chance for the entire team to improve and get some experience and versatility before we really get going in the spring."

The women's team will be joining the men in Boston on Friday. After a fifth place finish last week, the Minutewomen are set to compete in Boston and are looking to capitalize on early momentum by some of their fast-starters.

Senior thrower Lisa Wilson set two school records last week, one in the weight throw and the other in the shot put, which she previously set this season. Both marks qualified her for the New England and ECAC Championships.

Also leading the Minutewomen thus far have been the performances by the youngest members of the team, freshmen Courtney Baldwin, Nalis Mbianda and Nicole Pompei.

In her first meet as a collegiate athlete, Mbianda placed fourth in the shot put and qualified for the ECAC Championships. Had it not been for Wilson's record-setting throw, Mbianda would have set a UMass record for the shot put in her first event.

Pompei came away with first place in the pole vault and earned A-10 Rookie Performer of the week honors in only her second meet.

In the 1000-meter distance run, Baldwin finished second and has now qualified for ECACs in both the 1000-meter and the mile run.

The Boston Indoor Games are set to begin Friday, Jan. 29 at the Reggie Lewis Track and Athletic Center.

Michael Wood can be reached at mcwood@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Leading the women's track and field squad has been senior thrower Lisa Wilson, who set two school records last week in the weight throw and the shot put.

JEFF BERNSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

With injuries in the backcourt, the Minutewomen have relied on senior point guard Kim Benton this season. UMass looks to break its losing streak when it faces URI this weekend.

Home court "disadvantage" oddly hurts Minutewomen

By Steve Levine
Collegian Staff

It's not too often you hear the words: home court disadvantage.

When the Massachusetts women's basketball team welcomed George Washington into the Mullins Center on Wednesday, it was confident it could put its home court woes in the rearview mirror.

That was not the case however, as the Minutewomen (7-13, 1-4 Atlantic 10) dropped another game in their home arena. UMass has not won a game in the Mullins Center since Nov. 22, when it defeated Villanova, 55-47.

"I don't know why we struggle at home. I'm amazed at it," UMass coach Marnie Dacko said. "I don't know if there's any external factors there but we definitely should be comfortable playing at home."

Dacko alluded to the Mullins Center lights obstructing shooters' vision, but it doesn't seem to bother opposing teams.

"It's odd that teams that generally don't shoot well shoot well at the Mullins Center," Dacko said. "However, we don't shoot well [here]. This is the only team I've had for a long time that hasn't used the Mullins to its advantage."

UMass' poor play at home does not translate into practices on the same hardwood.

"We have a men's practice squad that we play against and beat everyday," Dacko said. "We hang with the guys and execute very well during practices."

It's quite the dilemma. The coaching staff is not sure how to fix the problem, but is still trying to figure it out.

"As a coach you just try to reflect and figure out what we are going to do next – what new thing we're going to try," Dacko said. "[The coaches] are forever changing and constantly making adaptations through film and what we hear from the players."

Backcourt pressures

When UMass struggles, nobody feels more pain than the guards. The 1's and 2's that run the floor are often looked at to lead the team and establish a cohesive game plan.

Redshirt junior Megan Zullo, along with senior guards Kim Benton and Diatiema Hill, rack up most of the playing time in the UMass backcourt. Dee Montgomery, a freshman guard, went down early in the season due to a concussion, which has put additional strain on the starters.

"Kim really has to anchor the point position and that's been a daunting task as the season progresses," Dacko said. "She's doing the best she can and I think she's doing a very good job of controlling the ball. We feel very comfortable with her at the point."

The addition of Megan Zullo last offseason from North Carolina State excited the Minutewomen, who felt that she would add a terrific shooter's touch into the mix.

"Zullo is a shooter and is our best passer to the inside," Dacko said. "She's been sitting really for two years [at NC State], so basketball is really coming back for her. She puts a lot of pressure on herself and we're reinforcing to her that her game will come back."

The pressures of running a sputtering offense can be hard to deal with for the guards, who continue to work hard.

"Kim, Diatiema and Megan are pressed because they feel our record should be better than it is," Dacko said. "They all take the burden of the team's responsibility. They're very dedicated and they care a lot, but the bottom line is that although we give 110 percent, it doesn't mean a win at the end of the game. I just keep telling them that we have to trust each other, and that we're working hard enough, so the wins will come."

Steve Levine can be reached at slevine@student.umass.edu.

UMass hopes URI cures current funk

UM travels away in search of win

By Mike Mastone
Collegian Staff

With the midway point of conference play on the horizon, the Massachusetts women's basketball team will travel to Rhode Island tomorrow afternoon as both teams try to snap their respective losing streaks and better position themselves for a run at an Atlantic 10 tournament berth.

The Minutewomen enter tomorrow's matchup tied with Saint Louis for 11th place in the A-10 with a conference record of 1-4 (7-13 overall), while URI (9-12, 2-4 A-10) is tied with George Washington for ninth place.

Retracting a statement she made criticizing her team after Wednesday's loss to George Washington, UMass coach Marnie Dacko praised her squad's effort and hard work.

"The team is trying hard," Dacko said. "They just have to trust and believe in themselves. The effort is there. The end result is not always what you want."

If UMass fails to take advantage of their opportunities, the team could face another disappointing loss. During their current three-game losing streak, the Minutewomen are failing to take advantage of many wide open looks under the basket.

The team is also struggling from the foul line, a place where it usually excels. The Minutewomen are second in the A-10 in free throw shooting, converting their attempts 75.1 percent of the time.

"A coach's job is to get open looks," Dacko said. "We got open looks, you have to make point black layups and you have to make free throws. We were one of the better free throw shooting teams in the conference, so you have to step up and make them from the foul line."

With both teams' tendencies to turn the ball over, this could be one of the most turnover-plagued games in the A-10 this season.

UMass and URI are the two worst teams in the conference in turnover margin, and both are top five in total turnovers. The Minutewomen average 5.9 more turnovers per game than their opponents, while the Rams average 3.6 more than their foes.

"Most of our turnovers are unforced," Dacko said. "We are trying to have the kids slow down, pause, and take a look around. We don't exhaust the [shot clock], so we have time to slow things down and see the whole court."

After winning its first two conference games against UMass and George Washington, URI is limping into tomorrow's game in the midst of a brutal four-game losing streak.

The Rams dropped two winnable games to A-10 cellar dwellers Saint Louis and Fordham and were also victimized by powerhouses Temple and Xavier, dropping the four games by an average of nearly 16 points. The worst loss came at the hands of first-place Xavier (15-3, 5-0 A-10), which crushed URI, 88-60.

The Rams offense is led by the trio of junior Megan Shoniker, freshman Ashley Rivera and senior Lindsay Harris. Shoniker is the team leader with 11.1 points per game, with Rivera and Harris not far behind with averages of 10.5 and 10.3 ppg, respectively.

Harris leads the A-10 with 197 total rebounds, while her average of 9.9 per game is also best in the conference. She's also tied with LaSalle junior Ashley Gale for fifth in steals with 39 on the season.

Shoniker is second on the team and ninth in the conference with 2.9 assists per game, while Rivera is shooting 40.7 percent from beyond the arc and is third in the A-10 with 48 3-point field goals.

Tomorrow's game will be the second matchup between UMass and URI this season. The Rams defeated the Minutewomen, 58-57, in Amherst on Jan. 9 to open conference play. Tipoff is set for 3:30 p.m. at the Ryan Center in Kingston, RI.

Mike Mastone can be reached at mmastone@student.umass.edu.

JEFF BERNSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

Along with guards Kim Benton and Megan Zullo, senior Diatiema Hill has provided strong play for the Minutewomen at guard this season. Hill leads UMass with 3.6 assists per game.

UM faces 49ers on national television

By David Brinch
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's basketball team will look to do something they have not yet done this season.

Fresh off their first victory after dropping their last five games, the Minutemen (8-12, 2-4 Atlantic 10) host Charlotte Saturday night, returning to the Mullins Center for the first time since Jan. 20 in hopes of winning their first back-to-back A-10 games of the season.

The game is slated for a 6 p.m. tipoff and will be televised on ESPNU.

"Well it's great when your team is on TV, and the fans come out and it looks a certain way on national television," UMass coach Derek Kellogg said.

"You don't want to have an empty arena, you need to have a student section that's cheering and really going for your team, so that way, it will help in recruiting, just the overall image of your program, and we need the support of the students and the fans in the area to make it look a certain way for television."

Like UMass, the 49ers (15-5, 5-1 A-10) are coming off of a big victory, downing No. 15 Temple Wednesday night, 74-64. Guard Derrio Green scored 26 points against the Owls, who were in the midst of a six-game winning streak, including a win over the Minutemen on Jan. 16, 76-64.

"For Charlotte to beat a top 15 team and do it in a sort of fashion where at times they looked like the better team is a testament to how they have been able to build and have their team where they are," Kellogg said.

The 49ers also beat Louisville, 87-65, back on Dec. 5.

It was Green's third game with 20 or more points against a Top 20 team this season, as Kellogg knows how dangerous he can be.

"When he gets going, they are as good as any team we've seen this year," Kellogg said.

Along with Green, junior forward Shamari Spears has averaged 19.3 points and 7.7 rebounds in victories over the Owls, La Salle and Richmond this week. The Boston College transfer is seventh in the A-10, averaging 16.6 points per game, while freshman Chris Braswell is fourth in the conference in rebounds (9.1).

UMass defeated Saint Joseph's Wednesday night, 87-80, as senior guard Ricky Harris and freshman forward Terrell Vinson combined for 39 points and 17 rebounds, while a season-high 11 different players scored for the Minutemen.

"I was impressed that we were able to withstand some of Saint Joe's runs and really continue to play our game," Kellogg said.

The Minutemen also were strong on the glass, outrebounding the Hawks 44-31 while shooting 47.6 percent from the field. Along with Harris and Vinson, freshman forward Freddie Riley contributed off the bench and found his shot, scoring 14 points, including going 4-for-8 from beyond the arc and 5-for-12 from the field.

Charlotte is capable of converting on free throws, leading the conference with a .743 percentage and sits right behind the Minutemen in rebounding margin with a plus 3.5.

"They get to the free-throw line more than a lot of teams attempt, which is a goal a lot of teams have," Kellogg said.

"They jam the ball inside, those guys are big and physical, they know how to create contact, and their guards can get in the paint and shoot the ball, so they are a really well-rounded team."

Last season, the 49ers forced overtime and outscored the Minutemen for a 69-64 road win on Jan. 21. Harris had 19 points in the game, while redshirt junior forward Anthony Gurley added 10 points.

"They're much different, they had some injuries last year, Spears was sitting out as a transfer from Boston College, and Braswell was a prep-school guy at Hargraves with Freddie, and the main pieces they have are either new guys or guys that have improved tremendously," Kellogg said.

The Owls, the 49ers and Xavier are now in a three-way tie for first place in the conference with a 5-1 record.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu.

JEFF BERNSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

Forward Sampson Carter has played well in his first collegiate season, scoring 4.8 points per game while averaging 3.5 rebounds off the bench for the Minutemen.

JEFF BERNSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

Freshman Freddie Riley was a deciding factor in UMass' 87–80 win over Saint Joseph's Wednesday, shooting 4-of-8 from beyond the arc en route to 14 points.

Tough schedule has given young players experience

By Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

After finishing the non-conference schedule with a loss to Baylor on Jan. 23, Massachusetts men's basketball coach Derek Kellogg said before practice on Monday that he has no regrets about planning such a difficult schedule.

The Minutemen (8-12, 2-4 Atlantic 10) are 6-8 during the non-conference schedule, with some of their biggest losses coming to Michigan State, Seton Hall and the Bears. Despite UMass' struggles with its non-conference opponents, Kellogg believes that it was a good test for his team's morale.

"[The schedule] was difficult," Kellogg said. "It was probably one of the top 15 or 20 out of conference schedules in the country. It hasn't been easy, but it's a good confidence test."

The worst loss of the season came to the then-No. 2 Spartans, who downed the Minutemen by 38 points on Nov. 28.

However, the non-conference schedule didn't completely hurt UMass. The Minutemen's first non-conference loss came against Cornell, when the Big Red took a 74-61 victory during the home opener.

UMass' biggest win of the season came at TD Garden on Dec. 19 when freshman Terrell Vinson hit a shot in the last seconds to defeat Memphis, who were close to making the Associated Press Top 25 Poll until getting knocked off by the Minutemen.

That game had an attendance of over 8,000 people and national coverage on ESPN2, despite a heavy snowstorm that swept the Boston area. Kellogg said after the win that he is very interested in continuing to have games at the Garden.

But other aspects of the schedule, such as the amount of traveling required to play teams as difficult as the ones in UMass' schedule is something that Kellogg isn't sure about wanting to put his team through, especially with its youth.

"I'm not sure if we'll replicate it," Kellogg said. "I'd prefer to have a few more home games on there with a young team so you can have the comforts of the Mullins Center."

One of the benefits to playing so many away games is that the ones that are 'home-and-home' will require those same teams to come to the Mullins Center next year, when the team is a year older.

All of the games in Amherst this season were against mid-major programs, which helped boost the Minutemen's record, but didn't draw as much national attention as some of the games on the road or at neutral sites.

Although Kellogg wants to have games against top programs that will draw national attention, he is hoping to have more of the non-conference schedule at home.

"I think the schedule next year is going to be a little more beneficial next year in how many home games we'll have and who we're playing," Kellogg said.

Trying to survive

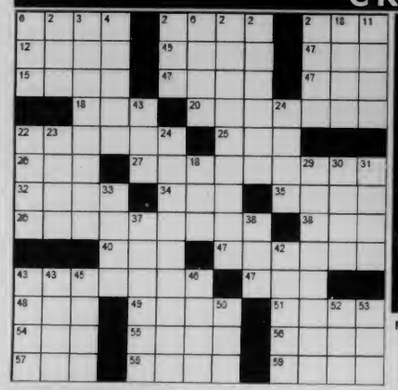
Wednesday night's win against Saint Joseph's couldn't have come at a better time.

The Minutemen jumped into a three-way tie with George Washington and the Hawks for 10th place and have a little bit of breathing room in hopes of making the A-10 season. While the tournament is more than a month away, UMass has a difficult conference schedule, starting with the game Saturday against Charlotte, who is 5-1 in the A-10.

The very next game is against Xavier, who is also 5-1 in the conference, and is a favorite to make the NCAA tournament.

Things don't get easier from there. UMass plays five of its last eight games on the road against the likes of Rhode Island, Saint Louis and Dayton.

The Minutemen also have back-to-back road games twice out of the remainder of their schedule.



"We actually play a tougher schedule than some of the other teams because of who we're playing," Kellogg said.

But with their first conference road win over SJU, Kellogg and Co. hope to use that as a confidence booster going into the rest of the season.

Adam Miller can be reached at amiller@dailycollegian.com.

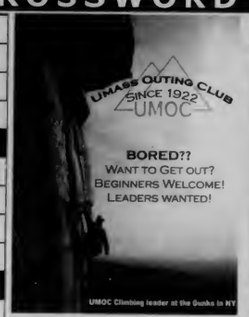
comics

CROSSWORD

ACROSS
1. Irish mother of gods
5. Exploits
9. Furrow
12. Abba ___, former Israeli politician
13. An Indian nursemaid
14. Metric unit of area
15. Fascist
16. Territory (abbrev.)
17. A stinging insect
18. A nucleotide derived from adenosine
20. About lizards
22. Shout of fear or terror
25. The compass point that is one point east of due south
26. Anger
27. Wallis
32. Capital of Yemen
34. Denial
35. Normal or customary activity
36. Drills
39. Deface
40. Cost, Insurance and Freight
41. Solution of sodium chloride and distilled water
43. Less expensive
47. Strong liquor flavored with juniper berries
48. Affirmative
49. First Chinese dynasty
51. Arrived
54. Angry
55. English college
56. Skin irritation
57. Advertisements (abbrev.)
58. Catholic church court
59. African cereal grass

DOWN
1. The habitat of wild animals
2. A fabric woven from goat and camel hair
3. Pertaining to Nazareth
4. Draw together
5. A way to create from raw stuff
6. Affirmative votes
7. Creatures that feed off of others
8. Bushes
9. Nobel Prize (1944) physicist, Isodor ___ (1898-1988)
10. The chief solid component of mammalian urine
11. Adolescent
19. Material lacking in real value or substance
21. Backmost
22. An assize (archaic)
23. Genus for curassows
24. A public declaration of intentions
28. ___ Angeles
29. Influence greatly or control
30. Style or grace
31. Withered
33. Alms box or chest
37. Code
38. Droop
42. In accordance with law
43. Double-curved molding
44. Found on your neck
45. James ___, American steam engineer
46. Violent disturbance
50. A collection of anecdotes
52. Thousand cubic feet (abbrev.)
53. Extremely High Frequency

Think twice. Borrow once.



Apply once and secure financing for your entire college career! Rest assured your local not-for-profit cooperative will be with you every step of the way.

UMassFIVE College Federal Credit Union
800.852.5886
umassfive.org

5 Student Choice

FIRST MEETING OF THE DECADE!
MONDAY, FEBRUARY 1ST, 7PM
STUDENT UNION BALLROOM
ALL LEVELS OF EXPERIENCE WELCOME!
WWW.UMASS.EDU/RSO/OUTINGCLUB

FRIDAY JAN 26TH 2010
LIVING THE DREAM UNLIMITED PRESENTS lift off!
ELECTRO DUBSTEP & HOUSE MUSIC
LIVE DJ'S / $1 PBR PINTS
19+ TO ENTER / 9PM-2AM
DIVAS NIGHTCLUB
492 PLEASANT ST. NORTHAMPTON
INTERESTED IN GETTING INVOLVED?...LTDUNLIMITED@GMAIL.COM

WE WANT YOUR COMICS
Where else you gonna put 'em? Don't Answer that.
E-mail: comics@dailycollegian.com

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necessary. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

Zoar Outdoors is seeking adventuresome people to be summer guides for whitewater rafting and zip-line canopy tours. Join our training program and spend the summer splashing through rapids or zipping through trees. Applicants should be great with people, have a positive attitude and be comfortable working as a team or independently. Application deadline: Feb.15th. Call 800-532-7483 or see www.zoaroutdoor.com/jobs.htm for an application.

WANTED

Part-Time Personal Care Attendant about 10-12 hrs/week. Flexible Hours. Please call Patrick 413-275-7928

FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 Bedroom Apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug, or Sept. First come, First Serve. Get Them While They Last. www.brandywine-apts.com. Stop by or Call 549-0600

Center of town 1,2,3 bedrooms; hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for June and September. NO FEES www.amherst-lincolnrealty.com 253-7879

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Montague-2 bedroom, 1 bath, dishwasher, deck, yard, laundry on site, gas heat, off street parking. 413-367-2461 $ 825 +

SERVICES

Pregnant? Want to talk? Call birthright 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 Hour hot-line 1-800-550-4900 www.birthright.org www.presidentobamapics.com Over 1,000 vivd pics of President Obama. Get prints made & framed!

FOR SALE

APARTMENTS AVAILABLE

PUFFTON VILLAGE

EXCELLENT LOCATION!
1/2 MILE FROM UMASS

SPACIOUS APARTMENTS!
1, 2, & 3 Bedroom Townhouses

ALL RENTS INCLUDE: HEAT, HOT WATER, AND COOKING GAS!

ON SITE LAUNDRY, OFF STREET PARKING.

BASKETBALL AND TENNIS COURTS.

OFFICE HOURS: 8AM TO 4PM MONDAY - FRIDAY
(413) 549-0145
WWW.PUFFTONVILLAGE.COM

SUDOKU

				9	3	8		2
		6		4	2	5
	7						5
		5				3	4	6
	9	1		3			2
				1		4
9								1
5		7		6

shnitzingiggle

SMBC by Zach Weiner smbc-comics.com

DEW TOUR WINTER
mount snow. VERMONT
February 4-7, 2010
ALLSPORTS.COM

Chainsawsuit by Kris Straub Chainsawsuit.com

Hark! a Vagrant by K. Beaton harkavagrant.com

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20 - Feb. 18
Will Smith is a sexy best. Appreciate that trimmed mustache of legend!

pisces Feb. 19 - Mar. 20
Are you not entertained?! If not, then call customer service at 1-800-FUNSHIZ.

aries Mar. 21 - Apr. 19
Some people we made to like Madonna while other people are destroyed to keep her from aging.

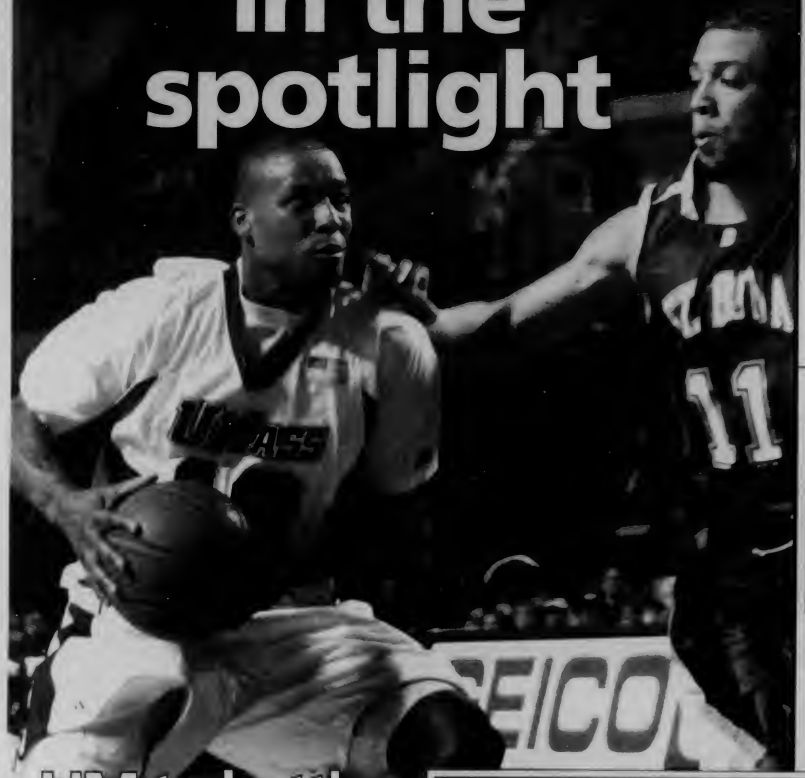
taurus Apr. 20 - May. 20
Make your day a glorious one by renaming all the contacts in your phone to Gloria. She is totally digging you.

gemini May. 21 - Jun. 21
There is nothing that a quick Google search can't cure. Unless you have digital herpies, then you're done.

cancer Jun. 22 - Jul. 22
How long has it been since you have looked at the stars? No, not the stars you get from erotic asphyxiation.

leo Jul. 23 - Aug. 22
No matter what anyone else says, the events that take place in Nip/Tuck are real and happen all the time.

virgo Aug. 23 - Sept. 22
What are you doing?! There is no food or drink in the classroom! Did you not read the sign?



libra Sept. 23 - Oct. 22
On the count of ten, you must look at the person across from you and confess your undying love ... for chicken.

scorpio Oct. 23 - Nov. 21
In other countries, biting your nails is considered a delicacy. Why don't you go there for a while.

sagittarius Nov. 22 - Dec. 21
Your last composition was so bad that it almost shares an equal plain with rapper Slim Thug's lyrics.

capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 19
Just because you are hungry does not mean that MTV's the Buried Life are going to get you a calzone before you die.

In the spotlight

UM to battle Charlotte on ESPNU

WOMEN'S HOOPS

The Massachusetts women's basketball team will look to snap its three-game losing streak this weekend against Atlantic 10 opponent Rhode Island.

SEE PAGE 12

TRACK AND FIELD

After competing in Rhode Island last Saturday, the Massachusetts track and field travel to Roxbury for the annual Reebok Boston Indoor Games.

SEE PAGE 11

DAILY COLLEGIAN
sports
WEEKEND EDITION

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

FEBRUARY

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
COLLEGIAN

HIGH: 33 LOW: 16 www.DailyCollegian.com MONDAY, FEBRUARY 1, 2010

PHENOM rallies for college affordability

New campaign asks for more support, less costs for students

By Bobby Hitt
Collegian Staff

Amidst the current economic crisis, public higher education is feeling the strain and putting more of a load on students.

The Public Higher Education Network of Massachusetts or PHENOM, came to the University of Massachusetts on Sunday, Jan. 31 to kick-off their initiative to raise investment on higher education and lower costs to students.

Massachusetts is currently ranked as number 46 nationwide in the percent of the budget reserved for public education. PHENOM's goal is to raise the state's 3.9 percent to the nation's 6.5 percent average.

This goal was expressed with buttons passed among the members of the crowd which read, "race to the median."

Massachusetts spends 40 percent less per resident than the national average, and has experienced a 25.6 percent decrease in support for higher education, according to the PHENOM website.

The PHENOM initiative is a kick-off of a multi-year plan to raise awareness across all publicly funded universities.

According to Max Page, co-founder of PHENOM, the goal is to create a coalition of students, parents, relatives and faculty to raise awareness for Massachusetts' lack of funding for higher education

The keynote speaker of the event was Victor Sanchez, president of the University of California Student Association.

Sanchez, a first-generation college student, helped to organize protests and walk-outs in California in protest of the 32 percent fee increase in the UC system.

Sanchez pointed out that advocates are "not alone" in their struggle for more affordable education.

In order to gain support for his cause Sanchez collaborated with different organizations across the public higher education system in California.

According to Sanchez, there is always a diversity of ideas regarding how to take action, but there is "constant collaboration," between different factions. He said that it is important for organizers of events to be as "inclusive as possible."

At UC Berkeley, a protest to stop the fee hike turned out 3,000 students, leading to police involvement. Sanchez will be marching in Washington on Feb. 20 in a continued effort to subdue fee hikes and gain support for the funding of higher education.

PHENOM is pooling man power and resources from the UMass campus and other public higher education facilities, according to Max Page, co-founder of PHENOM.

Ali Lipman, a UMass-Lowell student spoke to the group, saying she found out about PHENOM through the social networking site Facebook. Lipman said that she also found many "passionate students" interested in giving out pamphlets and getting signatures for petitions.

"We deserve to have our dreams fulfilled," Lipman said. "It is our right to learn and be successful."

State Sen. Stan Rosenberg spoke to the group about the ramifications of a groundswell of grassroots support.

"We need to put aside what divides us, and focus on something that affects all of us," Rosenberg said. "There are more than a million people in Massachusetts whose health and wellness is dependent on higher education. If all of those voices speak up they will be heard."

"I guarantee at least 80 percent of the legislators will sign a pledge to deliver on a program to bring costs down to the national average," he added. "Massachusetts wants to be more than just average, but more than average. Education is a fundamental right, not a privilege.

Heidi McCann, PHENOM Board member and UMass alum spoke of her time at UMass. "My work as a UMass undergraduate at the UMass library, and my experience with UMass professors made me extremely proud of this university," said McCann.

"I am deeply ashamed of the way the state is disrespecting our system," McCann added, "if you are not outraged you're not paying attention."

According to Gov. Deval Patrick's released budget for 2011, the UMass system was allocated $451,272,589 from the state budget and $49,317,776 in federal stimulus.

"Education manufactures better human beings," said Randy Phillis, a parent of a UMass journalism major student. "It is deeply wrong if only extraordinarily wealthy individuals can send their children to college."

Emily Krems, a high school guidance counselor, voiced her concerns whether she is going to have to tell students that they will not be able to go to school solely because the money is not there.

The PHENOM website has links that allow users to keep track of events, sign a petition to legislatures and donate to the cause.

PHENOM will be holding another information session Thursday, Feb. 4 in the campus center room 903 located on the UMass campus, and is open to all who are interested.

Bobby Hitt can be reached at rhitt@student.umass.edu.

Massachusetts Sen. Stan Rosenberg spoke to attendees at the University of Massachusetts' PHENOM event on the importance of lowering the costs of higher education.

Study cites high costs of tuition for rising student drop-out rate

By Anna Meiler
Collegian Staff

As college tuition prices soar and the economy continues to financially limit families, more college students are forced to work to support themselves.

According to a study released by Public Agenda (a nonpartisan, non-profit group), this is the number-one reason why most college students drop out.

The study, "With Their Whole Lives Ahead of Them," surveyed 614, 22-30 year olds that had a history of some college education but had not completed their degrees.

Of this group, six out of 10 people said that the reason they dropped out of college was because balancing academics with work was too stressful to maintain.

"It is definitely a problem in frequency and severity more than before," said M.J. Alhabeeb, professor of resource economics at the University of Massachusetts.

Scholarships are providing less money, and on-campus jobs are harder to find, according to Alhabeeb.

He also mentioned that the recession is making it so that families cannot afford to support their children through college, and it's becoming more difficult for students to receive financial aid, loans and grants.

According to Joseph Berger, associate professor and department chair of educational policy, research and administration at UMass, working does not necessarily have a negative effect on students that work less than 15 hours per week. Berger added that some studies even show that on-campus jobs help students learn time management and efficiency.

However, when students work more than 15 hours a week, there is a trend of negative effects on students' grades, the time it takes them to earn a degree and the likeliness of them graduating at all, according to Berger.

"In 2004, 78 percent of all college students worked. Of those, almost 90 percent worked more than 15 hours a week," he said. "Most students that work are working more than they should if they want to be successful with their grades and in college."

Richard Gately, a sophomore at Middlesex Community College, said he is happy to be working only one job instead of the two he was previously balancing with school. He worked 25 hours a week at Planet Fitness for the past six months to put himself through school, buy books, pay for his car insurance and buy food.

"It definitely gets stressful during exams because work takes up time from studying," Gately said. "I do feel as though if I didn't work, my school work would be much easier and less stressful because my weekly schedule would be way less time consuming."

Maria Tsamasiros, a sophomore at UMass, said she works 20 to 35 hours per week as a hostess at Fitzwilly's in Northampton, and recently switched her major from political science to communications because the political science major was too difficult to balance with her work schedule.

"I got caught up in work and stopped reading for classes," she said. "My GPA dropped 0.6 [points] last semester."

Students who work through college generally take longer to graduate than students who do not work, according to the study by Public Agenda, which found that 20 percent of students enrolled in two-year institutions finish within three years, and four in 10 students enrolled in four-year institutions finish within six years.

According to Alhabeeb, his son, M.J. Alhabeeb, Jr., is currently facing the same stressful struggles as many American college students nationwide. Alhabeeb, Jr. began attending the University of California, Los Angeles to study film in the fall of 2006 with a student loan of $65,000 for the 2008-09 academic year.

However, when he returned for his sophomore year, the university told him they weren't going to give him any money.

In order to maintain his enrollment, Alhabeeb, Jr. cut down the number of classes he was taking per semester so he could work full time at an appliance store to pay for school.

"He has been taking two classes a semester, but now he is thinking of taking only one," Alhabeeb said. "It is very difficult for him."

The study also found that most students that drop out of school do not realize the consequences of not earning a college degree.

"We know that individuals that have earned college degrees have a much greater earning potential than students who don't earn a college degree," Berger said. "As of the last census in the state of Massachusetts, individuals of working age had earned over $21,000 more a year than students who didn't earn a bachelor's degree."

According to Alhabeeb, the economy itself may also face future consequences if more students drop out of college.

"We need more and more college graduates because life is getting more complicated with computers and technology. The economy needs an educated youth to produce the next leaders and entrepreneurs of this country," Alhabeeb said. "If a significant number of students drop out of college and never earn a degree, it would cut off the blood of the economy."

Anna Meiler can be reached at ameiler@student.umass.edu

MARSHA HELEN/COLLEGIAN

According to the Public Agenda study, students are spending more time working to pay for educational costs and less time on academics.

The College Marie-Anne in Port-au-Prince, Haiti, was destroyed after the Jan. 12 earthquake. UMass' Student Alumni Association hosted guest lecturer Peter Kapiloff, who witnessed the tragedy.

Western Mass. native recounts aftermath, relief efforts in Haiti

By Matt Rochelleau and Alexandra Roche
Collegian Staff

He heard initial reports that around 5,000 were dead in Port-au-Prince, Haiti, but within moments of driving into Haiti's capital the next morning and seeing the aftermath firsthand, Peter Kapiloff knew those estimates were not even close.

Around 17 hours after the city was devastated by a magnitude-7 earthquake, thousands of bodies lay in the streets, roughly one-third of the city's buildings were completely destroyed, panic had set in and "the city was completely lawless," Kapiloff told members of the campus community during his visit to the University of Massachusetts on Friday evening.

On Jan. 29, UMass' Student Alumni Association hosted guest lecturer Kapiloff, who came to share what he witnessed on that day in Haiti.

When Kapiloff took to the podium in UMass' Memorial Hall, he explained to the gathered crowd that he had gone to Haiti as a part of an organization he was involved in when he lived in Boston.

In his efforts to provide aid over the several days following the earthquake, the 27-year-old Williamstown, Mass., native said he constantly feared for his life as scarce food and water made riots and looting a frequent occurrence.

He was nearly robbed at gun point, and aftershocks made search-and-rescue efforts treacherous, he said.

Kapiloff plans to return to Haiti next week with more supplies and money.

"Port-au-Prince had never seen anything like this before. The stuff I saw there I'll never forget the injuries, the smell, really everything," he said.

When the quake struck shortly before 5 p.m. on Jan. 12, Kapiloff was staying in Cap-Haïtien on Haiti's northern coast approximately 80 miles from the capital, but he said he was supposed to be in Port-au-Prince.

Earlier that day, his flight to Port-au-Prince was cancelled because of heavy rains, and Kapiloff later saw that the house he would have been staying in had been reduced to a pile of rubble.

He said the earthquake could be felt in northern Haiti, but "no one in Cap-Haïtien thought anything of it."

In September 2009, Kapiloff said he left a well-paying finance job in Boston to do something "more meaningful."

He volunteered at the Hope for the Children of Haiti Orphanage (HFC) for two-and-a-half months in Bolosse, located in Port-au-Prince.

The program is funded by the U.S., and pays for the children to go to school because many people in Haiti cannot afford to send their children to school on their own.

So, when Kapiloff arrived in Port-au-Prince, his main focus was ensuring the safety of the students he calls "my children."

And Kapiloff could not have been more thankful to learn all 56 of them were uninjured.

"I know that God put his hand on them," he said. "They're the lucky ones."

However, the facility the children live in was damaged, and concerns over the evacuated building's stability forced students and HFC staff to live on an outdoor basketball court.

When the director of the orphanage wanted to move the children back inside, other Haitians were furious.

See HAITI on page 2

ARTS & LIVING

Local bands play benefit concert

Area bands performed at Earthfoods Cafe to raise money for the Haiti earthquake relief effort.

SEE PAGE 4

SPORTS

UMass falls to 49ers on ESPNU

Despite 25 points from senior Ricky Harris, the Minutemen fell 72-58 to conference foe Charlotte in front of a national audience at the Mullins Center.

SEE PAGE 8

EDITORIAL & OPINION

Alex Perry believes the SGA has no business giving themselves academic credit for work that may or may not be useful to the student body.

SEE PAGE 4

DailyCollegian.com

Head to DailyCollegian.com for an exclusive slideshow of one reporter's adventures while wearing Jesus boxers.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXX
ISSUE 10
113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
413-545-3500
Fax 413-545-3699
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF William McGuinness
MANAGING EDITOR Matt Rocheleau
MANAGING WEB EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
BUSINESS MANAGER Daniel Jette
PRODUCTION MANAGER Michael Sarkes
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Kirsten Swenson
ADVERTISING MANAGER Michael Tortorici
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Amanda Joinson
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Shanna Murphy
COMICS EDITOR Andrew Witt
EDITORIAL EDITOR Alyssa Creamer
NEWS EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS EDITOR Jeffrey R. Larnard
PHOTO EDITOR Matthew Harrison
IT MANAGER Victor Jack
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Matt Zolniert
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Nicole Jacinto
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Norman Provost
CLASSIFIED MANAGER Katelyn Tamilio
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Justin Gagnon
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Elyse Horowitz
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Cal Scannell
ASSTANT EDITORIAL Benjamin Moriarty
ASSTANT EDITORIAL Michael Phillis
ASSTANT EDITORIAL Matthew M. Robare
ASSISTANT NEWS Samuel Butterfield
ASSISTANT NEWS Jenn Heshion
ASSISTANT NEWS Chris Shores
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jay Auser
ASSISTANT SPORTS David Brinch
ASSISTANT SPORTS Adam Miller
ASSISTANT PHOTO Maxwell Sparr
ASSISTANT PHOTO Samantha Webber
SENIOR PRODUCER Sara Cody
SENIOR PRODUCER Pete Rizzo

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1916 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

PRODUCTION CREW
on staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Kirsten Swenson

COPY EDITOR
Caitlin Quinn

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Dan Centola

Earthquake leaves country 'lawless'

HAITI from page 1

Some people came down and said if the children were sleeping in the building then they were too, so the director decided to keep the kids outside.

That night, Kapiloff left the orphanage because he realized he needed to try to get more help for the kids.

"There's going to be a lot of people living outside in Port-au-Prince for a long time," Kapiloff said.

Prior to the destruction, Haiti was the Western Hemisphere's poorest nation.

The earthquake killed an estimated 150,000 and put 1.5 million people desperate for food, drinkable water and medical attention out onto the streets that, according to Kapiloff, have little to no police presence.

"People were getting aggressive taking what they wanted," he said.

While trying to bring food and clean water back to HFC, Kapiloff said a Haitian man put a revolver to his stomach and told Kapiloff in Creole, "'Don't be foolish, friend. This [food and water] is for me."

Kapiloff said an elderly Haitian man then began screaming at the man with the gun, grabbed Kapiloff's belongings and tossed them back to Kapiloff while telling him, "'You're a fool. What are you doing here? There's a reason no Americans are down here right now.'"

With buildings collapsing around them as they dug, Kapiloff said he helped in search efforts, finding one person alive and several others dead.

He also helped treat dozens of injured before HFC ran out of medical supplies.

The missionary that Kapiloff was residing in housed about 1,500 people.

People were trapped inside many of the crumbling buildings.

Kapiloff said he tried to get people to help him dig in search of survivors.

Out of 1,500-2,000 people, only two or three would help him dig. Kapiloff added that Grace Children's Hospital also collapsed, leaving no survivors.

There were so many dead bodies in the road that they needed mass graves to get rid of them all.

The stench of the bodies filled the air.

Trucks came to pick up the bodies and carry them to these graves.

Kapiloff said he stuck out there as an American, which made him a target to be robbed.

So he decided his presence at HFC would do more harm than good.

Trying to find a way back to Massachusetts, he went to the city's airport where U.S. military, doctors and journalists already arrived.

Kapiloff said he approached a well-known female journalist and told her about video footage he took while riding around Port-au-Prince the morning after the earthquake.

He offered her the video, pictures and interviews with himself and people he knew in Port-au-Prince, in exchange for having her help get three doctors out to the children at HFC.

The journalist, who Kapiloff declined to name or disclose the publication she works for, offered him money instead, he said.

"I was so angry with her. I told her I don't want money for the pictures, I want doctors," he said.

Despite such frustrations, Kapiloff said he is thankful and impressed by the amount of aid being delivered by Americans.

"There are a lot of problems, a lot of problems in Port-au-Prince right now, but I think they've held up better than the U.S. military had expected," he said.

"One thing I'll never forget is all night long, the Haitians were singing hymns. It amazed me how positive they could be in the situation they were in," he added later.

One of the biggest problems Haiti faces now is an extreme shortage of medical supplies, Kapiloff said.

There are only a few places where people can be treated, and due to the high numbers of people living with HIV/AIDS, gloves or any other supplies could not be reused.

Eventually, the place where Kapiloff was helping ran out of supplies.

Children were being treated first, and since there were not enough supplies to go around, many of the other injured people were given Tylenol and Advil for severe burns and breaks.

The U.S. responded quickly to the earthquake, and soon enough they were controlling the operations at the airport.

Kapiloff saw that the military was surprised when they arrived.

Kapiloff added that the airport was assisting people medically as well, but many Haitians either did not know about this or were not strong enough to make it to the airport for help.

Since returning several days ago, Kapiloff has been telling his tale and looking to find any support he can for the thousands left struggling to survive in Haiti.

"Even if I don't raise a lot of money [on my own], there's enough positive that can come from you hearing about it," he told the crowd.

He said he will leave again for Haiti this coming Friday, but does not know how long he will stay for.

"As long as those kids are on the street, we'll get them inside. We'll do whatever we have to do to get them inside," said Kapiloff.

Despite all the relief efforts, Kapiloff said that the children at the orphanage are still sleeping on the streets.

The best thing that people outside of Haiti can do to help, according to Kapiloff, is to donate money for medical supplies, food and clean water.

Kapiloff concluded, "We need a lot of help. It's not going to be a month or two, it's not going to be a year or two, these people's lives were destroyed by this earthquake, and rehuilding them is going to be a long, expensive and emotionally demanding process. I just want people to know what's going on down there, and to keep them in your prayers."

Donations for the Hope for the Children of Haiti orphanage and school can be made online at www.hfchaiti.org. Donations to help relief efforts in Haiti can also be addressed to Kapiloff's church, "Haiti Relief/ PA," Community Bible Church, 160 Bridges Rd., Williamstown, Mass., 01267.

Matt Rocheleau can be reached at mrochele@dailycollegian.com.

Alexandra Roche can be reached at aroche@student.umass.edu.

Having seen the devastation first hand, Kapiloff joined relief workers to aid suffering Haitians following the massive earthquake that left parts of the country in ruin.

UMassAmherst
OPEN FORUMS

Meet the canididdates for the position of Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs and Campus Life:

Dr. Jean Kim
Interim vice Chancellor for Student Affairs and Campus Life
University of Massachusetts Amherst
February 4, 2010, Campus Center 168C
9:30 - 10:45 A.M. Student Open Sesssion
10:30 - 11:15 A.M. Open Session

Dr. Margaret Jablonski
Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs
Universtiy of North Carolina at Chapel Hill
February 5, 2010, Campus Center 168C
2:30 - 3:15 P.M. Student Open Sesssion
2:45 - 3:45 P.M. Open Session

Dr. Michael Liliberte
Vice President for Student Affairs
Boise State University
February 8, 2010, Campus Center 168C
11:15 - 12:00 P.M. Student Open Sesssion
4:00 - 4:45 P.M. Open Session

Dr. Kevin Charles
Assistant Vice President for Student Affairs/ Student and Academic Services
University of New Hampshire, Durham
February 9, 2010, Campus Center 168C
3:15 - 4:00 P.M. Student Open Sesssion
4:15 - 5:00 P.M. Open Session

UMPD: Crime Alert

The UMass Police Department is seeking assistance in the identification of an alleged suspect, who is wanted for questioning concerning the theft of a student's laptop from their dormitory in Webster Residence Hall.

On Jan. 29, the University of Massachusetts Police Department released a security camera surveillanee photo of a man suspected in the ongoing investigation involving the theft of a student's laptop on the University's campus.

The incident occurred on Monday, Jan. 25 when a UMass student reported to the UMPD that a laptop had been stolen from their room in the Webster Residence Hall on campus.

The theft occurred during the afternoon hours when the owner of the laptop was in class, and the man in the surveillance photo matches the description given by another resident of Webster Hall who saw a man leaving the scene of the crime during this time frame.

According to the crime alert issued by the UMPD, the neighbor described the suspect as a "white male, older than traditional college age, medium build, with dark hair and a black leather jacket."

The crime alert also stated that, "The suspicious male knocked on another door and asked the resident for a donation to the Breast Cancer Foundation."

The UMPD has issued the crime alert to students and faculty of the University, as they hope someone will be able to provide further information on the alleged suspect.

The UMPD asks if anyone can assist in identifying the man from the surveillance photo to contact the department directly at (413) 545-2121 or to call the UMPD Detective Bureau at (413) 545-0893.

Anonymous tips can be made by calling (413) 577-8477 or online at www.umass.edu/umpd/anonymouswitness/.

– Jennifer Heshion, Collegian Staff

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 1, 2010

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
– Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

No credits for SGA

Alex Perry

Just when I thought the Student Government Association couldn't be any more needless or ridiculous, they go and pull a stunt like they just did, and remind me why I feel the way I do.

The stunt, or to them, their new genius concept, gave them a front-page story in the Massachusetts Daily Collegian last Thursday. The idea is that the SGA should create a voluntary course entitled "Legal Issues in Student Governance and Higher Education" in order for senators to receive academic credits for their hard work and dedication to – well, to whomever it is who allegedly benefits from the existence of the SGA.

In Alyssa Creamer's Collegian story, "SGA votes to approve course for its members," the SGA's acting Administrative Affairs Committee Chair, Jared Rose, gave an explanation for the logic behind creating the course.

According to the story, Jared stated that he finds the SGA a "very demanding and intense" extracurricular activity, and he wonders why he received credits in the past "just for being in the marching band," but not for being in the SGA.

To Jared's credit, he made a handful of points.

Unfortunately, I find none of them to be at all legitimate. For one, he stated that the SGA "takes up more time than two classes put together." He also goes on to say that the formation of the class would help the students in the SGA find time to meet informally when they normally wouldn't be able to because of the varying scheduling conflicts amongst the senators. But the biggest point he made in the story was this – "The SGA is a real service to the University, and those students deserve credit for all of their work."

To be completely honest, the idea is the most ridiculously arrogant thing the SGA has done since they voted against the Iraq war. These senators want school credit because they have to put time into their "service?" Just think of how ridiculous this concept is. For starters, if compared to any athletic team at the University of Massachusetts, the SGA is literally nothing when it comes to the necessary extra time and work that is put in.

The SGA is just making itself look like the whining, arrogant, brat kid you see on "My Super Sweet 16" who complains that the new Lexus their parents bought them doesn't have a sunroof.

Should basketball players receive credit for spending so much time at practice? Should the football team get credits for spending extra time at the gym? Maybe they should, but those points are more legitimate than what the SGA is arguing.

What about the presidents of the various clubs around campus providing a real service to the University? I have enough experience in clubs to know that there are many students out there that put in extra work and time to preparing, organizing and running events all around campus. And these people are not complaining about a lack of academic credits like these senators are doing.

I mean, using the SGA's logic, I am in line for some academic credits for writing this column. But you don't see me wasting the University's time.

If SGA members are going to get academic credit for their work and effort, everyone who puts in a comparable amount of time and work into their own respective extracurricular activity deserves it as well. It would be hypocritical of the school to grant credits to members of the SGA for the reasons they stated and not give credits to everyone else doing comparable work. It's ridiculously egocentric and naive for the SGA to think they deserve academic credits, when students 10 times more worthy are demanding nothing of the sort.

And even if this class were created, who is going to pay for the materials and teachers required to have the course? I am not banking on the SGA paying for it. I also know I don't want my school expenses to go up by endorsing the SGA.

The actual resolution passed by the SGA in part states the following, "the time it takes to do [senate] jobs to their fullest often cause academic sacrifices and little compensation of any kind." How arrogant are these kids? It's called a resume. Members of the SGA can put the fact that they were in the SGA on their resume and receive credit for it when they apply for graduate school or other jobs, exactly like every single other student who has ever done anything that requires time and work that doesn't give them compensation in the form of academic credit.

The SGA is just making itself look like the whining, arrogant, brat kid you see on "My Super Sweet 16" who complains that the new Lexus their parents bought them doesn't have a sunroof. Why are these senators in the SGA in the first place if they are passing a resolution that complains they don't get "compensation of any kind?" I thought the compensation was being able to do a "service" for the University, being able to put it on your resume. I thought it was a privilege. Now they want credits too?

They knew going into the SGA there were no credits. Instead of focusing on themselves, the SGA should focus on the interests of the students and what they want – like online voting, which has been on the unresolved table for years.

I know the SGA is a joke and you probably find yourself wondering why you should even care about the SGA because of this, as you never did before. Well, there's the principle of it.

The "service" done by the SGA seems to be no more legitimate or worthy of credits than the service done by many other students, clubs and athletes at the University. Senators don't put in any more time than any other kids who are actively involved in their extracurricular activities who also don't receive academic credit. Senators shouldn't get credit just because they stomp their feet and whine the most publicly. And we don't even need to get into how I can't think of a single time in my life I have benefited from the "service" the SGA provides. I would wager I could probably accomplish as much as they have this past semester in about two hours.

Then again, maybe I couldn't. I can't guarantee that I would have been able to match their accomplishments like the one about putting voting online – by taking it absolutely nowhere while they focus on themselves.

Alex Perry is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at amperry@student.umass.edu.

CBS and civil rights: Super Bowl style

Lauren Vincent

The CBS television network is choosing to squeeze a wholesome, family-centered commercial in between the rest of its Super Bowl advertising this coming Sunday. Alongside the infamous Bud Light and Smirnoff advertisements, a public service announcement from the Focus on the Family organization will run.

According to their website, Focus on the Family "is a global non-profit Christian organization with a vision for healing brokenness in families, communities and societies worldwide through Christ. The purpose of the ministry is to strengthen, defend and celebrate the institution of the traditional family and to highlight the unique and irreplaceable role that it plays in God's larger story of redemption."

In the past, CBS rejected ads by PETA and Moveon.org. The reason for this is that the broadcasting station claimed that they do not run "advocacy ads" at their network level – and they have stuck with this policy for years. But this Super Bowl, it is expected that CBS will air the PSA from Focus on the Family, with its clear advocating tendency.

The 30-second ad features University of Florida quarterback Tim Tebow and his mother, Pam, sharing their story of how, on a missionary trip to the Philippines, Pam became ill and was encouraged by doctors to have an abortion. Instead of listening to these recommendations, Pam listened to her "personal faith" and decided to carry the pregnancy to term.

There are some oddities in this story, like the fact that abortion is completely illegal in the Philippines and any Filipino doctor who performs one receives jail time, which brings one to question whether the doctor was completely ignorant of the law, or just didn't care. But whether the story is true or not, I have several problems with CBS allowing this PSA to air at all, let alone during the Super Bowl.

If we say the Tebow story is true, even though some doubt it, it is the exception, not the rule. Though there are women who decide to take the risk of a complicated delivery and end up surviving and delivering healthy children, there are still many women who suffer many complications during pregnancy and childbirth – death, included.

The Focus on the Family PSA also leaves out cases where the child itself has severe or fatal birth defects.

Equal rights and tolerance are apparently not things CBS is interested in, and consistency doesn't seem to interest the network either.

It not only encourages women to disregard their doctor's recommendations for their own safety, but it also cheapens the emotional struggles these women have gone through in their decisions to terminate the pregnancy. The decision process to end a pregnancy is surely not an easy one for any woman, and Tebow proudly proclaiming her choice to deliver her son Tim is an insult to women who have been through it.

For years, CBS has had a policy stating they would not run any ads that "touch on and/or take a position on one side of a current controversial issue."

This was announced by the Boston Globe in a letter from CBS to the United Church of Christ in 2004, after CBS rejected an advertisement from them. The ad was to promote the church being inclusive of everyone, including the gay and lesbian community. Apparently, CBS didn't want to take a position on that issue. Fine.

However, Focus on the Family's website has a special section on sexual identity in which they offer advice with dealing with the "challenging situation" of finding out that a loved one is gay. The advice is in the form of an arrow pointing to a set of books, one of which can help you "overcome the influence of homosexuality." They then conclude with their position on homosexuality: "We oppose the ordination of non-celibate, self-identified homosexuals and the celebration of homoerotic sexuality as one of God's gifts."

Now, by CBS running an advertisement from Focus on the Family, who have a clearly spelled out opposition to homosexuality, and rejecting one by the United Church of Christ, who has a clearly spelled out opposition to rejecting anyone based on their sexual identity, CBS seems to have taken a position.

This position is not only on abortion, but on gay rights as well. Equal rights and tolerance are apparently not things CBS is interested in, and consistency doesn't seem to interest the network either.

More recently, CBS rejected an ad for a gay-male dating site, Mancrunch.com, in which two men are depicted kissing.

It seems like their conclusion is they find anything which doesn't fit with their definition of "family values" to be indecent.

If you ask me, "family values" is a pretty poor subject for a Super Bowl commercial. In the last Super Bowl I watched, the majority of the advertisements were for beer and alcohol. When did excessive drinking become valuable to the family? Last I checked, alcohol harms families more often than it helps them, and it does more harm to families than the LGBT community.

The executives at CBS have clearly taken a stand, though they previously said they wouldn't. And as viewers, we reserve the right to take a stand against them, by not watching the Super Bowl on CBS.

Lauren Vincent is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at lvincent@student.umass.edu.

Professor bias hurts students and staff

Dave Coffey

Earlier this week, the article "Do professors lean to the left?" ran on the front page of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian. The article mostly concerns itself with an analysis of the standard phenotype of college professors. Among other things, the article asserts that according to recent studies, college professors may be more socio-politically moderate than previously assumed.

At first, this sounds like a fairly positive front-page headline. Logically, the more moderate a professor is, the less slanted and unbalanced his teaching will most likely be. Therefore, a fairer and better learning environment is created for the student.

However, soon after reading the article, the devil's advocate portion of my brain lit up, and I asked myself: Is there no case to be made in favor of socio-political bias in professors?

In my opinion, there certainly is. As odd as it sounds, it may actually be beneficial to college students for professors to lean one way politically, whether it is to the left or to the right. As an aspiring journalist, it seems to me that the issues concerning the concept of perfect objectivity seem to have some parallels between the realms of media criticism and higher education. Just as in the profession of journalism, objectivity in teaching is something to be stressed and sought after. However, there is such a thing as too much of a good thing, and objectivity is no exception to this adage. When taken to the extreme, perfect objectivity on the behalf of the informer robs all informative output of a contextual frame, therefore rendering the information itself less meaningful and less useful to the informed.

A professor with little or no lean would strike me as a personification of perfect objectivity, or, in other words, a professor whose message would have less meaning than a professor with significant lean. Let me qualify this statement, however, by saying that I do not endorse any sort of actual political bias in any educational environment. Razvan Sibii, a media criticism and media ethics professor in the journalism department of the University of Massachusetts, said on the subject, "I do believe that professors should work hard at not allowing their personal political opinions to influence the way they grade papers or conduct discussions."

The real world is set apart from the ideal world by the fact that it is filled with slant, bias and subjectivity.

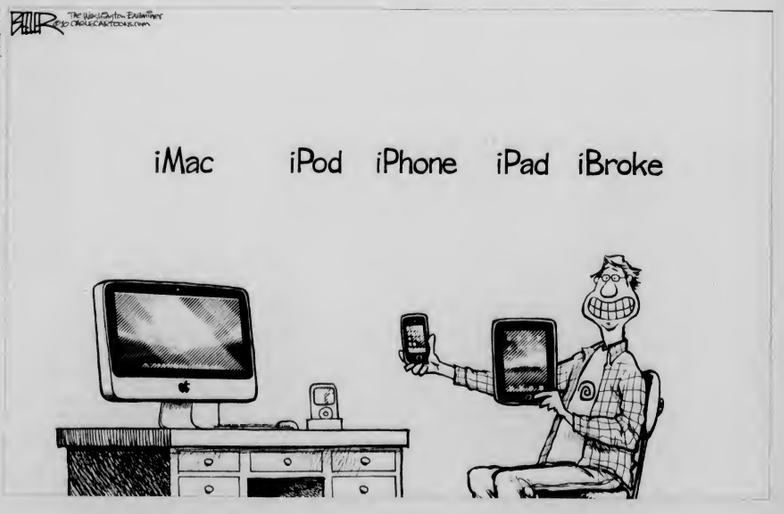
Failing a student or purposefully drowning out ideas based on political affiliation is obviously not only highly unethical but extremely detrimental to students in any educational environment. But a professor with considerable lean is more likely, in my opinion, to give a more meaningful informative message. This is because doing away with the concept of perfect objectivity allows for a less vague frame for students to contextually gather information from.

"I do think that students can benefit form hearing about a professor's ideological leanings," says Sibii. "Whenever appropriate, he/she should disclose his/her ideological investments always keeping in mind, however, that the class is not about them, but rather about the students and their reasoning process."

fact that it is filled with slant, bias and subjectivity.

Considering this, it is absolutely necessary for higher education to prepare students to decode and draw meaningful information from the barrage of socio-political media-based messages from countless sources found in the real world. There is no better or more appropriate place to learn these highly abstract and intangible skills than in college. However, to do so, the leanings of college professors must not be suppressed or concealed. Rather, they should be embraced and acknowledged, not only for the sake of the free flow of ideas and information, but so that students gradually learn to extract proper and valuable meaning from said ideas and information.

Obviously, it seems easy at first to construct an argument against having a college professor with considerable political leanings. As the introduction to the Collegian article seems to imply, professors could potentially turn leanings into bias very easily. This would make the professor possibly take on the role of a preacher rather than an educator, using his position as a bully pulpit to convert students to his ideologies instead of teaching them.



However, there is a considerable difference between a professor having substantial lean and exercising bias in the classroom. As was previously stated, punishment or praise towards a student based solely on political affiliations is wrong. Yet it is possible for a professor to express and make students aware of his or her ideologies without actually pushing them on the students. Even if a student could not disagree more with a professor who openly expresses his or her ideologies, that student arguably benefits greatly by learning from the professor about the other side of whatever issue is at hand.

Without formally and appropriately addressing the ideologies of one's professor in a higher learning environment, a student will never learn to properly dissect and make use of the plethora of informative relationships available to them. In order to prepare for the real world, a place that is filled with information that is fused with slant and opinion, a student should be able to practice disseminating significant meaning from informative messages that arise from real human ideological opinions and viewpoints.

Provided this, students will then not only be much more well informed, but will also learn to better construct their own meaningful and informative messages based on their own opinions and ideologies.

If students can approach their professor's opinions and their leanings with this mindset, it will prove to be supremely advantageous for their learning process.

Dave Coffey is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at dscoffey@student.umass.edu.

Local bands unite for Haiti benefit concert

By Patrick Giddings
Collegian Staff

SAMANTHA WEBER/COLLEGIAN

Grex opened the night's festivities on an upbeat note, playing intruments ranging from guitar, violin, banjo and even a bucket that functioned as a drum. They displayed their talents for a suggested donation of $5 to put towards the Haiti relief effort.

Earthfoods Café was transformed Thursday night from an ovo-lacto vegetarian eatery into a hipster hootenanny to benefit Haiti.

The round tables were pushed to the back corner, chairs upended on top. University of Massachusetts-based bands Grex, Bella's Bartok and The Fine and Dandy Trio were slated to play for a suggested donation of $5 to benefit the survivors of the Jan. 12 earthquake in the small impoverished Caribbean country.

Members of Grex entered energetically just after 7:00, leaving their instruments around the tapestry-covered stage no bigger than a ping-pong table. A small crowd gathered outside the doors, while a few groups of twos, threes and fours dropped their jackets and bags in the front corner and started socializing.

In short time there were 20 or so people, and Tom Matherly and Zack Grey from Grex came in to pump up the audience with a quick banjo and drum set jam – driving bass drum hits and fast-strummed banjo. The talking level rose as more young folks drifted in.

The event was the brainchild of Bella's Bartok's drummer Mark Schilling, who first thought up the idea five days after the earthquake.

"I wanted to donate money [for Haiti] but I don't have much money as it is. I figured I could do much better by using the resources that I had and do something semi-big," said Schilling.

"I really wanted to do it earlier rather than later just because now is when people really need money the worst. I knew if I sat on it, it probably wouldn't happen."

Schilling contacted friends from the electro-acoustic experimental band Grex and the Americana quartet The Fine and Dandy Trio.

He enlisted the help of Sharon Alvandi, an Earthfoods Café employee, who ran with it to the student collective's committee, who had to vote unanimously in favor of the event.

"It's kind of a duty of Earthfoods to be here for the community," Alvandi said. "So, when Mark called me I was just like 'Yeah, I mean why not?' I think that's kind of what we're about."

The event was scheduled for Jan. 28 from 7 p.m. to midnight, and included the talents of Tessa Gifford, a licensed massage therapist, who offered five minute massages for an additional suggested donation of $5. Advertisements went out in the form of Facebook invites and flyers plastered around Earthfoods Café.

"It's going to the UMass Haiti Relief Fund," said Alvandi about the proceeds. "All that money is being pooled by RSOs all over campus," she continued. "All the money is going to go to Partners in Health."

Around 7:30 p.m. Grex went on in full swing with all six members. Their wild, rolling, driving, flowing beat created by steel and acoustic guitars, banjo and an upturned bucket sent a wave of dancing through the audience, with Ariel Stimson's violin providing melody, paired with electrified handsaw wailing in the background like a disembodied voice.

Moving from high to low, Grex took the audience from wild frenetic dancing, running in circles and jumping up and down, to sitting in a semicircle in front of the stage, chins on fists, watching Ariel sing an intimate rendition of Alela Diane's "Oh! My Mama."

Ariel played her guitar accompaniment as she sang the soft, sad lyrics. Soon it was time for their last song, during which Grey screamed his heart out, his face turning red. The crowd dug it.

"Thanks for coming, thanks for giving some money for Haiti," said singer and percussionist Tony Hall to the enthusiastic crowd. A few minutes later outside he said, "We got asked [to play] and we know that people need help." Band mate Matherly summarized what Grex is about.

"We only basically play music 'cause it's sweet and to try to hook the world up with love. Something like this is an awesome opportunity to use our music to bring people and awareness to this topic," he said.

After a 10-minute intermission, Bella's Bartok swung into their first number, "Bucharesti," jumpstarting the energy in the room as girls and boys dressed in skirts, slacks, jeans and overalls spun and danced to the bluesy gypsy rock stylings of singer Asher Putnam and his gang. Bartok grooved and moved and spun out some interesting sounds with their collection of instruments and musicians.

Although their accordionist and alto saxophonist were hard to hear for most of the show, when they did stand out – for a short accordion break halfway through the set and for a couple of alto-sax solos – they really came through.

At only a few points was there any indication that this was college music – a few crossed horn notes here, a couple of missteps there – and no one in the crowd gave it any notice.

The highlight of their performance was when trombonist Sean Klaiber marched around the room, sliding his horn up and down in the air to thrill the crowd. After an energetic finish with a cover of Tom Waits' "Hoist That Rag" that got the crowd literally jumping up and down, Bella's Bartok closed

See BENEFIT CONCERT on page 5

COURTESY MYSPACE.COM

Led by Asher Putnam, members of Bella's Bartok brought their energy to the stage as the second act of the evening. Dressed in skirts and overalls, the band jump started the dance.

Valley native, Tim Eriksen breaks from his punk-rock roots

By Garth Brody
Collegian Staff

Tim Eriksen, the folk music laureate of Western Massachusetts, has come quite a long way from his hardcore punk roots. Friday night, he came back to Northampton for a solo concert at the Iron Horse Music Hall.

Though flanked by a stable of at least five stringed instruments of various persuasions, he led off with an affecting a cappella performance of "Farewell to Old Bedford," showcasing the precision and power of his unique singing technique. His vocals are heavily influenced by the Sacred Harp musical tradition, its slightly nasally style, coupled with well controlled dynamics that seem to follow the melody, perfectly suits the classic folk songs with which Eriksen is most comfortable.

Slowly building steam from the vocal solo, he raised his fiddle and transitioned into the somber "O Death." Finally, he gave the audience something with a little pep, picking up the tempo (but only a little bit) for "Friendship." His rhythm was driving, even if his only means of percussion was his left foot.

From there, he moved through a range of folk tunes, often leading in with an appropriate story. He preceded one song with a story of a dusty old Tennessee craftsman who built the unusual looking banjo he was about to use. Another story detailed the extent of a mouse infestation in an old house he once lived in. The stories themselves were funny and well-told, feeling at times like understated tall tales, and the relevant songs somehow kept the relatable charm of the stories while throwing them earnestly into the folk timelessness.

Besides personal accounts, he gave several pieces of historical background on the music. About half of the songs came from a particular place of origin.

Finland, Macedonia, Ireland and Northampton to name a few. The last song before the encore was prefaced with the story of its author (or arranger, at least), the eccentric preacher "Crazy" Lorenzo Dow.

The stories and the histories certainly enhanced the already impressive performance, but Eriksen fortunately has his priorities straight. At one point in between songs, he quipped that in a parallel career to his musical one, he would become a comedian who told exclusively old jokes; he proceeded to carefully butcher the one about the elephant in the pajamas. Appropriately, the layers of hilarious irony stopped there, and he went on to another song.

Thanks to his musical prowess and commanding vocal presence, Eriksen performed songs usually played with a band, like "Sweet William" (from "Can I Sleep?" by his band Cordelia's Dad), bringing a stirring intimacy to each arrangement. Also thanks to his musical mastery, he was able to use all of the instruments on stage at least once. Over the course of the performance, he commanded the hypnotic acoustic majesty of the fiddle, banjo, guitar, bajo sexto and even the (perhaps not so majestic but definitely hypnotic) jaw harp.

And it wouldn't be a folk show (and he couldn't call himself a Sacred Harp man) without a little audience participation. Twice during the set, he started a song by informing the audience, unobtrusively and without presumptuousness, that "it's got this chorus" – he would then proceed to sing said chorus a few times, and when it next rolled around, the room would echo with voices.

This is how a hardcore punk guy becomes family friendly without selling out. His stage presence Friday night was consistently sincere and unassuming, his stories were surprisingly funny without being edgy, and his songs' lyrics – usually detailing either unrequited love or death, or more often a combination thereof – may have been tragic and reflective, but their memorable melodies (they've lasted this long, haven't they?) offered enough comfort to keep the darkness of their lyrical content at bay.

Tim Eriksen's performance at the Iron Horse was a warm reminder of the universal appeal of folk music played well. Hopefully, he will continue to perform in the Pioneer Valley for a long time to come; we will need something to wet our appetites while we wait for the Cordelia's Dad live double album, which, Eriksen joked, will come out just as soon as record companies exist again.

Garth Brody can be reached at gbrody@student.umass.edu.

MATT HARRINGTON/COLLEGIAN

Punk-rocker turned mellow folk musician, Tim Eriksen played an intimate show to audiences at the Iron Horse on Friday.

MATT HARRINGTON/COLLEGIAN

Eriksen, who is a Ph.D candidate at Wesleyan University, drew on his studies of ethnomusicology in selecting a line up of songs from around the world, including Macedonia, Finland and Ireland.

UMass study finds vitamin D decreases some PMS symptoms

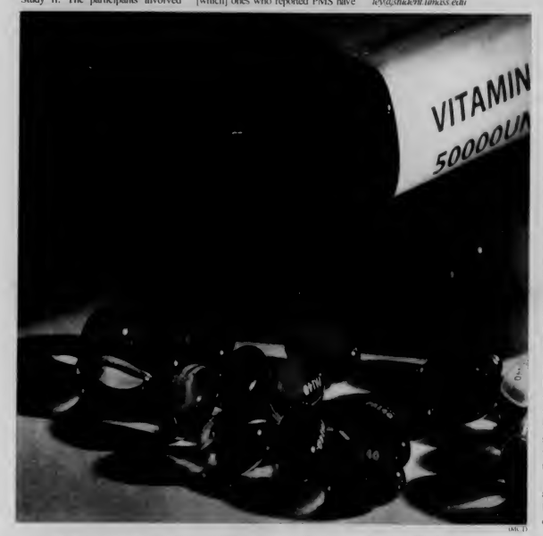
By Lisa Linsley
Collegian Staff

It has been known and studied for years that vitamin D is an important nutrient to consume to prevent osteoporosis for adults, especially women, and rickets, a disorder that creates a softening of bones in children. Vitamin D can be consumed through foods such as milk, yogurt or other dairy products, fatty fishes, from sun exposure or through vitamin D supplements. Recent studies show even more reasons for college women to take vitamin D supplements.

Vitamin D can prevent many mental health disorders and related symptoms in women. The solution to severe moodiness, depression, bloating or overeating before one's menstrual cycle may be an increase in vitamin D. Recent studies have shown that taking a vitamin D supplement can decrease the likelihood of women developing premenstrual syndrome (PMS).

Elizabeth Bertone-Johnson, an associate professor of biostatistics and epidemiology in the UMass Department of Public Health has a five-year $868,857 grant from the National Institute of Health and the National Institutes of Health to study women's mental health with an emphasis on how vitamin D relates to women's health.

Bertone-Johnson began conducting a study in 1989 to determine if there is a correlation between PMS and vitamin D. It was confirmed through studies that a high intake of vitamin D may reduce the manifestation of PMS symptoms. This was determined through a case-control study through the Nurses' Health Study II. The participants involved women nurses between the ages of 27 and 44 who didn't suffer from PMS, along with 1,057 women who developed PMS over 10 years of follow-up, and 1,968 women who reported having no diagnosis of PMS nor minimal premenstrual symptoms. An analysis of intake of calcium and vitamin D was measured in 1991, 1995 and 1999 by a food frequency questionnaire.



Bertone-Johnson says, "Women with high intake of vitamin D mostly from food sources, dairy foods, fatty fish, fortified orange juice and fortified cereals have a significantly lower risk of developing PMS. There is a 30 to 40 percent less risk. So we found that intriguing." This study was published in 2005.

The study was not based on having pre-menstrual symptoms but rather, significantly suffering from the disorder to the point where the symptoms interfere with their personal life. Although most women are affected by some type of pre-menstrual symptoms that may create discomfort emotionally or physically, only 10 to 15 percent of women actually suffer from premenstrual disorder, according to Bertone-Johnson. Therefore, to ensure that the women in the Nurse's Health II cohort do clinically meet the definition of having PMS their symptoms were evaluated in advance.

Bertone-Johnson says, "of the women who reported PMS, we sent them an initial questionnaire to evaluate [the] impact on their interpersonal relationships, things like work performance, ability to parent and established diagnostic criteria to really determine [which] ones who reported PMS have the symptoms reported in the literature." Thirty-six percent of the women who self-reported having PMS were validated as having a moderate to severe level of the disorder. The women in the control group were confirmed as never having PMS, Bertone-Johnson explains. Bertone-Johnson is currently recruiting for a similar PMS and vitamin D study on campus. This study would have a similar set-up only using a different demographic – primarily college women in the UMass population. The preliminary findings to this study on PMS and vitamin D in college women has found a strong correlation between PMS and vitamin D. The preliminary findings show that women who consume vitamin D have a 70 percent lower risk of PMS.

Often birth control pill such as YAZ, which contains drospirenone and ethinyl estradiol, or anti-depressants such as Paxil or Zoloft are prescribed and have been marketed by pharmaceutical companies to treat PMS. Both birth controls and anti-depressants, although effective, have a lengthy list of serious possible side-effects. There are few, minimal side-effects to over-consumption of vitamin D. According to Bertone-Johnson, in order to receive the benefits, one must consume above 200-400 IU of vitamin D per day. "Most experts suggest 10 00-2000 IU per day," Bertone-Johnson explains. Along with the foods and supplements that contain vitamin D, experts recommend 15 minutes of sun exposure per day to stimulate vitamin D synthesis.

Lisa Linsley can be reached at llinsley@student.umass.edu

UMass assistant professor, Elizabeth Bertone-Johnson conducted a study demonstrating a strong correlation between vitamin D intake and diminished premenstrual symptoms.

SAMANTHA WEBER/COLLEGIAN

The Fine and Dandy Trio joined other local acts at the Haiti earthquake benefit concert. They closed out the night with classic Americana numbers that had concert-goers clapping and stepping in time.

Earthfoods Cafe came alive Thursday with good music and good will from live bands their set.

BENEFIT CONCERT from page 4

"Thank you very much – every penny counts," said Asher Putnam as he left the stage.

People continued to mill around for a moment, with cold bursts of air from the front doors as people left to enjoy the freezing night air and the table of assorted goodies by the steps. In moments, the quartet known as The Fine and Dandy Trio huddled around a couple of microphones, instruments in hand, and the party was again underway.

Playing classic Americana songs ranging from The Band's "Down South in New Orleans" to the retrospective "Long Way to Go" by Railroad Earth, The Fine and Dandy Trio got the dwindling crowd singing, clapping and stomping along. Louis Freilicher made his fiddle whine with slow slides that conveyed an emotional pain and longing. Tom Wrenght's vocals were smooth and mellifluous, especially when combined with the voices of the three other men.

Banjo player Ben Truboff played a solid plucked rhythm behind Nick Brown's tight lead runs on the mandolin.

"It's called awesome," said Bella's Bartok upright bassist Steve Torres.

A small area in front opened up for the occasional dancers to cross over, but most of the crowd stood around it, grinning and clapping. Asher Putnam stood back in the crowd and sang at the top of his lungs along with one of their last numbers.

By the time they played their last tune, the crowd was ready to go home. Laughter, hugs and love were everywhere in the room.

Asked later about the experience, Putnam was enthusiastic. When Schilling proposed the idea, the whole band jumped on it. "We were definitely down for it," Putnam said. "It was fun. We [raised] over $600 and that made me feel really good."

This was the first benefit show at Earthfoods Cafe this year, according to Alvandi. "But that'll change. There are many more to come."

For more information on how to support Haiti, visit the UMass Haiti Relief Efforts' website at http://www.umass.edu/umhome/haiti.

To hear more about the bands, visit their websites at http://www.myspace.com/grexisyou, http://www.myspace.com/bellasbartok and http://www.myspace.com/thefineanddandytrio.

Patrick Giddings can be reached at dgidding@student.umass.edu.

Don't make your girlfriend mad at you... WRITE FOR ARTS!

EMAIL arts@dailycollegian.com

UMass is a BIG campus, and we need your help covering it.

Know of something that's happening? Want to see an event get news coverage? Let us know!

Go online and head to DailyCollegian.com and click "Submit a Tip."

Amherst Music House

Three-day Valentine's Day sale

February 11th–13th, 2010

11am–6pm every day

20% off all store merchandise!

(discount excludes items on consignment)

Forget diamonds...music is forever.

AMHERST MUSIC HOUSE
233 N. PLEASANT ST. AMHERST, MA 01002
(413) 549-1728

SPRING BREAK

JAMAICA

Once you go, you know.

Spring Break comes to life...
Live Concerts
Awesome VIP Parties
Beautiful Beaches
Scenic Cliff Jumping
Spectacular Sunsets

Book Your Trip Today! Contact:

SUNSPLASH TOURS
www.sunsplashtours.com
1.800.426.7710

STS STUDENT TRAVEL SERVICES
1.800.648.4849
www.ststravel.com

WARHAMMER

Off The Wall Games

WARHAMMER 40,000

MAGIC The Gathering

Discount role-playing games, Collectible card games (CCGs), Miniature war games and board games, fun for everyone!

Hours: 10-10 Wednesday-Sunday, 12-10 Monday, Closed Tuesdays 41 Russell St (Hampton Village Shops) Rt. 9, Hadley 413-586-5451

Minutemen fall to 2-5 in conference

M' BASKETBALL from page 8

"We shoot a lot of 3s, and quite a few of those were in transition," Kellogg said. "I thought their zone was pretty good, they did a good job with it and like I said, we have to make some better decisions against the zone."

In the first half, the 49ers kept the Minutemen scoreless for almost six and a half minutes, as they went on a 15-0 run, leading 21-9, after both teams traded leads four times in the opening four minutes of the game.

The 49ers switched from man-to-man to zone defenses throughout the game, providing problems for the Minutemen's offense.

Freshman guard Freddie Riley had no points, going 0-for-4 from both the field and beyond the arc. Even with just four points, freshman forward Javorn Farrell was a lone bright spot for the Minutemen. Farrell had four steals, one block, three assists and three rebounds.

"I thought he was great, his intensity level was higher than anybody in the game, you can put the Charlotte guys in that mix also," Kellogg said. "He really went after loose balls, he dove on the floor."

With 16 minutes left in the game, UMass trailed the 49ers by just one point, 37-36. But Charlotte outscored the Minutemen 21-5 over the next 10 minutes, as UMass fell behind by 17 points, and could not come within more than nine points for the rest of the game.

Despite the loss, Kellogg was pleased with the crowd, noting that it helped his team stay in the game.

"It actually gave us some sort of a home-court advantage when we were making our run in the second half, they really got into the ball game, and I'm hoping that down the line we'll continue to have fan support and a crowd like that," Kellogg said. "It makes a difference, it truly makes a difference and its good for our players' and anybody interested in the University on TV to see that."

The game was nationally televised on ESPNU, and the Minutemen's next game against Xavier at 7 p.m. on Wednesday at the Mullins Center will be televised on CBS College Sports.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu.

Guard Anthony Gurley drives to the hoop in UMass' 72-58 loss to Charlotte on Saturday. The junior finished with 11 points for UMass.

Terriers get the best of UMass

Paul Dainton protects UMass' goal in a contest at the Mullins Center earlier this year. The junior was beat six times against Boston University on Friday, giving the Terriers 12 goals against Dainton in their last two meetings.

HOCKEY from page 8

The Friars had their share of power-play opportunities in the period as well, including a full, two-minute 5-3 man advantage, but the Minutemen penalty kill, which ranks eighth in the Hockey East (80 percent), was a perfect 3-for-3 in the period, and 5-for-5 on the night.

UMass' depth was also on display as each offensive line – with exception to the first line of J. Marcou, Wellman and T.J. Syner – produced a goal, something the team has lacked.

"Getting goals from the other lines is critical, in the last few weeks it has been either [J. Marcou, Wellman] and Syner have put up points or we really struggled," Cahoon said. "Tonight we got points from other people, yet I told [J. Marcou, Wellman] and Syner I thought they had a terrific game."

Goaltending was not a strong point for the Minutemen on Friday night, as Dainton was beat for the sixth time in the team's 6-2 loss to Boston University at Agganis Arena, prompting Dainton to slam his stick against this ice. It was the second-worst game of the season for Dainton, the other coming back on Jan. 2 in a 7-3 loss at BU.

In that loss, Dainton was also hit for six goals, giving the Terriers' (9-11-3, 7-9-2 Hockey East) 12 goals against No. 15 UMass' netminder in the last two games between the schools.

The Terriers used a time of 2:54 in the second period to separate themselves from the Minutemen, as well as two late goals that led to Dainton's frustration.

With 4:33 remaining in the second period and BU leading 1-0, Ross Gaudet beat Dainton for his second goal of the night, off an assist from Nick Bonino, to extend BU's lead to two. Just over a minute later, the lead was extended once again when Max Nicastro found Colby Cohen to put the Terriers ahead 3-0.

That lead lasted for 36 seconds, but reached three again after another 1:06 of play.

With 2:45 remaining in the second period, senior Justin Braun took a shot from just inside the blue line only to have it saved, but with the rebound falling to the stick of Braun Keane, who cut the deficit back down to two.

But with 1:39 left in the period, Vinny Saponari netted a power-play goal for the third goal of the period for BU and put it up 4-1 heading into the third period. The goal finished off a 2:54 stretch where the two teams combined for four goals, three by the Terriers.

Martin Nolet netted the Minutemen's second goal of the game midway through the third period while UMass was on a man advantage, but the Terriers scored their own power-play goal just over five minutes later. Just seconds before Braun was set to return to the ice following a holding penalty, Nicastro would beat notch the Terriers' second power-play goal of the game. The Terriers finished the night 2-for-5 on the power play, while UMass was 1-for-4.

In the final minute of play, BU's Luke Popko would score a shorthanded goal, prompting Dainton to get a new stick from the bench.

With a 1-1 record on the weekend, the Minutemen gained two points and remained in a second-place tie with Boston College who topped Providence, 5-2, Friday night. The Minutemen and the Eagles will square off next Friday in Amherst at 7:30 p.m., as the two teams fight for second place.

Jeffrey R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@dailycollegian.com.

Second half shooting woes continue to trouble UMass

SHOOTING from page 8

Derek Kellogg said. "We shoot a lot of 3s and quite a few of those were in transition."

Saturday night was not the only time the Minutemen were taken out of a close game in the second half.

On Dec. 23, UMass was down a point to Boston College at halftime and eventually failed to bounce back after the Eagles went on an 11-2 run. BC finished the game with a 79-67 win.

The Minutemen had a seven-point lead over La Salle on Jan. 10 at the MassMutual Center, but went on to lose that game too. Despite freshman Freddi Riley's 22 points off the bench, Explorer center Aaric Murray's strong play in the middle and 6-for-14 free-throw shooting in the second half gave the Maroon and White an 80-74 loss.

Part of the reason for the offensive struggles against the 49ers came because of how Charlotte adjusted in the second half, they went with a zone, which forced the Minutemen to take tougher shots.

Charlotte made more shots on fewer attempts (21-for-52) than UMass (24-for-70).

Senior Ricky Harris (25 points, 11-for-24 from the field) was the only Minuteman who didn't struggle with his shot. The remaining guards (Riley, Anthony Gurley, David Gibbs and Gary Correia) went 19 percent from the field and missed all 10 attempts from beyond the arc.

"We have to make some better decisions against a zone," Kellogg said. "We've actually went against a zone more in the last week, and I've made [more] changes than I ever have as a player or as a coach."

But the Minutemen have struggled to shoot well all season.

UMass is 13th in the league with 40 percent from the field and 12th from 3-point range at 29 percent. They also shot below 20 percent from beyond the arc in three of the last four games.

UMass finished the game with a 14.3 3-point percentage, the lowest for the Minutemen all season. Harris, who had difficulties finding his shot until recently, said the biggest problem with his team's shooting is its lack of confidence.

"We just have to start shooting with confidence and raising it up and knocking down shots," Harris said.

Adam Miller can be reached at amiller@dailycollegian.com.

Senior Ricky Harris looks to beat a double team against Charlotte in front of over 6,000 fans at the Mullins Center. The guard finished the game with a team-high 25 points for the Minutemen.

Minutewomen away from home

W. BASKETBALL from page 8

last two games, went off on the Rams by hitting 3-of-5 beyond the arc in the win.

UMass edged out the Rams in points off of turnovers, 19-10, in the game. The Minutewomen also played good defense, and won the turnover battle 19-12 against URI.

URI's talented freshman backcourt of Ashley Rivera and Anisha Wilson were held to 10 points. The Minutewomen locked up Rivera around the perimeter, and backed off of Wilson because of her poor shooting coming into the game.

UMass' Diatiema Hill contributed in all categories, as the senior had nine points, seven rebounds, six assists and one steal. Kim Benton, another senior for the Minutewomen, had five points and two steals. She remained perfect from the line on the season after hitting two free-throws in the game, bringing her total to 22-of-22 on the year.

Cerie Mosgrove helped UMass by shooting 2-of-5 from beyond the arc, finishing with six points. The Minutewomen were in need of solid shooting from 3-point range early on in the game because of a lack of offensive presence down low. Jasmine Watson and Nicole Jones both had four fouls against them and were hesitant of fouling out for most of the second half.

Watson finished with four points and six rebounds, while Jones had nine points and one rebound. UMass was more focused on the defensive end, keeping URI forward Lara Gaspar to nine points on the night.

This marked UMass' second win in A-10 play and notched yet another road win for the Minutewomen this season. The team now has had six of its eight wins on the road.

"I don't have an explanation for [the road wins]," Dacko said. "The bottom line is that it came down to us taking shots and making shots."

Neil Carroll can be reached at nacarrol@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

Need to spread the word?

Reach more than 18,000 readers every day!

IT'S CHEAPER THAN YOU THINK!

On-Campus & Local Business Ads for $10 per column inch

R.S.O. Ads for $6.70 per column inch

CONTACT PAMELA:
thecollegian@gmail.com
413-545-3500
or stop by our office in the Campus Center basement

WANT TO WRITE FOR SPORTS?
Contact Jeffrey R. Larnard at
SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

COMICS

WE WANT YOUR COMICS

Questions?! Comments?!
E-mail us: comics@dailycollegian.com
Friend us on Facebook: "Collegian Comix"

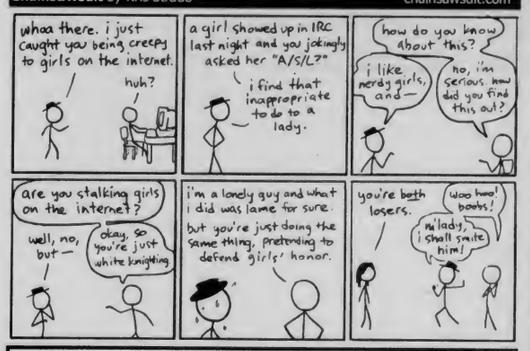
CROSSWORD

SUDOKU

		4			6			7
		5					1
				3		4	8
				4
4				1				3
1	2	8			9		7
					2	9
							4	8
	9		1				3	2

PUFFTON VILLAGE
APARTMENTS AVAILABLE
Excellent location!
1/2 Mile from UMass
Spacious Apartments!
1, 2, & 3 Bedroom Townhouses
All rents include: heat, hot water, and cooking gas!
On site laundry, off street parking.
Basketball and Tennis Courts.
Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

UMASS OUTING CLUB SINCE 1922 UMOC
BORED?? Want to get out? Beginners welcome! Leaders wanted!
UMOC Climbing leader at the Gunks in NY
FIRST MEETING OF THE DECADE!
Monday, February 1st, 7pm
Student Union Ballroom
All levels of experience welcome!
www.umass.edu/rso/outingclub



DEW TOUR WINTER
mount snow VERMONT
February 4-7, 2010
ALLSPORTS.COM

CITY FOOTWEAR
Students and Staff of the five Colleges Eligible for 10% of with ID
nike New Era Clarks Timberland
34 Pleasant Street · Northampton
413.341.5581

ACROSS
1. Lack of difficulty
5. Undersides of shoes
10. Curves
14. Thailand
15. Aroused
16. Latin for "Will be"
17. Promoter
19. Rotated
20. Utilize
21. Vases
22. Swerved
24. Orates
25. They attract iron
26. Not awake
29. In accounting, not credits
30. Expend
31. Young horses
32. Self-importance
35. Parental sister
36. A living duplicate
37. Chew
38. A wooden pin
39. They often grow on heads
40. A smooth fabric
41. Not ours
43. Searches
44. One who does not believe in God
46. Ringlet
47. Waste water conduits
48. Loft in a hurry
49. Deserved
52. Ice pellets
53. Offensiveness
56. Anagram of "Sees"
57. Pertaining to Scandinavia
58. Ends a prayer
59. Sow
60. Horse
61. Model

DOWN
1. Jacob's brother
2. HIV
3. Rescue
4. Scottish for "Uncle"
5. Persian governor
6. Due
7. Not gain
8. Supplement with difficulty
9. Functional
10. Express agreement
11. Acts on behalf of
12. A type of bottle
13. Particles found on beaches
18. Governed
23. Breadplate
24. Shipped
25. Methods
26. As Soon As Possible
27. Eject from the mouth
28. Longitudinally
29. Room barriers
31. Coquette
33. Manner of walking
34. Possesses
36. Two-wheeled vehicles carrying ammunition
37. Celt
39. Inherentor
40. Voiceless consonants
42. "Will ___ is wealthy"
43. Lived up
44. Residues from a fire
45. Playfully harass
46. Shut
48. Inferno
49. Present (at a show)
50. Utilizes
51. Anglo-Saxon sleeve
54. A period
55. Short sleep

Chainsawsuit by Kris Straub — chainsawsuit.com

BASIC INSTRUCTIONS — How to Show Some Class — by Scott MEYER

FIND OUT WHAT IT MEANS TO BE IN THE DELTA CHI FRATERNITY
DELTA CHI INFORMATION SESSION
This Monday, February 1st
In the Campus Center Room 903
Come check us out!

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20 - Feb. 18
Today is going to be really hard, but it is a good thing that you're from west Philadelphia born and raised...

pisces Feb. 19 - Mar. 20
Self worth is not measured by self image. It is measured by the amount of nukes you get in Modern Warfare 2.

aries Mar. 21 - Apr. 19
Compliment people on their waist size by staring at their belt area. You will see your friend count increase by a factor of five.

taurus Apr. 20 - May. 20
Close your eyes and think of something moist and clingy. Yoda is not what I would have come up with but whatever.

gemini May. 21 - Jun. 21
Lady Gaga is not the person you want to share fashion sense with. She should have her own episode of Monster Quest.

cancer Jun. 22 - Jul. 22
It has been a long time coming, but we all have faith that you will find the purpose of gooey winter ointment.

leo Jul. 23 - Aug. 22
You are the herald for the return of fresh sheets and french vanilla fabric softener.

virgo Aug. 23 - Sept. 22
It is not about the size, it is how well it is finely curved. One must know these things to become a fine archer.

libra Sept. 23 - Oct. 22
Football season's end getting you down? The best cure for that is an all-day marathon of oily Greco-Roman wrestling.

scorpio Oct. 23 - Nov. 21
Ever wonder where your hunger goes? It takes the girl of your dreams on hot dates in the Carribbean while you eat your salads.

sagittarius Nov. 22 - Dec. 21
This newspaper was printed with every tear you shed for the new crowning of Miss America.

capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 19
Go home and look at your finanical records carefully. You may have accidentally invested in the naughty Swedish meatball maker.

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necessary. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

A GREAT JOB! Spend your summer in a lakefront cabin in Maine. If you're looking to spend this summe outdoors, have fun while you work, and make lifelong friends, then look no further. CAMP MATAPONI, a residential girls camp in Maine, has female/male summertime openings for Land Sports, Waterfront (samm crafts, skiing, life guarding, WSI, boat drivers), Ropes Course, Tennis, H.B. Riding, Arts & Crafts, Theater, Cooking, Gymnastics, Dance, Videography, Group Leaders and more. Top salaries plus room/board & travel provided. Call us today at 1-561-748-3684 or apply online at www.campmataponi.com.

EMPLOYMENT

Zoar Outdoors is seeking adventuresome people to be summer guides for whitewater rafting and zip-line canopy tours. Join our training program and spend the summer splashing through rapids or zipping through trees. Applicants should be great with people, have a positive attitude and be comfortable working as a team or independently. Application deadline: Feb.15th. Call 800-532-7483 or see www.zoaroutdoor.com/jobs.htm for an application.

WANTED

Part-Time Personal Care Attendant about 10-12 hrs/week. Flexible Hours. Please call Patrick 413-275-7928

FOR RENT

Hobart condos 3 bedrooms, hardwood floors, study in basement. Cable & Phone in all bedrooms & Study. NOW SHOWING for June & September. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 Bedroom Apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug, or Sept. First Come, First Serve. Get Them While They Last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop By Or Call 549-0600

Montague-2 bedroom, 1 bath, dishwasher, deck, yard, laundry on site, gas heat, off street parking. 413-367-2461 $825+

SERVICES

Pregnant? Want to talk? Call birthright 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 Hour hotline 1-800-550-4900 www.birthright.org

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 1, 2010 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UM stumbles in second half

Falls to A-10 foe Charlotte in front of 6,000 fans at Mullins

By David Brinch
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts basketball team hung with one of the best teams in the conference for a while, with a strong home crowd and a nationally televised game.

However, the Minutemen (8-13, 2-5 Atlantic 10) could not stop Charlotte from scoring, falling to the 49ers, 72-58, on Saturday night at the Mullins Center in front of 6,003 people, the largest crowd this season.

Charlotte	72
UMass	58

Senior guard Ricky Harris led UMass with 25 points and four assists, and redshirt Anthony Gurley added 11 in the loss.

The 49ers (16-5, 5-1 A-10) had two solid scoring drives in each half, as Derrio Green scored a career-high 34 points on 8-for-16 from beyond the arc, as 21 of his 34 points came in the first half on 5-of-10 from the field.

"As far as the game goes, we played hard, we rebounded the ball, the one kid Green had a career night," UMass coach Derek Kellogg said. "He shot the ball well, I thought their team played well, played fantastic, and I thought we did some good things, where our basketball decisions were something we need to work on."

The Minutemen again held an advantage on the glass against their opponents, outrebounding the 49ers 44-39, behind redshirt sophomore center Sean Carter and freshman forward Terrell Vinson, who had 10 and eight, respectively.

However, after shooting the ball relatively well in a victory against Saint Joseph's, the Minutemen fell back into a slump, shooting just 34.3 percent from the field and going 4-for-28 from 3-point range.

See M. BASKETBALL on page 6

JEFF BERNSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

David Gibbs dribbles down court against Charlotte on Saturday. This picture was picked by fans on ESPNU's Facebook page to be placed in today's paper.

Poor shooting strikes again

Minutemen struggle from 3-point range

By Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

Like many other times this season, the Massachusetts men's basketball team came close to taking a lead over an opponent, but poor shooting late in the second half against Charlotte made it easy for the 49ers to pull ahead and take UMass out of the game.

The Minutemen opened up on a 10-3 run to put them down one against the 49ers with 16 minutes, 10 seconds left in the second half. However, unlike the last time they were on ESPN against Memphis, there was no dramatic finish at the buzzer to beat Charlotte.

In fact, UMass (8-13, 2-5 Atlantic 10) never cut the deficit down to fewer than nine points since the 11:21 mark and was down by 17 points with 6:26 left.

After the Minutemen came within a point of tying the game, the 49ers (16-5, 6-1 A-10) went on a 15-3 run to increase the lead to 13 points. All three of those points came off of free-throws.

With a 39-36 lead, Charlotte center Phil Jones scored seven-straight points to push the lead back to double-digits for the first time since the opening minute of the second half.

UMass didn't score a single field goal until center Hashim Bailey finished a layup with 7:32 left in the game. In that stretch, the Minutemen missed nine-straight field goals, four of which were from 3-point range, where they finished 1-for-13 in the second half against Charlotte.

"We didn't make outside shots," UMass coach

See SHOOTING on page 6

Meyers saves weekend sweep

Holds Friars to lone goal after UMass falls to BU on Friday

By Jeffrey R. Larnard
Collegian Staff

PROVIDENCE, R.I. — After Friday night ended with Paul Dainton breaking his stick in anger when Boston University got to him six times, it was Dan Meyers who got the start Saturday night against Providence, leading to his best game of the season.

UMass	4
PC	1
BU	6
UMass	2

Meyers, who had been averaging 4.42 goals against per game this season, held the Friars (9-15-1, 4-13-1 Hockey East) to just one goal as the Massachusetts hockey team bounced back with a 4-1 victory Saturday night after falling to BU, 6-2, the previous night.

UMass coach Don Cahoon said the decision to start Meyers had nothing to do with Dainton's performance on Friday night, but that it was predetermined coming into the weekend to give Dainton the night off.

"We just thought, number one, it would be good for Paul to sit back for a game," Cahoon said. "Number two, it was really good to get Danny into the mix because before this is over he could figure in a big way, whether it be in a series or a game down the stretch, and he certainly proved tonight he wanted a piece of it."

Just 16 seconds into the third period, with the No. 15 Minutemen up 2-0, Meyers made his only mistake of the night. Providence's Ian O'Connor took a pass from Tim Schaller and beat the senior for the Friar's lone goal of the night.

"I'd love to have that one back," Meyers said. "I didn't really get a sense of 'uh-oh' [after the goal], I trusted the guys out in front of me and I felt good all night, so I didn't think it would be a big problem."

But UMass responded just over a minute later when Marc Concannon found Rocco Carzo for his sixth goal of the season.

At the six minute, 17 second mark of the final period, freshman Eddie Olcyzk would notch his first career goal at UMass off a Darren Rowe assist.

"I was happy with the overall competitiveness coming off a game last night where I felt we competed last night and didn't get much out of it. I thought the competitiveness was real good tonight so it gave us a chance to execute at some of the things we did pretty well," Cahoon said.

In the second period, the Minutemen capitalized on the conference's second-best penalty-kill unit (84.8 percent) as they scored two power-play goals in the first 10 minutes of the period.

At the 3:11 mark of the period, Michael Marcou netted his sixth goal of the season after the Friars were penalized for having too many men on the ice. After T.J. Syner found Darren Rowe, Rowe slipped the puck past the net and found M. Marcou's stick, beating Providence's Alex Beaudry for the 1-0 lead.

Just under five minutes later – after the Friars' Daniel New was called for slashing – James Marcou tied the UMass single season record for assists (32) when he found Casey Wellman, who fired a shot on net. Beaudry deflected the puck to his left where Will Ortiz found it and put it away for a 2-0 lead.

See HOCKEY on page 6

COLLEGIAN FILE PHOTO

Dan Meyers stands ready in net in a game last season for UMass. The senior got the start Saturday night in the 4-1 win over the Friars.

MARISSA HARR/COLLEGIAN

James Marcou rifles a shot past a diving Eric Gryba of Boston University earlier this season. Gryba notched an assist in the Terrier's 6-2 win on Friday, while Marcou was held to zero points by BU.

Minutewomen top Rams on the road

By Neil Carroll
Collegian Staff

KINGSTON, R.I. With sophomore Kristina Danella back at full strength, the Massachusetts women's basketball team regained its swagger after a 71-61 victory over Rhode Island on Saturday. The game gave the team its second win in conference play.

UMass	71
URI	61

"I just think it was a whole team effort today," Danella said. "I think we played 40 minutes of basketball, and that's what we've been looking for all year long."

Danella, who had been rehabbing a sprained ankle over the last four games, was finally at her best again. The guard once again led the Minutewomen in scoring with 17 points on 5-of-10 shooting from the field.

UMass (8-13, 2-4 Atlantic 10) was up 17 points at half, and saw its lead balloon to 23 points with five minutes, 22 seconds remaining in the game. The Minutewomen controlled the game and eased to a 10-point win

"I think the team did a good job today," UMass coach Marnie Dacko said of the performance. "But midway through the second half the kids got a little lax."

UMass held URI's Megan Shoniker to 16 points in the contest. Shoniker came into the game leading the Rams (9-13, 2-5 A-10) in scoring, but Lindsay Harris outdid her for the honors by netting 20 points to go along with her 14 rebounds in the loss.

"The difference between this game and all the other losses was simply that we put the ball in the basket," Dacko said. "I think overall the defense remained the same, our rebounding stayed the same, we limited our turnovers by a few, but this is the way we shoot at practice and it's nice to see the kids have that translate to Rhode Island."

While Danella led the Minutewomen in scoring, Megan Zullo followed her with 13 points and six rebounds. Zullo, who was 4-of-15 shooting 3-pointers in the

See W. BASKETBALL on page 6

JEFF BERNSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

Kristina Danella shouts out calls for the Minutewomen during a game last year at the Mullins Center. The sophomore returned to form Saturday in UMass' 71-61 win over Rhode Island after playing with an injured ankle over the past couple of contests.

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY

COLLEGIAN

PT. CLOUDY HIGH: 35 LOW: 23 www.DailyCollegian.com TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 2, 2010

Fighting textbook pirating

Publishing association looks to cease peer-to-peer file sharing

By Tim Jones
Collegian Staff

In an attempt to fight against the illegal pirating of textbooks and study guides online, a group of publishers has taken action against sites that provide unauthorized file-sharing among peers.

The Association of American Publishers, the national trade association of the American book publishing industry, has created a committee that, over the past few months has drafted a set of recommendations they believe that file-sharing websites should abide by.

The recommendations are still being revised and have not yet been shared to the public. However, certain highlights of the draft are mentioned in the most recent newsletter from the group.

The Chronicle of Higher Education said that the group urges websites to, "install filters to block copyrighted material from being posted, send warning notices to users who post copyrighted material, telling them such activity is illegal and create and enforce policies that disable the accounts of users who repeatedly post copyrighted material."

Other recommendations include alternatives that suggest the site "provide links to sites that offer legal methods of buying electronic books and to give publishers lists of books that have been blocked or removed from their site."

One such website, Scribd, has already met with the publishing group twice, but it has not received any of the new recommendations.

Attributor, a company whose FairShare Guardian service tracks the Internet for illegally posted content, has estimated that more than nine million books were downloaded from the 25 sites it traced. Publishers could be losing around $3 billion in revenue.

Peer-to-peer file sharing is a criminal offense on campus. The Office of Information Technologies can trace whether or not a user is misusing the campus' Internet network for illegal file sharing.

Examples of file-sharing websites include LimeWire, as well as anything supported by BitTorrent.

Even with the high prices of textbooks, many students are against the act of pirating.

"It's wrong in every aspect to illegally download a book," said undeclared freshman Ryan Galvin.

Brandon Tower, a senator for the Student Government Association, agreed.

"Without question, action has to be taken, and we're working on that, but it has to be done legitimately," he said.

Tower has taken an initiative to deal with the high prices of books on campus. He created a Facebook group, entitled "UMass WILL lower its TEXTBOOK PRICES; WE the students DEMAND IT," which has over 2,000 members.

Tower is currently putting together a model for a possible student-run co-op which would provide textbooks to students at

See TEXTBOOK on page 2

MCT

Textbooks at the University of Texas at Dallas bookstore in Irving, Texas. Costs for books, supplies and more have soared.

Haiti: more than a natural disaster

Community members discuss nation's historical significance

MCT

On their first day back to school, students sing Haiti's national anthem as the Haitian flag is raised in Port-au-Prince yesterday.

By Michael Fox
Collegian Staff

The recent tragedy in Haiti was analyzed from a historical and academic viewpoint on Friday afternoon by students, faculty, and members of the community. The conference, titled "Haiti: Not (just) a Natural Disaster/ Solidarity with Haiti," was organized by the Center for Latin American, Caribbean, and Latino Studies.

During the conference, several experts on Haiti from the Five College community discussed the historical forces that amplified the scale of the earthquake that struck the country. Andres Fabian Henao Castro, a member of the Latin American, Caribbean, and Latino Open Forum, started the conference speaking to the necessity to understand the human needs involved in reconstruction.

He emphasized that "basic human needs should not take the place of dignity," and that in addition to financial aid, a "construction and reconstruction of human capital and dignity is necessary."

Roberto Márquez, a professor of Caribbean and Latin American studies at Mount Holyoke, spoke about Haiti's place in history, making the argument that Haiti should be placed at the center of the way history of the Americas is taught. He stated the belief that Haiti's revolution in 1804 contains the roots of all following social revolutions. Due to the revolution being led by the nation's former slaves, Márquez stated that the colonial powers proceeded to punish Haiti. His argument was summarized in his belief that "we owe Haiti an enormous historical debt."

UMass Afro-American studies professor Bill Strickland, touched on Haiti's historical connection to the world, including UMass's own connections through W.E.B. Dubois' relationship with the nation. Strickland was followed by Agustin Lao-Montes, a UMass sociology professor who continued telling the history of Haiti's

See HAITI on page 2

Commencement Ball theme up for vote

Collegian News Staff

For the first time in years, seniors will have the option to vote for their favorite Commencement Ball theme.

The 13th annual Commencement Ball, an annual event for graduating seniors and hosted by the Student Alumni Association (SAA), will be held on Friday, May 7, from 9 p.m. to 1 a.m. The formal gala will be one of four possible themes: 'Brazilian Carnival,' 'Fire and Ice,' 'Around the World' and 'Circus.'

Seniors can go on CampusLive.com for the remainder of this week to vote. Once a student votes, they are automatically entered into a drawing to win a pair of complimentary tickets to the ball.

Tickets are normally $25 per person and include admission and refreshments. A dance floor and a disc jockey will be present. There will be a cash bar for students 21 years and older and photographers will be on hand to take posed and candid photos.

Last year's event had maximum capacity of 650 attendees and over 200 students on the wait-list. Due to the popularity of last year's ball, it will be held in the Mullins Center for the first time. The SAA hopes to have 1000 people attend.

COURTESY UMASS LIVE

Message in the bottles

MATTHEW HARRISON/COLLEGIAN

The art exhibit, "Swallowed" by Maggie Nowinski, is made entirely of plastic bottles. It is featured in Hampden Gallery in Southwest until Feb. 23.

UM launches media campaign to erase "ZooMass" stereotype

By Laura Lovett
Collegian Correspondent

Attempting to rid itself from the "ZooMass" party reputation, the University of Massachusetts Amherst has started a new branding campaign, which attempts to create an image that students and alumni can be proud of.

The campaign highlights the academic and research achievements of the University and hopes to promote UMass as a more competitive option for students. There are five main themes of the campaign: smart, wide open, real, entrepreneurial and maroon.

Each of the concepts connects to a different aspect of the school. "Smart" stresses the strong merit of the students and faculty, while "wide open" aims to show the diversity of the academics and professors. "Real" emphasizes a connection to state funding and more accessible education for more. The "entrepreneurial" theme focuses on innovative research and new technology. "Maroon" attempts to promote school spirit by highlighting the sports teams and students events.

"We are trying to position ourselves amongst the upper echelon of schools," said UMass spokesman Edward Blaguszewski. "We are trying to identify some of the elements of the University and then use the attributes in a thematic way."

To illustrate this, banners flashed on the UMass website recently had messages such as, "This is UMass Amherst. We're smart. Our current student body is the smartest in our history. We're brainiacs- and proud of it." These headlines have since been taken down and replaced with an advertisement for a student video contest. The contest asks students to "show the world how SMART we are and win a cash prize."

The campaign targets not only prospective students, but also potential professors and researches, University officials said. In a broadcast e-mail to faculty and staff, Chancellor Robert C. Holub said, "While the pri-

See BRANDING on page 2

ARTS & LIVING

Just Dance...

World-renowned Mark Morris Dance Group will showcase its talents at the Fine Arts Center tonight.

SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS

Minutewomen host Bonnies

Fresh off a victory over URI, UMass hosts St. Bonaventure tonight looking for back-to-back wins in the Atlantic 10.

SEE PAGE 8

EDITORIAL & OPINION

Nick O'Malley reports from Ireland on what's similar over there and what constitutes cultural shock.

SEE PAGE 4

DailyCollegian.com

After last week's Welcome Back Concert, Collegian staffer Garth Brody sat down with musician B.o.B. and asked him "3 Questions."

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXX
ISSUE 12

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
413-545-3500
Fax 413-545-3699
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief William McGuinness
Managing Editor Matt Rocheleau
Managing Web Editor S.P. Sullivan
Business Manager Daniel Jette
Production Manager Michael Sarkes
Night Supervisor Kirsten Swenson
Advertising Manager Michael Tortorici
Advertising Production Amanda Joinson
Arts & Living Editor Shanna Murphy
Comics Editor Andrew Witt
Editorial Editor Alyssa Creamer
News Editor Nick Bush
Sports Editor Jeffrey R. Lamard
Photo Editor Matthew Harrison
IT Manager Victor Jacek
Asst. Business Manager Matt Zolnierz
Assistant Advertising Nicole Jacinto
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Distribution Manager Norman Prowse
Classified Manager Katelyn Tamilio
Asst. Arts & Living Justin Gagnon
Asst. Arts & Living Elyse Horowitz
Asst. Arts & Living Cal Scannell
Assistant Editorial Benjamin Moriarty
Assistant Editorial Michael Phillis
Assistant Editorial Matthew M. Robare
Assistant News Samuel Butterfield
Assistant News Jenn Heshion
Assistant News Chris Shores
Assistant Sports Jay Auer
Assistant Sports David Brinch
Assistant Sports Adam Miller
Assistant Photo Maxwell Sparr
Assistant Photo Samantha Webber
Senior Producer Sara Cody
Senior Producer Pete Rizzo

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1996. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

PRODUCTION CREW
on staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Matt Rocheleau

COPY EDITOR
Chelsea Whitton

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Shaina Jackson

Looking at Haiti from many angles

HAITI from page 1

demarginalization, the degree that societal forces magnified the disaster, and a plan to help the country.

Professor Lao-Montes stated on the value of the conference that, "it is important to educate ourselves first about the importance and significance of Haiti in the struggle for independence," and that, "we have a lot to offer the people of Haiti in our solidarity."

Carolyn Shread, a French teacher at UMass and Mount Holyoke, spoke about the cultural connections between France and Haiti and that the nation's cultural heritage derives recognition.

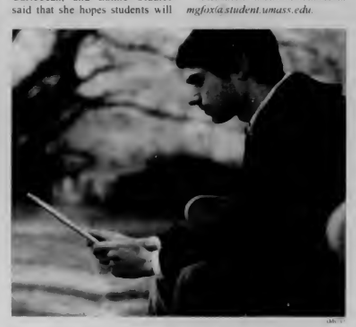
The conference ended with a screening of the Jonathan Demme directed documentary, "The Agronomist." The film related the story of famed Haitian political activist and radio journalist Jean Léopold Dominique. The story stretches from the early days of the Francois Duvalier dictatorship up until the nation's recent political turmoil.

Sona Alvarez, a political science professor and the director of the Center for Latin American, Caribbean, and Latino Studies said that she hopes students will take from the event "an understanding that the best and most effective way to help Haiti is to understand that recovery will be a long term process."

"It is important to understand the history and culture in context in order to truly be in solidarity," she added.

Sophomore philosophy major Caryne Fernandez recognized the impact of the conference saying that she was able to learn "not only should I try to help out, but also understand the history and need of Haiti to earn dignity and respect."

Jessica Theophile, the Vice-President of the Haitian-American Student Alliance, one of the event's co-sponsors, agreed with Fernandez's view.



"I got a different perspective than usual from a few of the speakers here," she said. "It was good to see the academic side of the issue and the wide range of people who showed up for the event."

"I also hope that events like this continue so that people don't become desensitized to the issue," she added. "The people affected by the earthquake are still suffering and it is important to always keep them in mind."

Michael Fox can be reached at mgfox@student.umass.edu.

Dozens of members of the St. Louis Roi church gathered in the parking lot for an evening service in Port-au-Prince, Haiti on Sunday.

A growing number of publishers – both individuals and major textbook companies – are now offering their content digitally.

Student group forms to combat book costs

TEXTBOOK from page 1

a reasonable price through the process of renting.

A clause in the current contract prevents the opening of any business that could possibly threaten the sales of the Textbook Annex.

The contract is set to end at the end of this semester, and the student-formed group plans to ask for revisions to be made. Tower insists that the group does not want to cause any problems for any business.

"I want to be clear, we're not trying to put the [Textbook] Annex out of business," he said. "This is the students' university, and our policy is students first."

"We want to take responsibility for our own education, and that should be our right," he added.

Some professors currently order books through Amherst Books or Food for Thought Books to help the students with the overall cost.

Other websites, such as eBooks, provide various publications online for sale, most of which are usually cheaper than a printed copy.

Students agree that something must be done about textbook costs.

"Prices of books are typically ridiculous," said freshman resource economics major Mikayla Astor. "I went to the store and used all of my cash."

"If the prices were lower, more people would actually be willing to pay for them," she added.

Tim Jones can be reached at tmothyj@student.umass.edu.

Branding campaign looks to attract more alumni support

The UMass home page has in recent weeks highlighted words such as 'smart' and 'real.' The home page is part of a new branding campaign attempting to erase 'party-school' stereotypes.

BRANDING from page 1

mary emphasis for this branding identity is student recruitment, the effort extends to our other constituencies as well, including faculty recruitment, donors, and alumni, legislators and the public."

Some students expressed their frustration with UMass' old reputation and are in supportive of the attempt to change the image.

"Before I came to UMass my parents' friends told me I was going to 'The Zoo,' and that they use to party there in the 70s," said Maggie Clayton, a peer mentor and member of Commonwealth Honors College.

"I felt like I always had to defend the school," she added. "People didn't understand why a smart kid would go to a party school."

University media relations said the campaign also highlights UMass' latest improvement in rankings across the nation, including the school being ranked 106 on Newsweek's college report. According to Blaguszewski, the incoming freshmen class has the highest grade point average in UMass' history. While this may be due to economic hardship causing more students to choose UMass, the data has been incorporated in campaign, and highlights the University's bright future, officials said.

The Alumni Association hopes to bring more support and donors in with the new campaign to reshape UMass' image, said Blaguszewski. He continued by saying that the campaign would hopefully lead alumni to continue their "support in activities and fundraising." This would lead to more involvement from alumni and provide a better experience for current students, he said.

"The evolution of the University has been over many years," he said. "The campaign hopes to illustrate the growth in facilities and academics."

Laura Lovett can be reached at lelovett@student.umass.edu.

UMassAmherst

OPEN FORUMS

Meet the candidates for the position of Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs and Campus Life:

Dr. Jean Kim
Interim Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs and Campus Life
University of Massachusetts Amherst
February 4, 2010, Campus Center 168C
9:30-10:15 A.M. Student Open Session
10:30-11:15 A.M. Open Session

Dr. Margaret Jablonski
Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs
University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill
February 5, 2010, Campus Center 168C
2:30-3:15 P.M. Student Open Session
3:30-4:15 P.M. Open Session

Dr. Michael Laliberte
Vice President for Student Affairs
Boise State University
February 8, 2010, Campus Center 168C
11:15-12:00 P.M. Student Open Session
4:00-4:45 P.M. Open Session

Dr. Kevin Charles
Assistant Vice President for Student Affairs/ Student and Academic Services
University of New Hampshire, Durham
February 9, 2010, Campus Center 168C
3:15-4:00 P.M. Student Open Session
4:15-5:00 P.M. Open Session

http://www.umass.edu/umhome/vcstuaf

Budget battle moves to Web front at UNLV

CUT WATCH

The Rebel Yell (UNLV)
via College News Network

This is the first in an occasional series featuring stories from other college newspapers regarding financial crises and budget cuts.

UNLV is facing an 8 percent budget cut in addition to the previous cuts in past months, threatening class selection, student services and programs and part-time professors.

Suken Shah, a part-time professor with a master's in business administration, created a Facebook group titled "SaveUNLV," where members can support the university and protest the budget cuts from the state.

"I want to have a big movement… have people sharing the same voice," Shah said. "[The voice] says 'no more cuts to higher education.'"

Shah said his reason for organizing the group was that people cannot always go to rallies and sit through the duration of a protest, but with this group they can still show their support for the cause.

"The governor needs to realize you can't sacrifice higher education," he said.

According to Shah, the local news is what sparked his interest in starting the group: he heard a news anchor saying that the higher education officials were "rolling over" and letting cuts happen.

For Shah, concern is not only found in his position being eliminated but also in the fact that there is less class selection for students.

Shah explained that limited class selection can result in extension of graduation time.

UNLV President Neal Smatresk said that there are two things to focus on in order to prevent further cuts, the first being community interest.

"If people care about this, I say let their feelings known to lawmakers," Smatresk said.

The second is to make it clear that cuts are not healthy for the university, as people are currently coming back and enrolling in record numbers.

Smatresk pointed out that the proposed cut would be taken on top of reductions the system has already suffered.

"[Higher education] gave more than any other agency," Smatresk said. "Why do we have to suffer again?"

Gerry Bomotti, the senior vice president for Finance and Business at UNLV, gave a bigger picture of the budget cut situation.

"The overall context is that UNLV has had cuts for the past four years," Bomotti said, "and if you just add this latest 8 percent estimate to that total, you get a cumulative reduction number of nearly $57 million in base funding – a very significant number."

Bomotti also mentioned that the university has struggled to meet the previous cuts, in particular the ones effective this fiscal year.

With the very real possibility of programs and departments being eliminated or reduced, Bomotti said the Joint Evaluation Team has been working on program elimination or reduction options for several months and they will be sending a report and recommendation to Smatresk before the end of this month.

"The most difficult thing about this additional cut is that the reserve and flexibility [in the budget] are all gone to cushion the blow," said Student Body President Adam Cronis.

Cronis described the budget situation as very, very ugly for students and the university community.

Shah advocates looking elsewhere for potential budget reduction and sparing public education.

"We have to look deeper at other areas that can be cut around the state instead of higher education," Shah said. "We have to look for other ways to generate revenue."

With an economic forum coming in February, Smatresk urges others to, "stay tuned."

The "SaveUNLV" Facebook page was created to attempt to counter a proposed 8 percent budget cut from the school. The page urges fans to "go viral and take back our school."

Waitress sex appeal in college town proves to be profitable

The Daily Reveille (LSU)
via College News Network

Angel Montero dreamed of owning a coffee shop with whispering patrons, dim lights and relaxing background music.

But she never expected it would take a drive-through window, and perhaps more importantly, the exposed mid-riffs and suntanned curves of her bikini-clad employees to help her business boom after only a month.

When Montero heard of a similar bikini drive-thru in Seattle, she decided it was a great twist to add to her coffee shop. The Bare Bean drive-thru, located in the shopping center at the intersection of Perkins Road and Acadian Thruway, opened on Dec. 3 and offers Louisiana's first bikini baristas.

The baristas' uniforms consist of a black Victoria's Secret bikini top and a pair of black Aerie bottoms of the girls' choosing.

The drive-thru is seeking to hire "Attractive all-American girls for barista positions," according to The Bare Bean Web site.

"Once we put the ad in the paper, the phones were ringing off the hook," Montero said. However intriguing the uniform of this coffee shop may be, Montero said the skimpy outfits aren't what she would like the main attraction to be.

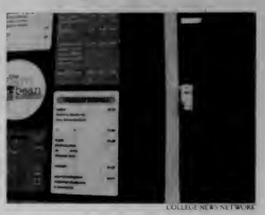
Mass communication freshman Jewel Borel said she first heard of The Bare Bean when her friend was hired. Borel said the pay is competitive, and while some people will have a problem with the shop's theme, she feels completely comfortable in her uniform.

"I feel fortunate enough to be comfortable in my body, and I don't portray the bikini in a negative way," Borel said.

While the bikini is a gimmick, Borel said the main focus of the business is its commitment to earth-friendly products and personable, friendly employees.

"To be honest, you are going to make more tips, but you have to not sell the bikini, you have to sell your coffee and your personality," she said.

"We just want to put out a good product," she said. "We've gotten really great feedback on the coffee."



The Bare Bean's green exterior is designed to reflect the overall earth-friendly theme of the shop. The shop promises all natural, organic coffee and tea products made to order; however, this earthy friendly dedication doesn't just stop at the products.

The Bean's cups and straws are made of corn, and the shop's used coffee grinds and filters are composted. The girls' uniforms are set to change to the color green in spring to further emphasize the theme.

Montero said she already had five Louisiana companies approach her interested in franchising the unique shop.

"We really want to keep it young and fun," she said. "That's one of the reasons we would like to keep it in college towns and beach destinations."

While the first of its kind in Louisiana, The Bare Bean is not the first college town business to couple their product with sex appeal.

COLLEGE NEWS NETWORK

Jewel Borel, a freshman at LSU, serves coffees, teas and more at The Bare Bean.

Lance Porter, who teaches advertising creative strategy and campaigns in the Manship School of Mass Communication, said sex has always been used in business as a means to capture people's attention, and this kind of advertising will continue to be popular. "It's harder to sell things nowadays," Porter said. "It all goes back to who can be the most provocative."

Happy's Irish Pub in downtown Baton Rouge is known for waitresses who wear an untraditional version of a catholic schoolgirl uniform. The bartenders' attire consists of a short, pleated plaid skirt and a small, white top knotted to expose midriffs.

"I definitely feel comfortable in my uniform," said Jolie Drouant, a recent University graduate who currently works at Happy's. "I think it's fun. It's like Halloween. Every time I come to work I get to dress up."

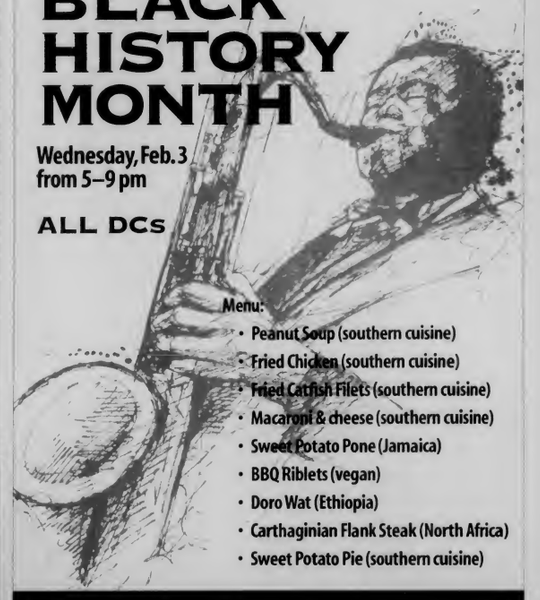
Drouant said she doesn't think the revealing nature of the uniforms reflect negatively on the women employees. She said she wouldn't have applied for the position if she thought it would make her uncomfortable.

Mila Robichaux, Walk-On's Bistreaux and Bar waitress and business sophomore, said she also doesn't view establishments that choose to emphasize sex appeal through uniforms in a negative light.

"I feel like it's no problem. I think it's your decision if you choose to work there, and if you think highly of yourself, that's all that matters," Robichaux said.

The Walk-On's waitress uniform consists of a black top, and the girls are free to choose the type of black bottoms they wear.

Caroline Howell, Walk On's waitress and psychology sophomore, said waitresses decide to wear either tight shorts or longer ones. However, she said, most waitresses do choose more revealing shorts.



According to Walk-On's waitress and biology sophomore Nina LeBlanc, uniforms that emphasize sex appeal by exposing more skin help earn higher tips than other restaurants. "I feel like I make more money because of it," LeBlanc said. "It's a lot of factors really, but it definitely helps.

Vusi Mahlasela
in concert
Friday, February 12 - 8 p.m.
Buckley Recital Hall, Amherst College
Tickets: FREE
A limited number of tickets will be available, reserve NOW!
Five College and G.A. ticket reservations call:
413-542-5773
A.C. ticket reservations:
www.amherst.edu/campuslife/keefe/calendar

About Vusi Mahlasela
www.vusimahlasela.com

UMass Dining Celebrates...
BLACK HISTORY MONTH
Wednesday, Feb. 3
from 5–9 pm
ALL DCs

Menu:
• Peanut Soup (southern cuisine)
• Fried Chicken (southern cuisine)
• Fried Catfish Filets (southern cuisine)
• Macaroni & cheese (southern cuisine)
• Sweet Potato Pone (Jamaica)
• BBQ Riblets (vegan)
• Doro Wat (Ethiopia)
• Carthaginian Flank Steak (North Africa)
• Sweet Potato Pie (southern cuisine)

SAMPLE FABULOUS DISHES!
ENJOY LIVELY MUSIC!

A World of Choices YOUR CAMPUS MEAL PLAN YCMP
The Best Value ON CAMPUS RESIDENTIAL MEAL PLAN RMP
UMASS DINING
UMassAmherst
umassdining.com
facebook.com/umassdining
Restaurants & Institutions Ivy

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 2, 2010

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
—Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Union: one Obama: zero

Alex Perry

Barack Obama set out to restore the American public's wavering confidence and trust both in him and in government during his State of the Union address on Wednesday, but all the President really did was raise the question of how such an eloquent orator could be such a terribly confused leader.

Many political experts and strategists predicted that Obama would take this opportunity to address the nation and use it to display that he intended to move to the center of the aisle. They predicted he would distance himself from the liberal policies that Americans have made clear they are fed up with. The two gubernatorial losses in states he commanded in 2008 in combination with the loss of the U.S. Senate seat in Massachusetts has put every Democrat in Washington on alert that they are on borrowed time.

He probably figured the lies got him elected so he may as well stick to them at this point.

Given these facts, it seemed logical for Obama to abandon his failing far-left policy ideas during the speech – but Obama did nothing of the sort. In fact, he insisted that his government press forth not only with the unpopular health care bill, but also with a climate change bill and even more stimulus spending.

Obama didn't show he was prepared to change; he instead showed that he is completely convinced that everything he has done thus far is working out great. He took the State of the Union address to give a campaign speech talking up all his plans. Just look at these ludicrous things he said during the speech.

He gushed about how he met his campaign promise to cut taxes when he said, "We cut taxes for 95 percent of working families ... And we haven't raised income taxes by a single dime on a single person. Not a single dime."

What he fails to mention is that the deficit has hit an all-time high under his administration. Anyone can cut taxes and blow the budget up. Why is he bragging about that? That is like me bragging about buying something on my credit card and saying I spent no cash. I would still owe the money. Obama still needs to regain the lost revenue. If he balanced the budget and cut taxes, it would be a different story. Sadly though, the nation's public debt is now at about 67 percent of GDP, up from 37 percent of GDP in 2007 during those miserable George W. Bush years.

He boasted about the jobs he has saved.

"Because of the steps we took, there are about two million Americans working right now who would otherwise be unemployed," he said.

This statement about how many jobs he has "saved" really clued me in to how out of touch Obama is right now. I won't even get on Obama for exaggerating the total jobs his stimulus bill has "created or saved" because I don't need to in order to rip up this statement. What should be concerning is the 4.1 million people who lost their jobs during Obama's first year in office. That's the biggest single-year job loss of all time. The unemployment rate has soared from 7.7 percent when he took office to 10 percent. This is hardly a time for him to boast about the jobs he has saved. Consider a report made by his own administration, before the stimulus was passed, entitled "The Job Impact of the American Recovery and Reinvestment Plan," which projected that if there was no action at all taken by government the unemployment rate would rise to 8.5 percent in 2009 and peak at 9 percent in 2010. But the government spent nearly $800 billion on the stimulus package. Apparently, that only made matters worse.

The stimulus did not do what it was set out to do. It was created to stop the unemployment rate from reaching 8 percent. It didn't do that. What it has done is put our nation in the biggest deficit it has ever faced.

But Obama was not done. He even went back to his classic promise from his nomination acceptance speech as to how he will pay for all his spending. You remember the promise. He vowed he would pay for all his new spending by, "closing corporate loopholes and tax havens."

"I will also go through the federal budget, line by line, eliminating programs that no longer work and making the ones we do need work better and cost less," he added.

Obama went back at it again on Wednesday when he said, "We will continue to go through the budget, line by line, page by page, to eliminate programs that we can't afford and don't work. We've already identified $20 billion in savings for next year."

I'm still laughing at the original promise from his nomination acceptance speech, and I continue to get my laughs in now. I'm glad he's still using the same campaign rhetoric over a year later. He probably figured the lies got him elected, so he may as well stick to them at this point.

The problem is the lies aren't fooling anyone anymore. No one believes Obama has the solutions to health care. No one believes the record deficit spending has been efficient or successful. The belief in Obama has vanished. Words will not solve Obama's problems anymore. He has to restore the trust of America by creating success through strong bipartisan solutions, not empty words or doomed-to-fail liberal policies.

Regrettably, Obama has not realized any of this. Many of us now realize that as good of an orator as he is, he still lacks the leadership and ideas to solve our nation's problems. The State of the Union address did nothing to change that disastrous reality.

Alex Perry is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at amperry@student.umass.edu.

Ireland has past and future

Nick O'Malley

Blackrock Castle Observatory, built in the 16th Century, sits just a couple kilometers outside of the city of Cork. Constructed in an effort to ward off pirates, the structure is one of many area landmarks that has survived for hundreds of years.

Visitors to the castle can witness the observatory, the rich history of the castle and, at least on Saturday, Bruce Willis going to a space opera and Chris Tucker wearing a dress.

For those of you unfamiliar with "The Fifth Element," I should probably explain that the Blackrock Castle Observatory was featuring a showing of the 1997 sci-fi action adventure movie in which Gary Oldman takes orders from a mysterious glowing rock of evil that is somehow capable of bank transactions.

While the prospect of watching a movie in a castle is ludicrously awesome in its own right, it's strikingly indicative of an overlying theme that's present in modern day Ireland and especially in the city's urban areas.

Ireland is a country that is steeped in tradition and believes heavily in keeping the tradition alive. But at the same time, it's not backwards either. As such, the end result is an odd symbiosis between the old and new in the cities, where the shops and offices break for lunch and close at 5 p.m., except for Tesco Supermarket, which is open until 10 p.m.

It's strange, seeing the old and new side-by-side and seeing it work. Sure, I buy my bread and cereal at Tesco, but I get my cold cuts and vegetables at the nearby English Market, where dozens of butchers, grocers, and peddlers of all kinds cluster in an area which is oddly reminiscent of Diagon Alley.

In Ireland, for every nuance that comes from globalization, there's a tick, an old trend that refuses the go away, or simply an American concept that was never picked up.

The system itself is a change of pace compared to what we're used to back in the United States, where in most cases the newest, most-efficient model thrives while the old stays curl up and die. Not so much on this side of the pond. In Ireland, for every nuance that comes from globalization, there's a tick, an old trend that refuses the go away, or simply an American concept that was never picked up.

Supermarkets are similar, but bags aren't free. Be prepared to spend 22 cents per grocery bag if you weren't smart enough to bring a backpack or some reusable bags (and be prepared to do your own bagging).

Pubs go in a few directions. First, there are places like An Brog, Old Oak and - a personal favorite - Mulligans, that are what one would expect from a pub in Ireland. On the other hand, there's Fred Zeppelins (home to Jäger Thursdays) and Captain America's.

When it comes to politics, sexual orientation or pop culture, the Irish are often on the same wavelength as Americans, contrary to some belief. But when it comes to religion, watch out.

The Irish are Catholic, end of story. A piece of advice: never call someone an Irish Protestant. According to my roommate, your friends will want to fight you for calling someone such a thing.

Of course, this mixture of globalization and tradition often leaves me completely lost, especially by my Ireland-born-and-raised roommates. When a topic comes up, I have to take a stab at whether it's something I'm familiar with, something foreign, or something I probably should've figured (drinking). In most cases, though, I'm dead wrong, leaving me looking stupid while getting a "what the hell's wrong with you" look.

Do they have soap operas in Ireland? Yeah. Dominos? Yup. Lady Gaga everywhere? Absolutely. But I make one peanut butter and Fluff sandwich, and all of a sudden I'm the crazy Yankee with the wacky marshmallow spread. Sure, I had to get the Fluff shipped to me from back home (thanks, Mom), but I'm not the one who considered blood pudding part of a "full breakfast."

Such a dichotomy often leads to interesting choices. Sure, Subway's awesome and delicious, but the place next door sells Nutella crepes, and it always has something new on the table. At the same time, though, you might be better off grabbing some Doritos instead of the corn-based monstrosities that are Hula Hoops.

Transitioning from living in the States is an on-and-off process. There's little culture shock. It's more of a nudge you get while walking down the frighteningly narrow streets. At a glance, Cork is not much different from Boston, and in some cases – Northampton. But every day, there's a flash of hundreds of years of tradition that refuses to curl up and rot away.

Like ordering a pint in a country that uses the metric system.

Nick O'Malley is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu.

Five Reasons Why:

You shouldn't be excited by the State of the Union

1) Today: trains. Tomorrow: horse-drawn buggies.

2) What's the big deal over the opposition party, um, opposing the ruling party?

3) Bank bailouts might have been as popular as root canals, but Jigsaw has a higher approval rating than Congress.

4) The obvious way to end unemployment is to hire everyone for the new healthcare bureacracy.

5) Even Vermont is talking about seccesion–and they gave Obama his third largest margin of victory.

Making connections to Caulfield in NYC

Mike Fox

One opinion that I've heard repeated ad nauseam is the idea that requiring someone to read a book dampens their opinion of it. So of course, we go through high school being forced to read a number of fantastic books, but because we had to do some asinine assignment while reading them, our enjoyment of the literature bottoms out. This seems to ruin Shakespeare and a score of American classics for so many people. One book though seems to be the exception to this.

"The Catcher in the Rye" is a book that each generation seems to adopt as its own, connecting with protagonist Holden Caulfield's frustration and rage at both his parent's generation and the mass of "phonies" that he sees everywhere. The idea that "no one seems to understand" has never been so universally put down to paper. With these core beliefs, Caulfield goes through an emotionally trying three days in New York City where extreme examples of otherwise ordinary occurrences pushes him to the edge and a mental breakdown.

J.D. Salinger, the author who was a synonym for recluse, died Wednesday.

He wrote a score of other short stories and has supposedly uncountable unpublished writings since the beginning of his into-reclusiveness back in 1965, but there's no doubt "The Catcher in the Rye" will stand, as it has for the past several decades, as his main contribution to our literature.

Back when I read the book, I understood it for it basic themes, but found my connection with Caulfield (by all arguments a complete basket case) lacking. However, and probably fitting, I went through my own adventure in New York City last weekend.

Caulfield's experience starts after his expulsion from private school. When he returns home to the city, he decides to stay at a rundown hotel and chase after girls instead of returning to his parent's apartment like any normal person would.

Like Caulfield, I made my decision rather impulsively, buying a $72 bus ticket to meet up with a close friend visiting from far away to participate in a community service event that helped count homeless people in the city. The service was a fantastic part of the experience, but I truly went because I was chasing emotions that I felt for my friend.

Caulfield passes his time reflecting on the role he sees himself playing in society. He desires to be a defender of the helpless and protector of innocence, symbolized by the reoccurring image he has of being a metaphorical "catcher in the rye" in which he protects children playing in a field from running off a cliff. Slowly, over his trip, he realizes so much in life is out of his control and slips deeper into depression.

I myself like to imagine playing some sort of defender role in society, but I realized while counting in an industrial part of the Bronx and finding few people at all in the course of four hours, that you can't always play some grand and exciting role, often you only contribute a small part.

Towards the end of the book, he relays his idea to move out west and start a new life with his sister, the one person that he genuinely connects with. But eventually he scraps his plan to move altogether. The book ends with him taking her to the park where he watches her ride a carousel.

At the end of my trip, I took a chance and shared my emotions with my friend only to find them rebuffed due to the vast distance that normally separates us. At this point Caulfield one upped me, because I found myself unable to compromise my emotions with my desires and possibly hurt a relationship with someone in the process.

At the end of my trip, I took a chance and shared my emotions with my friend only to find them rebuffed due to the vast distance that normally separates us.

Sometimes in life, we have to take those crazy chances on seemingly insane and impulsive adventures. The emotions that we feel on them help lead us on a path to discovery and the ability to reconcile our mistakes with the direction that life is progressing in.

Caulfield's character ends the book in a sanatorium where he is learning how to cope with his feelings of alienation in the world. Some interpretations say this is a positive note; others view it as him losing his individuality and becoming one of the very phonies that he despises.

Having gone through my own fool-hardy trip and coming to some realizations, I see it simply as Caulfield learning to deal with life. It's possible to maintain one's individuality and authenticity without raging against the world. As long as you feel emotions, you can maintain who you are. Maybe Caulfield was a phony himself for the way he judged others.

Thank you, J.D. Salinger. You may have only written a few books, but the depth of what you gave the world still persists. As long as one feels emotion, they'll never be a phony.

Mike Fox is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mgfox@student.umass.edu.

Join the conversation. Write for Ed/Op. Let your voice be heard!

This week introducing Photo-Ops at: dailycollegian.com/category/blogs/ed-op

See something you don't like? Don't tweet it, write a letter to the editor!

Send letters to the editor, column submissions and columnist applications to editorial@dailycollegian.com.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 2, 2010

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Mark Morris dance group to take UM stage

By Andrew Cogan
Collegian Correspondent

The Mark Morris Dance Group, an internationally acclaimed dance company is coming to the University of Massachusetts tonight to perform its innovative blend of live music and modern dance.

Formed in 1980, the group performed for the first time the same year in New York City and has since toured all over the United States and Europe. The Mark Morris Dance Group performs regularly in New York City, Boston, and Seattle, as well as in Belgium where it spent three years in residence at the Théâtre Royal de la Monnaie in Brussels, from 1988 to 1991, according to the dance company's official website.

The company's first national exposure came in 1986 when it made a television program for the Public Broadcasting Service series "Dance in America". Earning recognition for its imagination and artistry, it has impressed audiences everywhere with shows that are highly visual and musical.

The creative vision behind the group's inventive performances is Mark Morris, an American dancer, choreographer and director. He studied various forms of dance in Seattle before establishing his own company in New York City. He received the Laurence Olivier Award for Outstanding Achievement in Dance in 2002, and is also noted for his ability to appeal to mainstream audiences.

In Morris's dances, music is more than a backdrop – it plays a uniquely foundational role. One of the group's most outstanding aspects is its commitment to live musical accompaniment, a feature of every performance on its international touring schedule. Morris is known for working with world-leading orchestras and opera companies including Yo-Yo Ma, who performed Bach's Third Cello Suite in the1997 Emmy Award-winning film, "Falling Down Stairs." Ma also contributed his talents in the 2002 Kolam, alongside Indian composer Zakir Hussein and jazz-pianist Ethan Iverson.

The Mark Morris Dance Group is renowned for its challenging choreography and the rigorous structure of its dances. Morris's approach recalls classical forms of dance, such as ballet, and reapplies them in a modern setting.

Morris and his group have received many accolades, including the Critics' Circle National Dance Award for Best Modern Choreography and Best Foreign Dance Company in 2002.

The Mark Morris Dance Group, coming to the University of Massachusetts Fine Arts Center this evening, is known globally for incorporating live orchestra music into its performances, as well as outstanding dance routines of all styles.

At tonight's show, audience members can look forward to a three-part program featuring "Looky", a combination which premiered in 2007 set to music composed by Kyle Gann; "All Fours," which premiered in 2003, with music composed by Bela Bartok and "V" which premiered in 2001, featuring music by Robert Schumann.

The Mark Morris Dance Group will take the stage in the Fine Arts Center at 7:30 p.m.

For more information or for ticket prices and student discounts, visit the events calendar at www.umass.edu.

Andrew Cogan can be reached at acogan@student.umass.edu.

Veg out with farm-fresh foods from community agriculture

By Carlos Alcala
McClatchy Newspapers

From a handful of farms 15 years ago, the community-supported agriculture concept has grown to as many as 5,000 nationwide.

People sign up for a CSA, pay a regular fee and receive a weekly box of farm goods, generally delivered somewhere in their own neighborhood.

The farmer gets a dependable source of income and a dependable destination for the produce. The buyer gets vegetables that are usually organic and, as a rule, far fresher than anything you can get at the store.

The concept of reducing a family's environmental footprint may be a motivation, too.

For the beginner, though, you have to first decide whether a farm box is right for you at all. It isn't for everyone. That's where this story aims to help you.

"Eating this way is a change for people," said Paul Underhill, one of the owners of Terra Firma Farms in Winters, Calif. "We're not trying to duplicate the way people are already eating."

Most people, Underhill said, use "the concept that everything is available all the time. They're going to go into a store. If they want a pineapple, it's going to be there."

There's no pineapple in the Terra Firma box. No tomatoes in January, either.

Subscribing to a local farm box carries the implication that you'll be happy with beets and chard when that produce is in season.

It also implies you'll be happy cooking beets and chard.

Like shoppers at farmers markets, customers who get a box straight from the farm are people willing to peel, chop and sauté.

"We live in an a la carte world," said Dan Best, coordinator for Certified Farmers Markets. He means that many families eat separate meals together by zapping processed meals to fit each person's preferences.

Most of what you get from the farmers market or a CSA box requires preparation – the kind of prep that implies cookbook, not microwave oven manual.

Knowing that much of the modern generation has lost touch with its inner Fannie Farmer, many farms supply a recipe with each box of produce.

Terra Firma's subscribers even face a quiz that asks how often they cook.

It's not a judgment.

It's just a way to help you determine what size box to order.

Some farms have one-size-fits-all boxes, but some, like Terra Firma, offer small, medium and large boxes to try to suit different needs.

The quiz provides a suggested size based on how many people live in the house, how many of them are vegetarians, how often you cook dinner and whether there are vegetable haters in the house.

At Terra Firma, most people end up with medium, and only one in 10 gets a large box, Underhill said.

The box size is just one factor in deciding which CSA to use. You should also consider:

WHAT THEY OFFER:

Some farms fill boxes with only what they grow, while others swap products with nearby farmers to offer greater variety.

Those with Web sites often list typical offerings, either month by month or by season.

Vegetables constitute the core of most boxes, but some farms offer flour, bread, flowers, fruit or nuts - sometimes at an additional cost.

If you're eager to try new things, try a CSA that offers exotic (but locally grown) fruits and veggies.

It isn't for every farm, though. Underhill said Terra Firma hasn't offered anything much more unusual than baby bok choy.

"For the most part we don't look at our subscribers as guinea pigs for new food products," he said.

REPUTATION:

Longevity may imply reliability. A CSA that has been around for a while has probably figured out the right way to do things.

A good reputation provides word-of-mouth customers.

Most of Terra Firma's new members are referred by current members, Underhill said. The farm doesn't advertise.

Another way to gauge reputation is to look at what kind of consumer uses a particular CSA.

Terra Firma supplies two noted East Bay restaurants, Oliveto and Chez Panisse, presumably picky customers.

Other local CSA farms also supply some of the best restaurants in Northern California.

LOCATION:

Not every CSA is available everywhere.

Also, check delivery locations. If it's not somewhere you can get to easily, you may want to choose a more convenient CSA.

PRICE:

While it may be obvious that price is a factor, it can be hard to judge the value of your box without some experience.

Box contents will vary from farm to farm and season to season, so a cheaper box is not necessarily a better value.

That said, it may be helpful to know that Terra Firma, for example, charges $59 monthly for a small produce box, $98 for a medium box and $132 for a large box.

The small box typically includes about seven items with a couple of additional items for medium, and yet more variety for the large box.

Quantities of each item will vary by box size allowing a consumer to either make more recipes or feed larger families.

EXTRAS:

You may find you just like the atmosphere, attitude or attributes of one farm more than another.

Full Belly Farm holds farm fun days that it calls Hoes Down. Soil Born is trying to make sure innercity families get good produce. Good Humus is a family farm. DeVoDa Gardens grows its produce in the yards of some members.

Newsletters of varying quality come with some CSA's boxes.

Underhill's newsletter steps back to look at issues that frame the context for what's growing and going on at his farm.

In the end, it's some of those issues - resource scarcity, environmental awareness, food quality - that draw many people to community-supported agriculture.

Is it right for you?

Only you can decide.

Fresh vegetables from community supported agriculture are provided by local growers and bring diversity but also create cooking challenges with new vegetables, fruit and herbs.

COURTESY WWW.SONYPICTURES.COM

Blondes and breasts are the main attraction in this slasher film, a perfect mindless distraction for those who are alone and angry this Valentine's Day season.

Ten horror movies to make your wounded heart scream

By Justin Gagnon
Collegian Staff

Planning on being alone this Valentine's Day? Seeking vengeance on an ex? Looking to just drown in your sorrows by watching coeds get mutilated for your viewing pleasure? Luckily for you (and your ex), you don't even have to leave your living room to get your gory fix. Here are the top 10 horror movies that will surely leave your broken heart temporarily relieved by an evil smirk.

10. "My Bloody Valentine 3-D" – The only reason this made the list was the title. The movie is terrible. Don't let the 3-D feature tease you into watching this movie. Slashers are inherently bad movies, but this one makes "Leprechaun: Back 2 tha Hood" look like "Gone With the Wind."

9. "Prom Night" – Maybe you're afraid of a psychopath following you and you're friends out of pure sexual and morbid tension. Maybe you're the sexually and morbidly tense one. Either way, that's what this horrible movie is all about, and it just might be what you need to appease your deranged needs.

8. "Carrie" – If you're considering taking someone out on a date, you probably shouldn't end your night like Carrie did. However, if you're thinking about it, try to resist and just watch this Stephen King classic instead.

7. "The Hitcher" – Don't pick up hitchhikers – or should you? The latest version of the film features a love-struck couple heading off to a romantic spring break getaway, but are stopped short by a mysterious and disturbed man who calls himself John Ryder. The film is gripping, tense and almost believable. Watching a solid relationship be literally torn apart by a hitchhiker just might be what you need to feel better about your crappy or non-existent love life.

6. "Zombie Strippers" – If high school sexual education classes taught us anything, it's that if you have sex, you will die. Starring Robert Englund and Jenna Jamson, this epic film is pretty self-explanatory. Stay away from the strip club on V-Day, the strippers could be looking for dollar bills.

5. "Bride of Chucky" – Everyone's favorite bad boy killer toy is brought back to life by a former human lover of his. After failed attempts to seduce her, he punishes her by inflicting the same curse on her that left his soul trapped in a creepy-looking toy. Talk about a bad romance...

4. "Vacancy" – Cheap hotels are classic hot spots for serious couples, and anyone who has ever been to one has feared being secretly watched, attacked and even murdered. Well, maybe not, but regardless, the thought of being with the love of your life and having the aforementioned nightmares actually happen is pretty terrifying. Instead of spending a night of romantic passion at the Knotty Pine Motel and potentially being slaughtered, put in this thriller and watch it happen to someone else.

3. "Swimfan" – Sketchy obsession via the Internet is hot right now. Facebook and MySpace took online creeping to a new level, but Madison from "Swimfan" was ahead of the social-media-stalking curve. With sick thoughts and an uncontrollable fixation on winning her idol's heart, she proves that love knows no boundaries, including death.

2. "Psycho" – If you're a guy and the love of your life happens to not be a young lady but rather your mother, what better way to spend your night than indulging in the most famous mother-son love story to hit the silver screen? Norman Bates just might've taken his obsession a bit too far in this classic horror movie.

1. "American Psycho" – Nothing says "I love you" like putting a nail gun to the head of your date. The movie was very well received by critics, which is pretty telling with its genre in mind. It explores the mind of a deranged womanizer who dates, and consequently brutally murders his love interests. Have a fear of commitment? This might just be the sick love story you're looking for.

Justin Gagnon can be reached at jgagnon@dailycollegian.com.

Wildcats win overtime game

HOCKEY EAST from page 8

College's conference-leading defense has surrendered just 45 goals in conference play.

UNH wins overtime thriller

Merrimack came ready to play on Saturday against conference-leading UNH, but could not steal a victory on their opponent's ice. The Wildcats improved to 12-3-3 in league play with a 4-3 overtime win at the Whittemore Center.

The Warriors snapped the Wildcat's 11-game conference win streak the previous night in front of their home crowd. The loss was avenged when Paul Thompson of UNH scored off his own rebound with 11.1 seconds remaining in the extra period of play. Merrimack goaltender Andrew Braithwaite had a solid performance, stopping 43 shots, including 10 in overtime, but could not save the one that made the difference.

Merrimack trailed 3-2 entering the third period, but knotted up the score with a Chris Barton power-play goal in the opening minutes, while Barton also had a goal in the second period to cut the Warrior deficit to a single goal. UNH goalie Brian Foster finished with 26 saves, including one in the overtime period. Merrimack capitalized on power-play opportunities, going 2-for-3 on the odd-man advantages. New Hampshire is currently ranked 12th in the country, while Merrimack sits towards the bottom of the Hockey East.

Talented youth stepping up

The high-powered Hockey East has seen a lot of impressive talent this season. However, the top players in the conference comprise of a majority of juniors and underclassmen. The top 10 overall point-scorers in the conference contain four juniors, four sophomores and one freshman. Only one senior, Bobby Butler of UNH sits in the top 10. Last season, five seniors and one junior led the conference in points scored, likewise the year before, with five seniors and two juniors holding the top spots in scoring.

Junior forward James Marcou of UMass is atop the leader board with 26 points along with fellow teammate and sophomore Casey Wellman standing fourth in points. As the Hockey East tournament approaches, the young talents are sure to be a factor in their team's success.

Michael Counos can be reached at mcounos@student.umass.edu.

JEFF BERNSTEIN COLLEGIAN

The Wildcats, pictured here against the Minutemen earlier this season, defeated Merrimack in overtime at home this past weekend. Paul Thompson scored with 11.1 seconds to play in extra time to lead UNH to victory over the Warriors.

UM finishes fourth in the pole vault, sets new UMass record, Minutewomen take third overall

By Michael Wood
Collegian Staff

In their biggest meet of the season thus far, the Massachusetts men's track and field team finished fourth overall out of 18 teams in Boston over the weekend.

The Minutemen were led by junior Sean Busch, who took first place in the pole vault, while setting a UMass record in the process. Busch reached a height of 15 feet, five inches, good for second-all time in school history, ensuring himself a trip to the New England championship in the pole vault event.

For the third straight week, junior Darius Velez and senior Tyler Cotto finished first in their events. Velez won the 55-meter dash in 6.48 seconds and Cotto finished first in the 55-meter hurdles with a time of 7.6 seconds.

In addition to Busch, the Minutemen were able to qualify an additional six members for the New England championship at the end of the season. In the 500-meter dash, Joseph Doyle placed fifth by running it in one minute, six seconds. Junior Scott VanderMolen also qualified in his second event this season, this time adding the 800-meter. He finished in one minute, 55 seconds and has now qualified in both the 800-meter and the mile run. Finally, in the 4x400-meter relay, Andrew O'Donnell, Zachary Koncki, Michael McDonough and Daniel Schwartz combined for second place with their time of 3:22.

The Minutemen will travel to New Haven, Conn. on Friday for the first time this season. There they will compete in the Giegengack Invitational, a two-day event which concludes Saturday.

The Massachusetts women's track and field team came away with third place overall in a field of 17 teams in Boston over the weekend.

Senior Lisa Wilson paced the team for a second straight week, contributing 15 of the Minutewomen's 82 points. In the shot put, she took first place with her mark of 45-00.50, good enough for sixth place in the event. She later added a fourth place finish in the weight throw with a mark of 54-02.75.

"Lisa led us last year, and she has continued to pace us this year," UMass coach Julie LaFreniere said. "She has done extremely well so far this season. When she's not setting personal or UMass records, she's within an inch or so away. The weight throw has been her nemesis in the past, but not anymore."

The UMass relay teams delivered impressive performances. In the 4x400-meter relay, Brittany Bakanowski, Michelle Jenssen, Holly Heinricher and Erica Unger combined to finish in second place with a time of 3:55. Also in the distance medley, the team of Karen Roa, Sarah Kelley, Courtney Baldwin and Gina Perno crossed the finish line in 12:06, good enough for second place and a trip to the ECAC championship at the end of the season.

"Courtney and Karen have been outstanding," LaFreniere said. "Courtney anchored the medley for us this time around, and the rest of the team had great performances all around."

After rigorous training this past week in practice, LaFreniere said she was somewhat surprised to see her team respond so well in competition.

"I kind of beat them up this past week," said LaFreniere. "We're trying to get them used to competing when they're tired. We're aiming for Atlantic 10's. I didn't expect some of them to bounce back and set personal or school bests, and to see them react so well is encouraging."

The Minutewomen will again travel with the men's team, heading to Giegengack Invitational on Friday.

Michael Wood can be reached at mcwood@student.umass.edu.

Xavier downs Rams

Saunders helps Dukes get past Hawks at home, URI starts, finishes strong against Colonials

By Pete Vasquez
Collegian Staff

Sunday's one-sided affair between Xavier and Fordham revealed a significant gap between the top team in the Atlantic 10 and the bottom – 48 points to be exact.

The Musketeers (15-6, 7-1 A-10) tied a Cintas Center record with an 108-60 victory over the Rams, and have now won 21 consecutive games on their home court, the fifth longest active streak in the nation. They sit at the top of the A-10, just one win ahead of both Charlotte and No. 19 Temple.

Sophomore Terrell Holloway posted a career-high in assists with 10, marking the first time a Musketeer boasted a double-digit assist game since Stanley Burrell accomplished the feat in 2008 against Duquesne.

A-10 Basketball

Sophomore guard Jordan Crawford led Xavier by collecting 23 points in 26 minutes on 7-of-11 shooting, while Jamel McLean, a junior forward, contributed 16 points and seven rebounds. Sophomore center Kenny Frease finished with 14 points on 7-of-10 shooting and grabbed eight rebounds in 17 minutes of action.

The Rams (2-18, 0-8 A-10) continued to perfect its doormat position in the A-10, shooting 35 percent from the field, including 3-of-15 from 3-point range. Senior guard Brenton Butler and freshman forward Chris Gaston combined for 49 out of their team's 60 total points. Only three other Rams were able to come out with points in front of a crowd that saw their Musketeers build a lead to as many as 50.

Xavier will visit Amherst for a Wednesday night matchup against Massachusetts at the Mullins Center. The Minutemen are coming off a 72-58 loss to Charlotte on Saturday.

Saunders Lifts Dukes Over Hawks

Junior forward Damian Saunders had 15 points, 14 rebounds and seven blocks for Duquesne, as the Dukes held on for a 74-71 home win over Saint Joseph's on Sunday.

Sophomore guard/forward Melquan Bolding led the Dukes (11-10, 2-5 A-10) with 24 points on 9-of-13 shooting. Duquesne came out victorious, despite missing four of 10 free throws over the final 3:13.

The Hawks (8-13, 2-5 A-10) tied the game with 1:54 left on a tip-in by Idris Hilliard, who ended with 14 points and 14 rebounds. Saunders came back with a layup and followed with a blocked shot. Saunders tipped the ball ahead, finishing the play with his fourth dunk of the game to put the Dukes up 70-66 with just under a minute to play.

With less than 20 seconds left, Darrin Govens hit a deep 3-pointer to make it a one-point game. But junior Bill Clark hit one of two free throws before Saint Joseph's Bryant Irwin was called for travelling with 7.6 seconds left. One more free throw by Duquesne made it a three-point game, and the game ended as a desperation 3-pointer by Carl Jones missed.

For his career, Saunders has more blocks (193), steals (172) and assists (173) than turnovers (166). He also leads the nation with 16 double- doubles.

SJU drops to 1-8 on the road, and is tied with the Minutemen. Dukes, and George Washington for 10th place in the A-10.

Rams Defeat Stubborn Colonials

Rhode Island took down the Colonials, 72-66, on Saturday afternoon to improve to 17-3 overall and 5-2 in the Atlantic 10.

Senior guard Keith Cothran scored a team-high 14 points, despite 4-of-12 shooting, while teammates Akeem Richmond and Lamonte Ulmer contributed with 11 and 10 points respectively. Senior forward Delroy James led the Rams with nine rebounds to go along with eight points and three blocks.

URI started the game on a 13-6 run, despite hitting only two if its first nine shots, as the Rams took a 37-26 advantage into halftime.

In the second half, the Colonials (12-8, 2-5 A-10) came out with a strong push to cut the deficit to six points with 15:34 left in the game. GWU kept the game close, never falling behind by more than eight and getting as close as three. However, clutch free throw shooting by Ulmer at the end of the game put the Rams up by eight with 24 seconds remaining.

Pete Vasquez can be reached at pvasquez@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

Need to spread the word?

Reach more than 18,000 readers every day!

IT'S CHEAPER THAN YOU THINK!

On-Campus & Local Business Ads for $10 per column inch

R.S.O. Ads for $6.70 per column inch

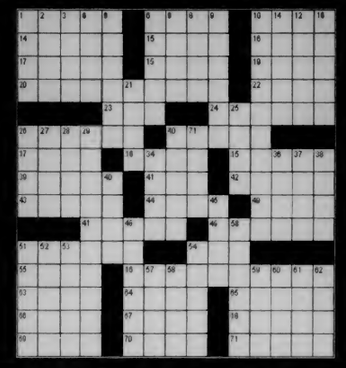
CONTACT PAMELA:
thecollegian@gmail.com
413-545-3500
or stop by our office in the Campus Center basement

Off The Wall Games
Worldwake release party on Saturday, February 6 at 5 PM to Close.
Visit www.offthewallgamestore.com for details.
Discount role-playing games, Collectible card games (CCGs), Miniature war games and board games, fun for everyone!
Hours: 10-10 Wednesday-Sunday, 12-10 Monday, Closed Tuesday – 11 Russell St (Rte 9), Hadley 413-586-5451

COMICS

WE WANT YOUR [illegible]

Questions?! Comments?!
E-mail us: comics@dailycollegian.com
Friend us on Facebook: "Collegian Comix"



SUDOKU

4								7
	6	8		7				5
						9	3
			8
7	4
1			5	2			6
			1					9
3		5			4
		9						6

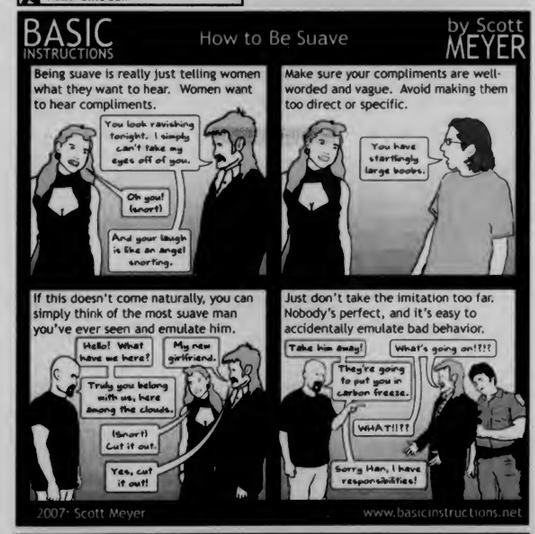
PUFFTON VILLAGE
APARTMENTS AVAILABLE
Excellent location!
1/2 Mile from UMass
Spacious Apartments!
1, 2, & 3 Bedroom Townhouses
All rents include: heat, hot water, and cooking gas!
On site laundry,
off street parking.
Basketball and Tennis Courts.
Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

CROSSWORD

SWISHY PANTS!

ACROSS
1. Private instructor
6. Possessed
10. Praise enthusiastically
14. Positive pole
15. Wings
16. Auspices
17. What we're called
18. Train track
19. A daring exploit
20. Reprieve
22. Initial wager
23. Leg (slang)
24. A salt used especially in baking powder
26. Metal shackles
30. Manipulate
32. Area of cut grass
33. Not easy
35. Apportion
39. Cheer up
41. Deception
42. French for "Queen"
43. Vestibule
44. Great Salt Lake state
46. Gull-like bird
47. Munchkin
49. Appraise
51. A colony of rabbits
54. Third person pronoun female
55. Territory
56. Practices
63. Warmth
64. Utilized
65. Eagle's nest
66. A single time
67. Catch
68. Publish
69. Feed bag contents
70. Not there
71. Warms

DOWN
1. Bronzes your skin
2. A Central American sloth
3. Grave
4. Lyric poems
5. Quit
6. Wives and concubines
7. Flair
8. Secular
9. Erase
10. Irrespective
11. Spy
12. Panorama
13. Aromatic compound
21. Short sprint
25. Winged
26. Musical staff symbol
27. Angelic headgear
28. At a distance
29. Incorporates
30. Scribble
31. Notion
34. Astringent
36. Be fond of
37. Burden
38. Earl Grey and orange pekoe
40. Sea eagle
45. Laugh
48. Attack
50. Angel
51. Burning bush
52. Sporting venue
53. Respond
54. Marsh plant
57. Slave
58. Listen
59. And
60. Operatic solo
61. Fluff from a dryer
62. Adjusts



DEW TOUR WINTER
mount snow VERMONT
February 4-7, 2010
ALLISPORTS.COM

SMBC by Zach Weiner smbc-comics.com

Noogying sidekicks is no longer allowed in the Hall of Justice.

BASIC INSTRUCTIONS — How to Be Suave — by Scott MEYER

WORD OF THE DAY

SMARMY

OF LOW, SLEAZY TASTE, OR QUALITY.

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20 - Feb. 18
Taylor Swift dropped all of her Grammy Awards. Police found her narcotics shortly thereafter.

pisces Feb. 19 - Mar. 20
There is nothing that you can do that would be less exciting that the NFL Pro Bowl.

aries Mar. 21 - Apr. 19
Compliment people on their waist size by staring at their belt area. You will see your friend count increase by a factor of five.

taurus Apr. 20 - May. 20
Add/Drop period is over and you are now in a place that Milton would call purgatory.

gemini May. 21 - Jun. 21
In the Dark Ages, people used to think that the world was flat. The world's first plastic surgeons fixed that mistake.

cancer Jun. 22 - Jul. 22
The Razzie Award nominations are public. This is your one chance to make things right for seeing anything with Megan Fox.

leo Jul. 23 - Aug. 22
Just ponder the consequences of making love to an alien. You will be sorry.

virgo Aug. 23 - Sept. 22
Try flying to the moon in your spare time. I double dog dare you!

libra Sept. 23 - Oct. 22
Do not ever look suspicious in the line for Grab n' Go. You will know the meaning of punishment.

scorpio Oct. 23 - Nov. 21
Pray that Sylvester Stallone does not star in anymore movies. He is so abnormal that his blood type is Levitra.

sagittarius Nov. 22 - Dec. 21
Who knows what inhabits the twenty-fifth floor of the library? If you find Jimmy Hoffa, please dial 911.

capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 19
The final season of LOST starts tonight. Six months from now we will be watching the season premiere of FOUND.

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"I saw weird stuff in that place last night. Weird, strange, sick, twisted, eerie, godless, evil stuff... and I want in."
— Homer Simpson

Chainsawsuit by Kris Straub chainsawsuit.com

Hark, a Vagrant by K. Beaton harkavagrant.com

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necessary. Training provided 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

Zoar Outdoors is seeking adventuresome people to be summer guides for whitewater rafting and zip-line canopy tours. Join our training program and spend the summer splashing through rapids or zipping through trees. Applicants should be great with people, have a positive attitude and be comfortable working as a team or independently. Application deadline: Feb.15th. Call 800-532-7483 or see www.zoaroutdoor.com/jobs.htm for an application.

WANTED

Part-Time Personal Care Attendant about 10-12 hrs/week. Flexible Hours. Please call Patrick 413-275-7928

FOR RENT

28 Stockbridge St: 4 bedroom house- 2 baths, living room, eat in kitchen, pantry, laundry, finished basement, yard, 2 car garage, 1.5 Mi to campus! $2,575/Mo +. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 Bedroom Apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug, or Sept. First Come First Serve. Get Them While They Last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop By Or Call 549-0600

SERVICES

Pregnant? Want to talk? Call birthright 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 Hour hotline 1-800-550-4900 www.birthright.org

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 2, 2010

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Minutewomen look to erase home losses

By Neil Carroll
Collegian Staff

It is unlikely that this far into the college basketball season, a team would have a losing record at home, but the Massachusetts women's basketball team is the exception.

With a home record of just 2-8 on the season, UMass head coach Marmie Dacko is still trying to find a reason for the team's home woes. Dacko and the rest of the coaching staff believe that the Minutewomen (8-13, 2-4 Atlantic 10) continue to practice better than they play. In fact, the team wore its game uniforms in practice yesterday afternoon in an effort to turn back the trend.

"I was going to do this a couple weeks ago, and it's really simple…" Dacko said. "I don't want them to have any distractions, so its just playing in a white uniform, and proving the point that they can shoot in their home uniforms."

UMass returns home fresh off of a 71-61 win against Rhode Island over the weekend. Tonight, the Minutewomen will attempt to carry the momentum gained on the road into the Mullins Center, where they will face off against St. Bonaventure.

"The kids are still working hard," Dacko said of the team's attitude. "Their heads are up, and to be honest, I'm happy to be home. This is a great test because St. Bonaventure is a great team."

The Bonnies (16-6, 4-3) won last year's contest between the teams 67-44 in St. Bonaventure, N.Y., and were led by Dana Mitchell, who had 12 points on 8-of-8 shooting from the free-throw line and five rebounds in the game. Mitchell played with a stress fracture last year, and still managed 15.1 points and 5.6 rebounds per game.

The forward was named to last season's All Atlantic-10 second team, and this year was selected to the 2009 Preseason All-Conference first team. Mitchell had 18 points and five rebounds in the Bonnies' 64-54 road win over Temple on Saturday.

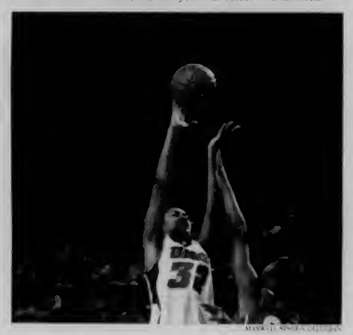
St. Bonaventure has now won two straight games, and is seventh in the conference. The Bonnies are coached by Jim Crowley, who is in his 10th year at the team's helm.

"We've got to be able to not only play her [Mitchell], but also step out against the perimeter players," Dacko said of the defensive strategy, against not only Mitchell, but the entire Bonnies team. "They shoot very well from the three, they're a very seasoned team, and they keep you honest. You cannot really key in on one player because they have a very balanced attack."

The Minutewomen are finally getting back to full strength after a string of ankle injuries to Kristina Danella, Jasmine Watson and Stephanie Lawrence left the team trying to recover in the midst of their conference schedule. Danella finally got back into form in the team's game against URI, scoring 17 points to lead the Minutewomen.

UMass displayed they are still one of the best shooting teams in the A-10 against URI, making 44.4 percent from the field.

The Minutewomen had their largest lead of the season when they went up by 23 points in the second half.



"When we don't play well it's a combination of us not knocking down open shots and turning the ball over," Dacko said. "We've got to be able to do three things at all times, and that's control the boards, take care of the basketball, and knock down open shots."

Neil Carroll can be reached nacarrol@student.umass.edu.

MAXWELL SPARK/COLLEGIAN

Redshirt junior guard Meghan Zullo scored 13 points and six rebounds against URI, including going 4-of-8 from the field and 3-of-5 from 3-point range.

MAXWELL SPARK/COLLEGIAN

Freshman Jasmine Watson shoots over an opponent earlier this season. The forward had six rebounds and four points against URI.

Field goal percentage increasing for UM

By Steve Levine
Collegian Staff

Field goal percentage has not been one of the Massachusetts women's basketball teams strong points, but it certainly was on Saturday.

The Minutewomen (8-13, 2-4 Atlantic 10) have the third worst shooting percentage in the A-10, at 38.1 percent. However, the Minutewomen's most recent win over Rhode Island (9-13, 2-5 A-10) shows that maybe they're bucking the trend.

At the Ryan Center on Saturday afternoon, UMass shot at a 44.4 percent clip from the field, their most-efficient scoring effort this season.

Sophomore forward Kristina Danella led the Minutewomen with 17 points on 5-of-10 shooting. Redshirt junior guard Megan Zullo played one of her best games since transferring from North Carolina State last year, registering 13 points on 4-of-8 shots, while adding six rebounds, three assist and four steals.

The two starters that hurt UMass' shooting percentage were senior guards Kim Benton and Diatrena Hill. Benton converted on one of her seven shot attempts and was not much of a factor in the backcourt, while Hill made up for her nine missed shots with an all-around game, finishing the contest with nine points, seven rebounds and six assists.

Although both Danella and Zullo helped lead UMass to a superb shooting night, the bench players were the difference-makers.

After missing significant time due to a concussion, freshman guard Dee Montgomery returned to action and showed what she's capable of.

In seven minutes off the bench, Montgomery netted five points, and hit both of her shots from the field, including a 3-pointer. The bench's perfect shooting night continued when sophomore center Nicole Jones hit all three of her shot attempts for nine points.

Junior forward Stephanie Lawrence followed suit, going 1-for-1 from the field in seven minutes of play. The only UMass bench player to not record a perfect shooting night was junior forward Cerie Mosgrove, who shot 2-of-6 from the field, with both of her made baskets being three-pointers. Rounding off bench play was freshman forward Shakia Robinson, who did not register a shot attempt in eight minutes of play.

The Minutewomen also reversed another strong trend by registering more points off turnovers than their opponents. In most contests this year, UMass' poor ball control has given their opponents many opportunities for easy baskets. On Saturday however, the Minutewomen scored 19 points off Rams' turnovers, while giving up just 12 points on their own turnovers.

UMass continued its consistent shooting at the free throw line, where it converted on 12-of-16 shots (75 percent). That percentage is essentially identical to the Minutewomen's 75.1 percent season average, which is second best in the conference, behind Saint Bonaventure's 79.5 percent.

Although Rhode Island is one of the A-10's weaker teams, UMass took several steps in the right direction against the Rams. If the Minutewomen can continue to shoot a high percentage from the field while turning the ball over less, more wins could be coming their way.

UMass begins a two-game home stand tonight when it hosts the Bonnies at 7 p.m. in the Mullins Center.

Steve Levine can be reached at slevine@student.umass.edu.

Senior Day success for UMass

By Jeffrey Engmann
Collegian Staff

There were several photo finishes inside Joseph Rogers Pool this season, and Saturday's meet provided a few more. Nevertheless, the moment occurred before the Massachusetts men and women's swimming team's faced off against Fordham University Saturday.

Side-by-side, 10 seniors received a chorus of applause in what was their last collegiate race in front of their home crowd.

"It's a special day," Minutewomen head coach Bob Newcomb said. "We were standing room only. We had people out in the hallway who couldn't get into the pool. We had a lot a people, and there was a lot of energy."

The men and women's swimming and diving teams split their last dual meet of the season. The Minutemen defeated Fordham by a score of 179-114, while the Minutewomen fell to the Rams by a score of 188-112.

Before the race, seniors Tim Smith, Mike Berthaume, Andrew Willbrant, Justin Brooks and Juan Moliere, as well as Joan Baltazar, Eryn Brewer, Ashley Dress, Liz Wester, and Elizabeth Walsh were all honored for their accomplishments as UMass athletes. But during the meet, it was the performance of a young sophomore that garnered many honors.

Jason Cook made history, as he continues to rewrite the diving record books at UMass. He broke his previous record in the three-meter diving record by earning an incredulous 369.30 points in the event. Cook followed up that performance with a first place finish in the one meter diving event. His standout performance earned him both the UMass Athlete of the Week and the Atlantic 10 Swimming and Diving performer of the week awards.

This is the second week in a row in which a member of the men's swimming and diving team has earned the Athlete of the Week accolade. Last week's winner, sophomore Joey Shordon, continued his strong season with a victory in the 200 freestyle.

Brooks, Berthaume and Moliere all captured individual victories in their last collegiate competition in Joseph Rogers Pool.

Minutemen coach Russ Yarworth was encouraged by his team's performance, as he believes the squad is becoming stronger as the season progresses.

"We showed that we're peaking and fine tuning at the right time of the season," said Yarworth.

The team will be carrying a lot of momentum into both the New England Open and the Atlantic 10 Championship, having won three-straight dual meets, resulting in an impressive record of 6-2 overall.

The Minutewomen are now 4-4 in dual meets this season, but remained competitive throughout the day against a strong Rams team that was picked to win the A-10, and has not lost in a dual meet all season.

Captain Elizabeth Walsh led the 200 medley relay team to a second place finish in the first event of the day. One of the most exciting races of the day was the 1000 meter freestyle, in which freshman Julie Magyar trailed Fordham's Megan McGorry for much of the race. However as the race went on, Magyar began to pull even. As the crowd cheered her on, Magyar pulled ahead in the final lap of the race and defeated McGorry by just six hundredths of a second.

Hannah Swift and Michaela Butler performed well on the diving board, as they finished one and two respectively in the three-meter event. They followed that performance with a strong showing in the one meter event, in which they finished second and third respectively.

Both teams received strong collective efforts, but the day ultimately belonged to the seniors.

"I think Senior Day is always fun because we honor people who have put a lot of work into this program," said Newcomb. "I'm very proud of everything they've put into this program and very grateful that they've been with us for four years."

Jeffrey Engmann can be reached at jengmann@student.umass.edu.

MAXWELL SPARK/COLLEGIAN

On Senior Day this past Saturday, UMass defeated Fordham with clutch performances from Justin Brooks and Julie Magyar.

Sophomore Casey Wellman of UMass is tied for fourth in Hockey East in points scored, behind teammate James Marcou. Bobby Butler of UNH is the lone senior in the Top 10, sitting in first place with a 1.67 points per game average.

Black Bears, UNH look to score in HE

By Michael Counos
Collegian Correspondent

This upcoming weekend is sure to spice up the Hockey East standings, as the top four seeds in the conference square off.

Maine hosts top-ranked New Hampshire for a weekend double-header, as the Black Bears currently sit in fourth-place with 20 points, trailing UNH by seven. Both teams are coming off over-time thrillers on Saturday.

UNH squeaked away with a last-second victory over Merrimack, and Maine ended in a 4-4 draw with the Vermont.

The Black Bears will have to fend off a high-powered offense that leads the conference with 68 goals forced, while Maine's defense is tied for third in goals scored against, allowing 48 in conference play. Scoring will be no easy task for the Black Bears, as they face senior goaltender Brian Foster in net, recently named Pure Hockey Defensive Player of the Week.

Hockey East

In a battle for Hockey East's number two spot, Massachusetts will host Boston College in the Mullins Center Friday at 7:30 p.m.

Both teams defeated Providence College last weekend, as they sit tied with 22 points apiece. Boston

See HOCKEY EAST on page 6

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

HIGH: 36 LOW: 20 www.DailyCollegian.com WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 3, 2010

UMass system finally gets law school

Tuesday's unanimous vote approves creation of first public law school in Massachusetts

By Sam Butterfield
Collegian Staff

We may be late to the party, but at least we are getting there.

The Massachusetts Board of Higher Education voted unanimously Tuesday to approve the creation of a public law school in the Commonwealth, to be located at the former Southern New England School of Law and overseen by the University of Massachusetts Dartmouth.

The school puts Massachusetts in company with 44 other states which already offer public law programs.

The vote is the final step in approving the law school proposal, and clears the way for students to enroll at the state's first public law school this fall.

The Board of Higher Education met Feb. 2 before a packed house in a public forum at Bridgewater State College and voted 10-0, with one member not present, to approve the proposal.

According to the UMass system spokesman Robert Connolly, the moment was one of excitement and euphoria, as students, alumni of Southern New England School of Law, four of the five chancellors from across the UMass system, various state legislators, and other citizens burst out in cheer as the vote was announced.

"There were people high-fiving, people bursting into tears, it was just an explosion of cheers when the board took its final vote," he said.

John Hoey, assistant to the chancellor at UMass Dartmouth, said the Dartmouth campus is elated at the news and looking forward to opening its law program.

"Obviously we feel great," he said. "I think what people saw in this vote was two things," he added, "one, the University was filling an obvious gap in its overall curriculum, and two, what happened really over the last two weeks, something that's really never happened before in public higher education in Mass., support for this one academic program at UMass was crystallized throughout all of our public higher education; every chancellor of the UMass campuses supported it, all nine presidents of the state colleges, and all 15 presidents of the community colleges supported it because they saw this as a step forward for public higher ed in Mass.," said Hoey.

"No longer will private institutions have veto power over the ambitions of students in public higher education in Mass., and I think people really got behind that."

Hoey said the transition from Southern New England School of Law to the UMass Dartmouth law program should be a smooth one.

"We're beginning this program with a state-of-the-art, 75,000 square foot facility, 8.5 acres of land, a full library, a faculty," he said.

"We start with nearly 200 students; we start with a staff, people who have a lot of experience

See LAW on page 3

With the approval of the Massachusetts Board of Higher Education, the state's first public law school will be opened this fall at the site of the former Southern New England School of Law.

Students clean up state

COURTESY WWW.FEDERALCOMMUNICATIONSLAW.COM

UMass MASSPIRG chapter urges student involvement in bettering recycling efforts statewide, claiming Massachusetts is generating one-third more waste in just the past decade.

By Ted Rogers
Collegian Staff

Imagine Fenway Park, filled to the brim with water and Gatorade bottles.

According to Angelica Carey, a sophomore Biology major at the University of Massachusetts, this is around the amount of plastic bottles that could be recycled in Massachusetts every year, but are not.

Carey is a secretary for the UMass chapter of the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (MASSPIRG) an organization involved in grass-roots efforts with issues such as identity theft, political corruption and strengthening voter's rights.

This semester, Carey is the lead coordinator of a project designed to promote more recycling in the Commonwealth.

MASSPIRG is holding a kick-off event this Wednesday Feb. 3 at 7 p.m. in the Commonwealth room, on the first floor of the Student Union located on the UMass campus.

The event will be open to the public and assists with MASSPIRG's main goal of this semester; to improve a bill of which the MASSPIRG organization was instrumental in passing during 1983, known as the Bottle Bill.

The Bottle Bill created the $0.05 deposit on soda and beer cans that provides an extra incentive to recycle.

Cans covered under the bottle bill are 70 percent more likely to be recycled.

According to Carey the bill needs to be updated because of the 27-year interval brings on cultural and packaging changes with the system.

"Thirty years ago, no one really paid attention to how much water they were drinking, and Gatorade wasn't around yet," Carey said.

"Water bottles and Gatorade bottles now make up 80 percent of plastic bottles today, but they aren't covered under the bill."

In order to pass a new Bottle Bill, MASSPIRG is building public support on and off the UMass campus to show the Massachusetts legislature that there is wide support for a more robust Bottle Bill.

Students at UMass have already been organizing.

They have collected signed water bottles to give to Mass. State Senator Stan Rosenberg to show student support.

They are also setting up meetings in local cities and towns to join the 120 cities and towns already endorsing the Bottle Bill.

Conflict is expected to arise from other interest groups due to the increased costs of sorting and recycling.

Carey, however, said she remains hopeful. "It's a really exciting challenge," she said.

"Hopefully, it will have a great victory. It's great to be a part of it."

Ted Rogers can be reached at twrogers@student.umass.edu.

Future of Health Care bill worries students

By Michael Phillis
Collegian Staff

Embedded in the language of the 2000-page Senate Health Care Bill are policies that some student health care advocates fear could change the way universities and colleges are able to offer student health care insurance.

In a letter addressed to Republican and Democratic leaders of the House of Representatives and the Senate, the American Council on Education stated, "H.R. 3590 threatens the ability of colleges and universities to continue to offer students group-like insurance plans that are both high quality and low cost because it applies the individual market reforms to such plans."

For the University of Massachusetts students, some form of health insurance is required – either a private plan often in partnership with a student's family or in the form of the Aetna Student Health Plan.

Directly on Aetna's website, the prices of the plan are listed, as students do not have to individually apply for their insurance since they are based off of group rates.

According to Mary Hoben of the American College Health Association (ACHA), who said that it is "important to have [student health care plans] rated on a group basis."

Hoben argued that the alternative could be higher costs for similar quality plans.

The ACHA wrote about the concerns of the Senate health care bill's language.

"Student health insurance benefit plans (SHIBPs) could be interpreted as being subject to individual market rating requirements because of the way in which the group market is exclusively defined as an employer-based market of insurance."

Advocacy groups like the ACHA want to address this language issue because of the importance of student health insurance plans for college students.

When asked about the response from those in Congress who were addressed in the ACHA letter, Hoben said that the biggest issue now was the general status of health care.

"The whole conversation seems to have come to halt," Hoben said.

Karen Dunbar Scully of University Health Services at UMass said that right now, understanding where the debate on health care was headed just could not be done at the time being.

"It's really speculative," said Dunbar Scully. "That bill may never see the light of day."

After the Massachusetts election of Republican Scott Brown to the Senate, health care reform's future has been cast in doubt.

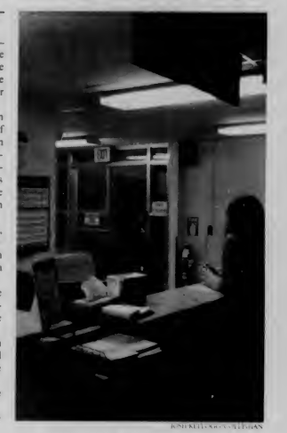
Brown promised to be the 41st vote against the bill preventing the Democrats in the Senate from achieving a 60 vote, filibuster-proof majority that would have secured the bill's passage.

Letters to Senate and House majority leaders to change the language of the bill were issued in January.

Hoben said that she did not think the possible gap in the language of the bill was purposeful but rather that it occurred by accident.

The House Bill, according to Hoben, does not have the same language that might jeopardize group pricing on student health insurance plans.

"The House doesn't even mention the issue," Hoben said.



Hoben said what her organization was attempting to do was head off any future issues that might occur surrounding student health insurance plans.

The letter stated, "nothing in the Act should be construed to prohibit institutions of higher education from providing student health insurance plan[s]… The language is a helpful recognition of the important role universities play in providing student insurance."

For now, however, health care advocacy groups seem unable even to speculate what will happen next with the bill.

"Until we know how this is going to progress we don't know how we are going to advocate for this [change in language]," Hoben said.

Michael Phillis can be reached at mphillis@student.umass.edu.

JOSH KELLY/COLLEGIAN

Students worry the new health care bill might mean costlier insurance plans at universities.

ARTS & LIVING
"Swallowed" bottles a big message
UMass' Hampden Gallery is currently featuring an art exhibit by local artist Maggie Nowinski. The display is made almost entirely out of plastic water bottle.
SEE PAGE 6

SPORTS
St. Bonaventure downs UMass
Hot shooting by the Bonnies kept the Minutewomen out of Tuesday night's game as their woes continue at the Mullins Center.
SEE PAGE 12

EDITORIAL & OPINION
Columnist Alana Goodman believes parents and schools already have the tools to stop students from bullying each other – they just don't use them.
SEE PAGE 5

DailyCollegian.com
After last week's Welcome Back Concert, Collegian staffer Garth Brody sat down with musician B.o.B. and asked him "3 Questions."

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXX
ISSUE 12

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
413-545-3500
Fax 413-545-3699
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF William McGuinness
MANAGING EDITOR Matt Rocheleau
MANAGING WEB EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
BUSINESS MANAGER Daniel Jette
PRODUCTION MANAGER Michael Sarkes
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Kirsten Swenson
ADVERTISING MANAGER Michael Tortorici
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Amanda Joinson
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Shayna Murphy
COPY EDITOR Andrew Witts
EDITORIAL EDITOR Alyssa Creamer
NEWS EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS EDITOR Jeffrey R. Larnard
PHOTO EDITOR Matthew Harrison
IT MANAGER Victor Jack
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Matt Zolnierz
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Nicole Jacinto
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Norman Provost
CLASSIFIED MANAGER Katelyn Tamilio
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Justin Gagnon
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Elyse Horowitz
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Cal Scannell
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Benjamin Moriarty
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Michael Phillis
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Matthew M. Robare
ASSISTANT NEWS Samuel Butterfield
ASSISTANT NEWS Jenn Heshion
ASSISTANT NEWS Chris Shores
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jay Auser
ASSISTANT SPORTS David Brinch
ASSISTANT SPORTS Adam Miller
ASSISTANT PHOTO Maxwell Spurr
ASSISTANT PHOTO Samantha Webber
SENIOR PRODUCER Sara Cody
SENIOR PRODUCER Pete Rizzo

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1996. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

PRODUCTION CREW
on staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Jeffrey R. Larnard

COPY EDITOR
Hannah McGoldrick

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Nick Guarino

CAMPUS PERSPECTIVES

What do you have to say about this UMass issue?

The Massachusetts Board of Higher Education voted unanimously Tuesday to approve the creation of a public law school in the Commonwealth, to be located at the former Southern New England School of Law and overseen by the University of Massachusetts Dartmouth.

Ian Russell
Junior
History major

"It's a positive move, giving more people an opportunity at a law degree. We can add prestige to [Southern New England School of Law], and it will make UMass well-rounded."

Jared Phillips
Senior
Psychology

"Since UMass is a well-accredited school, we can bring [Southern New England School of Law] up to our standards. As someone who grew up near Dartmouth, I can say that not too many people knew about it before, but now it's an option."

Danielle Cigol
Junior
Kinesiology

"I think it's a great idea. This should lead to opportunities for people who are looking for a cheaper option for law school."

Ryan Callahan
Senior
Kinesiology

"Usually financing can be a big problem for law students. I have a number of friends who are interested in law school, and this could be nice for them, since they could have a hard time affording it."

BY NICK BUSH, COLLEGIAN STAFF

HPV Fact #16:

It is estimated that each minute in the US, there is a new case of genital warts.

HPV Fact #8:

Guys can't get screened for HPV. So there's no way to know if a guy has the virus or is passing it on.

Why risk it
Visit your campus health center.

MERCK
Copyright © 2010 Merck & Co., Inc. All rights reserved. Printed in USA.
hpv.com
2105000408-01/10-QRD

Board approves law school fall opening for 2010-2011

LAW from page 1

in running a law school, so now what we're doing is working on a transition plan."

Hoey also added that any student in good standing at SNESL will be offered admission to the Dartmouth program, and that UMass Dartmouth expects to enroll more students for next fall soon.

"We have to put in place the operational details necessary to accept students, any student in good standing at the school now will be invited to transfer into the UMass Dartmouth school of law, and we are starting a student enrollment effort right now," he said.

In a statement released Tuesday by UMass President Jack Wilson's office, Wilson is quoted as praising the Board of Higher Education and expressing his optimism at the law school's prospectus.

"The creation of a public law school means that Mass. residents will now have access to an affordable, high-quality legal education. Our citizens will have the same public law school opportunity that exists in 44 other states."

Wilson noted that in tough economic times, the benefit of a public law school will be significant for students seeking a legal education but lacking the financial resources needed to pursue a private one.

"A public law school means that law students will graduate with less debt and have more flexibility in making their career choices," the president said.

UMass Dartmouth Chancellor Jean F. MacCormack called the decision an expansion of educational opportunities for the people of the Commonwealth.

"With the creation of the state's first public law school, we have made history by once again expanding higher education opportunity for the citizens of the Commonwealth," she said.

MacCormack also emphasized the importance of providing a public alternative for students who wish to enter law.

"From this day forward, students who couldn't even consider aspiring to a law school education due to cost or geography will be able to pursue their dreams," she said.

Last fall, the trustees of Dartmouth's Southern New England School of Law made a proposal to donate their school and all of its facilities, estimated at a total value of $23 million, to the University of Massachusetts.

The assets include the law school building, nearby real estate, $11.5 million in library assets, $2.5 million in furnishings, technology and infrastructure and $1 million in cash reserves.

COURTESY UMASSD.EDU

The UMass Dartmouth School of Law is expected to enroll 235 students for the 2010-2011 academic year with hopes to expand that figure by 2017.

The law school will be the largest ever donation to UMass Dartmouth.

The proposal hinged on several key points. MacCormack has promised that it will gain American Bar Association provisional accreditation by 2013, and proponents of the plan have stated that it will net the Commonwealth $673,576 next year and more than $1 million annually within five years.

The new law school will open to 235 students for 2010-2011, and is expected to expand to 559 students by 2017-2018.

With the enrollment expansion, the amount of revenue generated is also expected to grow, with those backing the plan estimating the school will generate $81 million in student revenue between 2010-2011 and 2017-2018.

The school will be entirely self-sufficient, operating on tuition revenue, and will also hire new faculty over time.

The UMass Dartmouth law program is set to open in September. Tuition and fees for in-state students will be $23,565. Out-of-state tuition is slated to be $31,000.

UMass Dartmouth also plans to offer students an accelerated law degree where they will condense their undergraduate studies into three years and begin law school in what would be their senior year.

The law school also hopes to be an avenue for bolstering diversity in the legal field in the Bay State.

According to a report by the Board of Higher Education, just 3.5 percent of attorneys in Massachusetts are black and Hispanic, though they are 12.6 percent of the state's population.

The school also hopes to produce more public attorneys, as the state presently has just 272 public service attorneys, according to the Boston Bar Association Task Force on Expanding the Civil Rights to Counsel.

That means there is just one public service lawyer for every 3,350 low-income Massachusetts residents.

MacCormack said Tuesday was a time of coalescence for members of the UMass Dartmouth and Southern New England School of Law Communities.

"The faculty, students and staff of UMass Dartmouth and Southern New England School of Law are now part of the same family," she said.

"Teams from each institution are already working to assure a smooth transition for students and prospective students from Southern New England to the UMass Dartmouth law program."

Several of the state's private law schools ardently opposed the plan, notably Suffolk University, New England School of Law and Western New England School of Law.

New Hampshire is currently planning the creation of a public law school, meaning only Rhode Island, Vermont, Delaware and Alaska will be without public law programs.

More information on the law program will be posted as it is made available. Board of Higher Education Commissioner Richard M. Freeland could not be reached immediately Tuesday.

Dean Robert V. Ward, Jr. of Southern New England School of Law also could not be immediately reached.

Sam Butterfield can be reached at sbutterfield@dailycollegian.com.

Legislation restricts student credit access

THE ARKANSAS TRAVELER
VIA COLLEGE MEDIA NETWORK

If you give a kid a credit card, he's going to rack up debt. The average cardholding college student graduates with $2,200 in credit card debt, according to information from the Walton College Financial Department.

The consequence of that debt is no cookie, either.

At an interest rate of 25 percent or more, the debt, if left unpaid, will double in three years, to the great detriment of the cardholder's credit score.

A poor credit score could cost students a job or a lower rate on a mortgage loan, again according to the Walton College Financial Department.

But, recently, legislators had an idea to curb these consequences: Give kids credit cards and cosigners.

The Credit CARD Act of 2009 – which took effect two days ago – restricts access to credit for everyone under 21.

Under this new legislation, underage applicants will need a cosigner to open a credit card account unless they can prove they can repay the credit cards themselves, according to CreditCards.com, a credit card comparison site.

Students still under 21 said they object to this restriction.

"Once you're 18, you're an adult," said sophomore advertising major Liana Bugslag. "So, technically, you should be able to get a credit card."

Sophomore apparel studies Allison Templin agrees.

"It's just like renting a car," Templin said. "If you're responsible, you should be able to."

Nor are students alone in making this objection: Associate finance professor Craig Rennie said he also has a philosophical problem with requiring those under 21 to have a cosigner.

As a native of Canada, Rennie, who is also the managing director of the Garrison Financial Institute within Walton College, joined the Canadian Air Force.

Rennie was 23 at the time, but he served alongside a 17-year-old, who was training to be a pilot.

"He was handling a $30 million aircraft, but they wouldn't trust him with a drink," Rennie said. "The same principle applies here."

A better solution than "heavy-handed" government, Rennie said, would be to educate students about credit card debt.

"Teaching kids to put the brakes on credit spending is a good thing," Rennie said. "If we could teach Congress that, that would be even better."

Rennie finds it interesting, he said, that the Credit CARD Act took effect the day after the administration released its budget.

"Very ironic that Obama and the current administration want to curtail student spending when their spending is what it is," he said.

Rennie, then, might say: If you give Congress credit ...

But, while restricted access to credit is at best unpopular and at worst hypocritical, it's not the only provision in the Credit CARD Act that will affect college students.

The bill also regulates the marketing of unsolicited credit card offers to college students. No longer will credit card companies be able to bombard students with junk mail or pass out free pizza and Frisbees to entice students to sign up for credit.

This limited marketing, Rennie said, is a good thing.

Finance professor Noel Morris also approves of this measure.

Morris said his college-aged son came home one day with two credit card statements, both with $0 balances.

When Morris asked where and when he opened the accounts, his son said, "They gave me a pizza."

"What they've tried to do (with this provision) is make it less easy for people to get in trouble," Morris said.

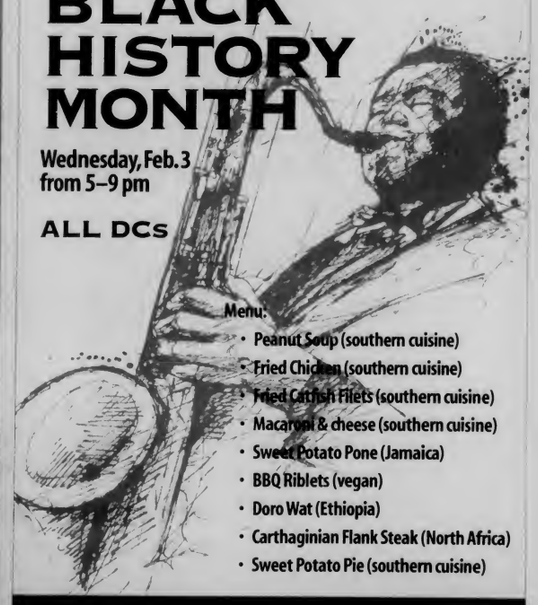
And, get in trouble they do: The No. 1 reason students drop out of school, Rennie said, is financial difficulty.

Rennie and Morris have tried to remedy this with a course Morris teaches called "Your Money and Credit" – new this semester and open to students of all majors.

The class covers the responsible use of credit and the basics of investing.

If you give a kid an education about credit, Rennie and Morris say, you give them the chance for a different conclusion, too.

Vusi Mahlasela
in concert



Friday, February 12 - 8 p.m.
Buckley Recital Hall, Amherst College

Tickets: FREE

A limited number of tickets will be available, reserve NOW!
Five College and G.A. ticket reservations call:
413-542-5773
A.C. ticket reservations:
www.amherst.edu/campuslife/keefe/calendar

UMass Dining Celebrates...
BLACK HISTORY MONTH
Wednesday, Feb. 3
from 5–9 pm
ALL DCs

Menu:
- Peanut Soup (southern cuisine)
- Fried Chicken (southern cuisine)
- Fried Catfish Filets (southern cuisine)
- Macaroni & cheese (southern cuisine)
- Sweet Potato Pone (Jamaica)
- BBQ Riblets (vegan)
- Doro Wat (Ethiopia)
- Carthaginian Flank Steak (North Africa)
- Sweet Potato Pie (southern cuisine)

SAMPLE FABULOUS DISHES!
ENJOY LIVELY MUSIC!

YOUR CAMPUS MEAL PLAN
THE BEST VALUE ON CAMPUS RESIDENTIAL MEAL PLAN
UMASS DINING
UMassAmherst
umassdining.com
facebook.com/umassdining
RESTAURANTS & INSTITUTIONS
Ivy

Crime Log: Weekend Jan. 29 through Jan. 31

FRIDAY JAN. 29

Orly J. Hoff of 525 E. 86th St. New York City, NY was arrested for liquor law violations as the result of a traffic stop.

At 1:04 a.m. the arresting officer spotted a black Volkswagen sedan that did not have its taillights on driving along North Pleasant St.

After pulling Hoff over, the arresting officer noticed the driver had bloodshot, watery eyes and smelled of alcohol.

The officer asked that Hoff perform field sobriety tests, all of which she failed as well as registering a 0.12 blood alcohol content on the breathalyzer.

Hoff was charged with a motor vehicle lights violation, and a liquor OUI.

Victor Delvalle Jr. of 28 Hampden St. Holyoke, Mass. was arrested for liquor law violations as the result of a traffic stop.

At 1:18 a.m. the arresting officer spotted a black Honda Civic driving irregularly on North Pleasant St. Delvalle.

The officer saw Delvalle speeding as well as cross the marked yellow traffic lane.

Once pulled over, the officer found Delvalle difficult to understand due to slurred speech.

He failed all of the field sobriety tests, and blew a 0.18 blood alcohol content on a breathalyzer at the police station.

After running the vehicle's information on the University of Massachusetts Police Department database, the officer also found that the vehicle had not passed state inspection.

Delvalle was charged with violating marked traffic lanes, speeding, failure to have vehicle inspected, and a liquor OUI.

John Graves Bates of 37 Hummock Pond Rd. Nantucket, Mass. was arrested for warrant violations at 9:27 p.m.

Bates was charged with criminal harassment, stalking, and acting in an obscene, disruptive manner.

Jessica Villavicencio of 16 Westwood St. Newton, Mass. was arrested for liquor law violations.

Villavicencio was charged with possession of liquor while under the age of 21.

Allyssa B. Dean of 6 Channing St. Newton, Mass. was arrested for liquor law violations.

Dean was charged with possession of liquor while under the age of 21.

Kerby Losier of 280 Wood Ave. Hyde Park, Mass. was arrested for drug law violations as the result of a traffic stop.

At 9:27 p.m., an UMPD officer witnessed a green Saturn sedan fail to stop at a stop sign on Access Rd. near Lot 21.

After pulling the vehicle over, the arresting officer detected a strong smell of recently burnt marijuana.

Losier told the officer that he did not have any marijuana in his possession.

Two of the three passengers in the car admitted to having marijuana on them.

The arresting officer called the station for another officer to assist in searching the vehicle.

Upon searching the vehicle, the officers discovered 15 individually wrapped bags of marijuana, not including the bags found on the passengers.

Losier was charged with the intent to distribute a class D substance.

SATURDAY JAN. 30

Emmett R. Scanlan of 112 Cross St. Norwood, Mass. was arrested for liquor law violations as the result of a traffic stop.

At 8:55 p.m., Scanlan was charged with possession of liquor while under the age of 21.

Kaylene J. Barshdorf of 97 Anthony Rd, Dalton, Mass. was arrested for liquor law violations as the result of a traffic stop.

At 2:21 a.m., an UMPD officer noticed a black Oldsmobile stopped on North Pleasant St. at a green light for more than 20 seconds despite no pedestrians present.

While following the vehicle, the officer noticed Barshdorf make a wide turn and cross the double yellow line onto Eastman Lane.

Once pulling the vehicle over, the arresting officer noticed Barshdorf to have slurred speech, and admitted to the officer to have been drinking that night.

She failed the field sobriety tests and blew a 0.08 blood alcohol content on the officer's portable breath test.

As the three passengers in the car were unable to drive as well, the car was towed.

Barshdorf was charged with failure to obey traffic light, violating marked traffic lanes, a liquor OUI.

Jeffrey Robert Youngclaus of 32 Blanchard Rd. Wilmington, Mass. was arrested for liquor law violations as the result of a traffic stop.

At 3:05 a.m. an UMPD officer saw a Ford Taurus cross the solid yellow line.

After pulling the vehicle over, the officer noticed Youngclaus with glassy, bloodshot eyes and the vehicle smelling of marijuana.

Youngclaus stated that he hadn't been drinking yet failed all of the field sobriety tests.

He blew a 0.16 blood alcohol content on a portable breath test.

He also did not have his vehicle registration in the car the morning of the arrest.

Youngclaus was charged with not having the appropriate registration in possession, violating marked traffic lanes and a liquor OUI.

Jonathan E. Russell of 1051 Overlook Dr. Palmer, Mass. was arrested as the result of an assault and battery charge.

At 2:30 a.m. UMPD officers were called to the John Adams Dormitory in Southwest after a male student was punched in the head several times.

The officers arrived to find the victim holding his jaw and having trouble speaking.

He said he knew his assailant, and that they had gotten into an argument.

SUNDAY JAN. 31

Eric Philip Dickson of 63 Summit Ave. Albany, NY was arrested as the result of a disturbance call.

At 12:09 a.m., two UMPD officers were called to the Prince Dormitory in Southwest.

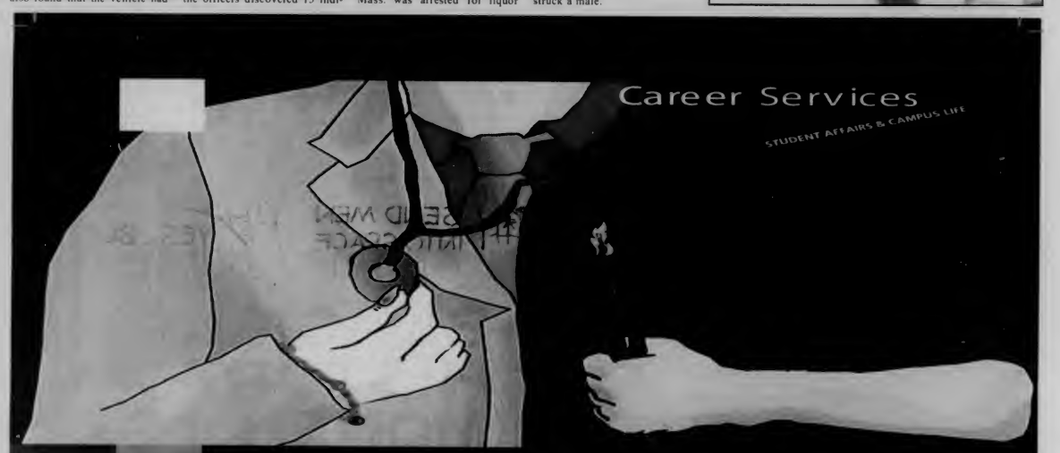
Prior to the officers' arrival, Dickson had thrown a female through a glass window, and struck a male.

Upon arrival, Dickson tried to push past the officers to assault a man.

While restraining Dickson, he stated that he was going to attack the officers and attempted to break free of their hold.

Dickson was charged with destruction of property worth less than 250 dollars, disorderly conduct, resisting arrest, domestic assault and battery and assault and battery with a dangerous weapon.

Fritzie M. Puverge of 159 Elliot St. Worchester, Mass. was arrested as the result of an active warrant for his arrest.



Purverge failed to appear in Worchester Superior Court.

He had previously been charged with driving without a license and speeding.

UMass is a BIG campus, and we need your help covering it.

Know of something that's happening? Want to see an event get news coverage? Let us know!

Go online and head to DailyCollegian.com and click "Submit a Tip."

Employers are looking for YOU Mass!

ANNUAL CAMPUS-WIDE
CAREER FAIR

Wednesday, February 10, 2010
10 A.M. - 3 P.M.
Campus Center Auditorium,
UMass Amherst

Appropriate Dress Expected.

Sponsored by VistaPrint and Gryphone Telecom Consultants

UMassAmherst CAREER SERVICES STUDENT AFFAIRS & CAMPUS LIFE

Off The Wall Games
Worldwake release party on Saturday, February 6 at 5 PM to Close.
Visit www.offthewallgamestore.com for details.
Discount role-playing games, Collectible card games (CCGs), Miniature war games and board games, fun for everyone!
Hours: 10-6 Wednesday-Saturday, 12-4 Sunday

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY, 3, 2010

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
– Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Farewell Salinger

Charlie Felder

Until I was thirteen, I had a tendency to stutter when called upon in class. My mother claims that it had more to do with the fact that I had a minor obsession with old Jimmy Stewart films and less to do with a certain fear of public speaking, as was my teacher's diagnosis.

Either way, my father felt that a proactive way to counteract this speech impediment would be to practice reading long passages of books aloud. So after finishing dinner early one evening at some point in eighth grade, he handed me a copy of J.D. Salinger's "The Catcher in the Rye." My dad asked me to go to my room and quietly read the first two pages to myself, and then to return to the living room.

Transfixed, I sat in my room for twenty minutes, reading and re-reading those first two pages. Here was a boy not much older than myself, writing from what appeared to be the confines of some mental health or behavioral correction facility.

I returned to the living room and my father asked me to begin reading the rest of the book out loud. Thus began my fascination with Holden Caulfield, a teenage anti-hero of our time and for all time – an indelible and enduring character to whom one cannot but compare one's self.

Flash forward nine years. Salinger is dead. I don't stutter much anymore, and I've fallen out of the habit of reading books out loud – to myself or anyone else. What remains is the powerful effect Salinger's words had upon me at such a young age, and the clear and obvious fact that Caulfield is the flawed barometer for teenage dysfunction and a prism through which intellects, both young and old, might learn something true and real about the hopes and fears we all experience on the cusp of adulthood.

What have you learned? To what standards are you held by your teachers, parents and peers? How do you feel towards a majority of those individuals with whom you surround yourself? Do you know what you want out of life? Even if you knew the answers to these questions, could you articulate them? Could you find the words? Well, Salinger did.

As students teetering on the precipice of graduation and its real world implications, subject matter of this ilk should be required college reading.

Many of you will graduate this spring – if all goes according to plan, I will too. I haven't yet formulated a personal bucket list of collegiate experiences that must be accomplished by early May, but with Salinger's passing and with our own progression towards full-blown adulthood and its myriad of responsibilities, I am certain of one thing.

That is, before I'm handed my diploma, I will read Salinger's book one more time, and you should too. Fifty-nine years after delivering a lightning bolt directly into the core of American identity, his characters remain perfectly flawed, his language remains perfectly cool and his insights (intended or not) bear equal if not more relevance to our identity than ever before.

Upon its publication in 1951, "The Catcher in the Rye" was the object of both adulation and disgust. The stream of profanity and frequent description of sexual angst and experience made the book an easy target for social conservatives. Literary academics lauded the book's blend of disaffection, loneliness, impulse and the shortsightedness of youth. As students teetering on the precipice of graduation and its real world implications, subject matter of this ilk should be required college reading.

Some may scoff and dismiss such a suggestion. I've never read it, but I've made it this far and I can smell graduation from here, so why bother myself now? Certain stories can become redundant with each subsequent reading. Certain films lose their luster, and magazines rarely receive a second glance after the initial once-over. This tale, on the other hand, is one for the history books – a rite of passage, of sorts.

If you haven't read it, you've deprived yourself of a genuine treat coupled with more than just one valuable life lesson. I read that in the tenth grade, why should I re-read it? Well, for many reasons. You were younger then, and having experienced a successful graduation from high school (one of Caulfield's repeated and numerous failings), several years of college and the struggle to maintain sanity and vitality in the face of the wild and unforgiving world of young adulthood, Salinger's writing will undoubtedly contain new and deeper meaning.

So for Christ sake, before all you phonies graduate, get a hold of some crumby old copy, hole yourself up in your goddam bedroom, and read Salinger's masterpiece. It'll change your life.

Charlie Felder is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at cfelder@student.umass.edu.

Bill to end bullying a useless tactic

Alana Goodman

Who was responsible for the death of Phoebe Prince?

That's what Massachusetts residents want to know.

Up until Jan. 14, Phoebe was a sweet, pretty freshman at South Hadley High School. That was the day she hung herself in her closet after being relentlessly bullied by her fellow students.

Tragically, hers isn't the only recent suicide-by-bully case in Massachusetts. Carl Walker - Hoover of Springfield killed himself last spring after months of anti-gay taunting at his school – at the age of only 11.

These incidents have resulted in an outpouring of anger and frustration from the community. Local parents have demanded accountability as school systems have done everything in their power to duck it. Meanwhile, Massachusetts lawmakers have dealt with the problem in the only way they know how – by attempting to make new laws.

Except none of these things – especially not the anti-bullying legislation proposed before the Joint Committee on Education – are helping the matter. Mainly because laws against bullying are, and always will be, doomed to fail. "Forty-four states expressly ban bullying…yet few if any of those measures have identified children who excessively pick on their peers," reported the Associate Press on Sept. 14, 2009. Studies have not shown these laws to be an effective method of dealing with the problem.

When someone in our society has been wronged, it's natural for us to look for someone to punish. "When South Hadley authorities find the girls who drove Phoebe Prince to take her own life, they should prosecute them. Stop pretending they're just cruel and nasty girls being girls. They're criminal torturers," wrote Boston Herald columnist Margery Eagan on Jan. 26.

But Eagan's wrong. The terms "criminal" and "torturer" have very specific definitions, while "bullying" is a subjective act that's defined solely by how it makes an individual feel. After all, what exactly is bullying? Is it a shove on the playground? A snide laugh in the locker room? A nasty look in the hallway? Depending on who you ask, it could be none of these things – or all three.

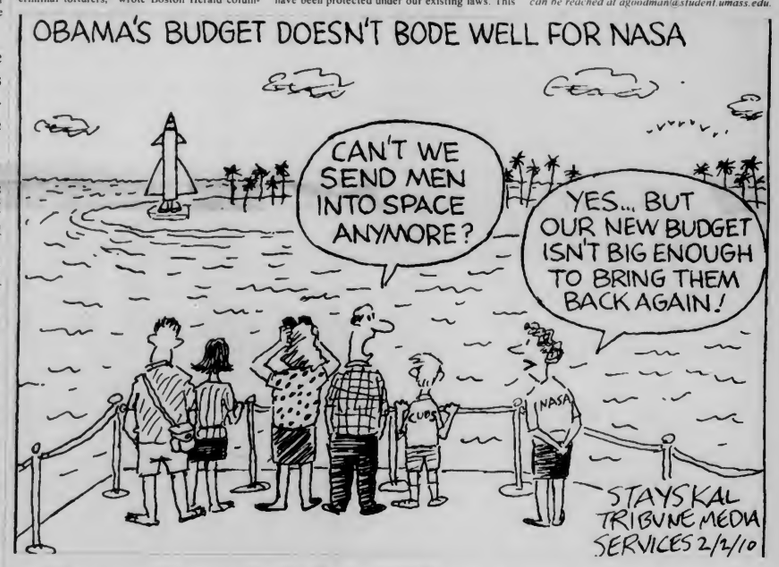
We already have the infrastructure to prevent these teen suicides, but it's clearly not being implemented correctly.

The slipperiness of the definition makes anti-bullying laws difficult to legislate and even harder to enforce. Teasing, mocking and general meanness are all based on individual perception. Furthermore, criminalizing these actions could have a significant chilling effect on free speech in school.

The way to help students like Phoebe is not to criminally prosecute bullies, but instead to reach out to those who are being bullied. It isn't the cruel words that drive these young people to suicide – it's how they emotionally interpret these words.

We already have the infrastructure to prevent these teen suicides, but it's clearly not being implemented correctly.

The first thing that failed Phoebe was the legal system. Some reports have claimed that the actions against her went further than mere bullying and delved into the realm of harassment and physical assault. If this is true, then she should have been protected under our existing laws. This doesn't mean that we need additional legislation. We need better enforcement of the old ones.



The second failure was the apparent lack of people in the school district who were there for Phoebe. A lot of the bullying allegedly took place at the high school – but where were the guidance counselors and school psychologists in this situation? Don't the taxpayers hire these people in order to prevent tragedies like this one? Instead of lobbying for new laws, community members should be demanding that these school employees fulfill the responsibilities that they are already tasked with. Not only should they have intervened to help Phoebe, they should have also stepped forward to help the clearly troubled teens who were bullying her.

Perhaps the most important step in eliminating these incidents falls onto the shoulders of the parents. It's not only the parents of bullied students who should take a more active role in their childrens' lives – the parents of the bullies have a responsibility to their kids as well. Traits that are crucial for well-adjusted teens – such as kindness, empathy and self-confidence – are all taught and nurtured at home.

Unless we solve the problems in our current system, there's no point in creating new laws that will likely run into the same roadblocks. Legislation can't make us better people. It can't stop us from being mean, getting offended or feeling insecure. That ability lies in us, and to a lesser extent in our teachers, in our parents and in our friends.

The truth is, the entire community bears a portion of the responsibility for the death of Phoebe Price and other teens like her. If the suffering of these students went unspotted in the classroom and at the dinner table, what makes us believe it would get noticed all the way from Beacon Hill?

Alana Goodman is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at agoodman@student.umass.edu.

Party-hearty Chancellor snags parking

Ben Sullivan

Robert C. Holub, the Chancellor, the top dog, some people love him, some people hate him. I don't really know the guy. I do know, however, that while many people don't want to live anywhere near the UMass campus; he lives right on campus at the Hillside House, a building centered between Orchard Hill and Central.

Though I'm guessing Holub doesn't have much of a choice. Being surrounded by nerds and hippies so close to the hill with all the pot smoke and noise of some horrible Phish/Sublime cover band on April 20 – that would drive anyone out. The Hillside House reminds me of the Klopek's house in the movie "The 'Burbs." Although I doubt there are any human skulls in Holub's basement, the house still is a mystery to me and others.

It does seem like the Chancellor's house is on occasion the place for some pretty ritzy parties and I'm not talking about the time we shot-gunned beers in his driveway. Occasionally, the driveway is packed with cars and a UMass Catering van.

Since I'm not really into the idea of peeking through the windows during these parties, I can only imagine what goes on inside. Things like topless women feeding grapes to guests while they sip fine wine that flows from a fountain in the center of the room is what I imagine the Chancellor's parties conceal. And let's not forget there are probably platters made of gold with exotic cheeses on toothpicks that decorate the tables alongside sandwiches with Dijon mustard made on whatever is fancier than wheat bread. (Rye maybe?)

I imagine these parties going on late into the night with all varieties of entertainment as these aristocratic guests laugh and joke, while the lower class feed on wings and room temperature PBR after slaving over a week of essays and exams.

My imagination might be a tad far from reality but there have been social gatherings at the Chancellor's house in the recent past.

Things like topless women feeding grapes to guests while they sip fine wine that flows from a fountain in the center of the room is what I imagine the Chancellor's parties conceal.

One thing that has been an issue in the past with these social gatherings is parking for the guests.

Last fall semester the parking lot next to the Chancellor's house was an ideal spot for any resident of Orchard Hill or Central and was always full because of this.

However, since the start of the spring semester this has not been an option for any resident with a parking pass for the purple lots. This is due to the fact that over winter break the lot was changed into a blue lot reserved only for staff and TA's.

The reason for this change was that since the completion of the new Integrated Sciences Building there has been a demand for more parking spots for faculty.

This story would be a lot easier to believe if the lot was anywhere close to the Integrated Sciences Building, or if the newly changed lot was even full with cars. But the truth is the lot is still a hike from the building and it is nowhere near full during the day and completely empty at night, that is unless there is a social gathering going on at the Hillside House.

On those nights the lot is full once again… how very convenient.

Now anyone who's received a parking ticket on campus knows just how wonderful the people of UMass Parking Services are – whose social lives, I imagine, must be similar to that of an IRS auditor or Steve Bartman. It's even better to see the toothless smile of an Ernie's Towing truck driver as he drives off with your '94 Ford Taurus hanging off the back of his truck.

I would assume that the loss of this purple lot is slightly irritating for someone who paid $275 for a parking permit. Like Raul Montero, a friend of mine who lives in Central. He said, "They didn't turn a blue lot into a purple or offer any reimbursement, I'm a little pissed."

I know I must be sounding like a negative nancy right now, complaining about a parking spot, but it's not just the parking spot that's upsetting me about this whole situation.

It's the fact that the Chancellor is having all these fancy parties and I haven't been invited to any of them. I mean c'mon man, I'm a pretty decent guy once you get to know me! And I make a cheese dip that is absolutely delicious, just ask my friends. I could make some if you want, you know, for your next party.

I'm not asking you to invite everyone with a parking pass for the purple lot, just me. I could be your guest of honor; you could give a toast about me from your wine fountain, the guests could sit around listening to my stories and laughing at all my jokes, and when an angry mob forms outside of your house with pitch forks and torches, chanting, "Let us park or let us in!" I would simply say, "Let them eat cake."

Ben Sullivan is a collegian columnist. He can be reached at btsulliv@student.umass.edu.

GET UP ON YOUR SOAPBOX.
EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 3, 2010 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

'Swallowed' bottles a big message

Local artist Nowinski's exhibit is about more than litter

By Kate MacDonald
Collegian Staff

Looking through the windows, it would seem almost as if the wintry weather has made its way inside the warm walls of Hampden Gallery in Southwest. To the far away viewer, it looks like columns and walls have been crystallized. However, if a pedestrian were to step inside, they would find out that this exhibit is so much more.

"Swallowed" by Maggie Nowinski is a social commentary in the form of art, calling out society and big businesses for their use and obsession with buying bottled water. If one truly thinks about it, why should bottled water be an acceptable purchase in an economy such as this? Anyone can turn on the nearest tap and obtain all the water they want, so why pay extra?

It was these sorts of questions that inspired Nowinski in 2007 to begin collecting and forming art with empty water bottles that she found in various public places. Water, a most basic need for all humans, is inescapable in everyone's daily lives.

It can also represent a bond between nature and humans, a bond which Maggie Nowinski, on her website declares to be torn apart by plastic. She says that, "We drink plastic water, part of a system that extends beyond the simple and immediate practice of drinking water." So she set out to show just how prominent plastic water bottles have become in our culture.

Nowinski's exhibit features 10,000 – 12,000 empty water bottles of various brands – Dasani, Poland Spring, Crystal Geyser – you name it, it's in there. They are strung together by thin wires and cascade down from the walls and ceiling, giving an illusion of waterfalls. Also featured are remarkably good-quality pictures snapped from a Motorola Razor cell phone of 219 "water bottles in their natural environments."

Nearby are large paper drawings of the connected water bottles in black and white. They are made to look blurry, and resemble stalactites one would find in caves. It gives another illusion of the ties water has to nature. These pictures, along with the waterfall-like formations, are featured in the large, main room of the Hampden Gallery.

Also in the large room is a television screen showing a loop of what Nowinski deemed to be a series of "performances." It is a video of various ways the strings of bottles were gathered and hung from the ceilings and walls of different locales. It also succeeds in not only showing the physical processes, but the creativity and thoughtfulness that went into designing the art and showing the exhibit's true message.

The display also extends to an unlit back room. That particular part of the exhibit is named "Riverfall," as it features a smaller set of strung up bottles on a slab of wall, while a projector beams images of running river water through the clear plastic in various colors. According to the wall plaque near the entrance, "each color represents a part of the conceptual dilemmas 'Swallowed' attempts to address." For example, blue signifies the desire for the natural element, and red represents the blood on the hands of the consumers, the collective American society.

This exhibit attempts to show the potential harms of the bottled water industry on the psyche and the environment. Nowinski is able to put forth an important message without coming across as an overbearing environmentalist. With a bit of effort, it is easy to understand where she is coming from.

If the average American thinks of how many bottles of water they consume and toss in the trash in the average month and then considers the implications all of that plastic has on the environment, perhaps a change would come. This is the realization Nowinski is trying to give a key consumer group, college students. According to the artist, consumers simply cannot make drinking bottled water a natural event. The results could be catastrophic to one's wallet and to the Earth.

"Swallowed" will be on display in Hampden Gallery until Feb. 23. The Gallery is open Monday through Thursday 12-6 p.m. and Sunday 2-5 p.m.

Kate MacDonald can be reached at kaitlynm@student.umass.edu.

KAITLYNN MACDONALD/COLLEGIAN

Nowinski intended to send a message about the excessive consumption of bottled water and the resulting masses of litter. The exhibit will be at UMass until Feb. 23, 2010.

KAITLYNN MACDONALD/COLLEGIAN

UMass' Hampden Gallery is currently featuring an exhibit by local artist Maggie Nowinski. It is open Monday–Thursday from 12–6 p.m. and Sunday 2–5 p.m.

Check out our full slideshow from the "Swallowed" exhibit at www.dailycollegian.com.

'Legion' lies flat at the box office

By Brendan Murphy
Collegian Correspondent

If the point of this article was to describe everything that's great about the new movie "Legion," this would have been over by now. Director Scott Stewart partners with Sony Pictures to create an action horror thriller about scores of angels sent from Heaven to destroy mankind after God loses faith in humanity. A remote diner becomes the critical battleground for the survival of humans after God's right-hand man, archangel Michael (Paul Bettany), defies God's orders to kill the unborn child of Charlie (Adrianne Palicki) – a waitress at the eatery.

The unborn child happens to be humanity's "only hope" for survival, for reasons that are never explained to the viewer. Despite the thrilling action sequences shown over and over again in the trailers, "Legion" delivers very few actions sequences and even less thrills throughout the entire, dreary 100 minutes of the movie.

The laundry list of problems starts with the cheesy, cliché script that every actor in this movie was forced to memorize. Top this off with poor acting, frequent and unnecessarily long character development scenes, a plot that just doesn't make sense and you have, potentially, one of the worst movies of 2010.

From the first 10 minutes of the movie, "Legion" looks promising and exciting. There are explosions, weapons, and a couple great fight scenes with cops. In fact there are many parallels to "The Terminator" and "Terminator 2." However, the dialog throughout "Legion" is painful at worst and laughable at best.

COURTESY SONY PICTURES

Directed by Scott Stewart, "Legion" has proven to be a complete box office bomb. At first, the film seems rather exciting, but soon thereafter the action and intrigue of the religious science fiction thriller turns into a boring waste of an over-priced movie ticket.

COURTESY SONY PICTURES

This poor excuse for an action movie stars Paul Bettany ("The Da Vinci Code"), Kate Walsh ("Grey's Anatomy") and Tyrese Gibson ("2 Fast 2 Furious"). This "Terminator" spin-off should prove to be one of the worst movies of the year.

It quickly bogs down any hope for this movie to be enjoyable whatsoever. Lines that start out with, "When I was a shorty…" by the archetypical gangster black guy Kyle (Tyrese Gibson) bursts into the movie in his Escalade arguing with his "baby momma" can make the viewer burst out laughing. Equally as comical was when the mother of a family stranded at the diner named Sandra (Kate Walsh) inexplicably blames her daughter Audrey (Willa Holland) for being caught amidst an apocalypse. Lines like this can make the viewer justifiably question whether the script had been proofread at all, or simply cranked out as a rough draft.

This movie would have been great if it had stuck with the original idea of what viewers were expecting to see: some awesome gun battles between survivors, angels and possessed humans seeking to destroy Charlie's unborn child. Instead, what the viewer gets is a 75 percent mix of one-on-one corny dialog and 25 percent hurried action scenes (with no gun reloading) that end abruptly. God's army is sent to destroy humankind, but their most formidable weapons are possessed human "vessels" that move sluggishly slow and whose weaknesses appear to be fire, bullets, and knives – everything that can kill us mortals too. Aren't angels immortal in the Bible, and therefore not susceptible to bullets?

While seemingly intended to be a popcorn action thriller, the film was bungled, maimed, and misdirected into a dull bore that audiences will have to suffer through until they are begging for the credits.

"Legion" drags; it's plagued by too much talking and not enough action sequences. The fact that this movie has grossed any money at all is a testament to the fact that a decent trailer can draw audiences into anything. "Legion" tries to draw on elements from classics like "The Terminator," and other works such as "Resident Evil" and "Dogma," but fails in so many ways. Avoid at all costs.

Brendan Murphy can be reached at brendanm@student.umass.edu.

'The Young Victoria' a sure-fire classic hit

Debatably the best film to not recieve a best picture nomination, 'Victoria' is magnificent

By Kate MacDonald
Collegian Staff

Though this story played out around 150 years ago, director Jean-Marc Vallée accurately captures the glamour and opulence that surrounded one of Britain's most popular royals in "The Young Victoria." Emily Blunt stars as the title character, a young princess trying to assure her inner circle, her people and herself that she deserves the power she is entitled to by birthright.

Written by screenwriter Julian Fellowes ("Gosford Park," "Tomorrow Never Dies"), "The Young Victoria" begins with a long, rather rushed narration by Blunt (an underappreciated star of "Devil Wears Prada") about the rules and regulations Victoria, as the heir to the British throne, had to adhere to while growing up. As if that weren't bad enough, she had to face badgering by her own mother (Miranda Richardson) and her chief attendant, the delightfully wicked Sir John Conroy (Mark Strong), who believe that Victoria is too young too rule.

Richardson and Strong have great chemistry in their roles. Their characters faced the rumor that there was an affair going on while living an aspect of their lives that played out on screen without being directly implied. Their relationship seems to be stronger than the one that develops between Victoria and her cousin and future husband, Albert, who was sent by Belgium's King Leopold to seduce her, so that their family could be instilled into yet another European monarchy.

Rupert Friend, as Albert, portrays his tortured prince extremely well. Albert is someone who's being made to do things against his will, but who lets his personality shine though and ends up enjoying his task. He grows to even enjoy being used as a pawn, ironically, because he and Victoria first bond over chess. This budding courtship, however, is a low point of the otherwise great film.

In "The Young Victoria," the courtship between Victoria and Albert is extremely awkward, especially in the first stages. Though it is probably supposed to be stilted in this way, it should provide for many a guffaw.

All cringe-worthy scenes are forgotten as the story progresses and the princess becomes a queen, even more elegant settings are presented. At each location, from Parliament to Buckingham Palace, the set decorator Maggie Gray (who has been nominated for an Oscar for her work) sure had a big task on her hands – one which she completed with flying colors. The sets on "The Young Victoria" look as real as their legitimate counterparts.

Victoria still has to face other obstacles throughout the film, in the forms of a reconciliation with her mother, fights with her husband, pregnancy, riots and yet another advisor that tries to take a piece of her power. Emily Blunt does this fairly well, though she doesn't really look like a teen, depicts Victoria with a palpable air of royalty, but also with the charm of a young, excited woman.

Rounding out the requirements for a great movie (one that was obviously snubbed for a best picture Academy Award nomination), the cinematography was near perfect. "The Young Victoria" featured many sweeping shots of the palatial settings and basic camera angles make the viewer feel as if they know exactly what's going on. Sometimes the most important storylines are happening in the backdrop, shown clearly in order to get all angles of the story.

What makes this movie all the more fascinating is that, with the exceptions of some normal Hollywood flourishes, this time in history played out very similarly to the story in "The Young Victoria." A young girl was virtually attacked for her power, hunted and pursued like an animal, yet she manages to beat her attackers, stay in touch with her subjects and even find a mate in the process. This film gives good insight to aristocratic life with grace and beauty, and makes it almost appealing to us rebellious Americans. Democracy will, of course, still win out, but the cast and crew of "The Young Victoria" make a true royal story seem like a fairytale.

Kate MacDonald can be reached at kaitlynm@student.umass.edu.

The love doctor is in

The Minnesota Daily
via College News Network

Dr. Date,

I have known this guy for four years, and we have been friends ever since we met.

While I saw him as my best guy friend, he wanted to be in a relationship (which I was clueless about). A year and a half ago he informed me of his feelings, and I had to give him the dreaded "just friends" speech.

Nobody likes hearing the friend speech from the person they fancy. I hated giving it; I know from experience the "friend zone" is not a very pleasant place. After a horrible relationship with some drama-loving chick who cheated on him multiple times, he developed awful depression and anxiety. I tried to give him a shoulder, but he thought it meant maybe I had changed my mind about him.

This was not the case, and I had to shoot him down once again. The time period between then and now has consisted of him losing some of his friends and several "just friends" talks. He automatically assigned me the role of psychiatrist, which I am not equipped to do. Because I saw how sad he was, and because he admitted to thoughts of suicide, I suggested he see a real psychiatrist.

He refused and said he would rather talk to me. I tried to comfort him, but he keeps talking about his feelings for me and hopes I'll change my mind. I told him there are many other women out there and that he needs to start meeting them.

Since I am a student, it is hard enough trying to juggle school, work, my life and his. He has told me he desperately needs to talk to me, and he is mad I don't have a lot of time for him. I don't want to bail on him like his other so called "friends," but what can I do?

I need to worry about my needs too. I don't want to lose my job or let my grades slip. I am worried about him and am sick of repeating the friend speech; it's beginning to hurt me as much as it hurts him. His guy friends won't talk to him about his feelings, and they suggested I get out of his life permanently so I don't constantly remind him of what he can't have.

I don't think that would work, but maybe I should try it. I just don't want to hurt him any more than he is already hurting. How can I help my friend?

– Just Friends

Just Friends,

You are a far better friend than Chris Klein or Ryan Reynolds could ever hope to be. Your friend is in serious trouble and needs serious help. You need to get him to go see help. He sounds severely depressed and needs more than what a friend can give him.

A depressed person needs a selfish relationship with someone, which is where a counselor comes in. This person's job is to listen to your friend and help him. You need to tell your friend that you want to help him, but he needs professional help.

Tell him you will be there as another form of support, but you can't help him alone. The University offers free services. Just take him to 340 Appleby Hall; the first time you have to go in person. Make sure you emphasize to him that you are not equipped to provide him with the support he needs right now.

If it comes down to it, you might have to tell him you're unable to help him anymore unless he goes there. Harsh, but it could also literally save his life. Also, reassure him that there is nothing wrong with getting such help. A lot of people have a stigma against getting help, which is understandable but silly.

Everyone falls down in life, and sometimes we need a little help getting back up.

– Dr. Date

Dr. Date,

With your expert knowledge of romance, do you believe in love at first sight?

– Cupid

Cupid,

I am confused by you asking me this, seeing as you are the one who prances around coercing random people into love.

Your question would depend on how you define "love." Based on my definition, I would say love at first sight does not exist. Sorry to all you stalkers out there who saw Jennifer Love Hewitt with your favorite Pop-Tart flavor in high school. I do believe in strong attraction at first sight. Sometimes a person will literally just grab your attention and not let go for hours. I don't think that's love; I think that's the promise of love. Wow, one lousy letter from Cupid and I start rambling corny lines about love. Be right back, Dateopia, I think I have an arrow in my back.

– Dr. Date

Minutemen hoping to cool off Musketeers

M. HOOP from page 12

Trease (6.2 points per game, 5.1 rebounds per game) has been very productive as a seven-footer averaging 18.3 minutes in playing time.

The Musketeers also feature forward Jason Love, who is husky at 6-foot-9 and is the leading rebounder for his team and is its second best scorer.

Over the past few games, rebounding has been the least of UMass' worries, especially on the offensive end, where it's averaging a league-leading 15.3 offensive rebounds per game. But if strong rebounding doesn't turn into more second-chance points, the Minutemen are going to find themselves struggling to catch-up to Xavier's high-powered offense.

UMass' biggest struggle against opponents lately is that it gives itself plenty of scoring opportunities because of its rebounding, but doesn't finish as often as Kellogg would like.

The Minutemen beat the 49er's, 17-10, in offensive rebounding, but finished with 13 second-chance points.

Adam Miller can be reached at amiller@dailycollegian.com.

JEFF BERNSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

Forward Sampson Carter tries to dribble past a St. Bonaventure defender during the Minutemen's one-point loss to the Bonnies. Kellogg has given Carter several opportunities to start throughout the season.

JEFF BERNSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

Sophomore David Gibbs tries to get past a defender during a game earlier this season. After moving from point guard to shooting guard, he is likely out for the season after breaking his foot in practice on Monday.

Freshman looking to guard top A-10 scorer

FARRELL from page 12

Jordan Crawford. The Indiana transfer sat out all of last season, but averaged 9.7 points per game for the Hoosiers in 2007-2008.

However, playing two of toughest conference opponents as well as matching up with two of the best players in the A-10 does not faze Farrell.

"They're a very talented team that has a lot of power, so we're just going to do what we normally do," Farrell said. "Play tough defense; try to keep Jordan Crawford from getting the easy buckets that he has been getting all season."

Crawford leads the A-10 in scoring (19.2 points per game), and although he is a huge scoring threat for the Musketeers, Kellogg sees it as a good test for his young player.

"I think he's a good match up for Crawford, although he is older, knows the game a little bit better, and is a little bit mature, I think Javorn can match up with him at least physically."

Both players are similarly built, with Farrell being listed as an inch taller than Crawford at 6-foot-5, and Crawford outweighing him by 15 pounds, weighing in at 195.

Kellogg feels that even though he is a freshman, Farrell has the physicality to compete at a high level early on in his collegiate career.

"You never know with freshmen, some guys come along a little bit quicker than others," Kellogg said. "I think because he is a little bit more physically developed then some of the other guys, I think that's helped him."

Even though he is inexperienced, Farrell knows that he can compete with anyone he defends, and knows that he will have to work hard to continue to get better.

"Personally, I have a lot of confidence in myself, so I felt that if I kept working hard in practice that I would eventually crack the starting lineup," Farrell said. "I'm not surprised at how early it came, but I am surprised at how much I've been playing. I think I've improved in knowing what I have to do on the court to stay on the court."

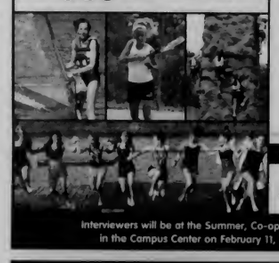
Kellogg has been just as impressed with his highly touted freshmen, even comparing him with a former XU player.

"Just with his propensity to play hard, especially in the games, he's done a great job," Kellogg said. "Now, I need him to bring it everyday in practice, and I envision him someday here to be like C.J. Anderson was at Xavier the past few years, that kind of midsize tough guy that can penetrate to the rim, the best defender on the floor, and really the guy that comes up with all the lose balls and the tough guy plays.

"Not the most skilled, not the prettiest shot, but a guy who gets it done night in and night out."

GIBBS BREAKS FOOT

Sophomore guard David Gibbs broke his foot during Monday's practice, and will likely be out for the remainder of the season, according to Kellogg.



"It's a blow for us, we've been thin at the point guard position up to this point, and I think losing him makes us a little more thin at that spot," Kellogg said on the UMass Athletics web site.

"But I really feel for him and his family, to start to play well as he has been as of late and really get comfortable at that point guard spot, to have an injury at this juncture is difficult for a young man, and we're going to say our prayers and stay with him."

Gibbs had played in all 19 games, averaging 2.6 points per game, 2.5 assists per game and 1.8 rebounds in 19.9 minutes. He played 20 minutes against the 49ers, scoring two points, registering two assists, one rebound and one turnover in the loss.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu.

CAMP DanBee For Girls

Summer Camp Counselor Positions

Must have a love of children, lots of energy and be able to teach one or more of the following activities:

All Team Sports, Tennis, Golf, Waterfront Activities, Pool, Art, Dance, Theatre, Gymnastics, Newspaper, Rocketry & Radio and more

Great salaries, room & board, travel.

where the spirit is catching

Enjoy a great summer that promises to be unforgettable!

For more information and to apply online

www.campdanbee.com • (800) 392-3752

Interviewers will be at the Summer, Co-op, and Internships Opportunities Fair in the Campus Center on February 11, 2010 from 10:00 am - 3:00 pm.

Accounting Majors

Master of Science in Accounting and Taxation

Earn the extra hours you need for the CPA Certificate

Earn your MS degree in as few as seven months... or at your own pace

Choose between a concentration in Financial and Assurance Services or Taxation

- A program of study designed for you to achieve your professional goals
- Full-time resident faculty and advising services
- Classes held on our suburban West Hartford campus minutes from I-84 and I-91
- Classes offered in a variety of delivery modes to suit your needs
- Books, course materials, and University fees included in tuition price

APPLICATION DEADLINE OF MARCH 15 FOR SUMMER ADMISSION

To apply or get further information:
web http://barney.hartford.edu/msat
e-mail msat@hartford.edu
phone 860.768.4343

EARNED EXCELLENCE
AACSB ACCREDITED EST. 1916
THE BEST BUSINESS SCHOOLS IN THE WORLD

200 Bloomfield Avenue
West Hartford, CT 06117

Barney School of Business
UNIVERSITY OF HARTFORD

Minutewomen win twice over weekend

By Geena Lombardi
Collegian Staff

An offensive surge of energy led the Massachusetts women's club hockey team to back-to-back victories over Buffalo University this past weekend of play. The two wins moved the Minutewomen past Pennsylvania State into second place for the Eastern Collegiate Women's Hockey League.

UMass (8-11) came out strong early Saturday night, striking first 30 seconds into the first period. Stefani McGrath and Stephanie Schlosky contributed to Heather Paonessa's goal past the Lady Buffaloes' netminder A.J. Sliwinski to give the Minutewomen an early lead.

Paige Hackett followed Paonessa's lead at the 18 minute, 45 second mark to score again for UMass. Brittany Resendes wrapped up scoring in the first period by taking advantage of a 5-on-4 power play.

"We started out strong and scored two goals in the first minute and a half," UMass coach Chris Cobb said. "It was a combination of everyone playing a lot of offense."

A few injuries to the team, including a dislocated shoulder, caused Cobb to make changes to his starting lines. A decision to move a defender to the offensive line proved to be the spark UMass' offense needed.

The second period was played similarly by both sides, with the Minutewomen offense controlling the pace of the game. Captain Catherine O'Brien put the puck past Buffalo's defense at the 17:25 mark, followed by a Schlosky goal four minutes later.

Co-captain Samantha Mack ended UMass' offensive attack at the 16:37 mark in the third period, scoring an unassisted goal to give it the 6-0 victory.

The Minutewomen outshot the Lady Buffaloes, 46-8, showing their dominance over the puck.

Simply put, "We really controlled the puck offensively," Cobb said.

The victory also served as the Minutewomen's third shutout of the season. Kelsey Magrane and Gabrielle Busa saved four shots each to contribute to the shutout.

Sunday's game started out slow for the UMass offense as Buffalo scored first with 3:22 remaining in the first period. Chelsea Eppolito took an assist from Tiffany Vinette and scored the lone goal of the game for the Lady Buffaloes (4-6).

"For the first 30 minutes of the game they outscored us, but we had more talent," Cobb said.

This proved to be true as the Minutewomen came alive in the second period. After a penalty was called on Buffalo for covering the puck in the crease, Brittany Resendes took advantage of the power play and opened up scoring for UMass.

O'Brien scored her second goal of the weekend at the 9:22 mark, assisted by Besty Riegel. Fellow captain Hayley Kuhn stepped up with four seconds remaining in the second period to give UMass the 3-1 advantage going into the third period.

Cobb gives credit to O'Brien, who has scored a goal in the last three games.

"She's a kid who just works hard and through her working hard she gets some points," Cobb said. "Our offense is pretty spread out and she has definitely stepped up."

Two additional goals were scored in the third, first by Mack at the 8:45 mark. Kuhn followed with her second goal of the afternoon with six minutes remaining of play, sweeping the Lady Buffaloes with a final 5-1 victory.

UMass outshot its opponent again, 51-5. Katie Avery took over the net for the majority of the game, stopping four shots.

The Minutewomen are set to face Rhode Island (13-6-3) Friday night and Saturday morning. This is the second series the two rivals will play this season; the previous matchup resulting in a win and a loss for UMass.

The rivalry is furthered by ECWHL standings, where the Rams are in first place with 29 points, followed by the Minutewomen with 16 points.

Saturday's game also has significance to UMass, where its four seniors, Samantha Mack, Kyle Mack, Hayley Kuhn and Angela Rufo will be honored for senior day.

Geena Lombardi can be reached at glombardi@student.umass.edu.

Illini facing crucial game with Hawkeyes

Illinois losing shot at NCAA Tournament

By Brandon Stiles
The Daily Iowan (Iowa)

With fewer than six weeks until Selection Sunday, February marks the beginning of when "bubble teams" emerge for at-large berths in the NCAA Tournament.

Among these squads is Illinois, which will visit Carver-Hawkeye Arena on Wednesday.

While the Fighting Illini are one of four Big Ten teams tied for second place in the conference with a 6-3 record in Big Ten play, Illinois' quality of victories is by far the least impressive. All six came against Indiana, Northwestern, Iowa, and Penn State – teams currently in or near the Big Ten cellar.

A road win in Iowa City this week may not boost Illinois' résumé much. But a loss to the Hawkeyes would really be a crushing blow to the Illini's NCAA tourney hopes.

"The whole thing comes down to consistency," Illinois head coach Bruce Weber said during the Big Ten teleconference on Monday. "I think we're a good team. We could be one of the better teams in the league and compete with a lot of teams around the country, but we just aren't consistent."

MICHIGAN STATE IN COMMAND

As ugly as some of the wins have been, the record doesn't lie. Right now, the Spartans are 9-0, are ranked fifth nationally, and possess a three-game cushion atop the Big Ten standings.

While the Big Ten is only at the halfway point of the season, Michigan State has an opportunity to maintain a stranglehold on first – far from an easy task, though.

Tonight, the Spartans will visit Wisconsin for a key showdown at the Kohl Center with the 16th-ranked Badgers. From there, they will head to Champaign, Ill., for a game against Illinois that will be showcased by ESPN. When Michigan State eventually returns to East Lansing, a date with No. 8 Purdue awaits at the Breslin Center.

"The weeks get tougher, and I'm not sure there will be a tougher stretch in my career maybe than at Wisconsin, at Illinois on "GameDay," and then Purdue at home, and it's a Tuesday-Saturday-Tuesday and all 9 p.m. [Eastern] games."

Michigan State head coach Tom Izzo said on Monday during the Big Ten teleconference. "I'm expecting this to be the roughest stretch that we've faced in many a year, and yet looking forward to it."

UNHAPPY TIMES

Things have turned rotten rather quickly in State College, Pa.

Just a season removed from winning the NIT, Penn State finds itself at the halfway point of its conference slate as the only Big Ten team yet to win a game.

Making matters worse for the Nittany Lions, the lone bright spot all season has been junior Talor Battle, who averages 18.8 points per game.

In fact, Battle is Penn State's only player averaging double figures in points. The Nittany Lions' second-leading scorer, junior David Jackson, averages 8.6 points.

Things don't get easier for Penn State on Wednesday, when it will play at No. 13 Ohio State. The Buckeyes have won their last 11 meetings with the Nittany Lions.

"I think the mental part of this thing has been the challenging part, but our kids have stuck together," Penn State head coach Ed DeChellis said during the Big Ten teleconference on Monday.

"We just need to try to make something good happen, and I think we'll feel a lot better."

Society lacks perspective in National Signing Day circus

By Michael Duchesne
The Lantern (Ohio State)

That piteous wailing you heard emanating from the Woody Hayes Athletic Center last Friday was the collective cry made by the Ohio State coaching staff upon hearing that prized recruit Jordan Hicks had selected the University of Texas over Ohio State.

Blue chip, five-star, top prospect. These are the labels that make college football recruiting junkies salivate. They are the labels attached to Hicks and many other star high-school football athletes like him.

An infusion of enough such players can salvage a flagging program. They can help a team "reload." They can guarantee superiority in the conference for years to come.

A dearth of such players can also be the death knell of a once-promising college coaching career. Recruiting struggles and the talent gap they create can get a coach fired in short order, regardless of his mastery of X's and O's.

There are magazines with names like Prepstar, Lindy's and Athlon whose sole existence revolves around the niche college football recruiting audience. There are countless recruiting Web sites dedicated to poring over all of the minutia involved in evaluating these 17- and 18-year-old high school students. Here at OSU, we have Buckinuts to keep us apprised of some fresh-faced youngster's 40-yard dash time.

For everyone involved in the worship of college football, from the coaching staffs to the adoring fans to the pundits who speak ad nauseam about this or that recruit, National Signing Day is as big as it gets. It's the Super Bowl of the off-season.

But why is this?

With a margin of error that can turn a "can't miss" linebacker prospect, once slated to be the next Lawrence Taylor, into the next Mike D'Andrea, why are we so fixated on these young men who are barely old enough to drive?

There are two schools of thought.

First, the three-ring circus atmosphere swirling around these kids' press conferences is a testament to the soaring popularity of football. Regardless of the fact that Major League Baseball has staked a claim as America's pastime, true sports fans know that in this country, football is king.

The second line of reasoning is a little more sinister.

These kids are another indication of the stark contrast our society has drawn between substance and celebrity. Where else would you find high school students who have yet to accomplish anything of real value being showered with televised attention, outside of MTV's "Teen Mom?"

If some Doogie Howser-type is getting ready to make his decision between Ivy League schools, the local press doesn't show up to see whether or not he places the Yale or Harvard cap on his head.

And why? Odds are his contributions to society will be far more profound then simply ear-holing the quarterback during a blind-side rush on third and long.

These athletes are raised up to a level in which their salaries and status surpass those of the people who make up the backbone of society — our doctors, teachers and civil servants.

It's the same phenomenon that allows four semi-literate meatheads from Jersey to take the world by storm.

And lest you think that you are immune to such idol-worship, ask yourself this: Do you remember where you were on the day that Terrelle Pryor chose OSU over Michigan? I do.

That particular coup for coach Tressel over new Michigan coach Rich Rodriguez seemed just as sweet as if we had actually defeated the Wolverines on the field.

Waxing philosophic about the cultural dangers involved with idolizing a 17-year-old kid who scores touchdowns over the nerdy genius who may just find the cure for cancer (or at least male-pattern baldness) is not new. It just becomes a little more salient when National Signing Day occurs so closely to the horrific events that are transpiring in Haiti even as you read this.

It serves to remind us of what we seem to be sorely lacking today as a society: perspective.

DO YOU LIKE SPORTS??

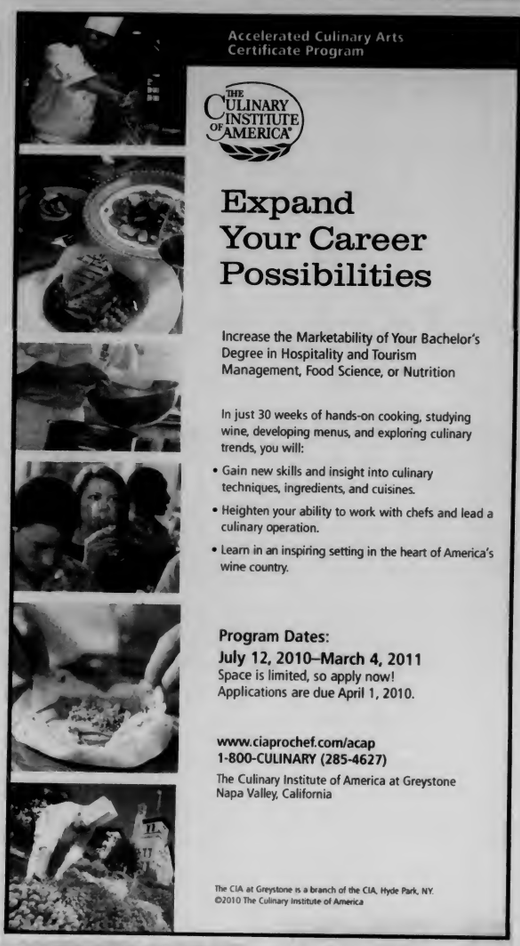
Then CHECK OUT

The Daily Collegian Sports Blog

HTTP:BLOG.MASSLIVE.COM/DAILYCOLLEGIANSPORTS

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

Need to spread the word?



Reach more than 18,000 readers every day!

IT'S CHEAPER THAN YOU THINK!

On-Campus & Local Business Ads for $10 per column inch

R.S.O. Ads for $6.70 per column inch

CONTACT PAMELA:
thecollegian@gmail.com
413-545-3500
or stop by our office in the Campus Center basement

Accelerated Culinary Arts Certificate Program

THE CULINARY INSTITUTE OF AMERICA

Expand Your Career Possibilities

Increase the Marketability of Your Bachelor's Degree in Hospitality and Tourism Management, Food Science, or Nutrition

In just 30 weeks of hands-on cooking, studying wine, developing menus, and exploring culinary trends, you will:

- Gain new skills and insight into culinary techniques, ingredients, and cuisines.
- Heighten your ability to work with chefs and lead a culinary operation.
- Learn in an inspiring setting in the heart of America's wine country.

Program Dates:
July 12, 2010–March 4, 2011
Space is limited, so apply now!
Applications are due April 1, 2010.

www.ciaprochef.com/acap
1-800-CULINARY (285-4627)

The Culinary Institute of America at Greystone
Napa Valley, California

The CIA at Greystone is a branch of the CIA, Hyde Park, NY.
©2010 The Culinary Institute of America

UMassAmherst

OPEN FORUMS

Meet the canididates for the position of Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs and Campus Life:

Dr. Jean Kim
Interim vice Chancellor for Student Affairs and Campus Life
University of Massachusetts Amherst
February 4, 2010, Campus Center 168C
9:30 - 10:45 A.M. Student Open Sesssion
10:30 - 11:15 A.M. Open Session

Dr. Margaret Jablonski
Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs
Universtiy of North Carolina at Chapel Hill
February 5, 2010, Campus Center 168C
2:30 - 3:15 P.M. Student Open Sesssion
2:45 - 3:45 P.M. Open Session

Dr. Michael Liliberte
Vice President for Student Affairs
Boise State University
February 8, 2010, Campus Center 168C
11:15 - 12:00 P.M. Student Open Sesssion
4:00 - 4:45 P.M. Open Session

Dr. Kevin Charles
Assistant Vice President for Student Affairs/ Student and Academic Services
University of New Hampshire, Durham
February 9, 2010, Campus Center 168C
3:15 - 4:00 P.M. Student Open Sesssion
4:15 - 5:00 P.M. Open Session

Russian tennis player finds home at KU

Despite being away from home, freshman comfortable on team

BY KATHLEEN GHER
THE UNIVERSITY DAILY

Before and after matches or practices, freshman Victoria Khanevskaya returns to the Jayhawker Towers, sits down at her computer and makes the connection back home to Moscow through Skype.

Freshman Victoria Khanevskaya follows through on a shot during singles play at the Jayhawk Invitational in September.

On most days, she talks to her dad, who also served as her coach from age 10, when she started playing tennis, until August, when she came to Kansas.

It's a small connection that makes the nearly 5,800 miles of separation easier.

"If I lost, he asks about the problems," Khanevskaya said. "If I have trouble in practice, he helps. He is still my coach when I go home. When I went back over break we practiced."

Being countries away creates obstacles, not only with the changes in environment, but also in dealing with new coaches. But Khanevskaya's transition has been eased by assistant coach German Dalmagro, whose coaching style is similar to that of her father.

"When I got here and started practicing with coach Dalmagro, it was crazy because he says things just like my dad," Khanevskaya said. "The first couple days of practice I had to turn around and make sure it was not my dad."

Dalmagro and Khanevskaya have one major playing style in common: a single-handed backhand. It's uncommon because of the intense upper arm strength that is necessary and, generally, it's not the usual style taught to female players.

"I was taught the one-handed backhand and I guess the style that she plays I can relate to well because I grew up on it and I have coached a few players that have that style of game," Dalmagro said. "So I guess some things that I say she can look back and say, 'Oh, those are the same things my dad used to say.'"

Khanevskaya, along with Kate Morozova, who hails from Togliatte, Russia, got off to a quick start in competition defeating a doubles team from Georgetown. So far as a doubles team, the pair has gone 3-1.

For the entire fall season, Khanevskaya finished with a 3-5 singles record and a 7-2 doubles record.

"We communicate really well and in doubles communication with your partner is very important," Morozova said. "We play different ways, but we got together and it has been really good."

In the fall, Khanevskaya and Morozova were two of four players invited to play at the Intercollegiate Tennis Association Tournament. The ITA regional tournament showcases talented college players from around the country.

"When coach first told us I did not understand. Everyone was smiling and screaming, then they told me and I was so emotional," Khanevskaya said. "It was so unbelievable to be invited as a freshman."

Khanevskaya went 1-1 in doubles with partner Erin Wilbert, a sophomore from Lafayette, La., and finished 3-5 in singles.

"It feels great to go two years in a row," Morozova said. "All the players were really good and it is a really good experience to play against them."

Kansas Athletics buys First Serve Tennis

The University of Kansas Athletics Department bought the First Serve Tennis Facility and will rename it the Jayhawk Tennis Facility.

"It is a great opportunity for us and the athletic department," coach Amy Hall-Holt said. "It is a good way to start off the new year and get things going."

They bought the facility from the founder and owner, Mike Elwell for $3.1 million.

"The owner wanted to sell, so it made sense for us to purchase it because it is a good tennis facility and it provides a home for the team in good weather and bad," Jim Marchiony, associate athletic director, said.

This facility has been home to Kansas' tennis team practices and home matches since 2006 when Kansas Athletics Inc. entered into a contractual relationship with Elwell. Before that relationship, the team practiced as far away as Topeka or Kansas City for indoor courts.

"I think it will enhance the quality of our program, and we will be able to accommodate our athletes," Hall-Holt said.

Leading up to the acquisition of First Serve, Kansas Athletics funded additions to the building including workout facilities and a locker room for the team, spectator viewing, along with updating some of the indoor and outdoor courts.

"I am excited about it and anxious to make it an exciting college venue," Hall-Holt said. "We can put our own flavor with what we want to do inside to showcase current and former athletes, male and female."

Over the next couple of months the department will discuss more additions.

"It was a well-run facility and we want to continue that," Marchiony said. "We always want to improve it though."

The other 150 members of First Serve will be welcome at the new facilities with their memberships continuing along with the staff staying in place.

"We are going to do whatever we can to make sure the club remains a viable indoor tennis facility for both KU and the tennis players of Lawrence," Marchiony said.

Khanevskaya decided that she didn't want to play professionally in Russia despite winning the National Russian Tournament and coming in fourth at the Championship of Samara U18 Regional. She wanted to go to a university and play tennis while getting an education after finishing high school with a 4.0 GPA.

"As a university, for me, KU is the best in America," Khanevskaya said.

Morozova had a similar experience when choosing a college. Part of the reason the pair had such a smooth transition is a result of head coach Amy Hall-Holt and her previous experience with international players.

In the past five years of Hall-Holt's 13-year tenure the team has featured 10 international athletes.

"It is just contacts I have and results they have had for junior tournaments and rankings. And then sometimes it is word of mouth by former players or current players," Hall-Holt said. "They also have people over there who help to get their information out."

There has been a lot of attention on international tennis talent as some of the most recognizable names in professional tennis such as Maria Sharapova and Anna Kournikova have also come from Russia.

"It is becoming really popular in Russia, people are going crazy about tennis," Morozova said.

Kansas is also one of the few universities that will take students who do not score well on English proficiency tests. For foreign students there is an exam, which includes reading, writing, listening and speaking segments. Kansas focuses on high school GPA results or success in college preparatory courses instead.

"I did not really speak any English when I came to Kansas, but Victoria had known some before and had an easier transition," Morozova said.

The team, which is experienced with diversity, helped the girls adjust to life on and off the court. Both girls also enrolled in English classes during their first semester to help the transition.

"When Victoria came over she was a little lost, but she was not the first international player so the coaches knew how to help," Morozova said. "I helped her, too. I explained campus to her and the tournaments."

Even though the distance is difficult, Khanevskaya said her parents are proud of her for pursuing her academic and tennis career in Lawrence.

Only a semester in, she already feels comfortable with the team and the University.

"The team always wants to support me. I feel like I am not just another girl on the team, this is my second home," Khanevskaya said. "I do not feel alone here."

Stewart Cheatwood saw opportunity, found a mentor and changed his career. Now he finds time to coach others. Every day, he's feeding his life, his career and his future.

Feed your future at www.pwc.tv

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

© 2010 PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP. All rights reserved. "PricewaterhouseCoopers" refers to PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP (a Delaware limited liability partnership) or, as the context requires, the PricewaterhouseCoopers global network or other member firms of the network, each of which is a separate and independent legal entity. We are proud to be an Affirmative Action and Equal Opportunity Employer.

COMICS

WE WANT

Questions?! Comments?!
E-mail us: comics@dailycollegian.com
Friend us on Facebook: "Collegian Comix"

SUDOKU

		1		2		6	3
	2			1
			5
	8	5	2				1
6	9					5
		3				9
7
3				5	1
	1		8	4			7

DEW TOUR WINTER
ABC mount snow VERMONT
February 4-7, 2010
ALLISPORTS.COM

PUFFTON VILLAGE
APARTMENTS AVAILABLE
EXCELLENT LOCATION!
1/2 MILE FROM UMASS
SPACIOUS APARTMENTS!
1, 2, & 3 Bedroom Townhouses
ALL RENTS INCLUDE: HEAT, HOT WATER, AND COOKING GAS!
ON SITE LAUNDRY, OFF STREET PARKING.
BASKETBALL AND TENNIS COURTS.
OFFICE HOURS: 8AM TO 4PM MONDAY - FRIDAY
(413) 549-0145
WWW.PUFFTONVILLAGE.COM

SMBC by Zach Weiner smbc-comics.com

Mr. Gnu by Travis Dandro

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20 - FEB. 18
All you want to do is spend the day and massage the...

pisces FEB. 19 - MAR. 20
Staring at the sun for over an hour results in a spontaneous accumulation of candy corn.

aries MAR. 21 - APR. 19
Index cards are a great tool to mysteriously cushion those sensitive areas that make you cry every night.

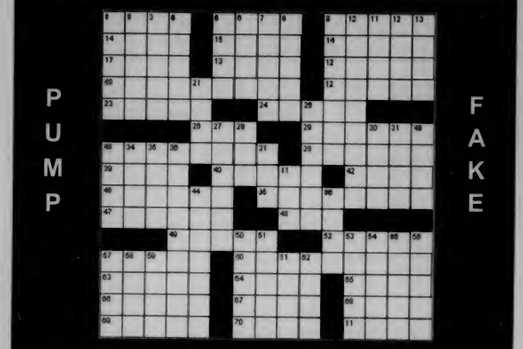
taurus APR. 20 - MAY. 20
Jennifer Lopez wants her booty back and we all know you successfully stole it off her vanity back in 2003.

gemini MAY. 21 - JUN. 21
Watch your potty mouth. The Master of Custodial Arts is tired of cleaning up after your conversations.

cancer JUN. 22 - JUL. 22
The way you feverishly hold square objects is both annoying and intoxicating.

leo JUL. 23 - AUG. 22
Skittles may let you taste the rainbow, but only Crayola can allow you to BE the rainbow.

virgo AUG. 23 - SEPT. 22
Social networking is not reciting William Shakespeare while showering in the dorms.



libra SEPT. 23 - OCT. 22
The only time you need to set an alarm to wake up is during Hammertime!

scorpio OCT. 23 - NOV. 21
Today you will be plagued by those annoying drum rolls from the film Jumanji.

sagittarius NOV. 22 - DEC. 21
Singing in the rain is one thing but singing chocolate rain is something completely different.

capricorn DEC. 22 - JAN. 19
Every restaurant has a secret condiment. All of them include the forbidden ingredient of child-like happiness.

CROSSWORD

ACROSS
1. Strip of wood
5. Border
9. Prison-related
14. Heap
15. Fruity pastry
16. San Antonio fort
17. Any minute
18. Great Salt Lake state
19. A pariah
20. Denude
22. Alter
23. Way in
24. Wear away
26. Edge
29. Lime tree
33. An epidemic that is geographically widespread
38. The whole thing
39. Sheltered, nautically
40. Any factual evidence
42. Acknowledge
43. A necessary commodity
45. Without agony
47. Fervent
48. Registered nursing assistant
49. Discharge
52. Leases
57. Roost
60. Daycare
63. German submarine
64. Start over
65. Teller of untruths
66. Road
67. At the peak of
68. Operatic solo
69. "Come in!"
70. He's a guy
71. After-bath powder

DOWN
1. Shovel
2. Cloth from flax
3. In the air
4. Male singing range
5. Decorative case
6. Information
7. Grille
8. Aromatic solvent
9. Someone who fights for a cause (archaic)
10. Primary
11. Back of the neck
12. Ends a prayer
13. God Almighty
21. Stringed instrument
25. Any unsaturated aliphatic hydrocarbon
27. Hinder
28. Soviet space station
30. Plunge
31. Greek god of love
32. Current event information
33. History
34. Countertenor
35. Close
36. Deplore or belittle
37. Policeman
41. Paddle
44. Cigarette igniter
46. An aromatic ointment
50. Leave
51. Letter before iota
53. Acclaim
54. Nigerian monetary unit
55. Hiker's path
56. Glacial ice formation
57. Unadulterated
58. Black, in poetry
59. Defeat disastrously
61. Graven image
62. Easy gait

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"So a man jumps into a taxi and says "King Arthur's close" and the taxi driver says, "don't worry we'll lose him at the next lights".

— Tommy Cooper

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necessary. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

Zoar Outdoors is seeking adventuresome people to be summer guides for whitewater rafting and zip-line canopy tours. Join our training program and spend the summer splashing through rapids or zipping through trees. Applicants should be great with people, have a positive attitude and be comfortable working as a team or independently. Application deadline: Feb.15th. Call 800-532-7483 or see www.zoaroutdoor.com/jobs.htm for an application.

A GREAT JOB! Spend your summer in a lakefront cabin in Maine. If you're looking to spend this summe outdoors, have fun while you work, and make lifelong friends, then look no further.

EMPLOYMENT

CAMP MATAPONI, a residential girls camp in Maine, has female/male summertime openings for Land Sports, Waterfront (samm crafts, skiing, life guarding, WSI, boat drivers), Ropes Course, Tennis, H.B. Riding, Arts & Crafts, Theater, Cooking, Gymnastics, Dance, Videography, Group Leaders and more. Top salaries plus room/board & travel provided. Call us today at 1-561-748-3684 or apply online at www.campmataponi.com.

WANTED

Part-Time Personal Care Attendant about 10-12 hrs/week. Flexible Hours. Please call Patrick 413-275-7928

FOR RENT

Center of town 1,2,3 bedrooms; hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for June and September. NO FEES www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 Bedroom Apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug, or Sept. First Come, First Serve. Get Them While They Last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop By Or Call 549-0600

SERVICES

Pregnant? Want to talk? Call birthright 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 Hour hotline 1-800-550-4900 www.birthright.org

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSWEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 3, 2010 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Bonnies' shooting too much for UMass

Foul trouble hurts Dacko and Co., woes at home continue

By Neil Carroll
Collegian Staff

The home losses continue to pile up for the Massachusetts women's basketball team. On Tuesday night, St. Bonaventure came to the Mullins Center and defeated the Minutewomen, 69-54, due to great shooting by the Bonnies in the first half, where they shot 50 percent from the field.

They also shot 57 percent from 3-point range and were 10-of-11 from the free-throw line. While SBU's field-goal and 3-point shooting percentages dropped in the second half, it still managed to convert 27-of-31 free throws good for 87 percent.

"They shot well, and we came out tentative," UMass coach Marnie Dacko said of the loss. "Jasmine [Watson] got in foul trouble early and that hurt us."

The Bonnies (17-6, 5-3 Atlantic 10) were led by Megan Van Tatenhove who went 7-of-8 from the floor and 6-of-7 from the line on her way to a 20-point night. Preseason All-Conference selection Dana Mitchell followed her in scoring with 12 points and five rebounds for the St. Bonaventure.

SBU	69
UMass	54

When the Minutewomen looked for a spark on offense, the ball went down low to Watson who wound up with 12 points but only one rebound because of foul trouble. However she did get to the free-throw line and hit 4-of-7 of her free throws.

UMass could not keep up with the SBU offense, especially because the Minutewomen shot poorly from beyond the arc. As a team, UMass was 3-of-15 in the game from 3-point range, and is now shooting 26 percent from that range at home.

The Minutewomen looked to turn their conference record around with a win last night, but instead fell to 2-5 in the A-10, and an 8-14 record overall.

"We took some bad shots," Dacko said. "I think we have to set ourselves up to get better looks at the basket not creating shots off the dribble but more catch and shoot and we did not rebound in the first half."

St. Bonaventure outrebounded the Minutewomen, 31-22, in the game. Coming into last night's matchup, UMass was taking down an average of 37.5 rebounds per game.

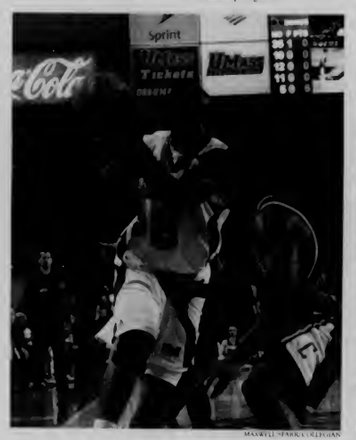
"We dug ourselves in a hole. When you miss shots and you cannot rebound, you know you're in trouble," Dacko said.

The UMass offense took an early four-point lead in the first minute, but St. Bonaventure then went on an 18-4 run and never looked back. The Bonnies led by a margin of 20 points for most of the game until UMass tried to rally back by cutting the lead to 13 with 10 minutes to play.

"We played with them in the second half," Dacko said. "In fact, we outplayed them in the second half but they are a good team and you cannot spot them 20 points and expect to win."

Stephanie Lawrence led the UMass offense tying Watson as the team's leader in scoring. She had 12 points on 2-of-4 shooting from beyond the arc and also added six rebounds in 22 minutes.

The UMass offense lacked a consistent offensive threat and was flustered by the Bonnies defense. Kristina Danella was held to six points and grabbed one rebound in the game.



"I just think that we have to be able to move better on the perimeter in order to set people up for a catch and shoot," Dacko said about the lack of Danella's presence. "I think her best offense is to be able to catch and shoot so she has to be able to free herself up in order to run off of screens."

Neil Carroll can be reached at nacarrol@student.umass.edu.

JEFF BERNSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

Freshman guard Dee Montgomery protects the ball against defender during last night's game against St. Bonaventure. The Minutewomen continued their woes at the Mullins Center with a 15-point loss.

MARTIN SPARKS/COLLEGIAN

Ricky Harris tries to get past his defender during UMass' home opener against Cornell. The Minutemen lost by 13 to the Big Red.

Minutemen host Musketeers

By Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

Even when Massachusetts men's basketball coach Derek Kellogg isn't scheduling games against tough non-conference opponents, the Minutemen still can't get away from a difficult schedule.

After losing to Charlotte on Saturday night, UMass (8-13, 2-5 Atlantic 10) will play the current A-10 leader Xavier. The Musketeers (15-6, 7-1 A-10) are continuing to make a case for being in the Associated Press Top 25 Poll after rolling through Duquesne and Fordham in their last two games by an average of 42 points.

Offensively, they are near the top of the league in almost every category. Xavier leads the A-10 in points per game (79.8) and 3-point percentage (39.6), while holding the second best field-goal percentage (46.5) next to St. Bonaventure (47.5).

The Musketeers shooting in their last two games is one of the big reasons why they have faced little resistance as they shot the ball well over 50 percent from the field.

"They're the benchmark in our league right now," Kellogg said. "After watching a bunch of teams on tape and watching them play, I'd have to say that they're the favorite right now to be an NCAA Tournament team and a potential team that can advance as they've proven throughout the 2000's."

Unless the Minutemen can turnaround their shooting woes this season, they will have to rely on their defense to cool down Xavier's offense. UMass finished the game against the 49ers 34.3 percent from the field and 14.3 percent from beyond the arc in its 72-58 loss.

Other than senior Ricky Harris's 25 points, the Minutemen offense fell flat as 49er guard Derrio Green (34 points) had the best game of his career.

If there's anything positive the Maroon and White can take away from playing one of the best teams in the A-10, it's that freshman Javorn Farrell is already displaying the work ethic necessary to shut down a team's top scorer.

Farrell's assignment, Shamari Spears (16 points per game), who is usually Charlotte's best scorer, finished with four points in 30 minutes of play. After the game, Kellogg praised the freshman for his hustle and willingness to be physical on the defensive end.

Before practice on Monday, Kellogg said that he will likely have Farrell guarding Jordan Crawford, a transfer from Indiana leading the A-10 with 19.2 points per game.

Although Crawford has a significant amount of experience over Farrell, Kellogg hopes that his physical maturity will wear down the Musketeers' best offensive player.

"They're both about the same size, they're both similar in build," Kellogg said. "I just think Crawford has been in college longer and knows how to play the game a little bit better. But you never underestimate a guy who's like a street fighter out there that competes and contests on every play, and I think Javorn is becoming that guy for us."

Although Farrell showed his ability to shut down a leading scorer against the 49ers, he will have a little bit more of a challenge against Crawford, who is faster and a better scorer than Spears.

Crawford has gone the last 17 games scoring at least 16 points against quality opponents, which include four teams in the Top 25. His worst scoring night of the season came on Nov. 26 where he finished with nine points on 4-of-20 shooting.

"We're just going to do what we normally do and play tough defense," Farrell said of stopping Crawford. "We have to keep Crawford from getting easy buckets like he's been doing all season."

Even if Farrell can successfully guard Crawford, the Minutemen still have to worry about Xavier's size. Center Kenny

See M. HOOP on page 8

Farrell earning praise for intensity on floor

Gibbs likely done for year with foot injury

By David Brinch
Collegian Staff

Freshman forward Javorn Farrell has earned a new nickname not only from his teammates on the Massachusetts men's basketball team, but from UMass coach Derek Kellogg as well.

Junk Yard Dog.

"He's earning the nickname, I won't say he's totally earned it yet, but we call him J.Y.D. around here, because that's how he performs," Kellogg said.

Kellogg is talking about Farrell's scrappy and intense defensive play, particularly as of late, that has kept the Minutemen in a number of close games.

Farrell earned his third collegiate start against Charlotte on Saturday after playing in the teams first 15 games. Farrell blocked one shot and grabbed four steals in only 16 minutes of play, and also contributed offensively, grabbing three rebounds and scoring four points.

"It's been good, I just try to do what I can to stay out on the floor, so I guess that got me more playing time," Farrell said.

Even though the Minutemen fell to the 49ers, Farrell thought he played a complete game, defending forward Shamari Spears, a highly touted player who transferred from Boston College. Farrell held Spears to just four points and three rebounds throughout the contest.

"Last game was a good game, we fought pretty hard, but they made more runs than we did down the stretch, they took care of the ball and made their shots," Farrell said. "I think I played pretty solid defensively. My assignment for the night was Spears, and I held him under his season averages, so I thought I did pretty well."

Spears is eighth in the A-10 averaging 16.0 points per game.

Kellogg agreed, noting that if not for some miscues made on the offensive side of the ball for UMass, the Minutemen might have had a victory over one of the best teams in the Atlantic 10.

"He played great defense, and if it wasn't for Green having a career night, we were in really good shape," Kellogg said.

Farrell is averaging 3.7 points per game, and is second in the team in steals with 14, behind senior guard Ricky Harris who leads the team with 27.

Even with his scoring numbers not where he wants them to be, Farrell wants to improve offensively.

"I need to attack more, get to the basket and get to the free-throw line," Farrell said.

This week, his defensive assignment doesn't get any easier, with Xavier coming to the Mullins Center on Wednesday night.

The Musketeers are the best team in the A-10 with a 15-6 overall record and a 7-1 record in conference play. Farrell will most likely see a lot of action, especially against sophomore guard

See FARRELL on page 8

JEFF BERNSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

Freshman Javorn Farrell makes a move to the basket in a game earlier this season. The freshman kept Charlotte forward and leading scorer Shamari Spears to four points on Saturday.

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

HIGH: 30 LOW: 15 www.DailyCollegian.com THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 4, 2010

What is affirmative action's effect?

New study examines potential impact of eliminating policy

By Sam Butterfield
Collegian Staff

A new study published in the Journal of Labor Economics which attempts to estimate the potential impact of eliminating affirmative action has found there could be striking implications for minority enrollment, particularly at the nation's most selective schools.

The study, published by California State University, Sacramento professor of economics Jessica Howell, found that if race-neutral college admissions were to be implemented nationwide in college admissions (as has already happened in California, Texas, Florida, Michigan and Washington state), black and Hispanic enrollment would decline two to four percent nationwide, and 10 percent at schools ranked as most selective in admissions.

Howell's research finds that 30 percent of 2006 applicants to four year colleges were minorities, adding that other evidence has shown that more selective colleges, schools which fall within the top 20 percent of SAT distribution, tend to factor race more heavily in admissions. Howell cites a study published by Ohio State University professor Thomas J. Kane, which finds "the preference given to black applicants to be equivalent to 400 points on the SAT or two-thirds of a GPA point."

Howell draws on data from the National Education Longitudinal Study, a survey first conducted in 1988 where eighth-graders were asked their preferences on school and work and followed up with in 1990 and 1992. The study, conducted by the National Center for Education Statistics, part of the U.S. Department of Education Institute of Education Sciences, found that 56 percent of high school seniors apply to at least one four-year college, and that 32 percent apply to multiple four-year schools. The study found that 51 percent of college applicants were female, 69.5 percent where white, 9.5 percent were black, 11.9 percent were Hispanic, 8.2 percent were Asian, and one percent was Native American. In the study, 70 percent of schools to which respondents applied were public. Additionally, 64.2 percent of students applied to schools ranked less or somewhat selective, while 18.1 percent applied to schools ranked very selective, and 16.8 percent applied to the most selective schools, according to Howell.

The NELS study also found that males are 4.9 percent less likely than females to apply to college at all, and that black students were 15.1 percent less likely to submit no four-year college applications than white respondents.

The NELS data finds that the average white applicant would likely apply to a four-year college if he or she had an SAT score of about 800 points, before the SAT had 2400 total points, and that the average black student would apply with a median SAT of 787. The study also finds that students likelest to apply to four-year schools came from high schools with the highest proportion of students in college preparatory classes.

Howell's research does find some institutional preference for minority students at schools ranked most selective.

"Black and Hispanic applicants are 23 and 9.2 percentage points, respectively, more likely than observationally equivalent white applicants to be offered admission," Howell wrote. Further, her research states that being a minority is statistically insignificant in admissions at all schools except ones ranked most selective.

Howell's study concludes that her simulations find that affirmative action has a positive and statistically significant effect on minority admission to four-year colleges, most pronouncedly at the most selective universities. Therefore, she finds, "an affirmative action ban is likely to have the largest effects on minority applicants at a relatively small subset of selective four-year colleges."

The study, however, finds that most minority students would not change their application decisions.

Approximately 95 percent of minorities would submit the same number of applications even with an affirmative action ban, and 92 percent would apply to colleges of the same level of selectivity, according to Howell's regressions.

Ultimately, Howell's study finds that an affirmative action ban would not bode well for minority students applying to college, but also would not dramatically alter the demographics of colleges and universities.

2.5 percent less minority students would receive multiple admissions, and 1.8 percent less would receive no admissions, according to the study. Admissions of minorities would drop by 0.6 percent at all colleges, although they would decline by 10.2 percent at the most selective schools.

Unsurprisingly, experts on both sides of the affirmative action debate at the national level chose to interpret the study according to their take on the issue.

Richard Kahlenberg, an education

See STUDY on page 3

A new study suggests that eliminating affirmative action would cause minority enrollment to drop by up to 10 percent at the most selective schools.

Justice for Jason marks two years since Vassell incident

MATTHEW HARRINGTON/COLLEGIAN

Justice for Jason supporters rallied in downtown Northampton Wednesday night, two years after Vassell's arrest on the UMass campus.

MATTHEW HARRINGTON/COLLEGIAN

The crowd fought through chilly temperatures as they marched through Northampton Wednesday. The rally ultimately reached the Northwestern District Attorney's office, where they began to chant "justice for Jason."

By Bobby Hitt
Collegian Staff

On Wednesday, Feb. 3, a group of 30 braved the cold and gathered outside of Northampton's First Church at 7 p.m. to demand charges be dropped in the now two-year-old Jason Vassell case. The group, Justice for Jason, assembled to march towards Northwestern District Attorney Elizabeth Scheibel's office to protest what it calls her racist prosecution of Vassell, a former University of Massachusetts student who is charged with assaulting two non-students in Feb. 2008.

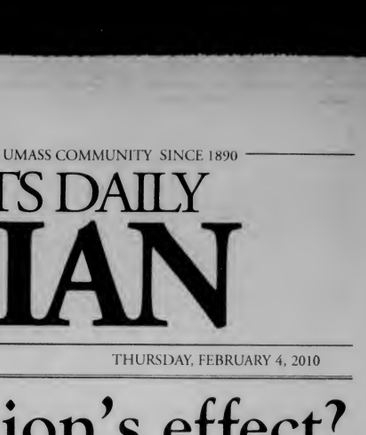
As the group made its way down the streets of Northampton, onlookers stopped to take notice. Of the attendees at the vigil, most were from the Valley area, including residents of Northampton, Amherst, and Springfield.

Vassell was arrested Feb. 3, 2008 on charges of aggravated assault for allegedly stabbing two white males in a contentious altercation at MacKimmie Hall. According to his defense team, Vassell acted in self defense, as his attorneys and supporters hold he was first taunted and then assaulted by the two men he ultimately stabbed. Vassell, now 24, faces up to thirty years in prison if convicted, which his supporters contend is overly harsh considering the circumstances of the case.

What followed has been a two-year saga of controversy and unrest in a normally peaceful college town, as residents on both sides have been outspoken and organized. Supporters claim Vassell is a victim of racist police and prosecutors, others contend he stabbed two unarmed men and should be held accountable.

The two men, John Bowes and Jonathan Bosse, allegedly came to Vassell's window around 5 a.m. on Feb. 3, 2008. The two ever reportedly shouted racial slurs at Vassell, and allegedly attempted to rouse him into fighting them. Vassell called his friend for help, and as he was letting his friend into MacKimmie, Bosse and Bowes allegedly gained entrance.

Bowes then allegedly struck Vassell, breaking his nose. According to reports, Vassell allegedly fought back with a pocket knife, stabbing Bowes four times and Bosse five times.



Bowes was convicted of disorderly conduct last March, but acquitted of civil rights violations and sentenced to one year of probation and a $200 fine, and Bosse was not charged.

Supporters maintain that the incident and the following action of the police and District Attorney were racially motivated. Vassell's defense is currently attempting to seek a so-called selective racial prosecution defense. This defense asserts that the Vassell is being targeted for prosecution specifically based on his race, and that similarly situated individuals of a different race would not be prosecuted the same way.

Last January, Northwestern Assistant District Attorney Elizabeth Dunphy Farris, who is

See JASON on page 2

Muskateers slash Minutemen 87–79

JEFF BERNSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

Freshman forward Terrell Vinson heads to the basket against Xavier on Wednesday night. The Minutemen fell to the Muskateers, 87–79.

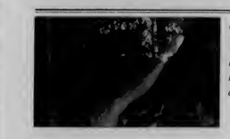
By David Brinch
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's basketball team was almost there.

A big second half comeback, improved shooting, and stout defense nearly came together for the Minutemen against Xavier Wednesday night at the Mullins Center.

UMass (8-14, 2-6 Atlantic 10), however, couldn't hold off a strong shooting performance from Musketeers (16-6, 8-1 A-10) guard Jordan Crawford, falling 87-79 on Leaman Legacy Night.

UMass	79
XU	87



Crawford, the leading scorer in the A-10, scored a game-high 25 points, going 8-for-15 from the field and 5-of-8 from deep.

"I thought that was a good Atlantic 10 battle, Xavier was really good in the first half, pulling out to a 17-point halftime lead," UMass coach Derek Kellogg said. "Our guys regrouped at halftime and put a little score into them, and I thought we played tough and really made plays and shared the basketball."

The Minutemen started firing on all cylinders at the beginning of the second half, causing three steals in the first four minutes while shooting 5-for-7 on the other end of the court. UMass went on an 12-2 run with two 3-pointers from senior guard Ricky Harris, one from junior guard Gary Correia and a three-point play from redshirt junior Hasbun Bailey.

Harris had 24 points, going 11-of-20 from the field, but struggled from beyond the arc, going just 2-of-8 from 3-point range.

See BASKETBALL on page 8

ARTS & LIVING

LeeRoc'ing It

Best friends turned artistic directors Beth Leibowitz and Andria LaRocco collaborate across campus for their upcomin show, "The LeeRoc Dance Project."

SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS

Spring sports set to begin

After a long winter, the Massachusetts women's lacrosse and tennis teams will kick off their spring seasons this upcoming week.

SEE PAGE 8

EDITORIAL & OPINION

Collegian columnist Nick Milano has some suggestions for how UMass can become a more tight-knit community.

SEE PAGE 4

DailyCollegian.com

Get a first look at the UMass tennis and women's lacrosse teams in our online spring sports preview.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXX
ISSUE 14

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
413-545-3500
Fax 413-545-3699
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief William McGuinness
Managing Editor Matt Rocheleau
Managing Web Editor S.P. Sullivan
Business Manager Daniel Jette
Production Manager Michael Sarkes
Night Supervisor Kirsten Swenson
Advertising Manager Michael Tortorici
Advertising Production Amanda Joinson
Arts & Living Editor Shanna Murphy
Comics Editor Andrew Witts
Editorial Editor Alyssa Creamer
News Editor Nick Bush
Sports Editor Jeffrey R. Larnard
Photo Editor Matthew Harrison
IT Manager Victor Jacek
Asst. Business Manager Matt Zolnierz
Assistant Advertising Nicole Jacinto
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Distribution Manager Norman Provost
Classified Manager Katelyn Tamilio
Asst. Arts & Living Justin Gagnon
Asst. Arts & Living Elyse Horowitz
Asst. Arts & Living Cal Scannell
Assistant Editorial Benjamin Moriarty
Assistant Editorial Michael Phillis
Assistant Editorial Matthew M. Robare
Assistant Comics Domonic Mei
Assistant News Samuel Butterfield
Assistant News Jenn Heshion
Assistant News Chris Shores
Assistant Sports Jay Aaser
Assistant Sports David Brinch
Assistant Sports Adam Miller
Assistant Photo Maxwell Spurr
Assistant Photo Samantha Webber
Senior Producer Sara Cody
Senior Producer Pete Rizzo

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1996. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

PRODUCTION CREW
on staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Sam Butterfield

COPY EDITOR
Chelsea Dugan

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Sarkes

J4J marches in Northampton two years after Vassell arrest prosecuting the case, requested for the trial to be moved to a new location, citing what she said is the difficulty of assembling an impartial jury in Hampshire County.

JASON from page 1

The group Justice for Jason lit candles and sang "We Shall Overcome" on their walk from the church to the District Attorney's office, at 1 Gleason Plaza. The assembly consisted of people from several different age groups, consisting mostly of residents of the Pioneer Valley.

Sara Vitello, a former UMass student who now is a student at Holyoke Community College, carried a banner that read "They took away 2 years, we won't let them take 30 more."

Vitello said she felt "hopeful," for the trial. "As we were moving, I saw a lot of people looking at us," said Vitello.

In Vitello's estimate, the protest helped gain support for Vassell's cause.

UMass alumnus and Justice for Jason member Dan Keefe believes that Vassell was the target of a hate crime.

Molly Coon, also a UMass alumnus, came to show support for the Vassell family, and said she believes the prosecution is attempting to stall the case so it fades from the public light.

"I am here mostly to give support to Jason and his family," said Coon. "I'm concerned that the case is being dragged out to diminish support."

"He thought that he was going to get killed, Bosse and Bowes were saying incredibly racist things," said Keefe. "Jason had the right to defend himself."

"To some extent, the UMass campus has forgotten about Jason Vassell," said Keefe. "He was a UMass honors student in biology, and now he is stuck with the possibility of a 30 year sentence hanging over his head."

According to his supporters, Vassell gave Bowes and Bosse fair enough warning by allegedly showing him the knife.

"Jason told them to stay away from him, but they were the aggressors by coming after him anyway," said Keefe.

Andy Berg, a senator in the SGA, was also at the vigil.

"When injustice is committed, we must try to work to improve the situation," said Berg. "This is indicative of larger problems in society."

Joe Mirkin, a spokesperson for Justice for Jason, gave his account of the night.

"This is a very solemn occasion," said Mirkin. "The vigil itself is for community support in an on going fight against injustice."

A video of the Feb. 2008 incident remains in the hands of the police.

The vigil ended at Gleason Plaza, home to the Northwestern District Attorney's office. The crowd gathered around, saying a few words in support of Vassell, and then began to shout "Justice for Jason" towards the building. The crowd then said their goodbyes and dispersed.

Bobby Hitt can be reached at rhitt@student.umass.edu.

MATTHEW HARRISON/COLLEGIAN

Some of Vassell's supporters carried signs, including this banner that read "they took away two years, we won't let them take 30 more."

MATTHEW HARRISON/COLLEGIAN

Supporters of Jason Vassell marched across Pleasant St. in frigid downtown Northampton Wednesday night in a candlelight vigil.

Have you seen me?

COURTESY JON BANK III

Freddie the Yeti makes a new friend at Charlie's in downtown Amherst. The Yeti has been spotted at a number of locations downtown in recent weeks, promoting the DewMass Winter Dew Tour.

HPV Fact #13:

About 2 out of 3 people will get genital warts after having any kind of genital contact with someone infected.

HPV Fact #11:

You don't have to actually have sex to get HPV—the virus that causes genital warts.

Why risk it

Visit your campus health center.

MERCK
Copyright © 2010 Merck & Co., Inc.
All rights reserved Printed in USA

hpv.com
2105004(40)-01/10-GRD

Study examines affirmative action

STUDY from page 1

fellow at The Century Foundation, a non-profit Washington think tank which specializes in monitoring public policy, said he believes college and universities should switch to giving preference to students of lesser socioeconomic status, rather than giving a boost to minority students.

"I think the study confirms that today universities are providing a preference based on race and that the most selective universities have larger preferences in place, and therefore, if you eliminated them, you'd see the most dramatic impact at the most selective colleges and universities," he said.

Kahlenberg added that he feels that even if affirmative action were to be eliminated, colleges and universities would seek an alternate route to bolster diversity.

"I don't think it's realistic to assume that universities will simply drop race-based affirmative action without trying something different as an alternative, so in the places where the use of race has been banned such as Calif., Fla., Mich., and Wash., in each case, universities have responded by trying to find alternative paths to creating racial diversity," said Kahlenberg.

Kahlenberg suggested giving benefits to students who have faced socioeconomic adversity.

"Using socioeconomic status would buffer that decline," he said of minority enrollment, were racial preference to be eliminated. "I wouldn't say it would offset it 100 percent, but it will stem the decrease."

COURTESY PHOTO

Jessica Howell authored the study examining affirmative action.

Roger Clegg, president and general counsel at the anti-affirmative action, pro-colorblind public policy, Center for Equal Opportunity in Falls Church, Va., said he believes the study proves that ending affirmative action would have a limited impact.

"What struck me was that the effect of eliminating racial and ethnic preferences would actually be rather minor," he said. "These are relatively minor impacts, and when you consider all the costs of engaging in racial and ethnic discrimination in college admissions, it's just not worth it, you're sacrificing the principle of equal opportunity and equal treatment without regard to race."

Donna Stern, the national coordinator at By Any Means Necessary (BAMN), a pro-affirmative action coalition formed in response to the 1996 Proposition 209 ruling in California ending affirmative action at the University of California system, said she believes the study's findings are an underestimate, citing statistics from the University of Michigan system's enrollment after Michigan's Gratz v. Bollinger decision.

"I think that's an underestimation," she said of Howell's findings. "The drop was not 10 percent, the drop was about 50 percent for literature, science and arts undergrads" at the University of Michigan.

In 2005, minority students accounted for 15.1 percent of literature, science and arts students at the University of Michigan, while in September 2009, they accounted for 9.7 percent. In 2005, minority students represented 8.6 percent of engineering students. Last year, they were 5.8 percent, according to the Office of the Registrar at the University of Michigan.

Enrollment numbers at the University of California system, however, do not indicate much of a drop-off in minority enrollment, and in fact reflect gains across all ethnic groups.

According to a September, 2008 study by professor Charles L. Geshekter at California State University, Chico, enrollment increased across all racial categories between 1998, after Proposition 209, and 2006.

The study, titled "The Effects of Proposition 209 on California Higher Education, Employment and Contracting," finds that black students enrolled jumped from 1,368 in 1998 to 2,326 in 2006, a 55 percent increase. In that interim, Latino enrollment leapt from 1,348 across the system to 2,743, an 80 percent increase, while Chicano representation soared from 4,155 to 8,453, an 83 percent increase. Asian enrollment, often cited as a factor in California's Proposition 209 ruling, also increased heavily, as Asians went from 10,427 of the UC's students to 17,035, a 60 percent increase. In this interim, white students also made gains, as white student enrollment increased from 15,201 in 1998 to 22,471 in 2006, a 33 percent increase.

Ward Connerly, a former member of the University of California Board of Regents who participated in the Proposition 209 debate and opposes affirmative action, said he believes simulation numbers are not reflective of what happens in reality, and thus that he did not accept the study's findings.

"I'm not very enamored with the study," Connerly, the chairman of the American Civil Rights Institute, a Sacramento-based organization which works to end racial and gender preference in public education, said. "These simulation models are not very effective when you apply them to matters of student behavior and how universities will react."

Connerly said that when the UC Board of Regents debated ending affirmative action, it ran multiple models, few of which ultimately yielded accurate results.

"You just can't predict, number one, how people are going to react once a certain policy is changed, and more impotently you can't predict how the global university community will react once they're all on the same footing."

Connerly said he sees the fact that private schools can still offer racial preference in states that have elected to ban the practice as a negative, as students make their application decisions based on where they feel they will be admitted.

"Right now, you can make the case that when Calif., Fla., Wash., Neb., and Mich eliminate preferences, those students who would have gotten into selective institutions, they might apply to historically black colleges or private colleges, but if everyone's on the same footing and as an applicant you know you can't go and get a better deal at Stanford than UC Berkeley, your decisions are different."

Connerly did, however, concede that an achievement gap exists between white and Asian students and black and Hispanic students.

"If we understand the fact that there is a profound academic achievement gap between black and Hispanic students on the one hand, and Asian and white students, and if we know that that gap is likely to continue as trends suggest, and if institutions of higher education place emphasis on those academic standards, then that drop in the number of underrepresented students of two percent to four percent, that might be true," he said.

What might such a hypothetical change mean for the University of Massachusetts?

22 percent of incoming freshmen for the fall of 2009 were African, Latino, Asian, Pacific Islander and Native American (ALANA) students, accounting for roughly 907 students out of this year's incoming class of 4,124, according to the Office of Institutional Research's undergraduate admissions and enrollment statistics survey.

Were enrollment figures to drop at UMass along the same lines as Howell's study indicates, this would mean that minority enrollment would drop in the incoming class by between 25 and 30 students.

Sam Butterfield can be reached at sbutterfield@dailycollegian.com

COURTESY PHOTO/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Thousands at UC Berkeley protest the Board of Regents' decision to end affirmative action and Proposition 209, the 1996 measure which eliminated affirmative action from college admissions in California.

AIDS IS NOT OVER:

AN EVENING WITH JAMES EARL HARDY

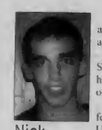
In recognition of
National Black HIV/AIDS Awareness Day

February 8, 2010
7:00 PM
UMASS Amherst
Campus Center
Room 101

A discussion of the Black community's struggle with HIV: What Eazy-E's death can still teach us

The UMass Stonewall Center &
TAPESTRY*health*
CARE WITHIN REACH
tapestryhealth.org 800-696-7752

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN



EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 4, 2010

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UMass bonding time

Nick Milano

One of the features that gives aspiring University of Massachusetts applicants pause - I know I was one - is the sheer size of the University. Switching from a high school of perhaps 2,000 students to a college with over 24,000 can be a shock.

To combat this impression, different groups on campus market the University in different ways. Join Commonwealth College, we are told, it is a school within a school! Live in Orchard Hill instead of the overpopulated Southwest! Choose a small major; small classes and a closer rapport with professors will follow!

At one point, I followed each of the above recommendations, but, still, the size and lack of a tight UMass community is one of the problems UMass faces.

This will be the first in a series looking at ways the University can shake things up and create a more close-knit student body.

Think about it. In what ways does UMass promote the community aspect of college?

There are athletic events every weekend, but few of these are interesting enough to attract a large crowd. In the fall, football is a draw, but this is mostly used as an excuse to start drinking earlier.

Of the two games I tailgated, few of the people I was with even bothered going into the game. In the winter, only men's hockey and basketball attract a large crowd, but the basketball team's struggles are a good enough excuse not to go. In the spring, softball and men's lacrosse are fun, but they do not stir the emotions of the entire University.

School spirit for athletics is sorely lacking.

There are plays, concerts and other artistic events, but the vast majority of the student body prefers not to attend. The few plays I have attended have been well done but sparsely attended.

The same goes for the couple of jazz concerts I have attended. It is unfortunate, but it is the truth. Various Registered Student Organizations do an incredible job of having meetings and outings, but they usually only concern a finite number of students.

It is apparent that the school needs to do things outside the box to bring the "we" back to "We are UMass." Sitting in the library the other day, doing everything possible to avoid some tedious reading, it was impossible not to catch myself turning to the campus pond time and time again. The only things that seem to enjoy the campus pond, even in the winter, are some geese and some ducks. It is unfair!

I want go swimming - well, that might be a little crazy. It is not the most appealing body of water I have ever seen, and although I have heard an interesting story about a friend's adventure in the pond one night, I would not be one to go for a dip.

Yet, that is not the only option available. A yearly ritual among my friends is to sneak into the Lars Anderson rink in Brookline, Mass. to play some midnight hockey.

Whenever possible, kids in my neighborhood routinely clean off a frozen pond in some woods normally reserved for underage drinking to play pond hockey. With this in mind, it was impossible not to imagine using the Campus Pond for hockey or ice skating.

Imagine the spectacle of students cruising around the pond, once it freezes over, on skates between classes. Think the Bruins game at Fenway Park was a success? How many students would love an opportunity to play some pond puck right in the middle of campus? Sure, we could go to the Mini Mullins or play intramural hockey, but ice time and teams are severely limited.

Scientifically, such a plan may be out of reach. Looking at the pond, it never quite freezes all the way around meaning it is probably never thick enough to support skaters. If the water is stagnant, however, logically, it should freeze eventually once it gets cold enough. The pond freezing is only one sure roadblock. Of course, the University Administration would have problems with letting whomever skate, as there would be legal issues to be worked out.

Further fears about regulating who skates, when and preventing drinking would be other obstacles. So, this idea is probably too far-fetched to have any legs.

The point is not that in order to create a more vibrant UMass community, UMass needs to figure a way to let us students play hockey on the campus pond. The point is that the current approach to building student cohesion is not working.

Yes, this university is close, but there are distinct lines drawn between groups of people and no way to bring them all together.

The athletics program will never get big enough to match the school spirit of a Penn State, Michigan or the University of Southern California, yet there are other ways of making it happen.

More school sponsored activities that do not come from the usual college handbook might help. The campus pond is one example, next week I will look at another, more probable idea.

Nick Milano is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached nmilano@student.umass.edu.

Personalizing Haiti

Christa Romano

As I sat in the heated office of the auto shop waiting for the mechanics to finish fixing up my car, a rather large middle-aged woman walked in and started chatting with the man behind the counter. She wasn't the most refined of women - throwing unnecessary curse words into her vocabulary as she carried on about the day's events.

I was paying more attention to the book I was reading than to whatever it was they were talking about, but at one point in their conversation my ears perked up as she said, "Why should we donate? You know, we're floundering enough as it is over here. Just look at our economy, we need to help ourselves before we can help anyone else."

She was talking about Haiti.

I always try to consider the adversary point, so instead of interjecting myself into their conversation and preaching my offended humanitarian viewpoint, I bit my tongue and considered where she could possibly be coming from.

I always try to consider the adversary point, so instead of interjecting myself into their conversation and preaching my offended humanitarian viewpoint, I bit my tongue and considered where she could possibly be coming from.

I considered that maybe she really can't afford to donate to the starving Haitians because maybe she is unemployed or even homeless.

Maybe she is raising six children on welfare and is expecting one more. Maybe on top of all those maybes her car just broke down, which would explain why she was there in the warm office that day, pessimistically discussing world issues that have no direct effect on her.

It could also be possible that she was just parroting the conservative and instigative comment Rush Limbaugh made on Jan. 13, the day after the devastating earthquake. He said, "We've already donated to Haiti. It's called the US income tax."

So, woman in the garage and Mr. Limbaugh, what you're trying to say is that the world's most influential nation charitably giving money to the poorest country in the western hemisphere, after they experienced among the worst natural disasters in the past 200 years, is unjust because we pay taxes on top of our struggling economy?

I suppose everyone is entitled to his or her own viewpoint.

The way I see it, though, the fact that I was born and raised in the United States is pure luck, because in another life I could have just as well been born in a developing nation such as Haiti.

So, when I hear that thousands of people are suddenly buried under tons of rubble and broken concrete, or that countless children have lost their parents or even their limbs I feel empathetic. While I recognize that we should consider and hold significant our own problems, we should also consider what they could be, had we not been so lucky to be born and living in such a privileged country.

I'm not saying the woman in the garage doesn't have problems. For all I know, all of my previous speculations could be true.

But even if she were on welfare, raising six kids and paying for a broken-down car, does that mean that she is justified in trivializing the situation in Haiti?

The fact that she, as a citizen of the United States, is at least able to get welfare, to have clean drinking water, to have the luxury of carrying around a few extra pounds of body fat, is more than the 3,000,000 Haitians who have been affected by the earthquake can say.

In the United States, regardless of what magnitude of an earthquake hits, how fast a forest fire spreads or how destructive a hurricane is, our nation will never be in the same situation that Haiti is in, or even as it was before the January earthquake.

It's true that it will take a while for the U.S. to get out of the current recession, but we all know that it won't last forever.

History has proven that our economy will bounce back, because we have recourses that other countries want.

We also have doctors and nurses, a prosperous agricultural industry and a vast majority of people who earn more than $450 a year, the average annual income in Haiti. While we may no longer be the richest country in the world, we are certainly still a main player in the game, especially when compared to Haiti.

We are two countries who are at opposite ends of the spectrum; so far removed from one another in every sense, that it can be difficult for Americans to see the big picture.

The position of power, influence and wealth the United States has, despite our recession, comes with a moral responsibility to offer whatever help we can, not as a rich and powerful benefactor but as a neighbor, a helping hand.

Whether helping means donating a large sum by the U.S. government, personally pledging five dollars to a telethon, or putting your hand-me-down clothes in the boxes at the rec. center, I have every faith that the Haitians will appreciate it and perhaps someday, if they are ever able to gain solid ground, will return the favor.

Christa Romano is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at cromano@student.umass.edu.

In memory of Howard Zinn

Justin Thompson

He may lie at the opposite end of the political spectrum from me, yet no matter what one's political views are - there is no denying the fact that Howard Zinn was and is one of the single most important figures in contemporary political history. Mr. Zinn died last Wednesday of a heart attack, he was 87.

We know and generally accept now that history is written by the powerful, the winners and the wealthy.

We know that there are classes of people in not just the history of the U.S., but around the world, whose voices are not heard by the writers of history.

That knowledge is thanks in part to Zinn and his book "A People's History of the United States," (one of many works he authored) which challenges many of the fanciful notions of American history we are brought up believing.

His book chronicles the history of our country, from the landing of Columbus, to the tyranny of colonial government, to the Civil Rights movement and up to the War on Terrorism.

Howard Zinn is a champion for the political left and taught at Boston University for 24 years.

During that time he was the professor of our very own Stuart Shulman, who once referred to Zinn in an email as "an American hero!"

I am quite sure he, and countless others, still hold that view today.

He may not be everybody's favorite social or political figure, David Horowitz, who is scheduled to speak at UMass on Feb. 23 said that "there is absolutely nothing in Howard Zinn's intellectual output that is worthy of any kind of respect."

I beg to differ on this point.

His teachings and intellect have not only intrinsic worth, but also value as a way of studying history, analyzing politics and living an engaged life.

Zinn was also a major voice in the Civil Rights movement in the 1960s. As a professor at Spelman College in Ga. he lobbied, organized sit-ins and mentored students on civil rights. He was eventually fired from Spelman for standing up against segregation with the students.

Zinn was also a major voice in the Civil Rights movement in the 1960s. As a professor at Spelman College in Georgia he lobbied, organized sit-ins and mentored students on civil rights.

Along with his teachings as a professor and authoring a best-seller, Zinn was a playwright and activist. A documentary featuring his works, "The People Speak," was released last year and Zinn traveled across the country giving performances and viewings in bookstores, on stage and on college and high school campuses until recently.

He was a voice for progress who inspired generations of students not just at BU, but around the country, to be active in their society and their governments, to challenge conventional wisdom and to speak up against injustices we see in the world.

It is said that he not only taught history, but encouraged his students to make it, to live it. I think this is a philosophy that resonated down the Pike and stuck here at UMass, one of the most politically active campuses in the nation, for better or worse.

Although I disagree with some of his politics - his teachings will, nevertheless, live on in the hearts and minds of millions of students here in Massachusetts and across the nation.

After more than forty years, Howard Zinn was invited back to Spelman College, where he gave the commencement speech in 2005.

In it he told students, "The lesson of history is that you must not despair, that if you are right, and you persist, things will change. The government may try to deceive the people, and the newspapers and television may do the same, but the truth has a way of coming out. The truth has a power greater than a hundred lies."

Justin Thompson is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at jandrewt@student.umass.edu.

Why Ed/Op needs your help:

Without you, the Collegian would not exist. This paper is supposed to create a dialogue and without your letters and input we can not correctly create this conversation. Help us by sending your letters to:

editorial@dailycollegian.com

You asked what our email was?

It's:

editorial @ dailycollegian.com

LETTERS to the EDITOR

Send to Ed@DailyCollegian.com

WANT TO WRITE TO US?

Letters to the editor should be no longer than 550 words and can be sent to editorial@dailycollegian.com or submitted online at dailycollegian.com. We regret that, due to space constraints, not all letters will be printed, but can be found online.

IS ALEX PERRY THE RIGHT KIND OF CONSERVATIVE?

Dear Editor,

Response to Alex Perry's Editorial, Union: one -- Obama: zero

I do not believe that Perry speaks for all conservatives, but doubtless he speaks for the confused ones. Conservatives such as Perry are confused in that think they can have their cake and eat it, too: two wars and tax cuts, job growth without spending.

An example from his editorial: Perry rails against Obama for not keeping campaign promises, labeling him a liar. Perry rails against Obama for keeping campaign promises, i.e. cutting taxes for 95 percent of working families.

Debt and job issues seem to agitate Perry the worst. Why then does he attack Obama's tax cuts while ignoring that across-the-board tax cuts are a cornerstone of Republican policy?

Why does he attack Obama-specific debt while ignoring that in a recent interview on MSNBC, McCain's top campaign adviser, Douglas Holtz-Eakin, attested to the fact that debt was unavoidable and would have ballooned under a McCain administration as well? Why does he attack health care reform and the large national debt, when our doomed health care system, left untouched, will magnify debt even more in the coming decades?

The answer is confusion. Perry wants ... he doesn't know what he wants.

Sincerely,
Aaron King

HOW MANY KIDS CAN FIT IN THIS HOUSE?

Dear Editor,

In regards to Mr. Gottlieb's Friday Column:

It is not definitive that the four housemate bylaw is "legal and constitutional." That is a matter of dispute amongst attorneys.

The mention of a rental registration bylaw should not go without comment. The notion that government "inspectors" would have the right to enter your home (at your expense), without warrant or probable cause, is outrageous. Renters are not second class citizens. If such intrusions are so vital for peoples' "health and safety," why not also mandate them for those who own their homes?

I do want to applaud Mr. Gottlieb for pointing out that the ridiculously high drinking age, along with the prohibition of marijuana, is at the heart of most town and gown problems. This is where change needs to happen.

Sincerely,
Terry Franklin

WHEN THE DAY COMES

Dear Editorial Staff,

How can it be that President Obama has been in office for one whole year and the America that he inherited - with its financial meltdowns and all - has not transformed into a utopian society where the Republicans actually care about governing?

It is nothing short of shocking when I hear critics of the Obama administration rail against it on the basis of the deficit. Not only do both liberal and conservative economists alike agree that the stimulus package was a necessary step towards preventing financial Armageddon but also no one would argue that America's deficit wasn't already astronomically high before Obama's inauguration.

Lest we as nation have come down with a bit of amnesia, I should end by pointing something out: Our government is not only made up of the Executive, we do have a very powerful Legislature in which an obstructionist minority can successfully exist, making it very difficult, via their shenanigans, for the Executive to get anything meaningful done like health care reform. Oh, and hope is still alive.

Signed,

Amara Anosike
Journalism & Political Science
Major 2011

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 4, 2010

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Lights, Cameras, LeeRoc!

By Rachel Aylward
Collegian Correspondent

Sunshine streams through the windows of Totman Dance Studio 204, illuminating the slick black marley that stretches across the floor and the faces of University of Massachusetts students Andria LaRocco and Beth Liebowitz as the two rehearse for their upcoming show, the "The LeeRoc Dance Project."

As they sprawled out across the same black marley floor where much of their work has been perfected, LaRocco and Liebowitz spoke at length about "The LeeRoc Dance Project." Although the two have pirouetted before several ballet bars over the last four years, they are intent on raising the figurative bar for student-run arts events with "Lee Roc," an enriched performance experience featuring dance, live music, original artwork and more.

Funded by the UMass Amherst Alumni Association and the UMass Arts Council, LaRocco and Liebowitz's passion for dance inspired them to collaborate and provide a fine arts event free of charge to the campus.

As artistic directors – as well as best friends - LaRocco and Liebowitz have busied themselves over the course of this academic year, planning the production of "LeeRoc." In addition to choreographing the show, the pair has reached out across the campus community, recruiting a bevy of emerging musical and creative student talents. Those recruited include UMass students Eve Boltax and Nicholas Shaneyfelt – a violinst and a pianist, respectively – along with photographer Alyson Villard, lighting designer Sierra Boyea and visual artist Amy Dolan.

Also contributing to "LeeRoc" and sure to entertain are The Dynamics, a student-run a cappella group featuring Rebecca Downey and Patrick Watson. To add yet another aspect of entertainment to the show, UMass Amherst alumnus Justin Stewart has assembled video clips starring student actor Jonathon Remmers, which will be played in between dances.

"Even from the get-go this wasn't going to be just a dance show, it was going to be something that would showcase the arts on campus at UMass," said Liebowitz.

The performance will consist of five dances, lasting no longer than 45 minutes in total. Audience members are encouraged to peruse the student art on display during the show's brief intermission.

When asked if those lacking previous exposure to the arts would be interested in attending, LaRocco let out a squeal of excitement. "There's something for everyone," she exclaimed. "The show is multidimensional. Because of its multiple points of interest, it is sure to appeal to students at UMass as well as those from surrounding communities."

Liebowitz added that the duo "[Have been] thriving on the partnership with all of [their] fellow artists, and you will see that in the show."

"The LeeRoc Dance Project" was designed to be highly accessible to a wide array of audiences. The company, which LaRocco and Leibowitz started from the ground up, literally – they have been building their own stage - has been fashioned by its creators as a beacon of light for the entire arts community.

"The more our students are collaborating, the more visibility and excitement is generated for all the arts at the university," said Peggy Schwartz, director of the UMass Dance Program.

LaRocco and Leibowitz worked tirelessly to fuse their technical dance backgrounds together to form their own self-titled "LeeRoc technique."

According to LaRocco, the two are always "going to be LeeRoc'ing, a new verb! We eventually hope to have a "LeeRoc" studio[and we] are going to put on shows whenever we can."

As far as the future, LaRocco remains optimistic.

"Beth will be in New York and I'll probably be in Boston, so it'll be like a dual city experience," said LaRocco regarding the duo's plans post-graduation.

Beyond "LeeRoc," the two hope to engage in community outreach programs. "We'd also want to do movement therapy for people with disabilities. Whoever we can help with movement we want to," said Liebowitz.

LaRocco and Liebowitz attribute much of their artistic growth to their time spent here at the University.

"We are so excited that it's happening our last semester here because we want to give back to UMass everything they've given to us and leave a blueprint for other people to use to continue collaborating on campus," said LaRocco, before adding that the two "really hope that something like the LeeRoc Dance Project happens again."

Perhaps nothing describes their intentions more than the show's name, which was intended to encapsulate the zeal with which they want to educate the public about the arts. When asked about the title, "A Movement," Liebowitz explained that it is "a movement, meaning people moving, as in dancing, but also the movement on campus of bringing the arts together."

And on Feb. 5 and 6 in Totman Gymnasium, "The LeeRoc Dance Project" will be doing just that – bringing the arts together.

To reserve your free tickets to "The LeeRoc Dance Project" debut performance February 5 and 6 at 8 p.m in Totman Gymnasium, please contact leerocdanceproject@gmail.com.

Rachel Aylward can be reached at rpaylwar@student.umass.edu.

As best friends and artistic directors of the fledgling "LeeRoc Dance Project," University of Massachusetts seniors Andria LaRocco and Beth Leibowitz (pictured here) let their passion for dance hold sway.

LaRocco contends that much of her artistic growth is the result of her time spent at the University.

COURTESY ALYSON VILLARI

Familar country fable tugs on 'Heart' strings

By Nick Ortolani
Collegian Staff

There's a scene early in "Crazy Heart" where Bad Blake (Jeff Bridges) and Jean Craddock (Maggie Gyllenhaal) are discussing country music. She is interviewing him for a local paper, and they are discussing who is "real country." And somehow, while "Crazy Heart" is filled with almost every imaginable cliché about country music there is, somehow Bad Blake and his story still qualify as "real country."

Almost everyone familiar with country music is familiar with Bad Blake and his maudlin story. It is the subject of many movies about country music, and endless country music songs. Bad Blake is a washed up old singer-songwriter, driving from town to town in his beat-up truck with his guitar in the back, only to play some of the smallest joints imaginable. He is also an alcoholic. Yet things start to change when he meets a young woman on the road.

What sets "Crazy Heart" apart from countless other depictions of the same character is its relentless conviction. All the elements of this lifestyle are very real to Bad Blake and those around him. He barely has ten dollars in his wallet and, to survive, will play for next to nothing. Taking comfort in cheap whiskey and women, the only thing that seems to break through the painful mediocrity of Bad's life is the young reporter who interviews him, and subsequently ends up spending the night.

About half of "Crazy Heart" is concerned with Bad's relationship with Jean. What they share is more than just a one-night-stand. They spend so much time together that they become functioning parts of each other's lives.

The other half of the film is concerned with Bad's alcoholism. While director Scott Cooper avoids making a moral statement about drinking, it is clear that Bad's problem is hurting both himself and those around him.

Much of this world comes to life through the exceptional performances of the cast. Jeff Bridges' Bad Blake is particularly effective, both understated and heart breaking in his portrayal of a man on the edge. The character is a pastiche of various real-life country musicians (including Merle Haggard, Waylon Jennings and Kris Kristofferson). Yet Bridges pulls the roll off with such grace that not only does he avoid caricature, he makes it seem like this story has never happened before.

Although largely a character study, "Crazy Heart" traces Bad Blake's struggle to regain credibility in the realm of music. Although, by the film's start, his career is in the gutter, quitting is never an option for the beleaguered musician. Even when playing the smallest venues, Bad performs as if he was in front of thousands, and his audiences can see this. He finally gets a break from his manager, who offers Bad a spot as an opening act for Tommy Sweet (Colin Farrell), Bad's former musical partner.

It is obvious that, at some point, Bad and Tommy had some venomous feud, which led to their parting ways. But this reason is never clearly revealed to the audience, and it's safe to assume that, while important to both of them at one point, it isn't important anymore. Tommy is grateful for Bad's appearance at his show, even leaving Bad a case of his favorite whiskey in his dressing room. Farrell beautifully portrays a man whose relationship with Bad is on the mend, but hopeful.

The supporting figures in the film are also quite impressive. Gyllenhaal's Jean is tender and vulnerable, providing one of the few palpable sources of peace for Bad. Robert Duvall plays Bad's longtime friend Wayne. Fresh off his turn in "The Road," Duvall is a rock of Gibraltar of sorts, emoting compassion and sincerity. Through his weary demeanor, one can sense that Wayne has already seen Bad at his worst and pulled him through. But ultimately, it is Bridges who shines at the center of the film.

The soundtrack is also incredible, particularly for those who like country music. Townes Van Zandt and Lucinda Williams appear, as do both Bridges and Farrell, who provide their own voices on several of the album's stand-out tracks. The songs have a passion about them which makes it believable that they are from the world of the film.

Ultimately, "Crazy Heart" takes its audience on a familiar journey as if for the first time. The story is not the attraction, but rather the passion with which that story is told.

Nick Ortolani can be reached at nortolani@student.umass.edu.

The salt and pepper hairs forresting his jawline do little to disguise Bad Blake's (Jeff Bridges) downtrodden countenance. Only a liaison with a journalist (Maggie Gyllenhaal) can stir his heart from atrophy.

Scatological humor abounds with Silverman

Laura Silverman on wit, poop and a new season of her hit "Program"

By Garth Brody
Collegian Staff

Poop jokes will always be funny. They are dumb and disgusting and probably harmful in some way and yet we can't get enough of them. File them under "juvenile" along with sex jokes, race jokes, cartoony violence and lewd puns, they may be singlehandedly responsible for the decline of Western civilization, but, when they are done right, we cannot resist the raw power of their giggle-inducing influence.

Now, put all that in the mind of a nine-year-old girl who happens to be trapped in the body of a 39-year-old woman, and you have Sarah Silverman. Put Sarah Silverman in a surreal mashup of sitcom and children's show - and toss in some goofy musical numbers for good measure - and you have the third season of "The Sarah Silverman Program."

If you are familiar with Silverman's stand-up comedy or at least with the basic premise of her schtick - immature and self-centered Jew pokes vicious fun at everything, vilest lines delivered with cutest faces - then you already have a pretty good idea of her character (well, caricature) on the show.

Most of the action centers on her shenanigans as this character. The show follows a 30-minute television show's traditional plot-subplot formula, with the subplot involving one or more of the minor characters. Tonight: does Sarah have a penis? How will Brian and Steve escape the ghost of their neighbor?

When the Daily Collegian caught up earlier this week with Sarah's older sister and castmate, Laura Silverman, she mentioned that this season, we might finally start to see a departure from that formula, or at least an inversion: "All of the supporting characters get a lot more developed this season. There's a lot more storylines involving the other characters."

Laura described her own character, a fictionalized version of herself, as "sort of sweet and stupid, but maybe not as stupid as she seems. Maybe."

In the show, Laura is Sarah's younger sister, but their relationship is at least partially based on Laura's childhood doting on her little sister.

"I just always thought she was so cute. And I just - I loved taking care of her and, you know, doing things for her."

The made-for-television version of this relationship, exaggerated and extended into adulthood, is pretty much what allows Sarah to continue to be the way she is. Since she is too lazy and immature to ever hold a job for longer than an episode, Laura covers her rent (and all other expenses). This is the engine for a great deal of the plot. Sarah does something terrible, Laura covers for her, Laura's husband Jay (Jay Johnston, "Mr. Show") insists that Sarah take responsibility, Sarah screws that up by doing something terrible, and so on.

The show's puerile sense of humor may be inspired by Sarah's stand-up act, but according to Laura, much of the credit belongs to executive producer and head writer Dan Sterling.

"He [Sterling] thinks of the poop jokes. In a really intelligent, brilliant, very highbrow way, of course. He has a very important job, writing poop jokes," said the elder Silverman.

She sounds like she's joking there, but went on to assure us that "I think it's really smart, actually, in the secretest of ways." And it's true - under all the layers of poop, there's a sweet, delicious kernel of genius. But the real secret is that you don't have to dig to get at it. The poop is the best part.

Fortunately, the high-minded aspect never gets in the way of the basic - and base - humor of the show. This has been a stumbling block for a lot of very smart comedy writers in the past. As Laura said, "It's not easy to be really smart about being stupid. A lot of people try, and few succeed."

"The Sarah Silverman Program's" third season debuts tonight at 10:30 p.m. on Comedy Central, and rest assured, it succeeds heroically. Think withered baby penises.

Sorry.

Garth Brody can be reached at gbrody@student.umass.edu.

Laura Silverman plays herself in the hit Comedy Central series, "The Sarah Silverman Program." As the straight-laced foil to her famous little sister, Silverman hits all the right notes.

COURTESY OF MTV3 CENTRAL

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

Need to spread the word?

Reach more than 18,000 readers every day!

IT'S CHEAPER THAN YOU THINK!

On-Campus & Local Business Ads for $10 per column inch

R.S.O. Ads for $6.70 per column inch

CONTACT PAMELA:
thecollegian@gmail.com
413-545-3500
or stop by our office in the Campus Center basement

Dance group taps into theatricality

By Andrew Cogan
Collegian Correspondent

On Tuesday, Feb. 2, the Mark Morris Dance Group treated audiences at the University of Massachusetts Fine Arts Center to an impressive display of Modern Dance.

Morris' reputation for delivering innovative yet technically challenging dance pieces went unchallenged last night, as Morris' group presented three dances, "Looky" (2007), "All Fours" (2005) and "V" (2001), each of which had its own distinctive style and choreography.

Opening with "Looky," the piece emphasized narrative and storytelling through the incorporation of theatrical elements alongside more choreographed dance movements. The 18 dancers involved each wore different costumes, accentuating the attributes of their characters. Utilizing folding chair props, simulated dialogue and comedy, the dance revealed itself in movie-like fashion, it's myriad scenes and images requiring as much acting as they did dancing in order to bring the performance to life.

Following "Looky," was "All Fours." Featuring 12 dancers, this piece departed from the more theatrical elements of "Looky," using atmosphere and the juxtaposition of colors to set different moods and convey meaning to the audience.

The piece hinged upon two disparate groups of dancers. The first, dressed in black costumes and dancing against a red backdrop, functioned like a chorus in a Greek tragedy, building the mood and offering broad contextualization for the more intricate story elements at play. The heart of the story was contained within the second group - two male and female couples. Dressed in white costumes and dancing against a warm yellow background, their movements suggested conflict and internal struggle.

The final dance was the longest of the three. Moderately paced and set to melodic strings and piano, the dancers of "V" displayed cool blue and green costumes accented by warm stage lighting to create a lighter, happier mood that was further enhanced by the flowing and lively choreography.

Each of the three dance performances retained fundamental characteristics of Morris' style. They were each highly visual, strong in narrative and deeply rooted in the musical pieces that accompanied them.

Part of what makes Morris' style so compelling is the foundational role of music in his work. His dances are as much an expression of the music as they are expressions in their own right, with dancers emoting deep breadth of feeling through the movements they project.

Last night, the music was exceptional for its complexity and virtuosity. The precision of the overall performance was a testament to the skill of both the dancers and musicians. Consisting of a string quartet with piano accompaniment, the musicians huddled in the orchestra pit, dim light casting dramatic shadows over their faces and instruments as they swayed back and forth with the music. The mood created by their energy and emotion greatly enhanced the overall effectiveness of the dance pieces.

The coupling of such vivid imagery with engaging narrative and high levels of musicality makes Morris' dances a sight to behold. Arresting even to general audiences who may not be versed in the art of contemporary modern dance, Morris' shows are highly recommended for anyone with the slightest curiosity for discovering all the artistry and innovation such a world has to offer.

Andrew Cogan can be reached at acogan@student.umass.edu.

LIQUORS 44

JAMESON IRISH WHISKEY $24.99 750ML
ALL FLAVORS $23.99 1.75L
Captain Morgan SPICED RUM $27.99 1.75L
Captain Morgan LIME BITE NEW $21.99 750ML
Seagram's Seven Crown NEW DARK HONEY $19.99 750ML
Tanqueray STERLING VODKA $19.99 1.75L
Grand Marnier $29.99 750ML
Tanqueray GIN $33.99 1.75L
BELVEDERE VODKA $28.99 750ML
Jose Cuervo SILVER & GOLD $19.99 750ML
BAILEYS Original Chocolate Mint & Caramel $23.99 750ML
GRANDET 80° $20.99 1.75L
Ketel One VODKA $36.99 1.75L
Seagram's Seven Crown $18.49 1.75L

AVAILABLE ONLY AT THE HADLEY LOCATION
Please visit us at www.liquors44.com
Visit us at our other locations: NORTHAMPTON • 236 King St. HOLYOKE • 44 Lincoln St.
FULL REDEMPTION AT ALL LOCATIONS
NOT RESPONSIBLE FOR TYPOGRAPHICAL ERRORS
DON'T DRINK & DRIVE
MA SALES TAX NOT APPLIES

Off The Wall Games
Worldwake release party on Saturday, February 6 at 5 PM to Close.
Visit www.offthewallgamestore.com for details.
Discount role-playing games, Collectible card games (CCGs), Miniature war games and board games, fun for everyone!
Hours: 10-10 Wednesday-Sunday, 12-10 Monday, Closed Tuesdays - 41 Russel St (Hampton Village Shops) Rt. 9, Hadley 413-586-5451
WARHAMMER 40,000
MAGIC The Gathering

Signing Day ushers in 16 new players to UM

By Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

National Signing Day is supposed to be a time for a team to build towards the future. For the Massachusetts football team, that is not necessarily the case.

The Minutemen signed six transfers to go along with 11 freshmen, who faxed in their letters of intent yesterday.

One of the transfers, defensive lineman Galen Clemons, was initially targeted by UMass, but decided on Central Michigan and sat for a year. Over the winter, he changed his mind and will join the Minutemen in 2010.

The five other transfers (three from Northeastern, two from Hofstra) come after the two Colonial Athletic Association rivals folded their football programs for financial reasons. UMass coach Kevin Morris said he is looking forward to adding players who are already familiar with college football.

"Whether they're in the top or the bottom, it doesn't matter," Morris said. "These are polished college kids that have been around the block. These guys are real character kids that you know are going to have an impact not only on the field, but in the locker room as well."

Morris praised linebacker Chad Hunte's skills as someone who should contribute right away, after starting as a true freshman with the Huskies. The sophomore finished with 32 tackles, and an interception against the Minutemen on Nov. 7 that he carried for 51 yards.

He also has the potential to play on special teams because of his skill-set.

UMass also picked up wide receiver Anthony Nelson (520 yards, four touchdowns), who was the Pride's second receiver.

The freshmen consist of five offensive players and six on defense. Morris commented that many of them were pursued by Division I-A schools and feels that all of them are capable of competing for playing time because of where they are athletically.

However, he knows that there will be an adjustment period with the freshmen.

"The big hurdle for freshmen is that there's a reason they're called freshmen," Morris said. "I think this group's got a chance at some spots to get into the mix, but then again, that's a lot to put on a freshman to see if they can be ready that quickly."

One of the players who will get that opportunity to compete for a starting job is quarterback Brandon Hill, who is 6'5 and received a three-star rating from Rivals.com.

Hill threw for 1,379 yards and 15 touchdowns as a recruit from New Jersey.

Wide receiver Dominic Wooten will be expected to use his 6'5 frame to create a size disadvantage for defenders. Morris said he hopes Wooten can thrive in his system, similar to the way UMass alums Brandon London and Rasheed Rancher did.

He finished his last two years at Norwell High School with 79 receptions, 1,255 yards and seven touchdowns. Wooten also played some tight end during his high school career.

On the defensive side of the ball, Morris signed three defensive backs and two linebackers. One aspect that Morris feels is unique about the newly signed defensive players is their ability to play multiple positions.

Defensive lineman Matt Heilig started at tight end for two years at his high school in Va. and totaled 226 yards on 10 catches. On the other side of the ball, he finished his senior season with 61 tackles and five sacks.

Defensive back Kirkland Nelms is another player capable of playing multiple positions, as he displays solid numbers in all three aspects of the game.

As a defensive player, he had 40 tackles and six interceptions, while returning two for touchdowns. On offense, he rushed for 436 yards with seven touchdowns and had 19 receptions for 320 yards. He also contributed on special teams.

All 17 newcomers will get a chance to prove themselves in Spring Football, which begins on May 30.

Adam Miller can be reached at amiller@dailycollegian.com

ARE YOU INTERESTED IN WRITING FOR SPORTS?
CONTACT JEFFREY R. LARNARD @
SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

SPRING BREAK JAMAICA
Once you go, you know.
Spring Break comes to life...
Live Concerts
Awesome VIP Parties
Beautiful Beaches
Scenic Cliff Jumping
Spectacular Sunsets
Book Your Trip Today! Contact:
SUNSPLASH TOURS
www.sunsplashtours.com
1.800.426.7710
STS STUDENT TRAVEL SERVICES
1.800.648.4849
www.ststravel.com

UMassAmherst

OPEN FORUMS

Meet the candidates for the position of Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs and Campus Life:

Dr. Jean Kim
Interim Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs and Campus Life
University of Massachusetts Amherst
February 4, 2010, Campus Center 168C
9:30-10:15 A.M. Student Open Session
10:30-11:15 A.M. Open Session

Dr. Margaret Jablonski
Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs
University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill
February 5, 2010, Campus Center 168C
2:30-3:15 P.M. Student Open Session
3:30-4:15 P.M. Open Session

Dr. Michael Laliberte
Vice President for Student Affairs
Boise State University
February 8, 2010, Campus Center 168C
11:15-12:00 P.M. Student Open Session
4:00-4:45 P.M. Open Session

Dr. Kevin Charles
Assistant Vice President for Student Affairs/ Student and Academic Services
University of New Hampshire, Durham
February 9, 2010, Campus Center 168C
3:15-4:00 P.M. Student Open Session
4:15-5:00 P.M. Open Session

http://www.umass.edu/umhome/vcstuaf

ALANA CAREER FAIR 2010
your career starts here..
"open to all college students"

Co-Op Internship Employment
February 9, 2010
Student Union Ballroom
1:00 - 5:00PM
UMASS AMHERST
University of Massachusetts Amherst
Student Affairs and Campus Life
Career Services
SPONSORED BY: Bilingual Collegiate Program (BCP) Career Services Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black and other Minority Students (CCEBMS) Diversity In Management Education Services (DIMES) • Native [illegible] Services (NASS) • United Asia Learning Resource Center (UALRC)

UM unable to keep lead after strong second half comeback

BASKETBALL from page 1

[illegible] was as good as he's played in the second half all year," Kellogg said. "He doesn't like basketball, he was working very aggressive on defense, and at times I thought he was the best player on the floor in the half."

Farris, as well as Harris, saw extensive time at the point guard position, as sophomore David Gibbs broke his foot in Tuesday's practice and will likely be out the remainder of the season.

Harris made a lay-up in transition to tie the game at 62, followed by a made free throw from Anthony Gurley to put the Minutemen up one with nearly seven and a half minutes to play.

Both teams exchanged leads eight times over the next three minutes, but Green put the game out of reach with back-to-back 3's followed by a three-point play by forward Jamel McLean (14 points, 11 rebounds) that put the game out of reach quickly for UMass.

Kellogg started three freshmen against the Musketeers, including forwards Terrell Vinson and Javorn Farrell and guard Freddie Riley. Riley added 10 points, while Farrell and Vinson added 12 and 11 respectively.

The Minutemen were outrebounded, 36-32, by the Musketeers, but shot a respectable 43 percent from the field.

After tough losses against two of the best teams in the league, the Minutemen face Rhode Island on Saturday.

"The league this year is as good as it's ever been," Kellogg said. "Top to bottom, I don't know when it's ever been this good, they have six teams in our league in the NCAA tournament," Kellogg said.

The Minutemen have not won a conference game at home since Jan. 6, when they defeated Fordham, 78-76.

Even with the way UMass played down the stretch, Kellogg wants to see his team's hard work turn into victories.

"I'm going to keep preaching to my guys, we can't settle for not coming out on top, but at the same token, it is a little bit of a process right now," Kellogg said.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu.

JEFF BERNSTEIN / COLLEGIAN

UMass started freshman Freddie Riley on Wednesday with point guard David Gibbs out with an injury.

Minutewomen confident with new additions

ROSTER from page 10

"I don't really think there's a strongest or weakest, per se," Florence said. "Everyone kind of leads off each other. When defense is playing well, it carries up the attack, and same thing when attack is pumping in goals, it excites the defense. It's kind of a ripple effect. I think over the field we're looking good and it's going to carry over to each position."

"Usually when a team prevails they will be a stronger defensive team or attacking," senior midfielder Merritt Cosgrove said. "But I feel like we're really very well-rounded, because every practice we work on both [offense and defense]. We're really even on both sides."

With a balanced roster, the Minutewomen are riding into the season with self-assurance on the season ahead.

"I feel confident," junior Jackie Lyons said. "We've been working hard ever since our season ended last year. But we just want to get better every day and we can take bigger steps every year."

With the starting lineup still up in the air, here is the roster breakdown displayed by position and class.

Attackers

Seniors: Stephanie Hopkins
Sophomores: Colleen Mulligan, Nina Sarcona, Ryan Gorman
Freshmen: Cori Murray, Sarah Mullen, Kristen Scopetski, Lauren Terracciano

"In attack, we have a lot of great options," Venechanos said.

Hopkins leads the UMass attack this year. After a career-threatening ankle injury sidelined Hopkins for the rest of her freshman year (totaling 9 goals, 2 assists), she stepped up in 2009 with 33 goals in 46 games.

Hopkins will be assisted by Mulligan, who last year started five of her 11 games played, netting two goals to add to the Minutewomen scoring efforts.

Midfielders

Seniors: Merritt Cosgrove
Juniors: Haley Smith, Nazy Kerr, Jackie Lyons
Sophomores: Dayna Defliese, Danielle Pelletier, Ali Houlis, Jesse O'Donnell
Freshmen: Kelsey Palmer, Megan Connolly, Jordan Renna

"Midfield will be pretty fast this year like in years past," Venechanos said. "We're going to ask them to do a lot of scoring and defending and passing. We're asking them to kind of be connectors in the midfield, get some groundballs for us. They're going to have their hands on some more roles in attacking defense."

Leading the offense is Lyons, who led the team in scoring and assists (44 goals, 27 assists), and was a first-team All-Conference selection in the A-10 last year.

Having played both midfield and attack, Lyons doesn't rate one position higher than the other.

"I think our midfield and attack are really strong, I don't think either one of [them] is stronger," Lyons said. "We rely on each other to get through games, it can't just be our midfield playing a good game, or our attack playing a good team. I think the whole team is really strong, even defensively."

Defenders

Sophomores: Riley Perry
Freshmen: Brittany Schoen, Brianna Concialdi

Two of the three Minutewomen defenders are freshmen. The lone upperclassman is Perry, who played and started all 19 games last season. She had 16 groundballs, 12 draw controls, and caused four turnovers.

Schoen was named the captain of her high school lacrosse team during her senior season. She led Amador Valley High School to win the East Bay Athletic League and North Coast Section Championships with nine goals and 73 ground balls.

Concialdi, out of Yorktown High School in Cortland Manor, New York, joins UMass after winning the All-Elite Award in 2008 and 2009. She led her high school to the state semi-finals and regional championship last season.

Goalkeepers

Seniors: Leslie Barber
Sophomores: Katie Florence
Freshman: Christina Fey

Returning to stand in-between the goal posts is Florence (known as "Flo" to her teammates). In her rookie year, Florence achieved an 11-8 record while also obtaining All-Rookie team honors.

"Her experience in game situations, and she actually played a little bit of international at tryouts, is really important for us in the back," Venechanos said on Florence. "It gives our defense a lot more options and ability to take some chances, because they know they have Florence back there."

Also in the net for the Minutewomen is Barber, who played in three games last season, and totaled a 12.04 goals against average with a .400 save percentage.

New to the goalkeepers this year is Fey, who hails from Kings Park High School. Fey received the All-League, Rookie of the Year, and New York State Scholar Athlete awards in 2006. In her senior year, Fey was the team MVP and captain.

Herb Scribner can be reached at hscribne@student.umass.edu

UMass improving every season under Venechanos' coaching

LACROSSE from page 10

the top teams," Venechanos said.

"It just makes us step up our game more and work harder every day," junior Jackie Lyons said. "We are the champions, so everybody is going to try to get back at us, so we have to challenge each other."

Even though the Minutewomen claimed the A-10 title, they don't feel like the favorite, but rather consider themselves underdogs.

"We're always going to be an underdog, I think that's the mentality of our program and the types of players we bring in are very blue-collar," Venechanos said. "Last year, even when we were the top seed, we went out on the field with something to prove, and we relish in that goal."

Being a fairly young squad, the Minutewomen lost only three of 12 starters from last season while adding eight freshmen, comprised of four attacks, two midfields, one defenseman and one goalkeeper. Most of last season's core returns in Lyons, Merritt Cosgrove, and Katie Florence.

Lyons led UMass last year in scoring with 44 goals and 27 assists and was a first-team All-Conference selection as well as a U.S. developmental team selection as only a sophomore.

Cosgrove brings experience to the midfield, being only one of three seniors on this year's squad.

"I've played in every scenario by now," Cosgrove said. "[Our seniors] have gone through a lot where we take that experience into every game and get the other girls riled up to go with us."

In 53 career games, Cosgrove has scored 21 goals and totaled 67 draw controls in three seasons with the Minutewomen.

Goalkeeper Katie Florence enters her second year after earning All-Rookie team honors in her freshman season.

Though this year's team has only a few seniors and many freshmen, Cosgrove believes that the leadership will come from different sources.

"We have a lot of leaders on the team," Cosgrove said. "We have three captains that are underclassmen. It's not like other teams where the seniors take over. You see it with the freshmen coming out here and pushing everyone, so the leadership is really spread across the board."

The Minutewomen will continue rivalries this season against Harvard, New Hampshire and Yale. Also, for the first time since 2004, UMass will take on Connecticut.

Opponents will have to travel to Amherst early in the season as the Minutewomen will host five of their first seven games in McGuirk Alumni Stadium, with Holy Cross first on the schedule on Feb. 17.

Conference play will begin in late March, when UMass heads on the road to face George Washington, Richmond, Temple and Duquesne in a four-game road trip.

UMass kicks off its season in San Diego this Saturday when it faces preseason No. 1 ranked and five-time defending national champions Northwestern in a rematch of last year's NCAA Tournament meeting.

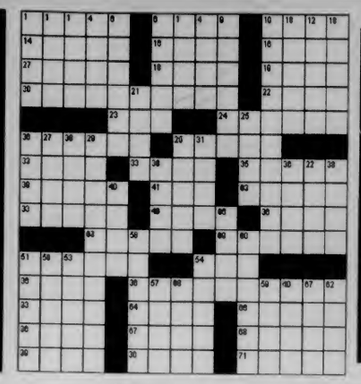
Jay Asser can be reached at jasser@student.umass.edu.

Lincoln Real Estate
25 N. Pleasant St. • 413-253-7879 • www.amherstlincolnrealty.com
Providing the best off-campus living experience
24 hour maintenance
Safe Apartments
Friendly Staff
Two Great Locations:
Amherst Center and Hobart Lane
We start showing apartments
Feb. 3rd from 11:30am – 4:30pm M-F

Start Your Career in Accounting.

Northeastern's MS in Accounting/MBA for non-accounting majors:
- Earn two degrees in just 15 months.
- Complete a 3-month paid residency at a leading accounting firm.
- Proven track record of 100% job placement.

Take the first step.
Visit us online or at an information session near you. Learn more about the program and upcoming events at: www.msamba.neu.edu.
617-373-3244
gspa@neu.edu
www.msamba.neu.edu Northeastern University



Apartments Available
PUFFTON VILLAGE
Excellent location!
1/2 Mile from UMass
Spacious Apartments!
1, 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouses
All rents include: heat, hot water, and cooking gas!
On site laundry,
off street parking.
Basketball and Tennis Courts.
Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

COMICS

WE WANT [illegible]

Questions?! Comments?!
E-mail us: comics@dailycollegian.com
Friend us on Facebook: "Collegian Comix"

CROSSWORD

ACROSS
1. A Muse
6. Epic
10. Carry
14. Strengthened
15. Clothed
16. Not closed
17. Copy
18. Largest continent
19. It makes coins
20. Willful
22. Mix together different elements
23. Timid
24. Chemical cousin
26. West Indian music
30. Convex molding
32. Competent
33. Distribute
35. Far beyond the norm
39. Not back
41. Third person pronoun female
42. Jewish unit of weight
43. Pillar
44. A Roman emperor
46. A thorny flower
47. Equestrian
49. Musical beat
51. Erotic
54. C
55. Slant
56. Burial site
63. Decorative case
64. Wings
65. Part of the human torso
66. Countertenor
67. Catholic church service
68. A long narrow passage
69. Avid
70. 1 1 1 1
71. ___ pole

DOWN
1. Carve in stone
2. Part portrayed
3. Dwarf buffalo
4. Be inclined
5. A city in the Ukraine
6. Frightening
7. As well
8. Acquire
9. Slowly, to a conductor
10. Lunacy
11. An addictive narcotic
12. Anxious
13. Come in 21. Not us
25. Wallop
26. Logs or timbers fastened together
27. A river in Spain
28. Gleam
29. Contemporaries
30. Different
31. Swerve
34. Slave
36. Gait faster than a walk
37. Reckless
38. Throat-clearing sound
40. Clip
45. Chocolate cookie
48. Generator
50. A jazz or swing performer (1940's slang)
51. T-Bone or sirloin
52. What a book is called
53. Rinse, as with a solvent
54. Pepperwort
57. Flair
58. Receptacle
59. Cleveland's state
60. In order that not
61. Part of an archipelago
62. Flower stalk

$1 rides in Amherst area TONIGHT!
(413) 306-8298

SUPERBOWL SUNDAY- FEB. 7TH
$0.25 Cent Wings Close/ Prizes &Giveaways
EVERY THURSDAY
Promo & Trivia Night
EVERYDAY:
$1.00 Drafts and $5 Movie Tickets!*
21ST BIRTHDAY:
Free Entree or Small Pizza with ID*
Hampshire Mall
Across from Cinemark
413-549-0077
FREE Delivery
Arizona Pizza

DEW TOUR WINTER
mount snow.
February 4-7, 2010
ALLSPORTS.COM

"Club Nights" at the MONKEY BAR
Thurs. 2/4 DJ BiggZ
Hip-Hop, Techno, Dance, Mash-Ups
Fri. 2/5 McNight Past Midnight
Special Guest DJ and Good Time Hosted by Johnnie McKnight
Sat. 2/6 "The DebuT"
DJ Marvel, New On The Monkey Scene
Give 'm a Shot..... He's Ready!!!! Are You???
Tues. 2/9 DJ BiggZ
Techno Tuesday!!!
You Know The Drill
Need we say more???
413-259-1500
63 North Pleasant Street
Amherst, MA 01002
www.mymonkeybar.com
21+

Sundays Open at NOON
LA PIAZZA
Best Deals in Town!!
ALL Calzones $4.99
ALL 12" Subs $4.99
ALL Salads $4.99
ALL Entrees $5.99
16" Cheese Pizza $4.99
ea. xtra topping .75
12" Cheese Pizza $5.99
ea. xtra topping $1
16" Cheese Pizza $6.99
ea. xtra topping $1.25
16" Cheese Pizza + 10 Wings (Bone) $11.50
16" Cheese Pizza + 1/2lb Wings (Boneless) $11.50
OCMP Free Delivery
(413) 253-6444
www.lapiazzaristorante.us

SUDOKU

		5	6
2			7	4
	4					8	7
						3		8
	5	8					4
	9			1	7		2
		6	1		5
				8				7
	1				9		3

Saturday Morning Breakfast Cereal by Zach Weiner smbc-comics.com

Clark Kent's honeymoon began on a down note.

Mr. Gnu by Travis Dandro

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20 - Feb. 18
Try walking around campus like you are an action movie star and there is constantly a sweet explosion behind you.

pisces Feb. 19 - Mar. 20
Thoughts about rubber and metal should not force you to rock back and forth with excitement.

aries Mar. 21 - Apr. 19
What are you talking about? Tater tots are not as dainty as you might think.

taurus Apr. 20 - May. 20
The party don't stop until 8 in the morning but your test starts at 8:55.

gemini May. 21 - Jun. 21
Everyone knows that there is a pink elephant in the room and it is doing something very hilarious behind your back.

cancer Jun. 22 - Jul. 22
Entrusting your love to a peanut is just crazy when there are a million other nuts out there that will love you for you.

leo Jul. 23 - Aug. 22
There is a new axe body spray that will make you smell delicious. The scent is called cannibalism.

virgo Aug. 23 - Sept. 22
You are the kind of parent that will sneak out of your child's recital just to score a few minutes alone with the hamburger helper.

libra Sept. 23 - Oct. 22
Save the hair product industry by constructing a blow-out that is not just huge but also captures solar energy.

scorpio Oct. 23 - Nov. 21
Maybe you will start a mass UMass dance party today! Your inspiration will be that not–so friendly racoon hanging out by the pond.

sagittarius Nov. 22 - Dec. 21
Your roommate could handle the bright red nose but last night they caught you sleeping with the antlers on too.

capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 19
Drink your energy drinks in the morning. Classes go by much faster when you feel like you are a fighter jet made of biceps.

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necessary. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

Zoar Outdoors is seeking adventuresome people to be summer guides for whitewater rafting and zip-line canopy tours. Join our training program and spend the summer splashing through rapids or zipping through trees. Applicants should be great with people, have a positive attitude and be comfortable working as a team or independently. Application deadline: Feb.15th. Call 800-532-7483 or see www.zoaroutdoor.com/jobs.htm for an application.

A GREAT JOB! Spend your summer in a lakefront cabin in Maine. If you're looking to spend this summer outdoors, have fun while you work, and make lifelong friends, then look no further...CAMP MATAPONI, a residential girls camp in Maine, has female/male summertime openings for Land Sports, Waterfront (samm crafts, skiing, life guarding, WSI, boat drivers), Ropes Course, Tennis, H.B. Riding, Arts & Crafts, Theater, Cooking, Gymnastics, Dance, Videography, Group Leaders and more! Top salaries plus room/board & travel provided. Call us today at 1-561-748-3684 or apply online at www.campmataponi.com.

FOR RENT

Montague- 2 bedroom, 1 bath, dishwasher, deck, yard, laundry on site, gas heat, off street parking. 413-367-2461 $825+

Hobart Condos 3 bedrooms; hardwood floors, study in basement. Cable & Phone in all bedrooms & study. NOW SHOWING for June & September. NO FEES www. amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7979

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 Bedroom Apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug, or Sept. First Come, First Serve. Get Them While They Last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop By Or Call 549-0600

TUTORING SERVICES

Math, Physics, Chemistry, Stats & GRE. Call John 413-584-8643 JBoid42@yahoo.com.

SERVICES

Pregnant? Want to talk? Call birthright 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 Hour hotline 1-800-550-4900 www.birthright.org

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSTHURSDAY

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 4, 2010

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Lax and tennis turn page on winter

UMass looks to repeat last year's performance

By Jay Asser
Collegian Staff

Getting better year after year under coach Alexis Venechanos, the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team wants to take it one step further this season.

"The goal every season is to get better and play up to our potential," Venechanos said after Monday's practice.

Entering her fourth season with the Minutewomen, Venechanos has already accomplished something which had not been done in 25 years - taking UMass back to the NCAA Tournament.

Along with an NCAA Tournament berth in 2009, Venechanos led the Minutewomen to an Atlantic 10 regular season title and the A-10 Tournament title. After dropping its first three contests of the season, UMass won 11 games – its most since 2003 – including six of seven conference games. The Minutewomen finally reached the NCAA Tournament, an opportunity that eluded them in 2008.

The previous season, UMass rallied late in the season to sneak into the A-10 Tournament. In an exciting overtime upset of No. 1 Richmond, the Minutewomen were one win away from earning a trip to the NCAA Tournament. UMass, however, fell just short, ending the season with a 7-11 overall record, while going 4-3 in A-10 play.

In Venechanos' inaugural season in 2007, the Minutewomen achieved an 8-9 overall mark, but failed to qualify for the A-10 Tournament with a 3-4 conference record. Despite failing to return to the A-10 Tournament, Venechanos laid the framework for the next few seasons.

Experience comes with winning, and Venechanos feels her team gained a lot of that with their accomplishments last season.

"Our out-of-conference schedule last year, like years past, was challenging," Venechanos said. "The experience of being in championship settings is something you can't coach on the field."

Unlike the past few years, UMass is now the favorite and was picked to repeat as A-10 champions this season in voting conducted by the league's head coaches.

"We're in a unique situation where we have a target on our back, but we're still excited and we're going up against

See LACROSSE on page 8

Merritt Cosgrove and the Minutewomen enter the 2010 season as the favorites to repeat as Atlantic 10 champions. Cosgrove is one of three seniors on the team and will provide much of the leadership.

Eight freshmen fill up Minutewomen roster

By Herb Scribner
Collegian Staff

After capturing both the Atlantic 10 regular-season and championship titles, the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team returns to action this coming Saturday with a young, yet well-adjusted roster.

"I think we're pretty balanced," UMass coach Alexis Venechanos said after Monday's practice. "I wouldn't say one part of our game overshadows the other. It's going to start from getting the ball off the draw."

"[Being a balanced team] is pretty good as a coach hoping to get deeper towards the end of the year," Venechanos said.

After a stellar performance in 2009, UMass lost key defender Jackie Rosenzweig, who started all 19 games. Her defensive numbers were unmatched, as she had 20 groundballs, 19 caused turnovers, and five draw controls over the course of the year. The loss of a strong defensive player left a hole in the team that Venechanos hopes to fill.

"We have some people doing a lot more than in years past," Venechanos said. "We have a lot of people; some of them could play all three positions."

Though Venechanos explained that the team is still "working out the kinks" in establishing a starting lineup, she did state that there may be some new faces.

The Minutewomen return to McGuirk Stadium with an inexperienced team, which includes eight freshmen.

"Overall, we're still a young team, but I think we've got a lot of returning players, and the freshman that we have coming in are strong, and I think our roster is strong," returning goalkeeper Katie Florence said.

Both sides of the playing field are solid, with both veterans and new players taking the field. With a strong midfield both offensively and defensively, the Maroon and White plan to use strong team chemistry to claim victory.

See ROSTER on page 8

UM kicks off spring season

By Ben Lambert
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts tennis team will begin its spring season looking to turn things around from a sixth-place finish in the Atlantic 10 last year.

The Minutewomen are coming off a 3-0 fall season, when they defeated Holy Cross, Connecticut, and Rhode Island. They travel to Connecticut on Friday to face Yale to kick off the spring.

UMass has been picked to finish fifth in the A-10 in the conference's preseason poll. This is one spot up from last year's sixth-place finish, leapfrogging Saint Louis, who finished fifth last season. Richmond was picked to repeat as A-10 champions after earning their fifth title in the last six campaigns a year ago. Temple, conference champion in 2008, was predicted to finish second, while Charlotte was tabbed to finish in the number three slot.

The Minutewomen will face three teams ranked in the top 75 of the Intercollegiate Tennis Association (ITA) rankings this spring season. Those three teams are No. 48 Yale, No. 63 Brown and No. 61 Boston University. Other notable matches include a contest against St. John's on Feb. 20, a match against Dartmouth on Feb. 25, and a match at home against Boston College on Feb. 27.

Heading into the season, the Bulldogs will be the highest ranked opponent the Minutewomen will play. Yale is a team on the rise, as demonstrated by its five players ranked in the Northeast top 20 of the ITA rankings, and its No. 7 position in the 2014 recruiting class, the highest placement the Bulldogs have ever had.

Yale is helmed by Debbie McNamara, a Massachusetts native. McNamara has posted a 35-22 record over her four seasons with the Bulldogs. The team is led by Cornell transfer Stephanie Kent, who posted the best record for Cornell in the 2008-09 season before leaving for Yale. She is currently ranked No. 9 in the Northeast in the ITA rankings.

On Feb. 25 against the Big Green, UMass will look to rebound from a 12-0 drubbing in the Big Green Invitational. The Minutewomen were blanked on the final day of the tournament hosted by Dartmouth. No. 2 singles player Mary Beth Winningham defeated Julia Comas 4-6, 6-3, 6-2 in the only match to go three sets. UMass was suffering from minor injuries that forced changes in the bottom half of their lineup, causing freshman Jocelyn Providence to play admirably in her first competitive tournament situation.

The Feb. 27 match against the Eagles is the last significant opponent of the season for the Minutewomen. BC is coming off a 2008-09 season that saw it ranked No. 58 in the country, its highest ranking under coach Nigel Bentley. The Eagles lost three starters from last year's club, including their top two singles competitors. However, BC reloaded with the No. 21 ranked recruiting class in the nation. Over the fall season, the Eagles posted a 1-3 record, but ended on a high note with a 7-0 sweep of Rhode Island.

After the Minutewomen wrap up their regular season schedule, the A-10 Championships will be held April 22-25 at the Dwight Davis Tennis Center in St. Louis.

Players to watch this season are sophomore Magdalena Ploch and freshman Julia Comas. Ploch was ranked No. 10 in singles players in the Northeast in the ITA preseason poll. She was the ace of the squad during the fall season, going 10-3 overall, including a 3-0 mark in dual matches at No. 2 singles, and a 7-3 record in tournament play. Ploch was named UMass Athlete of the Week in Nov. for her performance at the ITA Regional Championships.

Comas enters her first spring season with high expectations. After posting a 3-0 mark in dual matches as part of a 6-4 overall record, Comas will return to playing No. 2 singles for the Minutewomen. The 5'11 freshman from Spain also went 4-3, teaming with Ploch in doubles action, including a 3-0 mark in dual matches.

Magdalena Ploch and Julia Comas will make up UMass' top two singles positions, respectively, and will team up to play doubles.

The team of Maude Lecluyse and Candynce Boney also returns to action in the spring. The duo achieved a 7-3 mark in doubles play during the fall season, good for best on the team.

The match against Yale will be held at 6 p.m. on Friday night in the Cullman-Heyman Tennis Center.

Ben Lambert can be reached at wlambert@student.umass.edu.

Ricky Harris shot 11-20 from the field, recording 24 points in 34 minutes of play against Xavier in UMass' 87-79 loss.

Scoring inconsistencies giving trouble to Minutemen in late stages of game

By Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

If it wasn't for the name on the visiting team's jersey, last night's game would be oddly familiar to the one the Massachusetts men's basketball team played less than a week ago.

It goes on a run against a competitive opponent, but eventually shoots itself out of the game. UMass did exactly that in its 87-79 loss to Xavier.

The Minutemen (8-14, 2-6 Atlantic 10) held a 69-68 lead with four minutes, 37 seconds remaining in the second half, but the Musketeers (16-6, 8-1 A-10) came right back with nine straight points. The only offense the Minutemen could produce were two missed 3-pointers by guards Anthony Gurley and Freddie Riley.

It started with two straight 3-pointers by Jordan Crawford, who scored 10 of his 25 points in the final 4:11 to put Xavier up five points.

By the time UMass started hitting baskets on its own, it was too late, as the Musketeers responded right back.

"I thought we played tough and really made plays and shared the basketball," UMass coach Derek Kellogg said. "That second half, the way we competed and played is kind of the way I hopefully envision our team playing for 40 minutes in the near future."

The Minutemen had a similar game against Charlotte on Saturday night, and came within one point of taking the lead early in the second half, but the 49ers went on a 15-3 run and kept the Maroon and White out of the game.

UMass didn't score a single field goal for 8:34, but it was too late as they never got any closer than nine points.

Fouls add up late

The Minutemen and Musketeers were physical throughout the contest, but for UMass, being physical ended up hurting towards the end of the game.

Despite finishing with only two more fouls than Xavier (17), Jerrell Vinson, Javorn Farrell, and Sean Carter all fouled out of the game. Wednesday saw the greatest number of UMass players foul out of any single contest this season.

Farrell and Carter didn't foul out until the final minute, but Kellogg had to divide the minutes pretty regularly with his three starters getting in foul trouble.

The Musketeers only had two players with four fouls. Jason Love finished the game with 32 minutes, while Brad Redford picked all of his fouls up in six minutes.

Riley makes first start

Kellogg knew that as soon as he lost sophomore David Gibbs for the season with a broken foot that one of his other guards would have to step up.

Last night, that player was freshman Freddie Riley, who started for the first time in his career at shooting guard while senior Ricky Harris took back the point guard position. Riley finished the game with 10 points on 4-of-11 shooting and came down with five rebounds.

It was a drastic improvement from his game against the 49ers, where he finished with no points on four shot attempts, all from beyond the arc.

"[Kellogg] told [the freshmen] that we need to stop playing like freshmen and we need to assert ourselves a little more on offense and defense," Riley said.

Despite Riley's inconsistencies, he has made himself the third leading scorer for UMass, averaging 9.9 points per game. His best game came against La Salle, where he put up 22 points on 7-of-15 shooting. Six of those field goals were from 3-point range.

Ainge in attendance

Boston Celtics General Manager Danny Ainge was in attendance to scout players on the Xavier squad. The only player from the Musketeers likely to go pro this year is Love, who is the team's lone starting senior.

The center finished with 15 points on 6-of-7 shooting and grabbed five rebounds to go along with a block.

He currently averages 11.1 points per game and 8.5 rebounds.

Adam Miller can be reached at amiller@dailycollegian.com.

the daily collegian

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

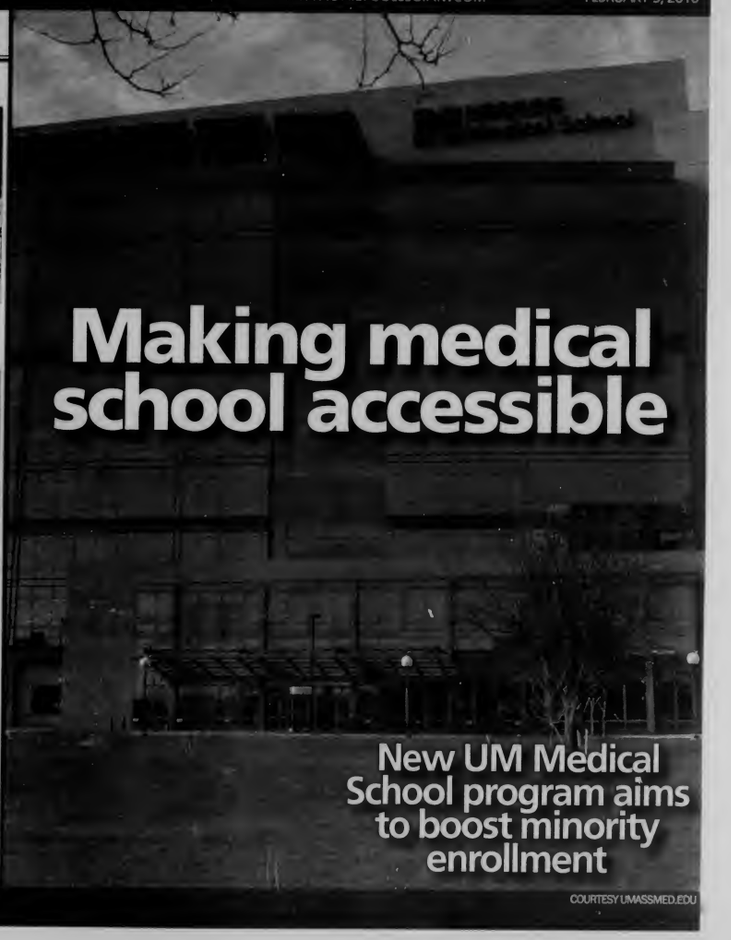
FEBRUARY 5, 2010

inside this issue:

Hunting Eagles

SEE PAGE 12

Cirque Dreams



SEE PAGE 7

Healthy Poet

SEE PAGE 4

Making medical school accessible

New UM Medical School program aims to boost minority enrollment

COURTESY UMASSMED.EDU

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN

CXX
ISSUE 14

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief William McGuinness
Managing Editor Matt Rocheleau
Managing Web Editor S P Sullivan
Business Manager Daniel Jette
Production Manager Michael Sarkes
Night Supervisor Kirsten Swenson
Advertising Manager Michael Tortorici
Advertising Production Amanda Joinson
Arts & Living Editor Shayna Murphy
Comics Editor Andrew Witts
Editorial Editor Alyssa Creamer
News Editor Nick Bush
Sports Editor Jeffrey R. Larnard
Photo Editor Matthew Harrison
IT Manager Victor Jacek
Asst. Business Manager Matt Zolnierz
Assistant Advertising Nicole Jacinto
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Distribution Manager Norman Provost
Classified Manager Katelyn Tamiiio
Asst. Arts & Living Justin Gagnon
Asst. Arts & Living Elyse Horowitz
Asst. Arts & Living Cal Scannell
Assistant Editorial Benjamin Moriarty
Assistant Editorial Michael Phillis
Assistant Editorial Matthew M. Robare
Assistant News Samuel Butterfield
Assistant News Chris Shores
Assistant News Jenn Heshion
Assistant Sports Jay Asser
Assistant Sports David Brinch
Assistant Sports Adam Miller
Assistant Photo Maxwell Sparr
Assistant Photo Samantha Webber
Assistant Multimedia Sara Cody
Assistant Multimedia Pete Rizzo

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE. BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW ON STAFF TODAY

NIGHT EDITOR
NICK BUSH

COPY EDITOR
ELIZABETH TRAN

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
MICHELLE ABBASCIANO

On the fast track

Med school to admit 12 undergrads starting in '11

By Manish Garg
Collegian Correspondent

Officials at the University of Massachusetts Medical School in Worcester are in the process of creating a program to help increase the enrollment of students from minority ethnic groups and underrepresented socioeconomic brackets. The Medical Scholars Pathway program, as it will be called, is part of the Medical School and the UMass system's efforts to increase diversity on its campuses, and is tentatively slated to begin accepting students in the fall of 2011.

The Scholars Pathway program will give incoming undergraduate pre-med students at all four UMass campuses the opportunity for a combined learning experience, as the program will create a baccalaureate-MD program, allowing students to transition from undergraduate studies at a UMass campus to the Worcester Medical School.

UM Medical School officials hope the program will entice highly-coveted students to pursue their medical studies at the state school and then use their expertise to open medical practices in the Bay State, rather than being lured to private schools and out of the Commonwealth.

"The goal of the program is to increase the early identification and recruitment of qualified, diverse premedical students from our four undergraduate campuses, Amherst, Boston, Dartmouth and Lowell, who would then be admitted to the School of Medicine in Worcester," said Michele P. Pugnaire, M.D., senior associate dean for educational affairs at UMass Medical School.

The spots, 12 in total out of the school's 125 member incoming class, will go to a few undergraduate students from each UMass campus as they apply from high school with their sights set on medical school. Spots will be made available for members of what the school calls underrepresented groups, which include African-Americans, Hispanics, Cape Verdeans, Brazilians and other Portuguese speaking groups, and some groups of Southeast Asians.

Pugnaire said the school hopes attempting to reach talented students early will allow the school to retain more diverse medical students and keep more doctors in Massachusetts.

"This pipeline model, one which reaches out to potential students early in their undergraduate careers, allows us to attract and retain outstanding students of diverse backgrounds representing the full range of communities in Mass.," said Pugnaire.

COURTESY UMASSMED.EDU

The University of Massachusetts Medical School in Worcester will directly accept 12 talented minority students starting in 2011.

The program will attempt to increase diversity within the major by recognizing "students from a range of backgrounds including those who may be economically disadvantaged or from first-generation college families," Pugnaire added.

In order to be as fair as possible, the program will use the same criteria for admission as the factors generally measured for admitting students into the medical school, along with other factors still in the process of being determined.

"The students we are targeting with this program represent some of the best and brightest in Massachusetts," said Pugnaire. "These students, of course, will be held to the same high standards as all of their peers."

Another goal of the program is to encourage highly-qualified students who wish to become doctors to stay in the Commonwealth upon graduation and practice medicine locally.

"Too often, they are competitively recruited by private schools, many of them outside of the state," said Pugnaire. "In moving forward with this initiative, we can better serve the Commonwealth by retaining great minds and encouraging them to remain in and serve communities across the state."

Student response to the Medical Scholars Pathway program has been mainly positive. Dan Jaworski, an alumnus of UMass Amherst who studied biology, believes it a positive effort. "If it promotes diversity, I'm totally for it," said Jaworski.

According to UMass Medical media representative Allison M. Duffy, the Pathway Program still has some details about its specific logistics to be determined, but the school looks forward to putting those plans into place.

"There are some details that we still need to work on," said Duffy.

The Medical school has not announced any official details so far, but Dr. Pugnaire says that they "are excited about this initiative, and expect to provide more information as the program is developed over the next year."

The school also plans to offer a financial aid package to students participating in the Pathway Scholars program, though the specifics and amount of aid has not yet been determined, either.

According to the Association of American Medical Colleges, just five percent of doctors in Massachusetts are minorities, while 16 percent of the state's population falls into the groups the new program hopes to target.

The UMass Medical School is one of the nation's fastest growing medical schools, though it is still the smallest medical school in Massachusetts, with 419 M.D. students in the School of Medicine, 346 PhD students in the Graduate School of Biomedical Sciences and about 90 students in the Graduate School of Nursing.

Manish Garg can be reached at mgarg@student.umass.edu

Demography of UMass and the Commonwealth

Here is a look at the demographics of the UMass system and the Commonwealth as a whole.

	Black	Hispanic	Asian	White
UM Medical (Worcester)	5%	2%	15%	78%
UM – Amherst	5%	4%	9%	81%
UMass – Boston	17%	10%	15%	56%
UMass – Dartmouth	5%	3%	3%	86%
UMass – Lowell	5%	7%	9%	78%
Mass. physicians	2%	3%	14%	81%
Mass. (total population)	7%	9%	5%	79%

Source: Massachusetts.edu, Association of American Medical Colleges, U.S. Census 2000

Former football star faces gun charges

By Michelle Williams
Collegian Staff

"On Dec. 3 there was an illegal firearm in the hands of a criminal on this campus, what else needs to happen?"

With fliers like the one above posted on bulletin boards across campus, students have expressed outrage at a University of Massachusetts student carrying a gun on campus.

According to Deputy Chief Patrick Archbald of the UMass Police Department, Sean R. Smalls, 22, of Richmond, Va., a 2008 football captain and All-American defensive back, was arrested as the result of a traffic stop on Infirmary Way on Dec. 3.

A UMass police officer pulled Smalls over for crossing the marked yellow line between Sunset Ave. and Infirmary Way. After approaching the car, the officer reportedly smelled the strong odor of freshly burnt marijuana, which prompted the officer to call a K-9 unit.

Both the passenger in the car, Sam Migdol of Amherst, Mass., and Smalls admitted to having recently smoked marijuana. In the backseat, the officers found a backpack, which the canine unit soon targeted, where the officers discovered marijuana, Adderall and a digital scale. Migdol admitted the backpack was his and stated that the driver, Smalls, did not know what was inside the bag. Migdol is currently facing possession with intent to distribute a Class B drug charges for the Adderall, for which he did not have a prescription, and a citation for possession of the marijuana.

During the search of his car, according to UMPD, Smalls continually placed his hands underneath the driver's seat. After noticing this multiple times, the arresting officer asked Smalls to step out of the car to see what was underneath the seat. Upon this search, the officer found a fully loaded .380 pistol. Smalls did not have a permit for the weapon, a Mass. firearms identification card or a permit for the ammunition. According to UMPD, it is currently unknown how Smalls came to own the weapon or purchase the bullets without a permit. Smalls was charged with carrying a firearm without a permit, carrying a firearm on school grounds, possession of a firearm without a FID card and given a citation for the marijuana.

Gun crime is not unheard of on the UMass campus. According to the UMass PD's 2008 security report, there were 11 weapons law violations on campus in 2008. In 2007, there were four arrests and one referral for weapons, while in 2006 UMPD made one arrest and four referrals for weapons law violations.

Although Smalls was a UMass student at the time of his arrest, the office of UMass Dean of Students Jo-Anne T. Vanin could not be reached for comment on Smalls' current academic status. He is also a resident of the state of Va., though it is unknown whether Smalls had a permit for the gun or a firearms license in his home state.

According to Massachusetts law, for non-residents to carry firearms in the state of Massachusetts, it must be for the purpose of a pistol or revolver competition, for an organized meeting for firearms collectors or for the purpose of hunting. The gun owner cannot be convicted of a prior felony, past unlawful gun usage or possession or sale of narcotic or harmful drugs.

Smalls' criminal history in the states of Va. and Mass. is unknown. Smalls pleaded innocent at his arraignment Dec. 3. His next court date in Eastern Hampshire District Court is scheduled for Mar. 25.

The 6'-1", 205 pound Smalls started 36 consecutive games at cornerback for the Minutemen before he went down with a cracked hip bone last October, effectively ending his college career. In 2007, Smalls recorded 49 tackles, a Colonial Athletic Association best 12 passes defended, two interceptions and 10 break-ups, earning him All-CAA honors. According to the blog NFL Draft Scout, Smalls was rated the number 62 cornerback out of 224 available in the 2009 draft.

Michelle Williams can be reached at mwilli4@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY UMASSATHLETICS.COM

2008 captain Sean Smalls was arrested on campus Dec. 3 on unlicensed weapon charges.

Bynum turns 'delusions' into delights

By Chelsea Whitton
Collegian Staff

Some say writing is the science of the heart.

Poetry and science are two disparate disciplines, but the Director of Behavioral Medicine and Principal Psychologist at the University of Massachusetts Mental Health Services has made a career out of both fields.

Edward Bruce Bynum PhD, A.B.P.P. is the recipient of the 2010 Naomi Long Madgett award, a nationally ranked poetry award for African-American poets who submit unpublished poetry manuscripts.

Bynum won the award for his submission, "Chronicles of the Pig and other Delusions."

Bynum said the title comes from some of the poems in the collection, in addition to some ideas running through his head.

"Well, 'Chronicles of the Pig' comes from some poems in the collection. The other delusions are, well, the other poems," he said.

The other poems are not only delusions, however, full of insights into another world – the space between creative style and scientific understanding.

Presented and published by Lotus Press, located in Detroit, Mich., the award is given once a year in the late November. Bynum was selected out of hundreds of submissions by Claude Wilkinson, a Mississippi resident and fellow African-American poet.

Bynum said he decided to submit his own work to be reviewed for the award. He said he feels the chances of winning are always very slim.

"It was a long shot. You have to be used to hearing 'no,'" he said.

Over the years, he has submitted his work to many national poetry competitions, but described this as one of his proudest accomplishments, emphasizing how difficult it is to get poetry published.

Bynum received the unexpected phone call one evening.

"I was blown away; I was at the table with my wife, and it was the publisher of the house who called. I was very surprised and very pleased."

As a psychologist, Bynum said reaching or working towards a creative side can be beneficial and helpful to understanding one's self. He applies this discipline to his life and to his patients.

"Poetry can help people find their voice," said Bynum.

He said being a poet and a health professional is no different than being "a poet, a baker, an engineer or a plumber, they might just as well be part of the arts. There is an expressive side to each personality. Mine just happens to be poetry," he said.

Bynum began writing at a young age, but started to take poetry seriously as a graduate student at Pennsylvania State University.

"I was first published when I was in the third grade," he mused.

His poetry stems from being "moved by lots of things," and Bynum says his work is, "drawn to imagery and lyricism and the physical and psychological aspects that make us human."

He described science as a way of understanding the human brain and human existence, but said the arts play an important role in understanding what composes people on an individual basis.

"Without the arts, it's deadly. It's all over," Brown said, with a touch of wry wit.

Bynum takes inspiration from both modern and classic poetry. He describes his older influences as "a fusion of Pablo Neruda, Whitman, Langston Hughes and Ann Sexton. Each has something."

Bynum said of current works and living literature that he reads "Charles Simic, James Tate, Gerrard Barrex and Derek Walcott."

Bynum described poetry as something people can always come back to, leaving it alone for even years and returning when inspiration strikes.

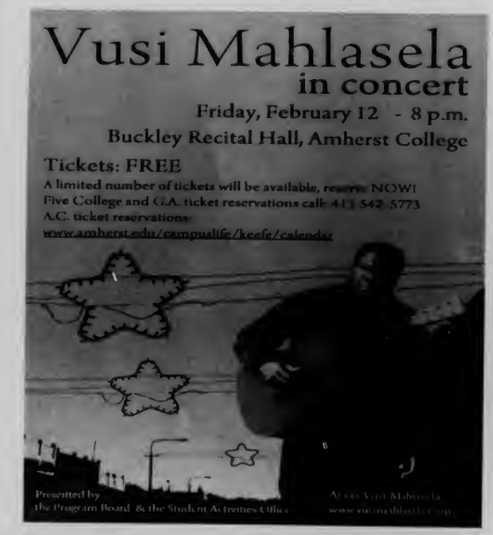
Bynum has been with the University for 31 years and serves as lead psychologist. He is originally from Southern California and later New Hampshire, where he began his career at UMass in 1979.

As a professional at UMass, Bynum balances science and the creative process in what he describes as one cohesive way of looking at both aspects. In his daily work as a psychologist, he finds the need and room for creativity to thrive. Bynum has specialized in the psychology of dreams, and expressed how this area of study influences his creative works.

"The need for a creative outlet allows for a surrealistic approach to the dream world in poetry."

Currently Bynum is working on three writing projects, one in psychology and two creative writing works. He is the author of five books in psychology and three books of poetry. His work has appeared in the New Yorker, as well.

"Chronicles of the Pig and other Delusions," includes what Bynum describes as "a collection of poems, loosely connected."



Bynum's award-winning collection divides into four sections, beginning with poems narrating the life of a pig, as Bynum connects the pig's birth, life and death. The award came with a prize of $500 and publishing by Lotus Press.

Chelsea Whitton can be reached at cwhitton@student.umass.edu

COURTESY UMASS.EDU

UHS' Edward Bruce Bynum won the 2010 Naomi Long Madgett award for poetry.

Serving up some history

HANNAH COHEN/COLLEGIAN

Wednesday saw UMass Dining serve traditional dinner dishes such as peanut soup and Ethiopian Doro Wat to mark Black History Month at all dining commons.

editorial&opinion

"FREE SPEECH IS THE WHOLE THING, THE WHOLE BALL GAME. FREE SPEECH IS LIFE ITSELF" - SIR SALMAN RUSHDIE

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

New UMass law school is for fools

Ben Moriarty

The moon, although it looks very small in the sky, is actually quite large and has a gravitational effect on the Earth. Along with the Earth's rotation, the gravitational pull from the moon has a continual effect on the water on our Earth, causir g things like low tides and high tides. And sometimes, in especially rare cases, this proceeding and receding of the water magnifies, and instead of a nice system of orderly tides, which usually and somewhat resemble a sine wave, the amplitudes combine and form a double high water, a grave danger to those on the coast.

This is may be the situation the University of Massachusetts system walked into this past Tuesday, when the Board of Higher Education voted unanimously for the approval of the creation of the UMass Dartmouth Law School. They willingly chose to have a second high tide.

At first, this seems like a splendid idea. Forty-four states have law schools. Why shouldn't we? The UMass system was given the facilities of a law school by the Southern New England School of Law with its closing, so it didn't need to spend the money on that in particular. And, with the creation of a state university operated law school, it would give people the chance to go that might not be able to go otherwise.

As UMass president Jack Wilson said, and as reported in the Collegian earlier this week, "A public law school means that law students will graduate with less debt and have more flexibility in making their career choices."

There is absolutely no rhyme or reason to having a UMass Dartmouth law school.

That sentiment is so obviously an example of the idealistic, equality-for-everyone attitude that is all too prevalent in our state – a ideology that usually runs along the track parallel to reason, and then flips the switch so the train of reason de-rails, crashes, burns and kills all the passengers riding on it.

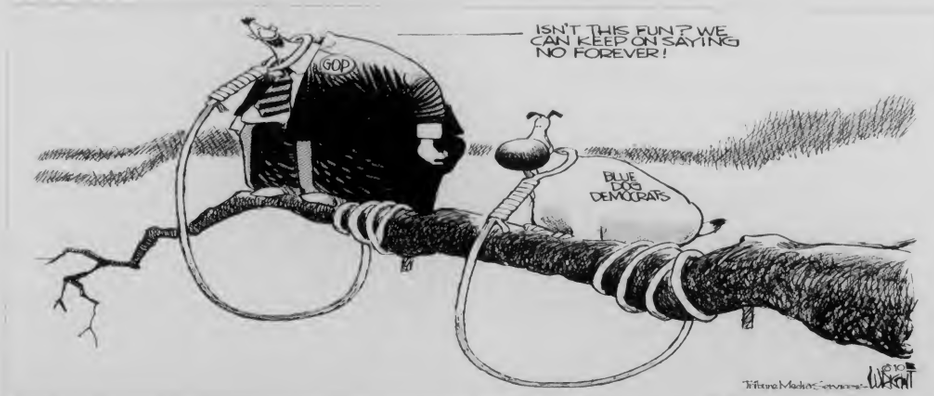
The problem isn't that we shouldn't have a law school. It is that the market is currently oversaturated. It is high tide at the moment, and we are possibly going into a second high tide.

The problem comes down to this. We should not have a law school in this climate. Massachusetts already has several law schools which are highly respected: Harvard, Boston University, Boston College and Northeastern. Three of these are top 25 law schools, and one is one of the best public interest law schools in the country.

Now, that may not matter to you, but when you realize that law schools are quite regionalized, meaning, the one you attend is in all likelihood going to be in the area you practice, this essentially means: you will be kind of screwed as a result of the surrounding schools and competition.

There is absolutely no rhyme or reason to having a UMass Dartmouth law school.

Graduates from tier one law schools are having some trouble finding jobs. And that is not including the dreaded average debt that is accumulated from law school, which sits gently next to one hundred thousand dollars. Tuition at the UMass Dartmouth law program is going to be around a quarter of a hundred thousand dollars a year, law school being three years, and that is a very conservative cost if you aren't going to forsake the quality of the school.



The creation of a UMass Law School is: you will inherit a decent debt, be pitted against students from the most respected law schools in the country in a market with too many people for such a low demand, and your degree will be from a school which has no reputation and which is not even expected to be approved by the American Bar Association until 2013.

The only real positive to this situation is that UMass Dartmouth obtained a facility, library and professors from the Southern New England School of Law.

That is, they didn't invest and have to spend an inordinate amount of money for something which seems to be nothing more than an ornament for the UMass system.

So, while the high tide is here, the moon isn't moving across the sky and as a result, the law market isn't receding into low tide, UMass should get in their boat, ride to the nearest town, then sell all of the fish they were given. And with that money, do something useful.

Ben Moriarty is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at bmoriart@student.umass.edu.

POINT-COUNTER-POINT

"Freedom rings where opinions clash." - Adlai E. Stevenson

Scott Brown: Have we lost our past?

Liberal lions don't die

Charlie Felder

"The work goes on, the cause endures, the hope still lives and the dream shall never die." Ted Kennedy spoke those words upon conceding the 1980 Democratic Presidential nomination to then-President Jimmy Carter. That speech was a barn-burner if ever there was one, and years later, those words rank among the most famous in American political lore. There is wisdom in those words, and as some have begun to question whether or not Massachusetts is losing its national voice, Massachusetts residents would do well to make those words their mantra.

This is a responsibility we must continue.

Our commonwealth finds itself in an unusual state of flux. Kennedy is dead. A bare majority of Massachusetts voters saw it fit to replace him with Scott Brown, a man who embodies an ideology which Kennedy fought his entire life. As a result of a residential migration elsewhere, the state population is decreasing. As such, Massachusetts will in all likelihood lose at least one member of its Congressional delegation pending a final tally of the 2010 Federal Census. This fall, Governor Deval Patrick will ask the voters for a second chance in the batter's box. Whether voters give it to him is still uncertain.

In times like these, it's understandable that pundits would start railing on across all media platforms about the diminishing importance of Massachusetts' voice on issues of national importance. They will cite the loss of Kennedy as insurmountable. John Kerry has done a lot of good for this state, and his intellect, drive, ethics and record of service to this state and to this nation deserves equal recognition. But he is now our lone voice in the Senate for the issues which matter most to us, for make no mistake: Scott Brown does not represent our interests or values.

Kennedy was a warrior for the middle and lower classes, and not just in this state, but across the country. With one less Democratic voice in the Senate, and with the knowledge that soon it will lose one more, it'd be easy for Massachusetts to hang back from the spotlight for a while, wrestling with issues of identity.

How important are we? Are we really just a bunch of self-indulgent, self-important liberal softies? We're just one state (one of the smaller ones, in fact), so why should we try to bend the course and content of national dialogue and policy towards our desired ends? Why? Because of who we are. Because of what we represent. Massachusetts has never been afraid to lead – to take the political leap while other states remained shackled to the outdated dogmas and modes of contemporary political thought. Because of what Ted taught us about compassion, dedication and faith that we are right, and that America will follow in our footsteps.

Our unemployment rate is significantly below the national average, our equal rights movement is now gaining traction in other states, our senior senator is the Chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee and our use of federal stimulus money is paying for the sort of clean, efficient light rail system that will serve as a national standard for energy conservation and job creation.

So are we losing our voice? The answer is an unequivocal no. We are not, and we cannot. Senator Brown's victory was an electoral leg-jerk that came as the result of a perfect storm of political mismanagement on the part of Martha Coakley's incompetent campaign and a general sense of liberal disaffection with the electoral process, but it demonstrated that Massachusetts is determined to remain a player in national politics. Massachusetts has certainly suffered a set-back in its quest to remain a leader on issues of national debate. Ted Kennedy was not only effective in steering federal dollars towards the commonwealth's bevy of social welfare and educational programs, but served the nation as a de facto spokesperson for the poor, the unemployed, the unions, the sick and the needy. He embodied a spirit of service and compassion that few could recreate, but one which all should strive to. Such a leader cannot easily be replaced.

But we must move forward. Massachusetts cannot shirk its responsibility as an unabashedly progressive, rational and decisive voice amidst the sea of backwards, uninformed and obstructionist voices which have hijacked the national political scene of late. This is not a responsibility we owe to ourselves, and not a responsibility we should maintain as a means of honoring our late Senator's legacy. This is a responsibility we must continue. It has always been ours. At the end of the day, our progress will be marked by our action, not those of our elected officials. They are our voice when we have other business to attend to. With the loss of our liberal lion, and with the ascension of a conservative hawk to replace him, we must be our national voice.

28 years after his concession speech at the Democratic National Convention, a cancer-stricken Teddy took the stage to pass the Kennedy torch to an inspirational and like-minded young politician who was seeking the presidency. After an impassioned speech, the elder statesman assured us that despite his weakened condition, and despite all of our national setbacks under the Bush Administration, the work begins anew.

The hope rises again, and the dream lives on. Not just words for us to agree with as Massachusetts citizens, but words for us to live by. For this has always been and must continue to be our contribution to national politics. This must be our legacy.

Charlie Felder is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at cfelder@student.umass.edu.

Entering political apathy

Matthew Robare

Massachusetts ain't what it used to be. Senator Ted Kennedy, because of his name and his long service, was probably one of the most influential people in Congress for nearly thirty years.

But he wasn't the only famous and influential person from Massachusetts. After World War II, three Representatives from Massachusetts: Joseph W. Martin, John W. McCormack and Tip O'Neill, served as the Speakers of the House for a combined total of 23 years.

John F. Kennedy, Michael Dukakis and John Kerry were all Democratic presidential nominees. Henry Cabot Lodge Jr. was nominated to be the Republican Vice President in 1960. Former Governor Christian Herter served as Secretary of State under Eisenhower; Robert F. Kennedy was making his home in Massachusetts while he was Attorney General and former Lieutenant Governor; and state Attorney General Elliot Richardson was Defense Secretary, Health, Education and Welfare Secretary, Attorney General and Secretary of Commerce under Nixon and Ford.

They don't call Boston the Hub for nothing.

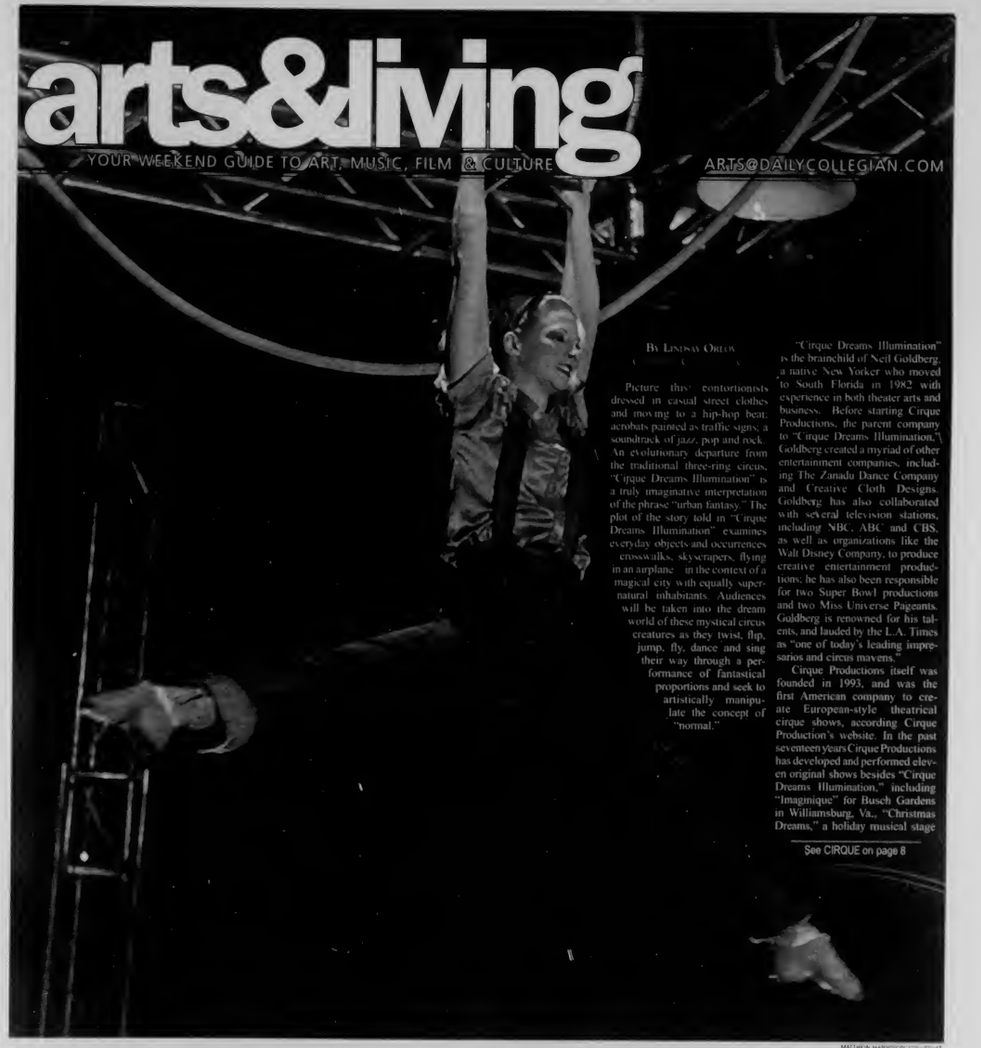
So it looks like Massachusetts has had some major pull and influence at a national level. But it hasn't really. Robert Kennedy, Herter and Richardson held their positions only briefly. Tip O'Neill retired in 1987 and Ted Kennedy died last August. Dukakis is best remembered for riding in a tank, while Kerry's national persona is that he's tall, has no personality and lost to one of the most unpopular presidents of all time. Kerry ranks 13th in seniority, but Teddy was second only to Robert Byrd. In the House today, the most influential member from Massachusetts is perhaps Barney Frank.

I am equating influence with "being well known" or being a celebrity. It's not easy for those not in Congress to know who has "pull," since the area where influence is most important is behind the scenes. But in a democracy, the politician-celebrity can certainly influence elections – although as several presidents have shown, that can have no effect or outright backfire. It's certainly worth noting, in that case, that the public's main exposure to Barney Frank is through Saturday Night Live sketches.

Politically, Massachusetts is entering a dinosaur phase. The Democratic Party has dominated for so long and the state's main representatives to the public (Ted Kennedy, Dukakis, etc.) are so indentified with liberal politics at a national level that Massachusetts is sometimes derided as the People's Republic of Taxachusetts.

In some respects, it's a fair stereotype of politics. I'm from Vermont, which gets much of the same treatment, as it sometimes seems like Bernie Sanders is a reactionary even to Massachusetts standards. But this stereotype also ignores the fact that most people here not attending college tend to poll more towards the center. Somewhere between the blue dogs and Howard Dean, I'd say.

It doesn't have to be like this. There are two reasons for this problem. First, on Election Day, voters tend to do anything but vote. Secondly, there is no competition for the Democrats. We're a one party state. This is interesting, as the second factor is the cause of the first. While Scott Brown was elected Senator last month and sworn in yesterday, there are still only five Republicans in the State Senate and 19 in the House.



Less than a quarter of registered voters nationally identify themselves as Republican, and the same figure goes towards voters in Massachusetts. The reason for this is largely because Massachusetts Republicans cannot escape identification with the national party, which does not share all their views on social or economic issues. Also, they're conservative in policy, and that carries a fine stigma of its own in Massachusetts.

Personally, I would prefer the Libertarian Party to become the opposition party up here. The Libertarians, unfortunately, are poor in resources at a national level and while their social views have earned them some followers, their economic views don't resonate with voters at all. However, as the economic troubles continue, this could change, seeing as how candidate Joe Kennedy actually has charisma and Libertarian organizations like the Campaign for Liberty keep spreading their word. Until then, Massachusetts will continue to slide apathetically to political irrelevance, although it's not a foregone conclusion. I can imagine Deval Patrick running against Brown in 2012, or Brown himself could stick and have the impact on Republican politics around the country that will make them stop thinking that Dick Cheney has a chance to be elected president. Or Kerry could receive a personality transplant, preferably from a lovably eccentric Charles Dickens character.

Ultimately, though, it doesn't really matter that much. Massachusetts has other ways of influencing the country. They don't call Boston the Hub for nothing. Between Red Sox Nation and MIT, Massachusetts has sports and technology covered. On our end, the Five Colleges will remain the literary heartland of the nation.

Culturally, I believe Massachusetts is third in the nation, behind California and New York. In 100 years, stories will have been passed down of the Red Sox winning the World Series in 2004. And all of the current political superstars will be Master's degree thesis subjects.

Matt Robare is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mrobare@student.umass.edu.

arts&living

YOUR WEEKEND GUIDE TO ART, MUSIC, FILM & CULTURE

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

By Lindsay Oreon

Picture this: contortionists dressed in casual street clothes and moving to a hip-hop beat; acrobats painted as traffic signs; a soundtrack of jazz, pop and rock. An evolutionary departure from the traditional three-ring circus, "Cirque Dreams Illumination" is a truly imaginative interpretation of the phrase "urban fantasy." The plot of the story told in "Cirque Dreams Illumination" examines everyday objects and occurrences – crosswalks, skyscrapers, flying in an airplane – in the context of a magical city with equally supernatural inhabitants. Audiences will be taken into the dream world of these mystical circus creatures as they twist, flip, jump, fly, dance and sing their way through a performance of fantastical proportions and seek to artistically manipulate the concept of "normal."

"Cirque Dreams Illumination" is the brainchild of Neil Goldberg, a native New Yorker who moved to South Florida in 1982 with experience in both theater arts and business. Before starting Cirque Productions, the parent company to "Cirque Dreams Illumination," Goldberg created a myriad of other entertainment companies, including The Zanadu Dance Company and Creative Cloth Designs. Goldberg has also collaborated with several television stations, including NBC, ABC and CBS, as well as organizations like the Walt Disney Company, to produce creative entertainment productions; he has also been responsible for two Super Bowl productions and two Miss Universe Pageants. Goldberg is renowned for his talents, and lauded by the L.A. Times as "one of today's leading impresarios and circus mavens."

Cirque Productions itself was founded in 1993, and was the first American company to create European-style theatrical cirque shows, according Cirque Production's website. In the past seventeen years Cirque Productions has developed and performed eleven original shows besides "Cirque Dreams Illumination," including "Imagnique" for Busch Gardens in Williamsburg, Va., "Christmas Dreams," a holiday musical stage

See CIRQUE on page 8

MATTHEW HARRISON/COLLEGIAN

CINEMARK
For advance tickets & showtimes visit
cinemark.com
or call 1-800-FANDANGO + Exp Code 1118#
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
FIRST MATINEE SHOWTIME (7 DAYS A WEEK) $5.00
ADULT MATINEE BEFORE 6PM $6.25 • STUDENT $7.00 (WITH ID)

AVATAR - REAL D 3D ($2.75 SURCHARGE) [PG13] 110 440 810
◆ DEAR JOHN [PG13] 100 425 720 1005
◆ FROM PARIS WITH LOVE [R] ⓘ 145 435 740 1025
◆ INVICTUS [PG13] 920PM
◆ THE BLIND SIDE [PG13] 105PM
◆ EDGE OF DARKNESS [R] ⓘ 150 440 725 1015
◆ WHEN IN ROME [PG13] 155 445 740 1005
EXTRAORDINARY MEASURES [PG] 115 415
IT'S COMPLICATED [R] ⓘ 130 450 735 1020
LEGION [R] ⓘ 135 445 730 1015
SHERLOCK HOLMES [PG13] 405 705 1010
THE BOOK OF ELI [R] ⓘ 120 410 710 955
THE LOVELY BONES [PG13] 700 1000
TOOTH FAIRY [PG] 125 420 650
UP IN THE AIR [R] ⓘ 140 430 715 955
◆ NO PASSES-NO CLASSIC SUPERSAVERS

Sunday Cirque shocks Mullins

CIRQUE from page 7

celebration, two off-Broadway musicals entitled "A Day In Life of an Artist" and "Breakthrough," as well as the new "Cirque Dreams Jungle Fantasy," which is also currently on tour in the U.S.

Cirque Productions also specializes in designing, producing and directing world-class events. Some of these include "Symphony and Cirque," which performed with the Pittsburgh and Baltimore Symphonies; a performance for the 25th Anniversary of the Kennedy Center with Marvin Hamlisch and the National Symphony; and the 25th anniversary event for the National Foundation for Advancement in the Arts, accompanied by Roy Hargrove and the New World Symphony and performers Quincy Jones, Placido Domingo, Mikhail Baryshnikov and Vanessa Williams.

Cirque Productions hires talent from around the globe to rehearse and train at Dream Studios, the company's headquarters. Cirque Productions' performers hail from such diverse places as The Acrobatic Training Center in Beijing, China, the Mongolian School of Contortion, The Moscow Circus, the Sports Acrobatic Association of Poland and various locations across the US. This Sunday, for a one-time performance at the Mullins Center at the University of Massachusetts Amherst, this acclaimed troupe of international performers is sure to take audiences on a phenomenal journey away from the cold of winter into the warmth, surprise, happiness and wonder of the mystical, urban fantasy of "Cirque Dreams Illumination."

Lindsay Orlow can be reached at lorlow@student.umass.edu.

CIRQUE PRODUCTIONS

Cirque Dreams Illumination will bring urban fantasy to the Mullins Center Sunday.

Dirt to dish dining

By Alex Tillotson
Collegian Staff

Celeriac is not the prettiest of vegetables. It's brown, covered in hair-like fibers, and even looks a little bit deformed. But its mild celery flavor and creamy texture are two reasons why professional chefs are increasingly utilizing it in soups, purees, salads and many other dishes. Though at the peak of its freshness in the fall and not currently in season, farmers and chefs alike have praised the vegetable for its subtle flavor and describe the careful growing and preparation techniques.

Celeriac is just one of the many vegetables grown by husband and wife, Timothy N. Wilcox, 28, and Caroline C. Pam, 32, owners of The Kitchen Garden in Sunderland, Mass. They started their careers as long-time foodies from New York. After farming on rented land for two years, the couple decided to buy their own piece of land, a seven-acre stretch of lush river bottom soil that today they call The Kitchen Garden. Now, two years later, they provide local chefs, like Paul C. Hathaway, 41, executive chef at Chez Albert in Amherst, Mass., with many of their products.

Pam, who studied French cuisine at the French Culinary Institute in New York City, and Wilcox, who studied Social Science and Italian at Hampshire College in Amherst, are now growing the food that they'd expect from a gourmet restaurant. "We grow food because we love to eat food and we love to cook food," said Pam.

Wilcox worked with radicchio farmers in Treviso, Italy for his graduation thesis and Pam spent a summer in Italy working on an organic farm before they opened The Kitchen Garden together. They stress the importance of quality products, noting that if an ingredient tastes good right from the ground, it will taste even better on the plate. This philosophy has helped the couple develop close relationships with many local chefs.

Hathaway has been working with Wilcox and Pam for three years. "The quality of their ingredients, the care they take, and the fact that they like to do unique items" keeps him coming back for more, week after week.

Chez Albert is not a traditional farm-to-table restaurant, but one that believes in using nothing but the best, setting it apart from other eateries.

"I believe in that philosophy, but I don't use the products just because they're local. I use them because they're good," Hathaway explained. "If the local products weren't very good, I wouldn't use them."

The farmers agree. "Working with the restaurants is a natural fit for us," Pam said. "They know what they want and they appreciate food as much as we do."

Hathaway, who once worked with Pam at Green Street Cafe in Northampton, Mass., says that forming relationships with the farmers is, "a fantastic and interesting journey."

In fact, it's much like the journey celeriac makes on its way from dirt to dish. It starts as a tiny seed and grows into an oddly shaped bulb. When mature, celeriac, also known as celery root, has a "mild celery flavor with the creaminess of potato and hints of sweetness," Hathaway said. It's adaptable and matches perfectly with many other ingredients.

At Chez Albert it becomes "Crispy Oysters with Celery Root and Leeks." The celeriac is peeled and boiled, then puréed with crème fraiche, the French version of sour cream. The purée creates a bed on the plate which is then topped with a mix of julienned celeriac, leeks and chopped parsley. Five lightly breaded and fried oysters go on next. Add a streak of parsley oil for color and contrast and you've got Chez Albert's motto on a plate: "Good. Simple. Food. Voila!"

Alex Tillotson can be reached at atillots@student.umass.edu.

Chef Paul Hathaway's Kitchen Garden Celeriac Purée Recipe

1 ½ peeled celeriac (about 2 unpeeled)
6 oz. creme fr.iche or plain yogurt
salt and pepper to taste. Boil celeriac in lightly salted water until a knife can run through it. Then strain, place in a blender and purée with crème fraiche. Once silky smooth, season with salt and pepper to taste and serve. Great served with roast chicken, fish, meat or even roasted mushrooms and vegetables.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
COLLEGIAN

Need to spread the word?

Reach more than 18,000 readers every day!

IT'S CHEAPER THAN YOU THINK!

On-Campus & Local Business Ads for $10
per column inch

R.S.O. Ads for $6.70
per column inch

CONTACT PAMELA:
thecollegian@gmail.com
413-545-3500
or stop by our office in the Campus Center basement

MCT

Denzel Washington stars in "The Book of Eli," a post-apocalyptic, sci-fi, action film. Despite overwrought religious themes of good and evil, the film features an entertaining storyline and satisfying special effects.

"Book of Eli" a sci-fi cliché

By Manish Garg
Collegian Correspondent

These days it has become increasingly difficult to make science fiction movies that sell. This is especially true of do-or-die, post-apocalyptic plotlines featuring for films a bitter future, or the end of the world as we know it, and the rare feat of human kind simply surviving. Think of "Children of Men," which provides a pessimistic, almost angry view of human psychology during a world-wide crisis, or "I Am Legend," depicts which features a similarly dismal storyline where little or none of humanity remains as a result of a mass epidemic.

"The Book of Eli" combines most or all of these elements weaved seamlessly into an action film that is both predictable and unexpected at the same time. Directors Albert and Allen Hughes fight through the torrent of expectations defined by a constantly changing modern audience to bring us a classic action story with an alarmingly avant-garde atmosphere.

The film is dominated by a dark and arid post-apocalyptic landscape a new-age soundtrack arranged by up-and-coming British electronic musician Atticus Ross, and a plot themed around a battle between good and evil with a single artifact at its center (also known as a MacGuffin). Eli, played by Denzel Washington is the solitary survivor of the Great War that ended all of civilization; he has been walking alone for 30 years, against all odds and obstacles.

The film centers on the final part of his travels as he meets unknown survivors and fights a corrupt mayor named Carnegie, played by Gary Oldman. He undertakes these heroic adventures alongside a new found friend named Solara, played by Mila Kunis, to protect a single book and complete a task related to that book.

The actors try their hardest to portray the most realistic attitudes and mannerisms they can, which is especially difficult to do in a film based completely on fictional scenarios. Denzel Washington's reputation precedes him in this film as he plays up his cold, tough and solitary side as a lone wanderer. Mila Kunis, mostly known for her roles on "That 70s Show" and "Family Guy," gives a good performance as the scared but tough girl you wouldn't want to mess with. In the film, her attitude and spunk shine through, in this film fitting her role perfectly this particular role.

"The Book of Eli" makes use of carefully-crafted realism to bring about an accurate display of a dystopian future, particularly with respect to the acting and the makeup. These two components also contribute to the R rating.

The action spots are riddled with graphic depictions of dismemberment and death, refusing to censor the truth about survival: kill or be killed. The raw, savage depiction of human survival provides an almost funny look at a post-apocalyptic existence. One of the best examples involves an elderly couple who survive by setting traps and keeping a cache of weapons hidden under their living room sofa, and yet they still have the politeness to offer tea to any guest who isn't trying to kill them.

The most apparent flaw of "The Book of Eli" is that the book happens to be the Holy Bible. The main objection to the use of the Bible in a Hollywood movie is that Hollywood already uses religion too much in their movies. "The Chronicles of Narnia" series already uses religion as the theme for its good and evil plot, where the lion represents Jesus and all the other characters represent other important figures in Christianity. Both of Dan Brown's works, "The Da Vinci Code" and "Angels and Demons," are filled to the brim with religious affiliations. And let's not forget "The Passion of the Christ," which doesn't need much explanation. Directors Allen and Albert Hughes simply make use of an age-old theme without shedding any kind of new insight.

It may be most useful to viewers to simply try to forget the Biblical references all together in order to better enjoy the film. The movie is in fact very well done and nicely directed as it blends generic and inventive story-telling characteristics. Yes, the religious aspect does take away a little bit from the movie going experience; but if one imagines the book as something shrouded in mystery or an unknown relic of historic importance, one can enjoy the movie for its pure cinematic value.

Manish Garg can be reached at mgarg@student.umass.edu.

the source

PLANNING YOUR WEEKEND SO YOU DON'T HAVE TO.

FRIDAY

COURTESY ALYSON WILLARD

LEEROC DANCE COMPANY
THE STUDENT-RUN DANCE COMPANY WILL PREMIRE TONIGHT AND PERFORM AGAIN TOMORROW NIGHT.
WHERE: TOTMAN GYM
DOORS: 8 PM.

LUTHER "GUITAR JUNIOR" JOHNSON
THE FAMED FUNK/BLUES LEGEND WHO TRAINED WITH MUDDY WATERS, WILL PLAY THE IRON HORSE TONIGHT.
WHERE: IRON HORSE
DOORS: 7 PM.
PRICE: $18

SATURDAY

COURTESY PARAMOUNT.COM

UP IN THE AIR
BEST PICTURE OSCAR NOMINEE STARRING GEORGE CLOONEY, ALSO NOMINATED FOR BEST ACTOR NOW SHOWING.
WHERE: PLEASANT STREET THEATRE
SHOWS: 4:30, 2:15, 7 AND 9:15 PM.
PRICE: $7.50 STUDENTS

MONDAY

YES
BRITISH PROGRESSIVE ROCK BAND, KNOW FOR HITS SUCH AS "OWNER OF A LONELY HEART," WILL PLAY THE CALVIN.
WHERE: CALVIN THEATRE
SHOWS: 8:00
PRICE: $35-$75

UM looks to end home difficulties

By Steve Levine
Collegian Staff

With the playoffs looming, wins are as important as ever.

The Massachusetts women's basketball team will look to even out its homestand with a win on Saturday, when it hosts Atlantic 10 rival Fordham in an afternoon matinee. The game will take place on National Girls and Women in Sports Day.

UMass (8-14, 2-5 A-10) suffered a home court loss on Tuesday when they played St. Bonaventure (17-6, 5-3 A-10). It's been a difficult year for the Minutewomen at the Mullins Center, who have not won a game there since Nov. 22, when they defeated Villanova, 55-47.

Fordham (8-15, 2-6 A-10) should be an easier matchup for UMass. The Minutewomen have not lost to the Rams in four straight meetings dating back to 2005. In the 30 all-time meetings, UMass owns a 20-9 record.

The Rams have played much better as of late, winning two of their last four games against La Salle and Rhode Island. Against La Salle on Jan. 30, Fordham greatly benefitted from the performance by Randall Hurst, who registered 20 points, six rebounds, one assist and two steals en route to the Rams' 57-47 victory.

Hurst, a senior forward, will garner much attention from the UMass defense. With 14.3 points per game, Hurst leads her team and ranks fourth in the conference, three spots ahead of UMass' leading scorer, Kristina Danella, who averages 13.5 ppg.

Hurst is among the league leaders in several categories including rebounding (6.6 per game), field goal percentage (.447) and minutes played (32.5 per game).

She will have her hands full against the Minutewomen frontcourt, especially against the revolving centers of Jasmine Watson and Nicole Jones.

Watson averages 2.5 offensive rebounds per game, which ranks eighth in the conference. The freshman also averages 1.2 blocks per game, good for seventh in the A-10.

Jones shows her paint presence mostly by denying shots, as her average of 1.5 blocks per game ranks fourth in the conference. On Jan. 20 against Duquesne, Jones made history by registering eight blocks, which tied a school record previously set by Kate Mills in 2008 and Helen Freeman in 1988.

This game is critical for the Minutewomen, whose schedule gets significantly tougher during the upcoming weeks. In order to come away with a win, it is crucial for UMass to shoot accurately from the field. As much as the Minutewomen enjoy scoring from the paint, they also enjoy scoring from beyond the arc. UMass has two sharpshooters in Megan Zullo and Danella, whose shooting must be reliable for tomorrow and the weeks to come.

UMass has to limit its amount of fouls as well. The Minutewomen average 14.9 fouls per game, ranking them 25th in the nation.

Steve Levine can be reached at slevine@student.umass.edu.

Jeff Bernstein/Collegian

Sophomore forward Kristina Danella and the Minutewomen will have their hands full this weekend against Rhode Island's leading scorer, senior forward Randall Hurst.

Minutewomen host Rams for A–10 matinee contest

By Neil Carroll
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's basketball team will try to nab its elusive third win of the season in the Mullins Center on Saturday when it hosts Fordham.

Even though UMass (8-14, 2-5 Atlantic 10) has not had success at home, the Rams (8-15, 2-6 A-10) have not had many wins on the road this year. Their last win on the road came on Dec. 2 against Saint Peter's in non-conference play.

The Minutewomen beat the Rams last season in their first conference game, but this year's matchup has added meaning. UMass needs to win to keep Fordham under 10th in the A-10 standings.

UMass is currently tied for ninth with Rhode Island, but the Rams sit behind in 11th, poised to jump the Minutewomen. Fordham is coming off of a loss to Richmond on Wednesday, but won its previous game against La Salle, 57-47.

"We need to move"

In Tuesday night's loss to St. Bonaventure, the Minutewomen shot 20 percent from beyond the arc. UMass typically has been a team that has found success from that distance this season, but at the Mullins Center it has been a different story.

In order to repair its shooting problems in practice, however, does not depend necessarily on UMass' technique, but instead its positioning.

"We need to move," senior Megan Zullo said. "We need to pass the ball side to side and also inside and out in order to get better shots and get more in rhythm."

"I think we need to effectively come off of screens," UMass coach Marnie Dacko said. "We need to cut hard and get to open spots, and the timing in the offense is critical to the shooting."

On offense, the Minutewomen are working on moving without the ball in practice and believe that it should translate over to success in the game. The team is confident in its ability, and is just waiting for the skill shown in practice to transition into the game.

"Every day in practice we do so many shooting drills and we shoot three's like crazy," senior point guard Kim Benton said. "We have a great percentage in practice and I think it is more mental. When you get into the game, you're rushing and taking quick shots instead of just shooting when you want to."

Girls and Women in Sports Day

This weekend, UMass will try to get its third win of the season at home against Fordham on an important day for both teams.

Saturday marks National Girls and Women in Sports Day, and the Minutewomen will celebrate before by offering young women a free sports clinic in Boyden Gymnasium in association with all of UMass' women's teams.

"It's a great opportunity for girls to get in there," Dacko said. "The culmination of the day is for them to come down and watch a game at the Mullins Center."

The event will also try to draw an extra presence to the Mullins Center by offering free tickets to those who attend the free clinic. However, this day is more than just a marketing promotion to the women on the court.

"I think it's a great thing that they have going on," Benton said. "The clinic will be great by having different sports teams there to see what goes on in our daily life and then coming over to our game and watching us play."

Neil Carroll can be reached at ncarroll@student.umass.edu.

Jeff Bernstein/Collegian

Freshman Javorn Farrell heads to the hoop against a Xavier defender in UMass' 87-79 loss. Farrell and the Minutemen will look to rebound against Rhode Island on Saturday.

Cosgrove returns home to face national champs

By Herb Scribner
Collegian Staff

Merritt Cosgrove came to play women's lacrosse at Massachusetts from Carlsbad, Calif., which is a half-hour away from San Diego. Coincidently, the Minutewomen will open up their 2010 season in the same city that the senior calls home, against five-time defending national champion Northwestern.

"I've always been in someone else's climate, someone else's hometown," Cosgrove said. "And it's great to have that and see how excited they get, but I finally get to the opportunity to see my entire family."

Cosgrove competed for La Costa Canyon High School, where she won Athlete of the Year and Scholar-Athlete of the year, while becoming acquainted with an environment that only "America's Finest City" brings.

"I love it, it's hopefully going to bring good enough weather," Cosgrove said.

A former All-San Diego County lacrosse team player, Cosgrove will compete for the first time in California since beginning her college career four years ago.

"It's the pride of [being] from your area and being able to compete in your home. It's amazing," Cosgrove said.

Cosgrove will enter her home city with a young team by her side, which reminds her of her earlier days of playing in Carlsbad.

"I love having a young team because there's a lot of spirit," Cosgrove said. "I mean, some of my best years in high school, in any sport, were with a young team. So I'm excited for everybody, where they're coming from and the different positions they're offering."

When speculation began about the Minutewomen playing in San Diego, Cosgrove could not contain the excitement of possibly having her family watch her compete.

"There were kind of rumors about that it would be happening, as other teams were putting up their schedules," Cosgrove said. "It was amazing, I've never been able to experience that."

Though it is no surprise that UMass will take on a tough opponent in the Wildcats in its first game of 2010, Cosgrove offered a positive view of tomorrow night's game.

"It's going to be a great competition," Cosgrove said. "We've played against them six or seven times throughout my career, and even though they're really tough, their going to prepare us for the season and we're only going to go up from there."

Cosgrove's first meeting against Northwestern was back in 2007, when like most of the Minutewomen offense, she failed to produce any offensive spark which led to a 14-8 loss to the Wildcats.

It was a similar case in 2008, when an inexperienced Cosgrove could not produce against Northwestern, recording only one turnover and a foul.

Last season, when Cosgrove was named to the 2009 Atlantic 10 All-Tournament and All-Academic Teams, the San Diego native had her best game against the Wildcats when she took three shots on goal and earned a pair of draw controls in an 18-2 loss.

Nearly two months later on May 10, in UMass' final game of the season, Cosgrove earned three fouls in the contest against Northwestern. She did, however, display her defensive midfield skills with a draw control during the contest.

As one of the most experienced players on the team, Cosgrove looks to lead the Minutewomen to a victory against the Wildcats tomorrow night.

"She'll play some defense, she'll play some midfield, she'll take some runs on attack," said head coach Alexis Venechanos.

In its five past regular season meetings, UMass is 0-4 against Northwestern, something that the returning-home Cosgrove will look to change.

Herb Scribner can be reached at hscribner@student.umass.edu.

UM heads to URI

By Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's basketball team will complete what coach Derek Kellogg considers the toughest three-game stretch in his coaching career at UMass on Saturday against Rhode Island.

UMass (8-14, 2-6 Atlantic 10) is coming off two straight losses where it shrank the deficit in the second half, but couldn't hold onto the lead. On Jan. 30, the Minutemen went on a 10-3 run against Charlotte until the 49ers went on a tear of their own and kept a convincing lead for the rest of the game.

The Maroon and White had a similar result against Xavier on Wednesday, when it erased a 17-point deficit at halftime to take the lead with just over four minutes to play. However, guard Jordan Crawford would not let his team go away easily, and hit back-to-back 3-pointers as the Musketeers held on for the win.

The Minutemen now head to Kingston, R.I., to face the overall winningest team in the A-10. The Rams (18-3, 6-2 A-10) have the highest winning percentage (.857) in the conference, with a two-point loss to Virginia Commonwealth being the only defeat outside their A-10 schedule.

They also have one of the best home-court advantages in the country with a 9-1 record.

Kellogg knows it will be tough to defeat a team that has had such a high level of success this season on the road, but he's hoping the effort against Xavier will carry over into Saturday.

"We showed some character once again that we're not going to go down without swinging and now we've got to be the team that hits the first time instead of waiting to take the blows," Kellogg said.

URI's main strength is its maturity. Despite having five freshmen, the Rams' entire lineup is upperclassmen. They are also challenging because of their willingness to be aggressive on defense with their press.

"They're an older, more mature team and they play a unique style," Kellogg said. "They press the whole game, they try to play up and down and they've really nestled into being comfortable in how they want to play."

URI's two conference losses were to No. 19 Temple on Jan. 10 and Xavier on Jan. 23. Since then, the Rams have been on a three-game winning streak and could be one of five or six teams from the A-10 to make the NCAA Tournament.

"They're a team that's really been a surprise nationally with how good they've played and how good they've been record-wise," Kellogg said.

URI is led by senior guard Keith Cothran (16.1 points per game), who has given UMass problems in the past. At the Mullins Center last season, he finished the game with 26 points on 11-of-17 shooting to go with three steals.

The Rams went on to win that game, 71-59. However, if last year is any reason to be encouraged as to how the Minutemen might do away from the Mullins Center, they only have to look at last season's contest at the Ryan Center on March 7, 2009.

With 6.5 seconds left in the game, Chris Lowe left a memorable impression during his last regular season game and went the length of the court to score with .6 seconds left.

Lowe finished the game with 18 points on 7-of-15 shooting while adding seven assists in the effort.

Game notes:

The Rams have beaten all three teams they've played with head coaches who spent time at UMass (Boston College, Oklahoma State and Drexel). All three wins came between Dec. 13 and Jan. 2.

Adam Miller can be reached at amiller@dailycollegian.com.

New England Open in Boston next on schedule for UMass

Jeffrey Engmann
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's and women's swimming and diving teams will head to Chestnut Hill this Saturday to compete in the New England Open.

The event will last for most of the day and will feature programs such as Rhode Island, Providence and host Boston College.

The meet will be the final tune up for the UMass teams before the Atlantic 10 Championships, which will be held Feb. 17-20. Both teams are coming off of an exciting home meet against Fordham on Senior Day, when sophomore diver Jason Cook had a record-breaking performance.

Last weekend's A-10 showdowns were each team's third race in two weeks and eighth total dual meet this season. After a compact part of the schedule, both teams will embark on a period of rest and mental preparation before the all-important conference championships. The meet this week is integral in giving experience.

"The New England Open is an opportunity for our kids that are not going to the Atlantic 10 to swim," UMass women's coach Bob Newcomb said. The Minutewomen will have six swimmers who will be competing in this weekend's race.

"That is their last meet of the season, and they're going to swim as hard as they can."

The Minutewomen who are competing in the A-10's this weekend, as well as next, will have an opportunity to recharge and revamp. Newcomb stated that the most important thing for his swimmers to do during this time is to "sleep well, eat well, and get ahead of the academics."

The race marks the last invitational the UMass teams will compete in. So far this season, both teams have been very successful in meets of this variety. The teams swam well in their last invitational, both placing first in Kingston, R.I.

Men's coach Russ Yarworth had similar thoughts concerning this time of year. He made it clear that the most important thing to do is rest.

"We're basically resting or sharpening, sharpening our skills and making sure we feel fast, and making sure they're not tired," Yarworth said.

The Minutemen have yet to slow down this season, as they have won three straight dual meets. Yarworth attributed that to the team's work ethic and believes that in order to defend their A-10 title, they must get back to full strength.

"These guys have certainly done the work, so now we just want to stay healthy," Yarworth said.

Jeffrey Engmann can be reached at jengmann@student.umass.edu.

UMass, BC battle for second

By Jeffrey R. Larnard
Collegian Staff

After playing to its first winning record in the month of January in three years, the Massachusetts hockey team finds itself in a prime position in the Hockey East standings heading down the stretch of the season for the first time in recent memory.

Tonight, the No. 15 Minutemen (16-10-0, 11-8-0 HEA) can improve that positioning when they host Boston College at the Mullins Center at 7:30 p.m.

With both teams currently tied for second place in the conference with 22 points – but with No. 15 BC leading the season series 1-0 – a victory would propel either team into sole possession of second place, keeping up with first-place New Hampshire (27 points). With eight games left in the regular season for UMass and nine for the Eagles (14-8-2, 10-6-2 HEA), including Friday's contest, those two points mean more now than ever.

"I think we're at the point in the season where the season is so short right now that every game is huge and the BC game is big because there is so much public interest," UMass coach Don Cahoon said. "But we have to narrow our focus to deal with the execution and follow through with good play."

While the future looks brighter for this year's squad, Cahoon has stressed a narrowing of the Minutemen's focus. Cahoon knows the high expectations UMass now has doesn't guarantee it will reach them.

"I think we're trying to focus on the path to success and not the destination," Cahoon said. "That will take care of itself. Let's deal with the everyday essence of training and practicing and do a good job with that and the net result might be better."

Despite BC playing one less game than UMass to this point, the Minutemen may still be favored to finish ahead of the Eagles because of the remaining schedules of the two schools. A win tonight would give even more assurance.

Remaining on UMass' schedule after Friday's contest are consecutive home-and-homes with Northeastern followed by Merrimack, currently two of the worst teams in the conference, ahead of only Providence. In the final two weeks of the regular season the Minutemen will head to BC for the final game of the season series and then finish with two games at No. 16 Maine.

The Eagles will have to overcome a home-and-home with No. 18 UMass Lowell and end the season with another against No. 13 New Hampshire. Even the Wildcats will face tough competition as they try to lock up the No. 1 seed in the Hockey East Tournament with two games at No. 17 Vermont as well as their two with the Eagles.

While grabbing a higher seed is something important to teams, it is even more so for UMass. If the Hockey East Tournament were to start today, the Minutemen would have the No. 3 seed because of their loss to BC, setting them up with a first-round match with Boston University, a team who has taken 2-of-3 from UMass this year and scored 13 goals in the two wins.

On the other hand, if UMass is able to grab the No. 2 seed, and the rest of the standings stayed the same, it would set up a matchup with Vermont, a team UMass took 2-of-3 from.

With a win tonight, the Minutemen will have a better hold on that No. 2 seed, but will have to show more consistency by stringing wins together. With games in the coming weeks against the bottom half of the conference, UMass has the opportunity to do so, but playing consistent in the Hockey East is no easy task because of the strength of the conference.

"I think it is the nature of the competition more than anything else and no question those games that we let slip by we could play better in those particular games, but I think it is the nature of the competition," Cahoon said.

Tonight's game will be aired on NESN and will be "Operation 8K Part II," as UMass hopes to fill the stands for the televised contest.

Jeffrey R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@dailycollegian.com.

JEFF BERNSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

The Minutemen host Boston College in a fight for second place in the Hockey East.

UM teams to compete in Giegengack Invitational

By Michael Wood
Collegian Staff

After impressive finishes last weekend at the Reebok Boston Indoor Games, the Massachusetts men's and women's track and field teams will travel to New Haven, Conn. this Friday to compete in the Giegengack Invitational.

UMass will try to ride that momentum and build on the strong individual and team performances it recorded. Women's coach Julie LaFreniere says she is encouraged by her team thus far, and is optimistic about the weekend ahead.

"We're making progress," LaFreniere said. "Hopefully we can keep up our momentum and turn out even better than last weekend. Things are looking very, very good for us."

Last weekend in Boston, the Minutewomen finished third in a field of 17 teams. They have been improving each week, and continue to lean on the experience and leadership from their top senior members, Lisa Wilson and Holly Heinricher.

In Boston, Wilson scored 16 of the 82 points UMass tallied on her own by placing in both the shot put and the weight throw. Heinricher set a personal record in the 200-meter dash by running a time of 25.96 seconds, while also placing in the 55-meter dash. It is this kind of stability and reliability that the Minutewomen hope to use as a springboard for even better performances later in the season.

Adding to their top performers thus far, freshman Courtney Baldwin was named Atlantic 10 Conference Rookie Performer of the Week. She tallied a fourth place finish in the mile run and also helped the 4x400 relay team take second place, a finish that qualified them for the Eastern College Athletic Conference championship.

Regardless of the outcome of last weekend, LaFreniere said that with the level her team is at so early on in the season, it is hard not to get excited about its chances. She expects her team to contend in every event they enter.

"I'm expecting big things this weekend and from here on out," LaFreniere said. "The ladies look fantastic. The 4x400 relay team should be ready to go, and I expect them to hit it hard and show me something."

The men's team looks just as promising headed into the Giegengack Invitational Friday. Last weekend, in the biggest meet they have competed in this season, the Minutemen finished fourth out of a field of 18 teams.

In the Reebok Boston Indoor Games last week, it was Sean Busch leading the way for UMass. Busch won the pole vault event, and qualified for the ECAC championship while setting a school record in the process. He now sits in second place all-time in the event, reaching a height of 15-05.00.

The Minutemen also saw junior Darius Velez and senior Tyler Cotto place first in their respective events for the third consecutive week. Velez was able to win the 55-meter dash in 6.48 seconds and Cotto took first place in the 55-meter hurdles with a time of 7.60 seconds.

With a total of seven members qualifying for the New England championship last week, the squad looks poised to add to that total this week in New Haven. The meet will begin at 5 p.m. on Friday.

Michael Wood can be reached at mcwood@student.umass.edu

Minutemen, Eagles, UNH in tight race for Hockey East

By Jay Asser
Collegian Staff

Heading into a matchup with Boston College today, the Massachusetts hockey team will attempt to claim a victory that would move them into the second slot in the Hockey East standings.

The Minutemen (16-10-0, 11-8-0 HEA) and the Eagles (14-8-2, 10-6-2 HEA) are tied with 22 total points behind conference leader New Hampshire, despite UMass having one more win than BC.

Since losing 4-3 in overtime to the Minutemen on Nov. 13, the Wildcats (13-8-4, 12-3-3 HEA) have dropped only one conference matchup in their last 13 Hockey East games. With 27 total points, UNH would have to collapse down the stretch for UMass or BC to overtake it.

In the U.S. College Hockey Online Division I Men's Poll, the Wildcats, the Eagles and the Minutemen are ranked No. 13, 14 and 15, respectively, and are in good position to represent the Hockey East with three teams in the NCAA Tournament.

Following the Eagles, the Minutemen will play four consecutive Hockey East games with two home-and-home series against Northeastern and Merrimack. The implications of the games will be critical to determining home ice for the upcoming Hockey East Tournament, which begins on March 12.

"When the season's so short right now, every game is huge," UMass coach Don Cahoon said before Wednesday's practice. "I try not to get into over-selling the game, but more about 'Hey, this is the next kick in the can, we better make it a good one.'"

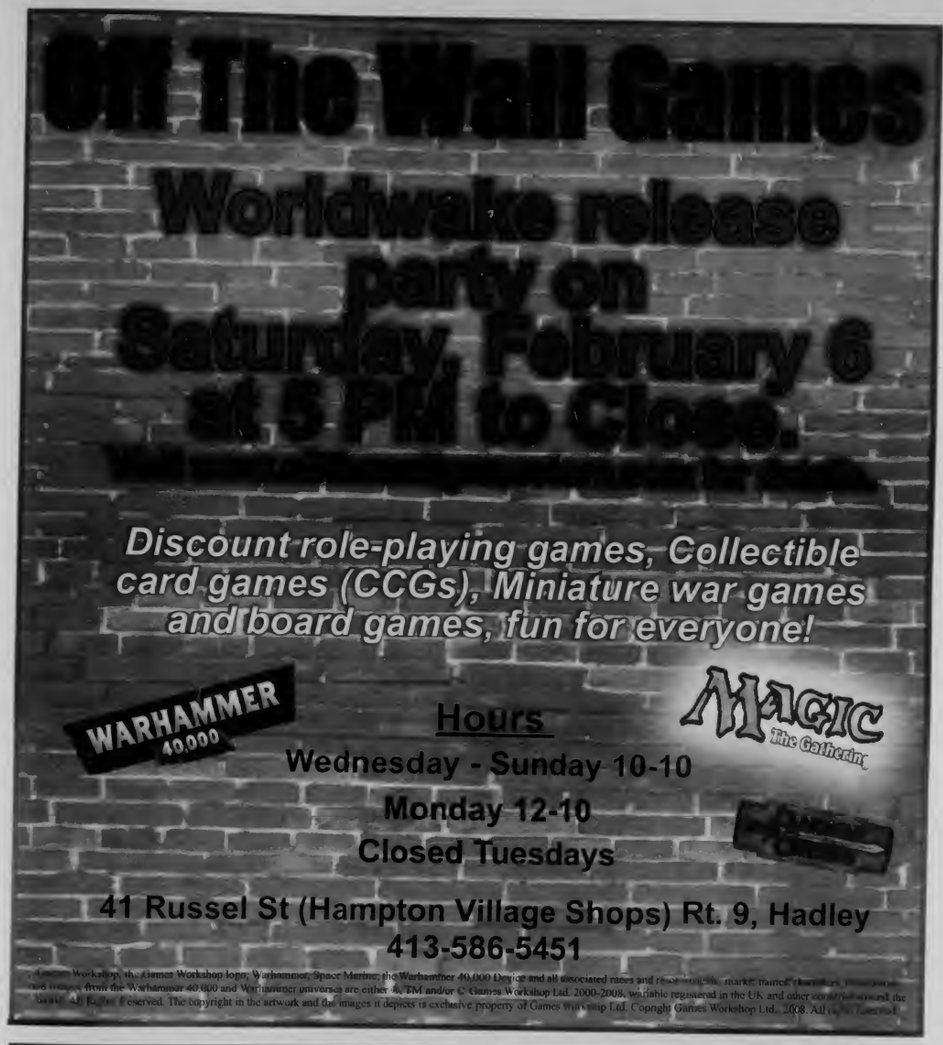
Though the Minutemen have had more success thus year than past seasons, they've been unable to get a substantial hot streak going. The longest winning streak enjoyed by UMass has been four games on two different occasions this season.

Cahoon, however, realizes the difficulty in getting hot when facing tough opponents nearly every game out.

"You look at the league, and New Hampshire's been the one exception to this where they ran off a whole series of games and that's why they're five points ahead, but everybody else has been like that," Cahoon said. "BC has had a good run but they've lost a few games here and there. We've had a couple of good runs but lost a few games. It's the nature of the competition more than anything else."

Eagles pelting Dainton

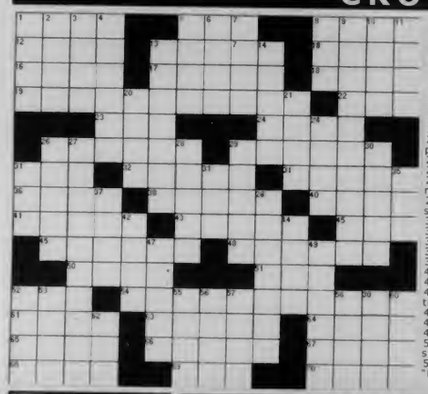
Whenever goaltender Paul Dainton plays in net against BC, he can expect a good amount of pucks to head his way.



In five career starts and seven games played against the Eagles, the junior is 2-3-1 with a 2.12 goals against average and a .934 save percentage.

In four games against BC, Dainton has recorded 30 or more saves, including a career-high 39 which he set on Nov. 22 in a 4-3 overtime win in 2008.

If UMass expects to continue its success this season, Cahoon knows it will be up to the play in-between the pipes.

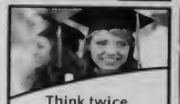


"I think the team will go as far as goaltending will take you. There are other aspects of the game that are critical, but none more than goaltending," Cahoon said. "We need our goaltending to be real solid and I think it's in pretty good shape right now, so that's a good thing for us."

Jay Asser can be reached at jasser@student.umass.edu.

comics

CROSSWORD



ACROSS
1. A-line line
5. VCR button
8. Majestic
12. Therefore
13. Radioactive gas
15. Backside
16. Level
17. Bowel cleasing
18. Tattled
19. Kill
22. Golf ball support
23. A parcel of land
24. Story
26. Acknowledgment
29. Words to a song
31. Before
32. Malicious
34. Birth-related
36. Celebration
38. Raisin
40. Anger
41. Knot
43. Swelling under the skin
45. Animal doctor
46. Surplus
48. Wealth
50. Throat-clearing sound
51. Prefix meaning "New"
52. Mesh
54. Diamondback
61. Murres
63. Small finch
64. Wickedness
65. A swinging barrier to a room
66. What a ghost does
67. Adjusts
68. Feudal worker
69. Collection
70. Tall woody plant

DOWN
1. Stiff hair
2. Goddess of discord (Greek mythology)
3. Matures
4. Team spirit
5. Hindu princess
6. Biblical garden
7. Deep sleep
8. Dine
9. Defensive
10. Part of an archipelago
11. Formally surrender
13. Taking a break
14. Dapper 20.
Mats of grass
21. Acquire deservedly
25. Teller of untruths
26. A long-necked wading bird
27. Freedom from activity
28. Grows weary
29. A pariah
30. Periods of discounted prices
31. Comes from a hen
33. Father
35. Permit
37. Part of a foot
39. Distinguished
42. Look of lust
44. Cards with just one symbol
47. Crash
49. Truthful
52. Naked
53. God of love
55. Earl Grey and orange pekoe
56. Not false
57. Fluff from a dryer
58. Affirm
59. Toy with a tail
60. Ultimatum ender
62. Metric unit of area

WE WANT YOUR COMICS

Where else you gonna put 'em? Don't Answer that.

E-mail: comics@dailycollegian.com

Think twice. Borrow once.

Apply once and secure financing for your entire college career! Rest assured your local not-for-profit cooperative will be with you every step of the way.

UMassFIVE COLLEGE FEDERAL CREDIT UNION

800.852.5886
umassfive.org

Student Choice

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necessary. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

Zoar Outdoors is seeking adventuresome people to be summer guides for whitewater rafting and zip-line canopy tours. Join our training program and spend the summer splashing through rapids or zipping through trees. Applicants should be great with people, have a positive attitude and be comfortable working as a team or independently. Application deadline: Feb.15th. Call 800-532-7483 or see www.zoaroutdoor.com/jobs.htm for an application.

FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 Bedroom Apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug, or Sept. First come, First Serve. Get Them While They Last. www.brandywine-apts.com. Stop by or Call 549-0600

28 Stockbridge St: 4 bedroom house- 2 baths, living room, eat in kitchen, pantry, laundry, finished basement, yard, 2 car garage, 1.5 mi to campus! $2,575/Mo+ www.amherst-lincolnrealty.com 253-7879

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Montague-2 bedroom, 1 bath, dishwasher, deck, yard, laundry on site, gas heat, off street parking. 413-367-2461 $ 825 +

SERVICES

Pregnant? Want to talk? Call birthright 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 Hour hot-line 1-800-550-4900 www.birthright.org

TUTORING SERVICES

Math, Physics, Chemistry, Stats, & GRE. Call John 413-584-8643 Jbold42@yahoo.com

QUOTE OF THE DAY

I used to work in a fire hydrant factory. You couldn't park anywhere near the place.

— Steven Wright

APARTMENTS AVAILABLE

PUFFTON VILLAGE

EXCELLENT LOCATION!
1/2 MILE FROM UMASS

SPACIOUS APARTMENTS!
1, 2, & 3 Bedroom Townhouses

ALL RENTS INCLUDE: HEAT, HOT WATER, AND COOKING GAS!

ON SITE LAUNDRY, OFF STREET PARKING.

BASKETBALL AND TENNIS COURTS.

OFFICE HOURS: 8AM TO 4PM MONDAY - FRIDAY
(413) 549-0145
WWW.PUFFTONVILLAGE.COM

SUDOKU

	3
				3		1	6
			7	9	4
		6	2				7
	5			8		9	4
3						6
		1
		2	9	5		6
4				6	7	2

Franks and Bills

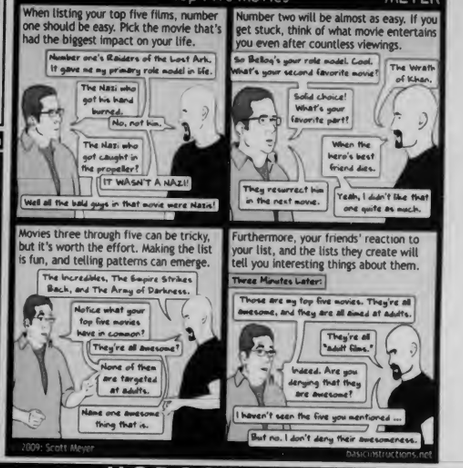
DEW TOUR WINTER

mount snow. VERMONT

DEW

February 4-7, 2010

ALLSPORTS.COM



SMBC by Zach Weiner smbc-comics.com

Chainsawsuit by Kris Straub Chainsawsuit.com

BASIC INSTRUCTIONS How to Pick Your All-Time Top Five Movies by Scott MEYER

Hark! a Vagrant by K. Beaton. harkavagrant.com

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20 - Feb. 18
Appreciate your smile and show it off in some picture. The world is tired of thinking that you are a robot from the future.

pisces Feb. 19 - Mar. 20
Constantly yelling and screaming will get you nowhere in life. Actually, there is the Ludlow Correctional Facility.

aries Mar. 21 - Apr. 19
Your friends are all afraid of you since you keep stealing their Frank's Red Hot sauce.

taurus Apr. 20 - May. 20
Facial hair is a right of passage. There is a reason why you look like a massive tween.

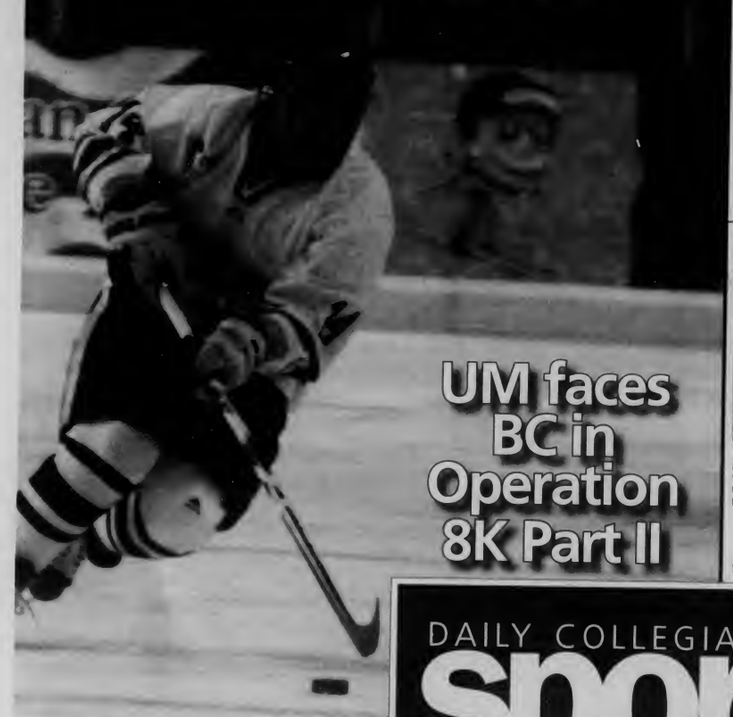
gemini May. 21 - Jun. 21
I see terrible things in your childhood, like walls being broken and siblings being choked-out over the Nintendo 64.

cancer Jun. 22 - Jul. 22
The only thing that you need to worry about this weekend is who ate your buffalo chicken calzone and how to kill them.

leo Jul. 23 - Aug. 22
Being lazy is one thing, but controlling all your electronics from your bed is legendary.

virgo Aug. 23 - Sept. 22
We all know you watch Desperate Housewives while you gently rub your feet together. Time to come clean.

libra Sept. 23 - Oct. 22
Not too many people will push over small, cute animals to get in line for a banana cream pie. We salute you.



scorpio Oct. 23 - Nov. 21
Your unusual quest to gain muscle is on par with Tim Tebow's own goal of staying a virgin.

sagittarius Nov. 22 - Dec. 21
Your inner self listens to Coldplay, and has candlelight dinners with your conscience.

capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 19
Ther FDA has labeled DC food as part of a previously unknown food group, along with sawdust and abandoned G.I Joe dolls.

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 2010

Breaking the deadlock

UM faces BC in Operation 8K Part II

MEN'S HOOPS

The Massachusetts men's basketball team travels to the Ryan Center to face Atlantic 10 opponent Rhode Island on Saturday.

SEE PAGE 11

WOMEN'S LAX

Returning back to Merritt Cosgrove's home, the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team plays five-time defending national champion Northwestern in San Diego.

SEE PAGE 11

DAILY COLLEGIAN sports WEEKEND EDITION

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

HIGH: 32 LOW: 16 www.DailyCollegian.com MONDAY, FEBRUARY 8, 2010

UM vice chancellor search down to final 4

By Chris Shores
Collegian Staff

The vice chancellor of student affairs and campus life position at the University of Massachusetts is down to the final four candidates.

Current interim Vice Chancellor Jean Kim is vying for the permanent position. The other three candidates are Kevin E. Charles, assistant vice president for student and academic services at the University of New Hampshire, Margaret A. Jablonski, vice chancellor for student affairs at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, and Michael R. Laliberte, vice president for student affairs at Boise State University in Idaho.

Whoever wins the upcoming election will, as vice chancellor, oversee a variety of offices critical to student life including Housing Services, University Health Services, the Faculty and Staff Assistance Program and the Dean of Students Office, which also includes campus activities and the judicial program.

According to Tom Milligan, executive vice chancellor for university relations, the position is "the unit most responsible for building the best living and learning environment in partnership with academic affairs and the rest of campus."

The post has not been permanently filled since Michael Gargano, Jr. left the University in Jan. 2008.

There have since been two interim vice chancellors: Esther Terry, who served in the role for 17 months, and Kim, who began a one-year interim term last July.

Milligan is chair of the selection committee, which consists of 10 members from a variety of different offices on campus. The members are Byron Bullock, associate vice chancellor for student affairs and campus life, Jeff Cox, chair of the department of music and dance, Pamela Marsh Williams, assistant provost and dean of undergraduate advising and learning communities, Mari Castañeda, associate professor of communications and faculty adviser of Student Bridges, Emily Bloch, student trustee, Tiffany Yee, vice president of the Graduate Student Senate, Ken Toong, director of UMass' Dining Services, Robert Feldman, dean of the college of social and behavioral sciences, and Susan Whitbourne, professor of psychology and the national scholarship adviser.

The committee began the selection process last semester. From the pool of candidates who applied, 11 were selected in the first cut, Milligan said.

These 11 candidates had telephone interviews with the search committee, who then selected four finalists. The finalists have been visiting the UMass

See VICE CHANCELLOR on page 3

Last semester, a referendum proposed by the Student Government Association failed to install online voting, despite much voter support.

SGA tries once more on online voting bill

By Alyssa Creamer
Collegian Staff

On Tuesday, Feb. 9, the University of Massachusetts' Student Government Association's administrative affairs committee will take a look at what is now the third bill involving the installation of online voting. If this bill passes through the committee, it will reach the SGA senate floor for vote during their meeting on Wednesday, Feb. 10.

It has been over a year since senators in the SGA first began discussions on a bill proposing online voting for elections.

Last semester, 87 percent of voters were in favor of holding online elections.

But the SGA judiciary committee rejected the referendum on what senator Derek Khanna considers to be a "baseless technicality." The problem stemmed from the involvement of former SGA elections commissioner Sean McNair, who partnered with Khanna prior to the creation of the referendum. The two canvassed online voting through a student petition that received more signatures than the number of students who voted during the general election of 2008 by over nine percent. As a result of McNair's involvement in both the elections and the student petition for online voting, the judiciary rejected the referendum.

According to Jarred Rose, recently elected chairperson of the administrative affairs committee, the bill that had been rejected by the judiciary contained a lot of items within the document that "a lot of people [in the senate] did not like because they did not have to do with online voting." Rose continued saying that his committee has, in the past three weeks, revised the bill with the aid of members from the Center for Student Development and Student Legal Services, to specify the processes of the online voting system. Senators Khanna and Josh Davidson are sponsoring the bill being observed in committee.

If two-thirds of the senate votes the bill through, a trial-run of online elections is set to occur during this spring's elections. This means that after launching online voting, the elections commission and the SGA's administrative affairs committee would review the processes to determine whether the system should be voted in as a permanent procedure for all subsequent elections.

"I'm psyched Vice Chancellor Jean Kim has made it very clear the student body needs to have online elections," said Khanna. "My understanding from her is that's how most colleges do it. "It has taken far, far too long for thi ," said Khanna about the process to install online elections. "It is very clear that the campus overwhelmingly supports the idea of online voting. I canvassed thousands of students, and I never once came across a student who was against it."

Currently, several committee members believe that online voting will be hosted by the UMass Campus Pulse website, found at http: umass-samherst.collegiatelink.net Community 'action=getMyHome. Students sign onto the site with their SPIRE identification number to ensure they only receive a single vote.

The website would also allow candidates an opportunity to write 750 words of text explaining his or her platform that would be placed on a separate, blank webpage. A link to this page would be placed underneath each of the candidates' names, and all information displayed on the pages would need prior approval by the elections commission.

"Hyperlinks and pictures would not be allowed," said Rose. "It gives the voter one last chance to read a candidate's platform. [Committee members] definitely considered the fact that normal elections do not have candidate's platforms listed on the ballot, but we feel it could really benefit both the candidate and the voter."

"Many times students are unaware of a candidate's platform because of restrictions placed on campaigns from both the elections commission and the campus

See ONLINE VOTING on page 2

Interim Vice Chancellor Kim vies for permanent position

By Sara Cody
Collegian Staff

Dr. Jean Kim, the interim vice chancellor for student affairs and campus life at the University of Massachusetts, held an open session on Thursday, Feb. 4 to discuss her future plans for the position with a group of students.

The forum was part of a series of open sessions in which UMass students had the opportunity to meet and converse with the candidates for the vice chancellor position.

Kim took the opportunity to relate her ideas and positions on certain issues on campus, and discussed what changes she would make to the current status quo.

"Our vision for student affairs ... [is to develop] a comprehensive living and learning environment on campus," said Kim. "[This] would contribute to the successful education and transformation of our students so that they can really transform their potential and skill sets to match their highest aspirations."

Kim is no stranger to the UMass campus. She received a bachelor of arts and a masters degree in sociology as well as a doctor of education degree in counseling psychology from the University. She has over 30 years of previous experience in leading student affairs from Stanford University, the University of Colorado at Boulder and the University of Massachusetts-Dartmouth, among other accredited institutions.

Kim returned to UMass last July when she began a one-year interim term in the vice chancellor position.

See KIM on page 2

Jean Kim has served as the vice chancellor position on an interim basis since July.

VC candidate Jablonski hopes to encourage student dialogue

By Chris Shores
Collegian Staff

On Friday, Feb. 5, Margaret A. Jablonski, vice chancellor for student affairs at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, spoke at the University of Massachusetts in a student-only open session and at one for the general public.

During the student session, Jablonski said she was "honored" to be one of the four finalists up for the position of UMass vice chancellor of student affairs and campus life. She said if hired, the experience would be personally meaningful as the appointment would come "full circle" and signify her return to UMass.

In 1981, Jablonski received her bachelor of arts in history as an undergraduate at UMass. Three years later, she also received her masters in education degree at UMass, researching organizational behavior and legal issues in higher education.

She then returned to UMass in 1997 for two years to serve as a visiting assistant professor in education, policy, research and administration.

"To come back at this point in my career would be the way that I could give back," said Jablonski. "I've been a student affairs person, I've been a faculty member and I'm an alum of this University."

She then shared with the students present some of her experiences as vice chancellor of student affairs at UNC-Chapel Hill, where she has worked for the past six years.

Jablonski said that in student affairs, they built $185 million worth of what she called "capital projects," including a new residential area, a family housing complex for grad students, a student services building, a dining hall and a recreation center.

"We've been able to put together a whole new series of student life building and projects that have really made a difference to the students," she said. "That demanded a lot of oversight, a lot of planning. [We had to make] sure that the campus flowed well together and that we protected green space and paid attention to sustainability."

At UNC, Jablonski helped implement open office hours in the vice chancellor's office, something that she would bring here if appointed. UNC also formed a "Student Affairs Leadership Council," which Jablonski meets with monthly.

She stressed the importance for dialogue with the students, especially on issues of money.

"As we look at budget cuts and resource realignment, we have to know what's important to you," she said. "What are your ideas on how we should be utilizing our resources?"

"We're managing your money and we're responsible for your money," she added. "When I get into debates [with other administration members], I tell them, 'Remember, it's their money. We need to hear their voices. They may not be always right but they have opinions that need to be heard.'"

See JABLONSKI on page 3

Presidential Apartments fire causes destruction

A Saturday night fire at Presidential Apartments in Amherst caused damage to four residential units. The tenants were not home at the time, and the fire was quickly extinguished.

ARTS & LIVING

Prog rockers Yes set to play NoHo

The progressive classic rock band Yes performs tonight at the Calvin Theater in Northampton.

SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS

UMass falls to No. 1 Wildcats

In their season opener, the Minutewomen fell to the five-time defending national champions 18-6 on Saturday night

SEE PAGE 10

EDITORIAL & OPINION

Who wears short-shorts? No one at the Rec Center. They'll run you out.

SEE PAGE 4

DailyCollegian.com

Get a first look at the UMass tennis and lacrosse teams in our online spring sports preview.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXX
ISSUE 2

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
413-545-3500
FAX 413-545-3649
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF William McGuinness
MANAGING EDITOR Matt Rocheleau
MANAGING WEB EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
BUSINESS MANAGER Daniel Jette
PRODUCTION MANAGER Michael Sarkes
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Kirsten Swenson
ADVERTISING MANAGER Michael Tortorici
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Amanda Joinson
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Shana Murphy
COMICS EDITOR Andrew Wirts
EDITORIAL EDITOR Alyssa Cranmer
NEWS EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS EDITOR Jeffres R. Larnard
PHOTO EDITOR Matthew Harrison
IT MANAGER Victor Jacek
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Matt Zolnierz
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Nicole Jacinto
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Norman Provost
CLASSIFIED MANAGER Katelyn Tamulio
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Justin Gagnon
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Elyse Horowitz
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Cal Scannell
ASSISTANT COMICS Domonic Mei
ASSTANT EDITORIAL Benjamin Moriarty
ASSTANT EDITORIAL Michael Phillis
ASSTANT EDITORIAL Matthew M. Robare
ASSISTANT NEWS Samuel Butterfield
ASSISTANT NEWS Jenn Heshion
ASSISTANT NEWS Chris Shores
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jay Asser
ASSISTANT SPORTS David Brinch
ASSISTANT SPORTS Adam Miller
ASSISTANT PHOTO Maxwell Sparr
ASSISTANT PHOTO Samantha Webber
SENIOR PRODUCER Sara Cods
SENIOR PRODUCER Pete Rizzo

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semesters. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1911 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:00 p.m.

PRODUCTION CREW
on staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Kirsten Swenson

COPY EDITOR
Elizabeth Tran

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Dan Centola

Kim suggests adding support programs in sophomore year

KIM from page 1

One of the observations she made upon her return was that many of the buildings were the same. She cited the student union, built in 1958, as an example of a structure that was "too old and not sufficient to meet the [growing] student body."

In addition to academic buildings, Kim would like to see more work done in residential halls. UMass should look into supplying more residential halls for students, she said. Additionally, she would hope to provide a more "progressive" element to residential halls. This would include more suite style and apartment options on campus, so students would have the opportunity to "progress" from dormitory to apartment.

Kim also said one of the biggest changes she would like to see is more attention focused on sophomores.

"[Sophomore year is] a difficult year [and] a different kind of transition," she said. "There is probably more of a need as educators to connect to students in their sophomore year than we do now."

Kim said that the transition program would be similar to that currently implemented for first-year students. She said that sophomore year is one in which students tackle questions about the choices they have made so far and their identity as a student.

"If students can successfully get two years under their belt," she said, "then chances are they're going to be able to make it and be able to realize and maximize the academic opportunities we have."

During the open session, Kim fielded questions from students about different issues on campus.

One student asked about the recent reduction of open hours at University Health Services, and what options students have if they get sick in the middle of the night.

Kim is currently working on a proposal with the director of UHS that would establish a shuttle on campus. This shuttle would provide transportation for sick students, either to UHS or to the hospital, 24 hours a day.

"We would offer the service for $25 a semester [as an] insurance that you could buy for sick transportation," said Kim. "With the cost of a taxi, it's still significantly cheaper than any ambulance run."

When asked about the most important approach to her job, Kim referred to a "student-centered approach" in her role as vice chancellor. She spoke of hosting dinners with groups of students at least once every month to hear their impressions of campus and to bring up any possible issues.

"I see my role as being one of the primary advocates for students," said Kim. "Part of my job is to be available, to be accessible, to listen and to ask, so that I am in touch with ... the needs of the students."

Sara Cody can be reached at scody@student.umass.edu

Derek Khanna, one of the leading promoters of online voting, speaks to the SGA.

Information Meeting
Wednesday, February 10
5:00 PM
Goodell 508
UMASS Amherst
PEACE CORPS
Life is calling. How far will you go?
Peace Corps
www.peacecorps.gov
800.424.8580

SGA hoping third time a charm for web voting

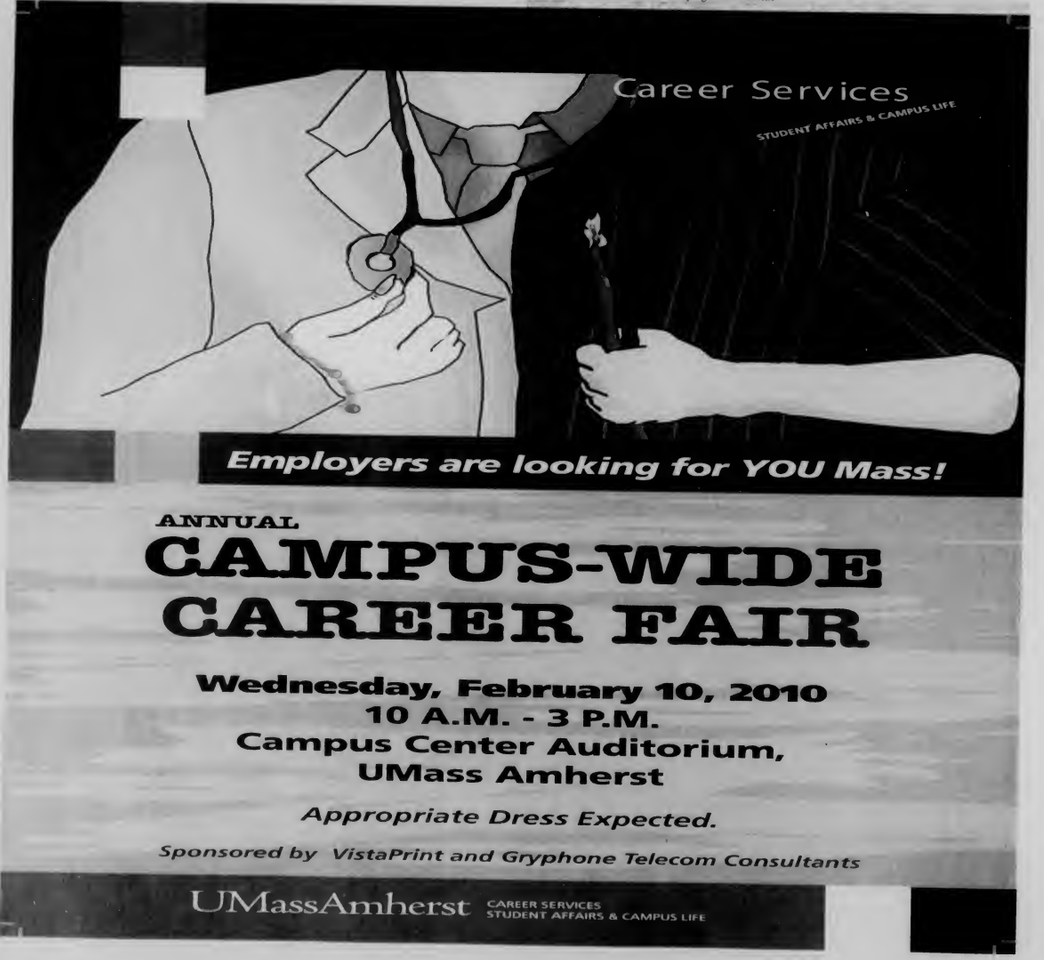
ONLINE VOTING from page 1

population's size," he added.

Restrictions, according to several members of the SGA, include the elections commissions' candidate code of conduct bylaw stating that candidates for senate may only spend up to $10 campaigning. Seventy-five dollars may be spent campaigning by the president and trustee.

Additionally, it is also written in the bylaws that campaign materials must be bought at Campus OnCopy. At seven cents per sheet of paper, according to Rose, "that money gets eaten up really fast."

The online voting period is currently laid out in the bill to last three full days, during which traditional paper ballots will also be available, but in fewer locations than in past elections.



The committee is also reviewing the election processes' bylaw that does not allow for candidates to directly speak about their opponents during their campaign.

On Feb. 6, Rose held one-on-one sessions in the SGA office with the majority of Senators to discuss the bill. Rose said that he believes "more than two-thirds of the senators actively agree that online voting would be a good thing for students.""Online voting will bring in more people into the voting election," he said. He explained that the commuter population would have an easier time voting and that the installation of online voting could bring about few issues to the election process. There are some senators who do not agree wholeheartedly with the bill.

"I still have major concerns ... We want a voting system that is secure and remains fully in student control," said senator Andrew Berg. "It still is unclear as to whether Campus Pulse is able to meet these needs. It would be a great tragedy if we traded away student control of elections to a third party for the sake of convenience alone."

Berg continued to say that he "is not sure whether it is still an acceptable compromise to trade away the SGA's ability to conduct its own elections to a third party for something that is shiny, flashy and new, but doesn't necessarily increase voter turnout."Tuesday's committee meeting will take place in room 905 of the campus center at 6 p.m. It is open to the public.

Alissa Creamer can be reached at acreamer@student.umass.edu.

ANNUAL
CAMPUS-WIDE CAREER FAIR
Wednesday, February 10, 2010
10 A.M. - 3 P.M.
Campus Center Auditorium,
UMass Amherst
Appropriate Dress Expected.
Sponsored by VistaPrint and Gryphone Telecom Consultants
UMassAmherst CAREER SERVICES STUDENT AFFAIRS & CAMPUS LIFE

Helping artists learn new business tactics

Artist David Lenz prepares his palette while working on a portrait of Ery and Mercedes Wagner in his Shorewood, Wisc. studio.

BY ANNA MEILER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

To ease the blows the economy has had on struggling artists, the University of Massachusetts Arts Extension Service is using an $8,000 grant awarded to them by the Community Foundation of Western Massachusetts to run the "Artist Business Training Project" in Springfield, Northampton and Orange, Mass.

The Artist Business Training Project will hold a day-and-a-half session to coach 75 local artists, 25 in each location, on business techniques, said Dee Boyle-Clapp, program coordinator of the Arts Extension Service. The training will include creating a basic artist business plan and teaching them valuable skills such as marketing, website design and grant writing.

Artists will also be instructed on how to set up a business and handle finances. They will be taught market analysis and how to track who is accessing their websites. From that information, they can learn how to better target their audience. The artists will also receive the Artist Extension Service's Artist in Business workbook, said Boyle-Clapp.

The project was brought about in response to economic pressures artists have faced in recent years. Many art organizations are dependent on fundraising and therefore have been extremely hurt by the recession, explained Boyle-Clapp.

"When the economy worsened, people stopped going to events and didn't spend as much money as they used to, so it was a double whammy," she said. "More people are also shopping online, which means they aren't purchasing local goods."

Boyle-Clapp received many e-mails and phone calls from local, successful artists who said their businesses were either closing or suffering. These artists needed advice on how to save their businesses.

Boyle-Clapp found inspiration for her project from The Artists of Franklin County, a group of local artists that meet in Greenfield, Mass., monthly to discuss business ideas, presentation techniques and personal experiences. She found these group meetings were helpful for the artists to offer advice and encouragement to one another.

"Many artists were feeling very isolated, so getting connected with other artists helped them feel that they were connecting with something bigger," said Diane Clancy, founder of The Artists of Franklin County. "It definitely gave people a lot of inspiration and we did a lot of networking."

"But for most people, they were doing it because it was a way to promote individual artists and give the town a sense of pride," said Clancy.

The first Artist Business Training session will be held at North Quabbin Woods in Orange on April 21 and 22. The second session will take place at Springfield Technical Community College on April 28 and 29, and the third session will be in Northampton at the Commonwealth Center for Change. The Northampton dates are yet to be determined.

"The great thing about this is that it's free, open to artists of any sort of background, open to musicians, theater people, anyone," said Boyle-Clapp.

"We're giving people work to do before they come, to figure out their problems and have them come to the workshop to do exercises, group work and build a cohort of people," she added.

The aid artists will receive will not be limited to the workshop. Within a month of the session, the site coordinators from each location will have a half-hour phone consultation with each artist in their group to follow up on the artist's problems and help guide them in the next steps in revving their business.

"It's really hard to be given a lot of information and then go home and be left alone with it," said Boyle-Clapp, who hopes that these consultations will help the artists better apply the learned information to their businesses.

Artists of any field can register to partake in the Artist Business Training Project and can get in contact with the Art Extension Service at aes@outreach.umass.edu.

Anna Meiler can be reached at ameiler@student.umass.edu.

Finalists visit campus this week

VICE CHANCELLOR from page 1

campus as of last week and continuing into the upcoming week, for meetings with members of the faculty, students, administration and Chancellor Robert Holub.

Milligan said the committee was looking for a "diverse and broad pool," adding that he was pleased with the finalists they came up with.

"We have three sitting vice chancellors and one 'number two,'" said Milligan. "I think that speaks to the quality of this University and the importance of the job."

The candidates are having formal meetings and interviews while visiting the campus in addition to "open sessions" created by the committee. These sessions allow candidates the opportunity to speak to students, faculty and community members on a more informal basis, Milligan said.

At these open sessions, candidate evaluation forms are distributed. Milligan said these feedback forms will be read and considered carefully by the search committee.

After all four finalists have visited the UMass campus, the committee will meet and begin preparing their recommendations for the chancellor.

"We'll get the feedback and compile it, and then give the chancellor a list of strengths and weaknesses of each candidate," Milligan said.

While it is ultimately Chancellor Holub's decision as to which of the candidates will be hired, the search committee has attempted to make the application and interview process extremely thorough to aid the chancellor in his choice, Milligan said.

"For a position as important as this, you want to do that with as much information as possible," he said.

Chris Shores can be reached at cshores@student.umass.edu.

Jablonski wants to return home

JABLONSKI from page 1

Jablonski opened the floor for questions. One student asked if she would promote Greek life on campus if elected.

The candidate, who served as the director of Greek affairs during her undergraduate and graduate time at UMass, said she would do her part in supporting fraternities and sororities.

"If the Greek system is viable and managing itself well ... it should be supported," she said.

Two of the students in attendance asked how she would work to promote diversity in student affairs.

"I think it's really important that every area of student affairs has programs and initiatives that address broadly all areas of diversity," she said. "Each area should have their goals and strategies around hiring a diverse staff and looking at their programs to make sure they are meeting the needs of a diverse population."

Jablonski was asked how areas of student conduct and discipline were handled at UNC. The candidate responded by describing a student-run system that handles judicial issues. She said that she would not look to bring that to UMass immediately.

"Each campus has its own culture and traditions," she said. "But I think what would be helpful here is to have a conversation about how to promote more educational sanctions and also how to involve students in the judicial process in a more active way."

Chris Shores can be reached at cshores@student.umass.edu

AIDS IS NOT OVER:
AN EVENING WITH JAMES EARL HARDY
In recognition of
National Black HIV/AIDS Awareness Day

February 8, 2010
7:00 PM
UMASS Amherst
Campus Center
Room 101
A discussion of the Black community's struggle with HIV: What Eazy-E's death can still teach us
The UMass Stonewall Center &
TAPESTRYhealth
CARE WITHIN REACH
tapestryhealth.org 800-696-7752

CAMP DanBee For Girls

Summer Camp Counselor Positions
Must have a love of children, lots of energy and be able to teach one or more of the following activities:
All Team Sports, Tennis, Golf, Waterfront Activities, Pool, Art, Dance, Theatre, Gymnastics, Newspaper, Rocketry & Radio and more.
Great salaries, room & board, travel.
where the spirit is catching
Enjoy a great summer that promises to be unforgettable!
For more information and to apply online
www.campdanbee.com · (800) 392-3752
Interviewers will be at the Summer, Co-op, and Internships Opportunities Fair in the Campus Center on February 11, 2010 from 10:00 am - 3:00 pm.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 8, 2010

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Time to blame the Democrats

Alex Perry

We are constantly told by our elected officials in Washington there are two reasons why Obama's first year in office has not gone as smoothly as many had hoped it would. The first reason is the classic go-to for Democrats: George W. Bush left too big a mess to clean up in one year. That excuse dropped in popularity recently, as most Americans are no longer accepting that as a viable reason for failure a year later. Democrats have been doing what they have wanted for a year now. The successes and failures of this country currently belong to them. As bad as Bush allegedly was as president, he never allowed the nation's debt to get this out of control.

So the new excuse Democrats have been pedaling over the past nine months is to blame Republicans for their own failures whenever something is not accomplished in the Senate or the House of Representatives. They termed Republicans "The Party of No."

They termed Republicans "The Party of No."

They blamed Republicans countless times for the failures of Democrats to pass health care reform, to pass climate change legislation, to close Guantanamo Bay, to end poverty, for money not growing on trees and anything else that many thought would happen if Barack Obama was elected president.

But are Republicans really to blame?

I don't think there is any doubt that Republicans have been "The Party of No" since Obama took office. Republicans haven't supported a single one of Obama, Pelosi or Reid's proposals. But that's not necessarily a bad thing. There are two points to be made here.

The first is the reason why Republicans have voted against every single major piece of legislation Democrats have proposed. Everything Republicans have been asked to vote on have been entirely created by Democrats without any Republican input. Democrats spend all their time behind closed doors creating legislation, then bring it to the floor to have the legislation voted on. Republicans have their own ideas and proposals they would like to have Democrats consider, but to no avail. This is one of the main reasons why Republicans have been voting "no" on everything. If you were expecting Republicans to endorse Democratic proposals of reckless spending bills and government-run healthcare, you probably also expected Obama to turn lead into gold.

The second point is that it should not matter what Republicans think. Democrats have majorities in both the House of Representatives and the Senate, on top of the fact that they occupy the White House. In the Senate, Democrats hold 59 of the 100 seats, and up until recently held 60. In the House of Representatives, Democrats hold 256 of the 435 seats. What does this mean? It means Democrats can pass anything they want without a single Republican vote, even after the election of Scott Brown.

That is why Democrats have the opportunity to conduct themselves in the manner they have during this past year. They can write all the legislation they want without any Republican input because they don't need any Republican input. They can pass literally anything and there is nothing Republicans can do about it.

That's why I am tired of hearing Democrats complain about Republicans causing the lack of action in Washington this past year. Obama insisted during this State of the Union address that "neither party should delay or obstruct every single bill just because they can." But that is not what is going on. Republicans are not "obstructing" legislation as the president wants us to believe. They don't have the votes.

The reason things haven't been getting done in Washington is because the Democrats are unorganized and the American public has stood up and said "no" to many of the reckless decisions the government made during the past year.

Just look at what has been going on recently. The shady "backroom deals" we hear about to gain votes for healthcare reform have not been struck between Democrats and Republicans; they have been struck between Democrats and Democrats. Democrats haven't had to bribe Republicans because they don't need Republicans – they have each other.

For the most part, we can just stop talking about Republicans because they are currently irrelevant to the national scene. The only thing stopping Democrats right now are Democrats and the American public. Democrats know it is political suicide to vote for legislation that the American public does not want – which is virtually everything they have been proposing – so they either need to get Republican support so they don't take all the blame for bad legislation or they want to avoid voting on it all together. That is why Democrats are trying to force Republicans to vote for their bills and why they want to form bipartisan committees so they can raise taxes. They are looking for political cover from their own ridiculous proposals.

This "Party of No" business is just a political game Democrats are playing in order to save themselves in the upcoming elections. In reality, Republicans are not responsible for the failures of this administration over the past year. Democrats are.

Alex Perry is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at amperry@student.umass.edu.

No jeans, no sense, no service

Eli Gottlieb

Normally when I get told off for wearing the wrong clothes, I look around and wonder how the hell I found myself in a costume party. So it came as a bit of a surprise when one of the new Recreation Center's 200 student workers interrupted my tricep pushdowns to tell me about the dress code.

I'd been away for a semester after all, and to me the Recreation Center really is as shiny and new as it looks. Of course, I started wondering after my fellow student had duly notified me of the Recreation Center policies, why I couldn't use the new workout rooms in the same clothes that I had always worn to work out in the old gyms.

So I did a bit of investigation.

As it turns out, the Rec Center's fitness and weights area has a dress code better suited to Pleasantville than to the lifestyles of University of Massachusetts students.

The regulations on their website require that, "Proper exercise attire … footwear, upper and lower body clothing must be worn at all times." When it comes to shoes, you have to wear sneakers, and they can't be the sneakers that you just wear around in daily life – those are dirty.

Apparently, my biking boots looked prohibited enough to draw my warden's notice, but in his final judgment seemed okay. The regulations go on to say that we have to wear decently modest shirts that don't show the "full torso" before reaching their real sticking point: pants. The website specifies that, "Jeans and pants with buttons, metal zippers, metal rivets, belts and belt loops are not permitted. These items accelerate wear and tear on the equipment and could pose a risk of injury."

Ah. There was my problem. I wore jeans to work out in because I didn't have the lugging capacity to bring extra pants with me to the gym, and I didn't have the time in the middle of my class schedule to trek up to the Orchard Hill Residential Area, get sweatpants, walk to the Rec Center, change, work out, change back, return the sweatpants to my dorm room and get to class.

That's what's important, after all: making sure everyone not merely refrains from damaging the equipment while exercising, but also looks good for UMass brochures.

Sure, my jeans didn't have metal rivets or studs that could cut into the cushions of the weight-lifting machines, but according to the Rec Center's dress code, the button, metal zipper and belt loops will cause enough damage on their own – despite my not humping the exercise equipment.

Of course, one would think UMass would enforce these rules with an eye towards practicality, the same way they enforce the rules on what we can keep in our dorm rooms.

They always did it that way in Totman and Boyden gymnasiums, where I used to exercise. However, my first-hand experience at the Rec Center indicated otherwise.

Apparently, the Rec Center administration actually expects students from five out of six living areas on the eastern and northern edges of campus – and those who live off-campus – to walk through the day slinging an extra bag of gym clothes on our already-bent backs, just to make sure we conform to their views of proper gym attire. In addition to walking all the way across campus to the Rec Center in the far west, where the Elves and Valar dwell undying in the Mullins Center.

Skeptical of my own irritation, I decided to talk to the person running all this. Senior associate director of campus recreation Jeanne L. Orr happily enlightened me. She told me, "There's always a dress code in a fitness facility. … You want participants in exercise attire."

People are exercising, that's what they should be wearing."

She explained that the dress code avoids clothing that damages equipment, like my jeans with the metal bits at the crotch. When I asked about what the new Rec Center meant for those of us living in the east whom always used Totman, she told me hundreds of pounds of equipment were moved from the Totman and Boyden to the new Rec Center. "There's no reason to keep open a small satellite facility," she said.

Finally pounding the last nail in the coffin of my frustration, Orr told me about the cost/benefit analysis that justified closing the old Totman gym, and noting that in any case, "It makes it difficult, I'll be honest with you, to adequately supervise patrons in locations when they're in other places."

It all makes sense now. We had to build a new Rec Center because otherwise our budget would go to waste, and we had to close the old ones because we just didn't have the budget for them. Besides, closing the more convenient gyms makes it easier to control how exercisers dress.

That's what's important, after all – making sure everyone not merely refrains from damaging the equipment while exercising, but also looks good for UMass brochures. Of course, campus recreation isn't at all unreasonable.

If I can't lug extra clothes all the way across campus and back every time I want to work out, I can always rent a locker for the semester at the low, low prices of $20 for a half-locker and $30 for a whole locker, so I'll just pony up the cash and pose for the marketing photos – complete with sweatpants, white T-shirt, buzz-cut hair and vacuous smile.

Eli Gottlieb is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at egottlie@student.umass.edu.

Five Reasons Why the Super Bowl Sucks

1) You can watch just the ads on YouTube now.

2) It's only a game.

3) Wing breath all day Monday.

4) Is more testosterone–fueled agression really a good thing?

5) Why is it called a "bowl" if the game is played in a stadium?

America's only gay, left–handed Jewish congressman is frankly a sham

Dmitry Shapiro

I have to admit that I can finally pity myself for being classified as a discriminated minority. In full disclosure, I am left handed, Jewish and a Republican on the University of Massachusetts campus, though I'm not homosexual or a 31-year veteran of the U.S. House of Representatives. As Rep. Barney Frank's new biography "Barney Frank: The Story of America's Only Left-Handed, Gay, Jewish Congressman," by Stuart E. Weisberg published by the University of Massachusetts Press – would make you believe, being a white, Harvard-educated, millionaire, left-handed Jew poses significant challenges for those running for political office.

As you might be aware, Barney Frank, from Massachusetts 4th district, the hilariously gerrymandered district that stretches from South Boston, Brookline and Newton, to New Bedford and the heel of the Cape, is scheduled to make an appearance at UMass on the 16th, promoting his biography and addressing students on campus. There is no doubt, Congressman Frank will be as condescending to UMass students who politely disagree with his extremist agenda as he has done on numerous occasions in the past to his constituents.

There are a lot of opinions about Barney Frank out there. He is without a doubt one of the most well-known members of the House. His diatribes appear in all forms of media, not only in Massachusetts but throughout the country. "Barney Frank is a masterful legislator and one of the great political minds of our generation. His style – principled but pragmatic, tenacious yet fair, and always brilliant and funny – has won him the respect of his colleagues on both sides of the aisle. Stuart Weisberg's lively biography of Barney Frank documents all of these extraordinary qualities, and the many ways in which he enriches our democracy."

This quote from House Speaker Nancy Pelosi is only one of many brown-nosing comments that could be found online. I beg to differ. Aside from the socialist Independent Sen. Bernie Sanders or the false Republican libertarian Congressman Ron Paul, few across any aisles, whether in the Senate or the House, would consider Barney Frank more seriously than even vilely ineffective Sen. Al Franken, whose election is the product of a comedic act gone horribly wrong.

Though well known, a majority of Barney Frank's attention is received because of his rude and ridiculous comments to his constituents and the press. As prevalent as liberal elitism is among the Democrats, Barney Frank has a vast record of contempt for voters even within his own constituency.

Though, in my opinion, his attack on the Lyndon LaRouche supporter, who compared President Obama to Hitler, was warranted, it should be an important ethical rule for politicians not to insult any regular constituent, no matter how stupid their question might be. Brushing off and moving to the next comment would have been the more prudent thing to do.

This University does not need any more liberal elitism and condescension, though I doubt anyone will question or protest his visit.

Though back on topic, Barney Frank is a minority, because he is openly gay in Congress. The peculiarity of this strikes me because it seems that there are more gay politicians being discovered in the Republican Party than those that get elected by the party of tolerance: the Democrats. This makes Barney Frank one of, if not the most, influential gay politicians. This seems to give Frank the idea that he is the sole possessor of the bully pulpit in regards to homosexual civil rights activism.

Because of his extraordinary disdain for voters, he is one of the leaders in the charge to make gay rights a Supreme Court issue, which in itself is logical due to it's effect on the African American Civil Rights movement in numerous landmark cases.

But as recent events have shown, it is political suicide to make voters seem like their power to decide is being taken away from them. Scott Brown's recent victory is representative of the concerns of many voters that the Democrats pushing health care in Congress have disenfranchised them, pushing a mediocre policy based solely on their political capital. In today's America, voter influence is extremely important, as demonstrated by the power of political TV and radio pundits along with referendums such as California's Prop 8. The people don't like being bypassed in the political process. Even opponents of Prop 8 realized the battle could only be won with public support. Prop 8 opponents used celebrities to campaign for their cause. Barney Frank's abrasiveness and unwillingness to refer to the voters will invariably cause the LGBT (lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender) movement to fail if he succeeds in setting their agenda.

It is surprising to me that a man with such a shady past could be considered a viable politician on the national level. During the 1980s, Barney Frank housed a prostitute at his Washington residence. It was later discovered that the prostitute, Steve Gobie, ran his business from Frank's house. In an investigation, Barney Frank claimed he did not know about the business, and kicked Gobie out when he discovered what was happening.

Congress bought this argument, although Frank was reprimanded for using his congressional office – and stationary – to influence the state of Virginia to forgive Gobie's parking tickets. Not knowing that a prostitution ring is being run from your own house requires, if I may quote another prominent Democrat, Hillary Clinton, "a willing suspension of disbelief."

This University does not need any more liberal elitism and condescension, though I doubt anyone will question or protest his visit. The Republican Club is completely decimated by poor leadership – while they may have protested again as such a speaker in previous years, they'll probably stand idly by. It seems that the club has lost all its will for activism, aside from the invitation of David Horowitz to speak on Feb. 23, which I hope does not fall through like the rest of their events this year. The club has recently been liberal enough that it was joked on UMass' WMUA radio station that Charlie Felder, current UMass Democrats president, took over for the Republican Club.

Dmitriy Shapiro is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at dvhapiro@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS LIVING

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 8, 2010

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Yes set for NoHo

By Justin Gagnon
Collegian Staff

Formed in 1968, London-based band Yes has passed the test of time and is now one of the most well-known classic rock bands in the world. The Calvin Theater will host the 42-year-old band tonight at 8 p.m.

The faces in the band have all but remained the same, however. Over the years, Yes has seen a handful of changes to their personnel, but none bigger than the loss of their original lead singer, Jon Anderson. Anderson, whose unique and beautiful voice made the band what it is today, was forced to give up singing all together due to acute respiratory failure.

Just as other classic rock bands like Boston and Journey have, Yes recruited the young Benoit David to replace Anderson. David had been the lead singer from a popular Yes tribute band, the Canadian-based Close to the Edge, as well as the band Mystery.

Anderson is currently scheduled for four solo concerts in Canada later this spring.

Aside from David, the band also has a new keyboardist for their latest tour. Oliver Wakeman has been manning the plastic piano, an essential piece of the progressive rock scene. He is replacing Rick Wakeman, his father, in the band that made him famous. Rick Wakeman has been an on-and-off member of the group since its formation.

Steve Howe, who also joined and left the band quite frequently over the years, is up front on the lead guitar. The only member to stay with the band all along, Chris Squire, is on bass. Alongside Anderson, Squire was the co-founder of the band.

Alan White, who has been with the band for the majority of its existence, remains the band's drummer.

While the band has not produced any new noteworthy work since 1988, Yes has quietly become one of the longest lasting progressive rock bands in history. In January 1984, "Owner of a Lonely Heart" topped out as the number one song on the Billboard Top 100 (just ahead of "Karma Chameleon" by Culture Club). Their other hits include "I've Seen All Good People," "Roundabout" and "Long Distance Runaround."

Yes is in the middle of their U.S. Winter 2010 Tour, and will be making stops in big cities like New York City, N.Y., Chicago, Ill., Dallas, Texas, and New Orleans, LA. According to the Setlist Wiki, they ended the last decade on tour playing mostly hits from their heyday including the aforementioned songs as well as others such as "Starship Trooper." For whatever reason, however, they chose to skip "Long Distance Runaround."

Yes will be playing tonight at the Calvin Theater in Northampton, Mass. The show starts at 8 p.m. and tickets range from $75 to $35. Tickets are still available on the Iron Horse Entertainment Group's website, iheg.com.

Justin Gagnon can be reached at jtgagnon@dailycollegian.com.

Progressive classic rock band Yes plays at the Calvin Theater tonight in Northampton. The band is known for its early hits such as "Owner of a Lonely Heart," "Roundabout" and "I've Seen All Good People."

'35 Shots of Rum' buzzworthy worldwide

As part of the 17th annual Massachusetts Multicultural Film Festival, "35 Shots of Rum" screened at the Isenberg School of Management. The French film was introduced by UMass professor, Patrick Mensah.

By Rachel Dougherty
Collegian Staff

"35 Shots of Rum" was shown Wednesday night at the Isenberg School of Management as part of the 17th annual Massachusetts Multicultural Film Festival, "Cinematic Cities". It was introduced by UMass professor Patrick Mensah of the French and Francophone studies department.

"35 Shots of Rum" is a lovely, emotive film from French director Claire Denis, capturing the close but deteriorating relationship between quiet widower Lionel (Alex Descas) and his daughter, Josephine (Mati Diop).

The movie opens with Lionel, the silent, beautiful protagonist, staring sad-eyed out the window of the metro on the way home to his equally beautiful and sad-eyed daughter. Lionel and Josephine live in a high-rise apartment complex on the outskirts of Paris. Lionel works as a metro driver and Josephine is a university student who works part-time at a video store. Lionel spends his nights drinking rum with coworkers at the metro – he is renowned for his ability to hold his liquor and claims to be able to hold 35 shots of rum, a feat he will perform only for a specific, unmentioned occasion.

Josephine and her classmates spend their days discussing social revolt and the works of Frantz Fanon and Joseph Stiglitz.

Completing the little family are their neighbors Gabrielle (Nicole Dogue), a chain-smoking taxi cab driver, and Noe (Gregoire Colin), a handsome French slob who lives alone with his cat and his dead parents' furniture.

"35 Shots of Rum" is less a piece of cinematic entertainment and more like moving art – said, beautiful people gaze at each other in longing and love against the gritty background of the Parisian cityscape. Each is tied to the apartment by some personal tragedy – the loss of Josephine's mother, the death of Noe's parents, the unmentioned but palpable pain in Gabrielle's eyes. Gabrielle loves Lionel and Noe pines for Josephine, but neither is able to act on their feelings or to penetrate the closeness between Josephine and Lionel. The bond between father and daughter is the heart of the movie – the closeness that enabled them to survive the loss of Josephine's mother now keeps them trapped together in the apartment. One of the more poignant scenes in the film shows Josephine caring for Lionel after a night of heavy drinking. He takes her hands in his and says "just know that you [illegible] Josephine brushes him off, [illegible] is happy with him. [illegible] separation of parent [illegible] from [illegible] core drama of the film.

The [illegible] punctuated with odd [illegible] humor that surprised the au[illegible] daughter. A well-placed [illegible] Lionel works both on a co[illegible] level and to convey the [illegible] alism. The death of Noe's cat [illegible] has the catalyst for action in th[illegible] After finding the cat dead on [illegible] living room floor, Noe tosses it in a trash-bag with its favorite squeaky toy and announces that it's time to move. There is no reason to stay anymore, he explains, "now that the cat is dead." Noe's announcement shocks the family out of their insular relationships, forcing Josephine to admit her discontent in her relationship with her father.

The film is ultimately a quiet, artistic rendering of the bond within families, and the bittersweet goodbye between a parent and child. The film is quiet, but not dull. If certain audience members were snoring halfway through, it's probably safe to assume it was the demands of college life, and not the quality of the film, that prompted their narcolepsy.

Rachel Dougherty can be reached at rdoughera@student.umass.edu.

Profile: Diane Sawyer, gilt–edged newswoman

By Mary McNamara
Los Angeles Times

Quietly taking over as anchor from Charles Gibson at "ABC World News" at the end of last year, Diane Sawyer brought with her not only an impressive resume, an excellent name-recognition rating and some pretty cool new graphics, but also a remarkably counterintuitive manner. In a world dominated by YouTube moments and professional hysterics, Sawyer exudes an alarming level of elegance. From the moment she opened her show – "Good evening and it is so good to be here with you tonight" – it was clear that she was not going to so much report the news as preside over a series of conversations about the news, conversations she simply must share with you, her personally invited viewer.

And if ratings are any indication, Sawyer may be able to succeed where Katie Couric hasn't quite, blending the undeniable if troubling trend toward emo-journalism while still commanding the gravitas necessary for a serious news organization. (Both trail NBC News' Brian Williams in the ratings.)

If nothing else, Sawyer's early success proves that Americans are not as disgusted with the media, or cultural, elite as they seem – from the moment she left her memoir-writing job with former President Richard Nixon to become the first female host of "60 Minutes," Sawyer, with her patrician good looks, has been groomed to be a star.

Even so, the folks at ABC were taking a bit of a gamble when they hired Sawyer to compete with Couric at CBS. While the two share a gender and some job history similarities – Couric still contributes pieces as a correspondent on "60 Minutes" and both came off successful morning show runs – they are in tone and mien as different as night and day, or Anderson Cooper and Wolf Blitzer.

Given to laughter and wide, dazzling smiles, Couric is 12 years younger than Sawyer and trades on a high-energy likability often characterized as perkiness, a word no thinking person would ever use to describe Sawyer. Where Couric has developed a brand of bouncy determination, a seasoned extension of the intrepid girl reporter, Sawyer has always been the Katharine Hepburn of the newsroom, classy in white collared shirts, radiating a passionate but still clearly intellectual concern for what is happening in the world around her.

Certainly during her first month in the big chair she's had reason to be concerned – the Christmas airplane bombing attempt, the health care crisis, the earthquake in Haiti, the upset in Massachusetts all demanded of its television reporters and newscasters a heightened sense of urgency, sorrow and exasperation, which Sawyer is well-equipped to deliver. Interviewing President Barack Obama, she used the manner of a worried friend and sympathetic fellow public figure to soften the audacity of asking him "With all this coming at you, have you ever thought that one term might be enough?" (A question the equally socially flexible president handled with ease and did not, of course, answer.)

It doesn't always work perfectly. Even when she's reporting good or funny news – the crime rate is down, men are now marrying for money – Sawyer appears troubled by what she's having to tell you. She's a big head-bobber, with a slightly sideways approach to the camera that she may have borrowed from the late Lady Diana, and though she never actually frowns (one suspects her forehead has lost the physical ability to actually frown), she often seems to be frowning. Her eyes crinkle up and her lovely alto voice climbs a bit just to let viewers know that she is not just a heartless newscaster reporting the news but also a fellow citizen reacting to it.

That is, of course, part of the current job description.

The granite jaws and unflappable stoicism that make Walter Cronkite and Eric Sevareid giants doesn't play so well these days. We want our newscasters, even our big-time newscasters, more accessible and conversational, still objective of course, but asking questions that we might ask ourselves, rather than working off some inflexible template acquired at journalism school.

If the news is bad, or frustrating, or puzzling, we want them to show that too. It isn't enough to ask the White House correspondent how Congress is reacting to the Republican victory in the Massachusetts Senate race and leave it at that. A good TV anchor nowadays is like a high-powered hostess, perpetually drawing conversation from some well informed but possibly shy guest – of course Capitol Hill is in a dither and the president must be beside himself, but you're right there. What on Earth are people saying?

Sadly enough, this shift in tone is why we finally have two women hosting the nightly news (Well, that and Oprah Winfrey, who is responsible for so many shifts in popular culture.) Women are still perceived as being, in general, more emotional, more conversational than men (and woe to the woman who, like Hillary Rodham Clinton, does not conform). Increasingly, we expect a kitchen-table tone to our news, an intimacy that a generation ago would have been considered too domestic to be smart.

Not that Sawyer is domestic, far from it. She may be conversational, but in a way far more White House dinner party than kitchen table. With her classic features and low pitched voice, she emanates an intellectual pedigree that she actually possesses. Sawyer has indeed covered wars and interviewed most living heads of state, she is married to director Mike Nichols, she does hang out with Meryl Streep. A living breathing member of the much-derided media elite, Sawyer still tries her best to seem like one of us, her voice near breaking as she stands on the tarmac in Port-au-Prince wondering when someone was going to actually deliver all that food and water to the Haitians.

She isn't one of us, of course: the Everywoman points all go to Couric, which is what makes Sawyer's higher ratings so interesting. Like Anderson Cooper, Sawyer is smart and seemingly sincere but sleek too, removed from the mainstream by her own physical perfection and gilded life.

In studio interviews especially, Sawyer often appears almost incandescent, bathed in a golden light achieved, one supposes, by precise placement of reflective panels and the miracle of digital technology. Like all superstar journalists she is, at best, an equal draw to her one-on-one interviews and at worst, she outshines her subject, which may have been OK on "Good Morning America" but is a bit more alarming on the nightly "World News."

All of which makes Sawyer a fascinating bridge between the new world order and the old. It nothing else, she is a striking and welcome contrast to the often instantly constructed personalities of younger newscasters – she hasn't changed much since her days at "60 Minutes" and it seems to be working just fine.

Amid all the fear and messiness as the old media surrenders, spitting and flailing, to the new, Diane Sawyer is a beacon, proof that you do not always have to stoop to conquer.

Midfielder Jackie Lyons looks for an open teammate in UMass's contest with Northwestern last season. The junior scored a goal and added two shots in the 18-6 loss on Saturday night.

Florence saves 13 in loss, one shy of 200

W LACROSSE from page 10

38-second span brought the lead down to five goals.

UMass' late surge was later erased as the Wildcats notched seven more goals to close out the half. But with 29 seconds remaining before the break, freshman Lauren Terracino hit a rocket into the net to give the Minutewomen something to cheer about.

Coming out of the half motivated, the Minutewomen made progress against Northwestern, scoring goals in a back-to-back affair with the Wildcats.

San Diego native Merritt Cosgrove committed four fouls during the contest but also netted an unassisted goal for UMass in front of her family, who watched along with the 1,315 fans in attendance.

The Maroon and White did not show its inexperience, as sophomores Jesse O'Donnell and Ryan Gorman scored two of the final three goals of the game.

Despite taking a loss, goalkeeper Katie Florence had thirteen saves against Northwestern. She is now just one save shy of the 200 mark in her career.

"[Florence] kept us in the game from the start. She stood in [the goal] tall, kept us in the game," Venechanos said.

Unfortunately for UMass, the 12 goal deficit was too much to handle. Over the 60 minutes of play, the Wildcats outshot their opponents 37-18.

The biggest issue for the Minutewomen came from their inability to catch a break against Northwestern, as they were dominated in nearly every category of the game. The five-time defending national champions also shattered UMass in draw controls (21-to-5) and groundballs (21-to-11).

"Draw controls killed us," Venechanos said. "We usually make our goals form 50-50 balls and draw controls."

Another issue for UMass was that it constantly found itself in foul trouble. The Minutewomen committed 19 fouls in the opening half alone. With Cosgrove's four, sophomore Riley Perry's five and O'Donnell's six, UMass couldn't keep the play moving. All of these individual high-foul numbers led to a 34 game total for UMass.

"We're thinking of practice today, we're focused on one day at a time," Venechanos said. "We're going to work on going hard, just going hard and having accountability of our own actions once we enter our next game."

The Minutewomen will return to their home field on Feb. 17 looking for redemption as they take on in-state rival Holy Cross.

Herb Scribner can be reached at hscribne@student.umass.edu.

Action Ahmad

Jawad Ahmad doesn't wait for success to find him.
Every day, he's showing the world what he's made of.
Every day, he's feeding his life, his career and his future.

Feed your future at www.pwc.tv

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

waterhouseCoopers LLP. All rights reserved. "PricewaterhouseCoopers" refers to PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP (a Delaware limited liability partnership) or, as the context requires, the PricewaterhouseCoopers global network or other member firms of the network, each of which is a separate and independent legal entity. We are proud to be an Affirmative Action and Equal Opportunity Employer.

CHECK OUT
THE DAILY COLLEGIAN SPORTS BLOG

http://blog.masslivc.com/dailycollegiansports

SPRING BREAK
JAMAICA
Once you go, you know.

Spring Break comes to life...
Live Concerts
Awesome VIP Parties
Beautiful Beaches
Scenic Cliff Jumping
Spectacular Sunsets

Book Your Trip Today! Contact:

SUN SPLASH TOURS
www.sunsplashtours.com
1.800.426.7710

STS STUDENT TRAVEL SERVICES
1.800.648.4849
www.ststravel.com

Meyers, Dainton hit hard by Eagles attack

HOCKEY from page 10

in the opening period.

The Eagles, however, beat Paul Dainton four times in the first – all while at even strength – prompting Cahoon to sit the senior in favor of Dan Meyers for the remainder of the game.

The assault started just under five minutes into the period as Brian Gibbons slid the puck past the net to an open Joe Whitney for the first goal of the game.

After Paul Carey made it 2-0 at the 13:20 mark, J. Whitney notched his second of the period a minute later with Cam Atkinson and Gibbons getting the assists. Gibbons finished the night with four assists.

With 3:04 left in the period, Boston College brought the early lead to four with an unassisted goal. After picking the puck out of the air in the neutral zone, the Eagles' Jimmy Hayes skated down the right side of the Minutemen's zone before pulling the puck back in front of Dainton and then sliding it past the goaltender.

"It was just a series of bonehead plays and lack of energy if you will and competitiveness to fight our way back into the game," Cahoon said. "The game broke so early their way that I kept telling myself if we can get ourselves righted we can poke away at this thing and there is lots of time left to make a game of it but we never righted ourselves."

Meyers had a better second period then Dainton did in the first, but by a slim margin.

After holding the Eagles scoreless for nearly the first 15 minutes of the period, the younger Whitney brother, Steve, extended BC's lead to five. With 2:19 left, Chris Kreider notched his sixth goal of the season, and the Eagles' sixth of the game, off of the third assist of the game.

Up to that point in the game, all six of BC's goals came at even strength, but with less than a second on the clock in the period, Meyer's was beat for the third time in the period with the Eagles on the power play. After a roughing call on Marc Concannon, Cam Atkinson gave the Eagles a 7-0 lead heading into the final frame.

"They were remarkably determined and the only way that you're going to be able to compete and beat a team like that is to be incredibly determined yourself," Cahoon said. "We showed a real lack of commitment to that end."

Jeffrey R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@dailycollegian.com.

Watson named nominee for Hockey Humanitarian Award

WATSON from page 10

caught on the wrong side of the puck."

Though the play in between the pipes didn't help the Minutemen, Cahoon didn't place all of the blame for the seven goals on his goaltenders, Paul Dainton and Dan Meyers.

"The first four goals that Paul gave up, three of them were okay," Cahoon said. "The only one that was bad was the fourth one where the guy came in and Paul had a chance to stand up and play him aggressively. He instead ended up sitting down and the puck went under him. Meyers played well until [BC] knocked a few in, but I can't blame it on the goaltending yet."

The goaltending situation on Friday was similar to the one in UMass' 5-4 loss to then-No. 9 Quinnipiac on Nov. 28. In that game, Meyers started but allowed three scores in the first frame. Dainton replaced him beginning in the second period and allowed the Minutemen to fight back to send the game into overtime.

Against the Eagles, however, the roles were reversed. After allowing four goals in the first frame, Dainton was benched for Meyers. This time, though, the Minutemen couldn't assemble a comeback

WATSON LEADING ON AND OFF ICE

Being a captain means providing leadership and direction on and off the ice. Senior Brett Watson has done just that this season, leading the Minutemen to a third-place standing in the Hockey East and a national ranking.

Despite his team coming out flat-footed and seemingly undetermined against BC, Cahoon did find one positive in his team after Friday's loss.

"Brett Watson was typical Brett Watson all night long, and if we had 19 other players that play as hard as he does, we may be talking a different game. It's interesting because he was sick in bed all week, came out of bed [Thursday] to play [Friday], and he was still our most determined player."

Off the ice, Watson plays an instrumental role in the Big Brothers Big Sisters volunteer program. He also helps his teammates with volunteer projects in surrounding communities.

For his efforts, Watson is one of 18 nominees for the Hockey Humanitarian Award for being college hockey's "best citizen."

Watson is a three-time Hockey East Academic All-Conference selection, a dean's list student and a three-time recipient of the UMass Hockey Team's Unsung Hero Award – an honor that goes to the player who contributes the most to the team, but does not get the recognition others do.

Jay Asser can be reached at jasser@student.umass.edu.

THE CULINARY INSTITUTE OF AMERICA
The Culinary Institute of America at Greystone
Napa Valley, California

Just 30 weeks in the legendary Napa Valley.
That's all it takes to put your career on the fast track.

- Experience a multi-sensory approach to wines, spirits, and specialty beverages in state-of-the-art tasting classrooms.
- Build a deeper knowledge of food and beverage pairing and front-of-the-house operations.
- Establish a valuable specialization in wine and beverage management.
- Earn both a CIA certificate and a Certified Wine Professional™ (C.W.P.) credential.

Learn More and Apply Now!
www.ciaprochef.com/winecertificate
1-800-CULINARY (285-4627) | admissions@culinary.edu

The CIA at Greystone is a branch of the CIA, Hyde Park, NY. ©2010 The Culinary Institute of America

Career Services

SUMMER, CO-OP & INTERNSHIP FAIR

ALL MAJORS
THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 11TH
2010
CAMPUS CENTER
AUDITORIUM, 10AM - 3PM

HIGH TECH, CAMP, AND LIBERAL ARTS EMPLOYERS FOR UNDERGRAD AND GRAD STUDENTS
FOR MORE INFO CALL 413-545-2224
WWW.UMASS.EDU/CAREERS

UMassAmherst CAREER SERVICES STUDENT AFFAIRS & CAMPUS LIFE

Minutewomen move into 9th place with win over Fordham

W BASKETBALL from page 10

"This game, I really wanted to be more of a defensive presence," Watson said. "Last game, I was there but I really wasn't taking any charge or getting any blocks."

Fordham falls out of a tie with the Minutewomen in the A-10 standings, and now has a record of 8-16 overall and 2-7 in the conference.

As a team, UMass had the advantage, 26-16, of points scored in the paint over Fordham.

Kristina Danella was also a big scorer for the Minutewomen. In 36 minutes, Danella was second in scoring with 16 points and added six rebounds.

UMass found itself in a very unusual position with a double-digit lead at halftime in the Mullins Center. Coach Dacko had the team prepare as if the game were on the road – foregoing the pre-game meal and usual home pre-game events.

"I think that we were used to the usual stuff, but the fact that we did something different kind of helped us," Watson said. "We need different looks every now and then, and we need to stay focused until the tournament."

The Minutewomen also had the rebounding advantage, 42-23, over Fordham, contributing to plenty of second-chance baskets down low in the first half.

With the exception of Megan Zullo and Kim Benton, UMass' offense was in rhythm. The Minutewomen shot 40 percent from the field, but went back to their old ways, hitting 6-of-14 shots from beyond the arc.

"I think [Zullo] is pressing a little bit and [Benton] got ahead of herself a few times," Dacko said. "We've got to keep our composure, and shouldn't be turning the ball over 16 times to a Fordham team that did not put a lot of pressure on us."

Zullo was 1-of-7 from the field, but did not let her scoring drought get to her. She applied tough defense on the Rams' frontcourt, recording three steals, and also dished out seven assists in the win.

UMass was up by 15 points with two minutes, six seconds in the game, but the Rams did not give up, and through fouling, they cut to within 10 at game's end.

Neil Carroll can be reached at ncarrol@student.umass.edu.

Watson scores 21, leads UM

Danella adds 16 as frontcourt dominates play against Rams

BY STEVE LEVINE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts women's basketball team delivered a strong performance in its 60-50 win over Fordham on Saturday.

The win represented the first at the Mullins Center since Nov. 22, when the Minutewomen defeated Villanova, 55-47.

UMass looked to its frontcourt to provide most of the scoring, which has been the case for most of the season.

UMass freshman center Jasmine Watson was overwhelming throughout the contest, netting a career-high 21 points, while adding eight rebounds, three blocks and an assist.

Watson's 21 points came on 9-of-12 shooting, while six of her eight rebounds were offensive. Beside her was sophomore forward Kristina Danella, who scored 16 points of her own. Danella hit three 3-pointers and added six rebounds.

Overall, 37 of the 60 points UMass scored came from Watson and Danella. Their persistent scoring allowed the Minutewomen to build a nine-point lead in the first half, which they didn't relinquish.

BACKCOURT SUPPORT

On 1-11 shooting, the UMass guards did not provide much of the scoring for the Minutewomen. However, they did find their teammates in the right situations.

Redshirt junior Megan Zullo led both teams in assists with seven, with senior teammates Kim Benton and Diatiema Hill adding five and four, respectively. In total, the three players totaled 16 assists on seven turnovers, which made up for their combined 2-16 shooting from the field.

In the end, the backcourt stuck with what was working – scoring from their forwards. UMass' 19 assists in the game bests its seasonal average by six.

BENCH EFFICIENCY

With more than half UMass' 60 points coming from Watson and Danella, the Minutewomen needed scoring from somewhere else – which they received from the bench.

The UMass reserves owned a chunk of the scoring, registering 16 points on 5-10 shooting. They went 3-of-4 from both the free-throw line and from 3-point range.

UMass is first in the conference in 3-point field goals made, with 144. Duquesne ranks second in 3s, with 133. Everybody on the bench converted one 3-pointer except for sophomore center Nicole Jones, who scored five points.

Overall, the Minutewomen shot 6-of-14 from beyond the arc, which is a large part of its offense.

UMass won an important game by executing in various aspects. Its point scoring forwards scored, its backcourt assisted and the bench shot efficiently from the field. The combination worked towards giving UMass a win on its home court, something it hadn't experienced since late November.

Steve Levine can be reached at slevine@student.umass.edu

Gurley pours in 15 late points for UMass, but early deficit too much to overcome

M BASKETBALL from page 10

some good signs by some different guys, and if you don't turn the ball over 17 times or 21 times for the game, and go 17-for-29 from the free-throw line, I think you at least have a chance to be in the ball game, against a really good Rhode Island team," Kellogg said.

Harris' play started at point guard, as the Rams had a press defense that caused a number of turnovers for the Minutemen.

"Its funny – when he presses less and doesn't try to score, he scores more, and he did that in the second half against Xavier and in the second half [here]," Kellogg said. "He's starting to nestle into that role as the leader of this team. Unfortunately we're pretty far into the season, but I think we can make a late run from here and see if we can do some things."

Harris scored 15 points in the second half and did not turn the ball over in the final 20 minutes of the game.

The Rams were led by Akeem Richmond, who scored 19 points off the bench for URI, while Lamonte Ulmer added 17 on 7-of-8 shooting. URI scored 19 points off of turnovers, while the Minutemen converted 11, and the Rams scored 16 points on fast breaks.

"I guess the stats don't lie, they pretty much tell the story of the game," Kellogg said.

The Minutemen have lost three-straight and will take on Duquesne Thursday, Feb. 11 in Pittsburgh, Pa.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu.

Anthony Gurley looks to dribble past a Xavier defender last week. The junior scored 15 points in the last 3:45 of Saturday's game against URI.

Shake the Blues Release Your Inner Child!
FREE Second Friday featuring
Kin & Kindred. Reflections on Childhood
Great FREE live music!
Unit 7 | Northampton | Gronve
SMITH COLLEGE MUSEUM OF ART
Complete program details: www.smith.edu/artmuseum

Valen's Day Speci
$20.00
$15.00
$10.00
E-Mail thecol...@gmail.com or stop ...ce in the Campus Center Basement for placem...t.

Amherst Music House
Three-day Valentine's Day sale
February 11th–13th, 2010
11am–6pm every day
20% off all store merchandise!
(discount excludes items on consignment)
Forget diamonds...music is forever.
AMHERST MUSIC HOUSE
233 N. PLEASANT ST. AMHERST, MA 01002
(413) 549-1728

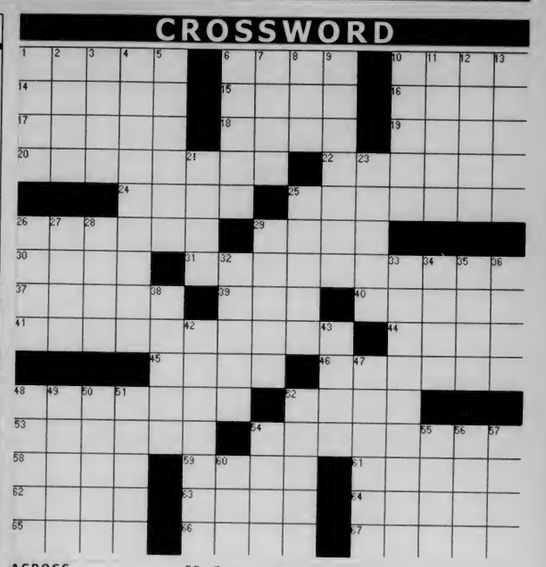
THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
Need to spread the word?
Reach more than 18,000 readers every day!
IT'S CHEAPER THAN YOU THINK!
On-Campus & Local Business Ads for $10 per column inch
R.S.O. Ads for $6.70 per column inch
CONTACT PAMELA:
thecollegian@gmail.com
413-545-3500
or stop by our office in the Campus Center basement

Off The Wall Games
WARHAMMER 40,000
MAGIC The Gathering
Discount role-playing games, Collectible card games (CCGs), Miniature war games and board games, fun for everyone!
Hours: 10-10 Wednesday-Sunday, 12-10 Monday, Closed Thursday - 41 Russell St (Hampton Village Shops) Rt. 9, Hadley 413-586-5451

COMICS

WE WANT

Questions?! Comments?!
E-mail us: comics@dailycollegian.com
Friend us on Facebook: "Collegian Comix"



SUDOKU

	3					5
1			5			9
				6	1	2	3
	9	8			6
		3		4			2
	2		8
			9		6		1
		1	4		7
				3		7	9

PUFFTON VILLAGE
APARTMENTS AVAILABLE
EXCELLENT LOCATION!
1/2 MILE FROM UMASS
SPACIOUS APARTMENTS!
1, 2, & 3 Bedroom Townhouses
ALL RENTS INCLUDE: HEAT, HOT WATER, AND COOKING GAS!
ON SITE LAUNDRY, OFF STREET PARKING.
BASKETBALL AND TENNIS COURTS.
OFFICE HOURS: 8AM TO 4PM MONDAY - FRIDAY
(413) 549-0145
WWW.PUFFTONVILLAGE.COM

CITY FOOTWEAR
Students and Staff of the five Colleges Eligible for 10% of with ID
nike
NEW ERA
Clarks
TIMBERLAND OUTDOOR PERFORMANCE
34 Pleasant Street · Northampton
413.341.5581

CROSSWORD

ACROSS
1. The concentration of attention
6. Mix
10. Wise men
14. Warning
15. Novice
16. Distinctive flair
17. Triangular formation
18. Once again
19. An indefinite period
20. Alone
22. Hairdresser
24. A religious splinter group
25. Performs alone
26. Annoy
29. Harvest
30. Winged
31. Deposed
37. China grass
39. ___-Wan Kenobi
40. Eagle's nest
41. A division of France
44. Taverns
45. Wood fastener
46. Egg dish
48. Drop a hint
52. Affaire d'honneur
53. Except when
54. Expressed without speech
58. Biblical garden
59. Goddess of discord (Greek mythology)
61. Confederate States
62. Beloved
63. Place a load on (archaic)
64. France's longest river
65. Sea eagle
66. Moved fast
67. "Come in!"

DOWN
1. Crazes
2. Margarine
3. A prisoner's room
4. Nettle rash
5. The relative position
6. Begin
7. Small
8. Outrage
9. Dinghy
10. Parisian subway
11. Exculpation
12. Amusements
13. Lifeless
21. As well
23. First Greek letter
25. Small finch
26. Not easy
27. Wings
28. Incline
29. Renegade
32. Upchuck
33. Insurrection
34. Verbal
35. Telegram
36. Where a bird lives
38. Gray sea eagles
42. Bunches of cords fastened at one end
43. See the sights
47. Interfere
48. Soft leather
49. Not over
50. Gather
51. A literary style
52. Drugged
54. Broad
55. Not the entrance
56. A title of address
57. Fortuneteller
60. Blame

SMBC by Zach Weiner smbc-comics.com

The real problem with Communism

Hark! a Vagrant by K. Beaton harkavagrant.com

Pictures for Sad Children

Chainsawsuit by Kris Straub chainsawsuit.com

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"Some of the worst mistakes of my life have been haircuts."
— Jim Morrison

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20 - FEB. 18
It is Monday! This the day where you stay in and watch reruns of Family Feud while painting your nails fuchsia!

pisces FEB. 19 - MAR. 20
Just by reading these horoscopes, you have grown an extra nipple somewhere on your body.

aries MAR. 21 - APR. 19
You handle gift–giving just like Jay Leno. A couple years later, you want all of them back.

taurus APR. 20 - MAY. 20
There is something wrong with the world. Monopoly no longer has anything to do with money. No joke!

gemini MAY. 21 - JUN. 21
You will face a problem that can only be solved by one of Jerry Springer's "final thoughts."

cancer JUN. 22 - JUL. 22
You will not win the lottery with the lucky numbers on the back of your cookie's fortune but you now have your roommate's PIN number.

leo JUL. 23 - AUG. 22
Following in George Forman's footsteps, Mike Tyson will create the human ear-shaped home grill.

virgo AUG. 23 - SEPT. 22
What kind of world would it be if Drew Brees did not look like Tony Montana from Scarface?

libra SEPT. 23 - OCT. 22
Tiger Woods may have lost some of his sponsorships, but he is now partnering with Wheaties to make a new male enhancement drug.

scorpio OCT. 23 - NOV. 21
What is green, blue and only noticeable in the morning? Your Grateful Dead from the bar last night.

sagittarius NOV. 22 - DEC. 21
"Avatar" may be number two this past week but it is still number one to all of those people sticking their hair in places they shouldn't.

capricorn DEC. 22 - JAN. 19
You will be hungry in 15 minutes. No squirrel will be safe.

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necessary. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

Zoar Outdoors is seeking adventuresome people to be summer guides for whitewater rafting and zip-line canopy tours. Join our training program and spend the summer splashing through rapids or zipping through trees. Applicants should be great with people, have a positive attitude and be comfortable working as a team or independently. Application deadline: Feb.15th. Call 800-532-7483 or see www.zoaroutdoor.com/jobs.htm for an application.

A GREAT JOB! Spend your summer in a lakefront cabin in Maine. If you're looking to spend this summer outdoors, have fun while you work, and make lifelong friends, then look no further...CAMP MATAPONI, a residential girls camp in Maine, has female/male summertime openings for Land Sports, Waterfront (samm crafts, skiing, life guarding, WSI, boat drivers), Ropes Course, Tennis, H.B. Riding, Arts & Crafts, Theater, Cooking, Gymnastics, Dance, Videography, Group Leaders and more! Top salaries plus room/board & travel provided. Call us today at 1-561-748-3684 or apply online at www.campmataponi.com

FOR RENT

Center of town 1,2,3 bedrooms; hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for June and September. NO FEES www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 Bedroom Apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug, or Sept. First Come, First Serve. Get Them While They Last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop By Or Call 549-0600

TUTORING SERVICES

Math, Physics, Chemistry, Stats & GRE. Call John 413-584-8643 JBoid42@yahoo.com.

SERVICES

Pregnant? Want to talk? Call birthright 413-549-1906 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 Hour hotline 1-800-550-4900 www.birthright.org

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 8, 2010 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Minutewomen fall to No. 1 Northwestern

By Herb Scribner
Collegian Staff

It was one bittersweet evening for the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team. Despite the sunny shores and warm weather of San Diego, the Minutewomen found themselves in a lot of trouble early on, leading to a 18-6 loss to Northwestern on Saturday night.

"Going into this game, I thought we were prepared, and I thought we did fight back, but it was just a little too late," UMass coach Alexis Venechanos said.

"It wasn't even Northwestern, it was just us," Venechanos said. "I think one of the biggest things I would have done differently is establish an identity. Also being able to execute and finish. Reaction and execution was key."

All left to taste was bitterness for the Maroon and White (0-1) in the opening period, as the No. 1 Wildcats (1-0) completely dominated the early portion of the game by scoring seven goals in the first 16 minutes of play.

"We are disappointed. I think we came out scared in that first 15 minutes," Venechanos said.

Early on, it was all Northwestern. Two minutes into play, sophomore Shannon Smith scored the first goal of the Wildcat's 2010 season (also the first of her six during the game).

Smith's offensive play did not lighten, as she netted a hatrick in the seven opening goals alongside a vivid, active offense that took on a thin and relaxed defense.

The offensive push in the opening two minutes helped spark the Northwestern scoring side even more. Notably, senior Danielle Spencer notched the first of the five goals she scored in the game.

With Smith's three goals and a big offensive push, it was all Wildcats as the team looked to down UMass similarly to how they did in the first round of the NCAA tournament last year. Northwestern outshot the Minutewomen 24-18 in the first half alone.

The Minutewomen resistance showed up after being dominated early. Two goals by senior Jackie Lyons and sophomore Nina Sarcona within a

See W. LACROSSE on page 6

Katie Florence stands ready in goal against Northwestern last season at McGuirk Stadium. The sophomore made 13 saves in UMass' 18-6 loss to the No. 1 Wildcats on Saturday night.

Mullins goes silent in loss

By Jeffrey R. Larnard
Collegian Staff

Despite a sell-out crowd of 8,385 at the Mullins Center Friday night, by the third period only chants from a small section of Boston College fans could be heard ringing through the arena.

A late goal by James Marcou with five minutes, 37 seconds remaining in the game got a cheer out of the few fans remaining for the Massachusetts hockey team, but an almost equally loud response of "what took so long" came from those who made the trip from Boston.

BC	7
UMass	1

By that point, the No. 14 Eagles had already gotten to the No. 14 Minutemen seven times, as they left Amherst for the second time this season with a win, this time a 7-1 victory.

"Well that was a disappointing night," UMass coach Don Cahoon said to open his press conference. "We worked real hard as a program to get to a point where games become really significant and then people respond by coming out and supporting us, and to throw a goose egg up there is really disappointing."

Entering the contest, the two schools were tied in second place in the conference standings with 22 points, but BC (15-8-2, 11-6-2 Hockey East) took a firm grasp on that position with the win, having played one fewer game than the Minutemen. The loss dropped the Minutemen into a tie for third place with Maine, who knocked off first-place New Hampshire on Friday night. While UMass handed the Blackbears a 5-3 loss at the beginning of the season, Maine holds the advantage in the standings now, having played two fewer games.

Even with three power-play chances, including a 5-on-3 advantage for the final minute and a half of the first period, the Minutemen

See HOCKEY on page 7

Sophomore Michael Marcou is hit by Boston College's Barry Almeida in the Eagles' 7-1 win on Friday night. The defensemen had a -4 rating in the loss.

Worst loss in 4 years for UM

Watson lone positive, on and off the sheet

By Jay Asser
Collegian Staff

The 7-1 loss to Boston College on Friday was something the Massachusetts hockey team already endured. It was over four years ago and to the same team.

The last time UMass was dominated in such a fashion was in the 2005-2006 season, when the Minutemen suffered a 7-0 shutout to BC (15-8-2, 11-6-2 Hockey East) on Dec. 9.

In the three seasons following that loss, UMass (16-11-0, 11-9-0 HEA) never dropped a game by six or more goals until Friday.

Defense for the Minutemen was absent for much of the contest, allowing four scores in the first period and three in the second period.

UMass coach Don Cahoon felt that his team was making mental errors rather than just being outplayed by the Eagles.

"It was a series of bone-head plays and lack of energy and competitiveness," Cahoon said. "We stood around and watched and circled away from the play. The breakdown in the first goal was just not a hold in coverage, a simple proposition. The second goal was off of a faceoff, we don't find the puck, so instead of staying on the inside position, we take a guess and get

See WATSON on page 7

UMass led by Watson

By Neil Carroll
Collegian Staff

The streak has ended.

After eight consecutive losses at home, the Massachusetts women's basketball team nabbed its third home win of the season, defeating the Fordham, 60-50, on Saturday in the Mullins Center.

UMass	60
URI	50

The last home win came on Nov. 22 against Big East opponent Villanova in the fourth game of the season. This win not only eases the pressure off of UMass' players for a home victory, but it also moves the team ahead of Fordham in the Atlantic 10 standings. UMass now improves to 9-14, and 3-5 in the conference.

"I just don't think we are going to be okay with this win," Watson said. "We still need to get better and we still have stuff to improve on."

The Minutewomen got out to an early 8-0 start and led 27-18 at half. UMass extended its lead to as much as 25 in the second half thanks to a solid performance by freshman Jasmine Watson.

"We really wanted [Watson] to go inside because we knew that they had no one who could play her," Dacko said of the forward. "She kept her composure, slowed things down — and again she has the ability to blow by people, or shoot over people — but I think her defense really contributed to her offensive performance."

Watson had a career-high 21 points and added eight rebounds and three blocks as well. She dominated the post on both ends, stopping the Rams' leading scorer, Randall Hurst. Hurst averaged 14.6 points coming into Saturday afternoon's matchup, but was held to three points and four rebounds.

"This game, I really wanted to be more of a defen-

See W. BASKETBALL on page 8

Sophomore Nicole Jones dribbles around a defender in UMass' 60-50 win over Fordham on Saturday. The center added five points and two rebounds in 12 minutes of play.

Harris scores season high 32, not enough to overcome URI

By David Brisch
Collegian Staff

For the second straight game, the Massachusetts basketball team could not overcome a steep halftime deficit in order to defeat a conference opponent.

The Minutemen (8-15, 2-7 Atlantic 10) fell to Rhode Island (19-3, 7-2 A-10) Saturday afternoon, 93-85, as UMass scored 21 points in the final three minutes, 45 seconds to pull within six points with under a minute to go in the game, but could not come up with their second A-10 road victory.

URI	93
UMass	85

UMass' 85 points were its most scored in a loss so far this season.

"I thought we obviously turned the ball over a few too many times in the first half, 17 times, and didn't shoot the free throws too well," UMass coach Derek Kellogg said.

UMass turned the ball over 21 times, including five from senior guard Ricky Harris, who led all scorers with and had a season-high 32 points. Harris went 9-of-11 from the charity stripe, but the team shot just 58.6 percent from the line.

"There were four or five occasions when we had three-point plays and five-point plays, we missed a one-and-one, they came down and hit threes and where we didn't box out on the free-throw, they hit another three, so, a lot of inexperienced plays by some of our guys that were rectified at halftime, and I thought we gave it a yeoman's effort to come back and make the game interesting," Kellogg said.

Redshirt junior forward Anthony Gurley was held scoreless for the first 36 minutes of the game, but exploded for 15 points in the final three and half minutes, but it was too little too late for the Minutemen. Gurley went 5-of-9 from the field and 4-of-5 from the free-throw line, but also committed four turnovers in the loss.

"He made a few plays in the first half that were very unlike Anthony, and I felt like giving him a little time on the bench would get him going, and he came back and played very well," Kellogg said. "I mean we can't have him not play the way he did at the end for a whole game. I don't think we have enough fire power, and we're not good enough."

Along with Gurley and Harris, Sean Carter had 11 points, while freshmen Freddie Riley and Terrell Vinson added seven and 10 points, respectively.

The Minutemen continued to hold the advantage against the opponents on the boards, outrebounding the Rams 45-35, with freshman Javorn Farrell and Carter grabbing eight a piece. UMass also shot the ball well, shooting almost 50 percent for the game.

"We're still a work in progress, there were some

See M. BASKETBALL on page 8

Senior Ricky Harris dribbles down court against Xavier early this week. The guard scored 32 against URI.

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY

COLLEGIAN

HIGH: 38 LOW: 22 www.DailyCollegian.com TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 9, 2010

Blaze causes severe damage

Tenants from four Presidential Apartments' units displaced

By Michelle Williams
Collegian Staff

A heavy fire broke out at the Presidential Apartments in Amherst Saturday night causing severe damage, and though no one was injured, tenants from four apartment units have been displaced since.

Town firefighters responded to multiple emergency calls just before 10 p.m Saturday and found smoke seeping out of unit 54 on the first floor into the hallway and neighboring apartments.

Tenants from four residential units were displaced by a fire that struck the Presidential Apartments in Amherst Saturday.

After forcing entry into the unit, firefighters found the source of the flames to be a couch in the living room, said Assistant Fire Chief James Johnson. The fire was extinguished within 15 minutes, Johnson said; but officials also needed to force entry into three other apartments to check for occupants.

The tenants were not home at the time of the fire but returned momentarily after. Officials did not release the names of the residents and did not know whether they were University of Massachusetts students. The complex, located along North Pleasant Street, is less than a mile from the Northeast Residential area of campus and often home to students and visiting professors.

The apartment sustained severe smoke and heat damage. The outer hallway, stairwell and neighboring apartments also suffered minor damages.

A town building inspector assessed the damages Sunday and declared that half of the building — four apartments — remain unoccupied, for reasons including the smoke detectors in the outer hallway needing to be changed. Until further notice, the tenants affected by the inspector's decision are displaced.

The apartment complex is owned by Kamins Real Estate. According to the real estate company's website the Presidential Apartments are "the most asked about location we manage."

When asked when the residents will be allowed to return to their respective homes, owner Patrick Kamins declined to comment.

Michelle Williams can be reached at mmwilli@student.umass.edu

VC post would be 'dream job'

Michael Laliberte, vice president for student affairs of Boise State University, is one of the four finalists to fill the vice chancellor position.

By Nick Bush
Collegian Staff

Michael R Laliberte of Boise State University made the case for becoming the University of Massachusetts' next vice chancellor of student affairs and campus life in two open sessions with students and faculty yesterday.

Following fellow finalists Jean Kim and Margaret A. Jablonski, Laliberte was the third of the four candidates for the position to hold his open forum, with Kevin E. Charles of University of New Hampshire set to speak today at 4:15 p.m. in the Campus Center basement.

Laliberte has served as vice president for student affairs at Boise State University in Idaho since 2006, but has a long history both in the UMass system and in the Pioneer Valley. From 1999 to 2006, Laliberte served as coordinator for student judicial affairs, associate dean of students and associate vice chancellor for student affairs at UMass Dartmouth. Before that, he worked as assistant dean of students and director of judicial affairs at Springfield College for three years, and logged two years as a residence life coordinator at Penn State.

Growing up in South Hadley, Laliberte said that working at UMass Amherst would be a "dream job," and that he feels strongly about promoting the school's image.

"I love this area," said Laliberte. "There was an image of 'ZooMass' in the 80s, and then all of this growth happened here. The piece that is missing is national recognition for those recent achievements, and I feel like I can help lead in this. You need to actively promote a school's image."

"What happens in a [communication] void," said Laliberte, "is that people absorb only what

See LALIBERTE on page 2

Meet the Candidates

Jean Kim

Jean Kim is the interim vice chancellor and a University of Massachusetts alumna with a doctorate in counseling psychology, who recently served as vice chancellor for student affairs and campus life at UMass-Dartmouth. Previously, Kim held positions as director of student development at Western New England College, assistant dean of student affairs for graduate students at Stanford University, vice president for student affairs and dean of students at the University of Hartford, vice chancellor for student affairs at the University of Colorado at Boulder and vice president for student affairs and dean of students at the University of Puget Sound.

Margaret A. Jablonski

Margaret A. Jablonski, also an alumna of UMass with a B.A. and M.Ed., served as vice chancellor for student affairs at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill since 2004. She has also served as dean for campus life at Brown University, associate dean for undergraduate education and student affairs at the University of Connecticut, associate dean for undergraduate education and student affairs at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, assistant dean for residential services at Worcester Polytechnic, victim assistance program coordinator and assistant director of housing at Boston University, and family housing coordinator and director of Greek affairs at UMass.

Michael R. Laliberte

Michael R. Laliberte has been the vice president for student affairs at Boise State University since 2006, in addition to previously serving as coordinator for student judicial affairs, associate dean of students and associate vice chancellor for student affairs at UMass-Dartmouth. Laliberte holds a doctorate in educational leadership in higher education from Johnson & Wales University. Formerly, Laliberte held positions as assistant dean of students and director of judicial affairs at Springfield College, coordinator in residence life at Pennsylvania State University and residence director at Northeastern University.

Kevin E. Charles

Kevin E. Charles served as interim vice president for student affairs at the University of New Hampshire between 2002 and 2003. Since 2000, he has served as assistant vice president of student and academic services at the University of New Hampshire, following his previous appointment as executive director of health services. In addition to his work at UNH, Charles also served as director of the student health service and adjunct professor of public health at Western Kentucky University, as well as coordinator of residence hall programs, assistant director of residence hall programs and assistant director of health promotion and education at Pennsylvania State University.

Library expansion dedicated

UMass celebrates 20 percent addition to Learning Commons

By Matt Rocheleau
Collegian Staff

As part of an ongoing, five-year, $8.5-million renovation project, the University of Massachusetts celebrated a 20 percent expansion of the Learning Commons in the campus' main library yesterday.

The 6,000 square-foot addition, which opened at the beginning of the semester, boosts available seating by 60 percent — from 250 to 450 — in the W.E.B. DuBois Library's Learning Commons, according to a University press release.

The basement of the 26-story library added eight group study rooms bringing the total number of glass cubicles to 26.

A final phase of the library's renovations will add more area for staff use in the Learning Commons and is expected to be completed by June, said director of development and communications for the campus' libraries, Emily Silverman.

The $8.5 million in renovations, which began in 2005, have also improved other areas of the library, including quiet study spaces on the building's second, third and fifth floors, Silverman said.

As a separate project, she added that the University is also exploring plans to add a small, multipurpose auditorium to the Learning Commons.

Overall, the library's 30,000 square-foot bottom floor houses over 200 multi-purpose work stations equipped with PCs and Macs, and offers more than 400 campus network- and Internet-enabled ports, as well as full wireless access and other high-tech study and research tools.

The Learning Commons opened in 2005 and has received $600,000 in donated software from Microsoft Corp., which designated UMass as its first Microsoft IT Showcase School.

Chancellor Robert Holub cuts the ribbon at the ceremony for W.E.B. Du Bois Library's new Learning Commons expansion.

Junior industrial engineering major Anna Vecha, 20, said she uses computers in the library at least twice a week to access the Adobe Dreamweaver software installed on campus computers and is happy to see the library is expanding its services.

"I think it's definitely getting better. I didn't have to wait at all [for an open computer]," she said, while working at a station in the recently renovated area. "But, I think that it may also be because a lot of students don't know about [the addition], yet."

Chancellor Robert C. Holub and Provost James V. Staros joined Libraries Director Jay Schafer and other campus community members for Monday's celebration of the expansion.

Schafer said the Learning Commons' impact on student academic life has been "nothing less than dramatic."

"This is a groundbreaking approach," he said in the release. "We have been able to tap the latest technology to shape an environment in which students have convenient access to information, and a space where they are able to work together and to consult with faculty and staff in ways that allow them to thrive intellectually and creatively."

Learning Commons coordinator Carol Will said staff and student employees are encouraged to watch for those in need of help.

"You'll notice this is not a really quiet space now. We want people to be able to talk and work together and collaborate," said Learning Commons coordinator Carol Will in the release. "Everyone has to be on the lookout for people who look lost or hesitant. We welcome questions and we want to help. We have new users in here every day, and we never tire of the questions."

Matt Rocheleau can be reached at mrocheleau@dailycollegian.com.

Career fairs week

Career fair lets students see the wide world of potential vocations.

This week will bring a host of career fairs to the University of Massachusetts.

Today is the Asian Latino African Native American (ALANA) career fair, which will be held in the Student Union ballroom from 1 to 5 p.m. More than 50 national, statewide and local businesses and companies will be in attendance to recruit top ALANA students from a variety of majors.

Some more prominent corporations who will head to UMass include AT&T Inc., looking for students enrolled in the School of Management, Baystate Health Systems, seeking students from all majors, City Year Boston, EMC, which will recruit students majoring in the sciences, Ernst & Young, recruiting accounting students, Liberty Mutual Insurance Co., seeking students from all majors, Macy's, the Massachusetts Department of Transportation (MassDOT), the Museum of Fine Arts, National Grid, seeking engineering majors, the Peabody Essex Museum, seeking history, social science and literary students, the Peace Corps, PricewaterhouseCoopers (PWC), looking for accounting and finance majors, Raytheon, which is searching for math and science majors, Shaws Supermarkets, the Social Security Administration, TJX Companies, Inc., Target, the U.S. Secret Service and Walgreens.

The Campus-Wide and the Life Sciences career fairs will be held tomorrow. Friday will bring the Summer, Co-op and Internship Fair. All three will be in the Campus Center from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m.

To register and for more information, visit www.umass.edu/careers/calendar.fairs.

-Collegian News Staff

ARTS & LIVING

Cirque Dreamin'

Cirque Dreams Illumination entertained audience members at the Mullins Center on Sunday night. Re-live the experience through photos at DailyCollegian.com.

SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS

Just keep swimming...

The UMass men's swimming and diving team is looking to make history by winning the Atlantic-10 title later this month for the fourth consecutive year.

SEE PAGE 10

EDITORIAL & OPINION

Andrew Sheridan believes the campus is still charming despite concrete monstrosities.

SEE PAGE 4

DailyCollegian.com

Get a first look at the UMass tennis and lacrosse teams in our online spring sports preview.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXX
ISSUE 16

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
413-545-3500
Fax 413-545-3699
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF William McGuinness
MANAGING EDITOR Matt Rocheleau
MANAGING WEB EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
BUSINESS MANAGER Daniel Jette
PRODUCTION MANAGER Michael Sarkes
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Kirsten Swenson
ADVERTISING MANAGER Michael Tortorici
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Amanda Joinson
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Shayna Murphy
COMICS EDITOR Andrew Witts
EDITORIAL EDITOR Alyssa Creamer
NEWS EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS EDITOR Jeffrey R. Larnard
PHOTO EDITOR Matthew Harrison
IT MANAGER Victor Jacek
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Matt Zolnierz
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Nicole Jacinto
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Norman Provost
CLASSIFIED MANAGER Katelyn Tamilio
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Justin Gagnon
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Elyse Horowitz
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Cal Scannell
ASSISTANT COMICS Domonic Mei
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Benjamin Moriarty
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Michael Phillis
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Matthew M. Robare
ASSISTANT NEWS Samuel Butterfield
ASSISTANT NEWS Jenn Heshion
ASSISTANT NEWS Chris Shores
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jay Auer
ASSISTANT SPORTS David Brinch
ASSISTANT SPORTS Adam Miller
ASSISTANT PHOTO Maxwell Sparr
ASSISTANT PHOTO Samantha Webber
SENIOR PRODUCER Sara Cody
SENIOR PRODUCER Pete Rizzo

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

PRODUCTION CREW
on staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Matt Rocheleau

COPY EDITOR
Chelsea Whitton

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Shaina Jackson

Laliberte hopes to land job, head back to Mass.

LALIBERTE from page 1

they hear in the news," which he suggested ultimately can generate negative views.

"We need to get out the message of all the dynamic things occurring here," he said.

Laliberte acknowledged that the wealth of higher education options in Massachusetts causes some to take UMass for granted, but noted that "from an Idaho perspective" and in the minds of out-of-state students, the school offers incredible opportunities.

Laliberte also suggested that he would push to connect student affairs and academic affairs, since they share similar goals.

"Some people would like to isolate the learning environment to the classroom, but learning takes place everywhere … even at the bus stop," he said. "It's always occurring, and I'd like it to be a purposeful learning experience."

When one member of the audience asked what his priorities would be if getting the job, Laliberte mentioned a recent article by Massachusetts Daily Collegian columnist Nick Milano, which pushed for a more "unified experience" for students at UMass, and admitted that there is work to be done in increasing "trust and advocacy for the students" at his position.

In addressing how he will respond to the tasks of assessment and interacting with students, Laliberte asserted that he adheres to the principal that administrators "must act less like an oak, and more like a willow."

"Administrators often need to be less inflexible, and more able to move a little," he said. "I like risks – not 'walk along the side of the b uilding' risks – but I'll look out the window."

Laliberte claimed that during his time at UMass Dartmouth and elsewhere, he has shown he can work with fellow administrators while still remaining creative in working with faculty and creating new programs.

He also noted as an example of flexibility his role in creating an Office of Diversity and Inclusion at Boise State, which he viewed as an important step for the school.

Laliberte recounted an incident from his time in Boise when the school's library was tagged with graffiti reading "whites only," and lamented the inadequate response of his fellow administrators to the hate crime.

When the dean that called to inform him of the incident wondered aloud why the police would need to be called, Laliberte said he realized how large of a "disconnect" he was facing at the institution regarding their approach to hate crimes, and how challenging it can be to create an environment where all students can feel safe.

"I was wondering 'My god, is this 1950 in the south again?'" he said. "I felt like I'd moved back in time."

Laliberte also spoke of another experience from his time at Boise State, this time shedding some light the approach he would take handling controversial speakers brought to campus by student groups – an issue which rears its head often at UMass, including last year when the Republican Club hosted the contentious speech of Don Feder.

The day before a conservative group was to host an anti-immigration speaker at Boise State, according to Laliberte, he caught wind of the group promoting the event with a fence that students had to physically crawl through to get into the speech. Laliberte acknowledged the insensitivity of such a tactic, and noted that he had the fence removed on the grounds of it being a crowd hazard and gave protestors of the speech equal access to the event.

In general, Laliberte claimed that he would respect any invited speaker's First Amendment right to voice their opinion, but also would support students' right to protest speakers they disagree with. He also suggested that his first-hand experiences at Boise State and elsewhere have given him an understanding of such delicate campus situations.

"I haven't just read about these types of things in the paper; I've seen it," he said. "I got that gut-wrenching feeling [of experiencing it directly]."

Nick Bush can be reached at nbush@student.umass.edu.

HANNAH COLTON/COLLEGIAN

Vice chancellor of student affairs and campus life finalist Michael Laliberte speaks during an open session at the Campus Center yesterday.

Study: Plagiarism can be reduced through education instead of fear

BY ELIZABETH MURPHY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It's not new knowledge that plagiarism is a growing problem in academia, but a study released last week may prove that plagiarism can be reduced through education, rather than through fear of repercussions.

The study examined students who viewed a mandatory web tutorial on plagiarism. It found that these students were less likely to plagiarize than their peers who did not view the tutorial. The effects of the tutorial were especially significant among college students with lower SAT scores.

Published by the National Bureau of Economic Research, the study was conducted by Thomas S. Dee, associate professor of economics and director of the public policy program at Swarthmore College, and Brian A. Jacob, the Walter H. Annenberg professor of education policy at the University of Michigan.

Dee and Jacob collected over 1,200 papers from undergraduate students attending a "selective post-secondary institution," said the study. Half of the students enrolled in the courses participating in the study were required to complete the plagiarism tutorial before they submitted their papers. Those who did not complete the tutorial were in the control group. Dee and Jacob found that, according to the study, being required to complete the tutorial "substantially reduced the likelihood of plagiarism, particularly among students with lower SAT scores who had the highest rates of plagiarism."

The students then completed a follow-up survey. Survey answers implied that the tutorial led to fewer instances of plagiarism because the students learned more about plagiarism, not because they feared punishment.

This study supports the beliefs that some academic professionals have long held.

"My contention has always lined up with what this study suggests," said UMass Professor Nicholas McBride, who teaches a course on journalism ethics. "For me, fear is rarely a good task master. A better society in the broad sense is a society governed by aesthetics rather than edicts."

The tutorial used in the study shows students examples of correct and incorrect uses of source materials. It also provides students with strategies for avoiding plagiarism. One topic covered by the tutorial is paraphrasing.

Using sources word-for-word, intentionally or not, is a mistake that many UMass students admit to making.

"Before I got to college I thought that paraphrasing wasn't plagiarism," said junior Erin Desrochers.

This tutorial helps to prevent unintentional plagiarism, but junior Tori Zopf, pointed out that unintentional plagiarism is not the only kind.

"There are some people that accidently [plagarize]," he said, "but there are some people that know [what they're doing]."

Tyler Rocco-Chafee, a senior, agreed.

"I think that people know what plagiarism is," he said. "The idea of copying someone else's work, people know what that is."

"It's beaten into your head in every class," added Zopf.

While a tutorial may be effective for those who unintentionally plagiarize, there are still some those are inclined to plagiarize even knowingly.

"The process of education is more than 'this is plagiarism, bad,'" said McBride. "Education has to also examine why … why stealing ideas eats at the infrastructure of a just society, violates the humanity of others, and ultimately ourselves."

Elizabeth Murphy can be reached at emmurphy@student.umass.edu.

HPV Fact #10:

The treatment for genital warts can be a painful process and can involve cutting, freezing, or burning the warts.

HPV Fact #17:

Even after treatment, genital warts can come back. In fact, 25% of cases come back within 3 months.

Why risk it
Visit your campus health center.

MERCK
Copyright © 2010 Merck & Co., Inc.
All rights reserved. Printed in USA.

hpv.com
21050004(41)-01/10-GRD

Community Clips

MAGGIE NOWINSKI'S "SWALLOWED"

Thur., Jan. 21 to Tues., Feb. 23, Hampden Gallery

Easthumpton-based artist Maggie Nowinski turned her obsession with plastic bottles into a two-year investigation and project that culminates in the exhibition "Swallowed," featuring an installation comprised of thousands of plastic bottles, drawings, and video.

REGISTRATION OPEN FOR FACULTY AND STAFF SUPPORT GROUPS

Fri., Jan. 19 to Fri., Feb. 19.

Registration is underway for new support groups offered by the Faculty and Staff Assistance Program (FSAP) at University Health Services.

Contact timscott@uhs.umass.edu for more information.

WRITING THE LANDSCAPE: BOOKS FROM THE LIBRARY OF AMERICAN HISTORY

Mon., Feb. 1 to Thur., May 20

The UMass Amherst Libraries are hosting an exhibit "Writing the Landscape: Books from the Library of American Landscape History." The exhibit features several books developed by the Library of American Landscape History (LALH) and photographs by noted landscape photographer Carol Betsch. A reception will be held on February 4, 2010, from 4:00 to 6:00 p.m. in the Learning Commons of Du Bois Library.

Contact mcharney@.library.umass.edu for more information.

MIDWAY: FEATURING NAFIS AZAD, RYAN MACDONALD AND STEVE SNELL

Mon., Feb. 8 to Fri., Feb. 12, Student Union Art Gallery

The Student Union Art Gallery presents "Midway," an annual exhibit of the work of UMass Studio Art MFA students at the midpoint in their programs. Featuring large photos by Nafis Azad, video work by Ryan MacDonald, and video work by Steve Snell. Free and open to the public. A reception will be held on Wednesday, February 10 from 4 to 6pm.

Contact studentunionag@gmail.com more information.

OPEN CALL FOR INSTALLATIONS

Mon., Feb.8 to Mon., Feb. 15, Student Union Art Gallery

The Student Union Art Gallery is hosting a juried exhibition of installation works. The gallery space will be arranged to include 6-8 installations. All applications will be carefully reviewed, and a selection of artists will be chosen to include a broad scope of work with potential connections.

Contact studentunionag@.gmail.com for more information.

UMASS FOR HAITI AUCTION

Mon., Feb. 8 to Tues., Feb 23

The UMass Athletic Department is auctioning off memorabilia including game-worn jerseys of Haitian Native and future NFL Draft pick Vladimir Ducasse to benefit Haiti relief. The proceeds raised by the auction will go to benefit the efforts.

ANXIETY MANAGEMENT WORKSHOP ACCEPTING REGISTRATIONS

Mon., Feb. 8 to Tues., Feb. 23, Mental Health Services

Identify symptoms and causes of anxiety; learn and practice relaxation techniques and develop coping strategies. The last two meetings will include individual exposure to biofeedback.

Meetings are Tuesdays, 2 – 3:30 p.m. beginning Feb. 23, and will be closed to new members after the first session. Additional workshops may be scheduled.

Contact Mental Health Services at (413)-545-2337 for more information.

"ISRAEL IN A CHANGING MIDDLE EAST"

Tuesday, Feb. 9, 7 p.m., Campus Center Room 168C

UMass Hillel presents the Consul General of Israel to New England Nadav Tamir, who will give his presentation "Israel in a Changing Middle East."

GRADUATE JAZZ COMPOSERS' CONCERT

Tues, Feb. 9, 8 p.m., Bezanson Recital Hall at the Fine Arts Center

A jazz concert with new works by Alex Lee-Clark, Brian Thomas, Marek Novotny, Eric Blanchet, Chris Lapsidus, and Steve Turcott, performed by jazz majors/ensembles and faculty.

Contact Eric Roth, eroth@music.umass.edu, for more information.

MEALS AT THE MARRIOTT CENTER

Join us for an affordable, multi-course meal prepared by the HT-MGT 355 (Menu & Quantity Food Production Management) class, and dine with a view from the Marriott Center atop the Lincoln Campus Center.

Lunch: 12 p.m. to 1 p.m. (Tues, Wed, Thur) Dinner: 6 p.m. to 7 p.m. (Tues, Wed)

Reservations are required. No walk-ins please.

MORNING MIXER WEDNESDAY

Wed., Feb. 10, 8:30 a.m. to 10:30 a.m., Memorial Hall

UMass Amherst students, faculty, and staff are invited to stop by the Morning Mixer and start your day off with a complimentary breakfast of bagels, fresh fruit, coffee and assorted juices.

Doug Wilson '01, licensed massage therapist, will be providing complimentary five-minute chair-massages.

UPC PRESENTS POSTSECRET

Wed., Feb. 10, 7 p.m. to 9:30 p.m.

Join us as Frank Warren of PostSecret shares the stories behind the 500,000 secrets he has received on postcards over the years. Prepare to laugh, cry, and be inspired by the many secrets he has to share. Tickets will be available for ANYONE starting February 1st. No reservations.

"ONCE UPON A TIME IN RIOT ERA UMA VEZ"

Wed., Feb. 10, 7:30 p.m., Isenberg 137

The Multicultural Massachusetts Film Festival will screen this Brazilian love story Wednesday night.

SUMMER INTERNSHIP AND CO-OP FAIR

Thur., Feb. 11, 10 a.m. to 3 p.m., Campus Center Auditorium

Top employers are seeking students for internships, summer and co-op jobs. All majors are welcome. Employers such as Reebok, Congressman Oliver, Daily Hampshire Gazette, Yankee Candle Corporate, Lockheed Martin, EMC, Liberty Mutual, Abbott Labs, Higgins Armory Museum, WGBY-TV and others will be there.

"SEPARATE BUT EQUAL"

Thur., Feb. 11, 5:30 p.m., Malcolm X Cultural Center

A film following the story of the case of Brown v. Board of Education will be shown Thursday evening at the Malcolm X Cultural Center.

NEW ENGLAND
Winter Harvest Dinner
Wednesday, February 10
5–9 pm · All DCs

- Hot Mulled Cider (local)
- Roast Turkey (local)
- Mashed Sweet Potatoes (local)
- Grilled New England Cod with Peppery Orange Salsa
- Honey Glazed Carrots (local)
- Grilled Butternut Squash (local)
- Stuffed Acorn Squash

FROM THE UMASS BAKE SHOP
- Strawberry Shortcake (local strawberries)

local HERO
RESTAURANTS & INSTITUTIONS ivy
UMASS DINING
UMassAmherst
umassdining.com

ALANA CAREER FAIR 2010
your career starts here..
"open to all college students"

Co-Op Internship Employment

February 9, 2010
Student Union Ballroom
1:00 - 5:00PM

UMASS AMHERST
University of Massachusetts Amherst
Student Affairs and Campus Life
Career Services

SPONSORED BY: [illegible] Program (BCP) Career Services • Committee for the Coalesce Education of Black and other Minority Students (CCEBMS) Diversity in [illegible] Services (DIMES) • Native American Student Services (NASS) • United Asia Learning Resource Center (UALRC)

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 9, 2010

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Go back to the chalkboard

Bobby Hitt

My first semester at the University of Massachusetts introduced me to the Interwrite Personal Response System, or PRS, for Chemistry 111. The PRS system has been adopted by 32 other courses. In these classes, students are required to buy the individual remote, which costs $39 used and $52 new from the the Textbook Annex.

The system is supposed to work like this: professor turns on the receiver, students join the system via the remote, the professor posts a question, and students punch in their answers. Of course, only on a good day does this actually happen.

I see how the PRS is effective in bringing people to class, but having to sit through an entire lecture just to press a button is a bit ridiculous.

Most days it wasn't that simple, and it became a frenzy of button mashing and fiddling with the receiver. Some days it could be fixed, and other days my professor would say screw it and continue the lecture without it. Students had difficulty entering into the system a lot of the time.

At first, I assumed this was just working out bugs to a new system. But this year, I have two classes involving PRS, and the bugs still haven't been worked out.

In fact, last week, the system did not work at all for my chemistry class, and in biology it took more than a few minutes until the system was up and running properly.

So, does this spending of extra money and effort mean enhanced learning? The PRS is supposed to let professors see if their lecture has "stuck" with students, and if not, adjust accordingly. It also stimulates classroom participation, but listening and interacting is still in the hands of the students.

With the introduction of PRS, the focus is shifted from actually understanding the material to making sure you get an answer into the system to get credit for the day.

I see how the PRS is effective in bringing people to class, but having to sit through an entire lecture just to press a button is a bit ridiculous. The PRS does not enhance my ability in the classroom. it just makes me resent having to lug around another piece of technology while wasting time to get it to work when the professors should just be teaching.

I have a hard enough time getting my lazy self to go to class. I don't need to have to remember to bring this random clicker.

Luckily, most professors drop about 10 PRS grades over the span of the entire semester. This amounts to a lot after one takes into account how many times the system collapses on itself and forces professors to give out free points.

Professors also find other ways to counteract the failings of PRS. In my biology class, the professor gave a survey for extra PRS points, and I expect other professors do the same. Professors try to accommodate with the faulty system, but it doesn't always work.

"I use the PRS in my biology class. I feel pressure to get in my answers, and it concerns me if the system does not work," said Khoa Chu, freshman biology major. "I definitely feel that instructors would do better if they were more familiar with the system."

Professors, to their credit, are trying to become more familiar with the system. On the UMass website there is a PRS web page available for instructors and students to gain a better understanding of the system. The site even includes a blog about how to better use the PRS.

However, delving deeper into the blog, one quickly realizes that the PRS system isn't "simple" as the aforementioned web page suggests.

Fred Zinn, Sr., designer of instructional technology at the Office of Informational Technology at UMass, described possible reasons behind trouble with PRS reception in series of blogs. Although very helpful, the blogs suggest that incorporating PRS into a course is a huge burden.

According to Zinn's blogs, PRS could be adversely affected by its receivers being too close to laptops, low batteries in the remotes of the students, and more than 200 students using the same receiver.

The blogs also report faculty losing data by minor mistakes when using the system.

The web page suggests that instructors having difficulty should set up a one-on-one consultation with the Instructional Media Lab. Professors already have enough on their hands, it isn't necessary to bog them down with even more.

As class sizes continually get larger, devices like the PRS will become more prevalent, even though this contributes to their failures. The only method of teaching proven to be glitch-free is writing notes on the board and taking notes with a pen and paper, and that is what we should be doing.

Bobby Hitt is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at rhitt@student.umass.edu.

Concrete but charming campus

Andrew Sheridan

The University of Massachusetts Amherst campus has a reputation for being ugly. Detractors complain of too much concrete and not enough class. The college ranking site College Prowler describes it quite negatively, saying that, "with some exceptions, the buildings on campus are not very architecturally pleasing," and goes so far as to claim that "they appear to have been designed by an architect who lived in communist Russia."

Personally, I have always disagreed with this commonly-accepted conclusion. It is true that we lack the ivy-covered halls, Victorian donns, and sprawling tennis courts that earn more upscale schools the qualifiers of "picturesque" and "classic." But the visual appeal of UMass, however, is harder to pin down than just that. The charm of the school does not rest in its history or its unified look, it is something else entirely.

The first issue to deal with is a one of perspective. Many students here who claim that the campus is a concrete monstrosity suffer from tunnel vision brought on by a severe overdose of Southwest. I am not trying to insult Southwest or anyone who lives there. It is a great place to live, with first-rate dining facilities and an atmosphere that is quintessentially "UMass". However, this can be a problem when the self-contained area becomes one's primary idea of what our campus is.

Heavily packed cement-and-brick people storage is fine for the basic needs of life, but if you want to get a feel for what the campus really is, it becomes necessary to start in the middle of campus and do some exploring.

From the very center of campus it is easy to see that, over its nearly 150-year life, this University has been a very piecemeal construction project. The rustic stone church that is the Old Chapel looks like it belongs on a classic New England postcard, and yet it sits in the shadow of one of the world's tallest brick structures. This sort of juxtaposition is often called "disorganized," but to me that is just cynical. It's hard to find a building on campus which bears any resemblance to the one sitting next to it, and while this doesn't make for a cohesive "campus look," it is a unique quality that I can't help but love.

The charm of the school does not rest in its history or its unified look, it is something else entirely.

Another common complaint is a very blunt one – the Fine Arts Center is hideous. Once again I can see where this one comes from. It is, without a doubt, a monster of modern architecture. But once again, I have to disagree that this is a bad thing. The FAC is a concrete behemoth covered in odd angles, flat planes and oddly placed stairs. In this respect it strikes me, both literally and metaphorically, as being representative of the diverse UMass populace.

Its flat front end provides a haven for skaters and hipsters, its angles act as a playground for free-runners, and the rear stairs are turned into an amphitheatre for improvisational comedy groups and outdoor lectures. Who could fail to love something so unintentionally useful?

Once you move away from the center, from the quixotic and random makeup of the academic sector, some of the lesser-known sights of UMass are ripe for exploring. The hidden jewels of campus are as plentiful as they are surprising.

For those who have never ventured far into Central, or who have never stopped to look closely, the Durfee Conservatory is perhaps the best-kept secret in the area. This cozy greenhouse is nestled in rows of pruned foliage and elephantine trees, and inside its frosted windows hides a living and breathing rain forest, a warm and humid retreat from the bitter February cold.

Farther to the north, the student garden hidden behind Sylvan comes to life in the fall. It is a well loved half-acre of land, overgrowing with raspberries, asparagus, cooking herbs and anything else that Residential Student Organization members care to plant.

Natural sights are great, but man-made monuments can also be found on campus. The football stadium does a good job of hiding Stonehenge, a modern re-creation of the ancient British landmark that has long served as a smoker's hangout.

At the opposite edge of campus, behind the Van Meter Dormitory, a mysterious black construct confuses even the curious local residents. It is in fact a silhouette of the city of Sapporo, and a monument to our sister-school, the University of Hokkaido, Japan. A series of engraved stones, linked by a path of purple flowers, tells the story of our long relationship with this far-away sibling.

For those who are caught up in the cement, or who think that the school needs a facelift, I challenge to you slow down and take a good look. Sit beneath the cherry trees in the spring and watch the ducklings play catch-up with their parents. Take the elevator to the top of the W.E.B. Du Bois and look down on the sprawling campus from above. Take a walk up to Orchard Hill at night, and watch the sun set over the mountains, painting the campus with color and light.

In this big, old, ugly school, I think you'll like what you see.

Andrew Sheridan is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at asheri1@student.umass.edu.

Five Reasons Why:

Disco isn't dead, and never will be dead

1) High-heeled shoes with goldfish in them are the coolest.

2) John Travolta is still in a lot of movies, but all we see is Saturday Night Fever.

3) I have a bunch of disco balls in my room, and if disco is dead, I won't know what to do with them.

4) Scott Brown is bringing sexy back to the Senate, and he should bring afros back too.

5) Barack Obama said his favorite band was LFO, but that was second to the Bee Gees, who were second to Kool and the Gang.

Time to rock the sexism and racism boat

Dave Coffey

I will admit right away that I am by no means a fashionable person. Everyday, I sport a plaid jacket that brings to mind the outfit Kurt Cobain was probably buried in. I wear wrinkled shirts bearing the likenesses of iconic figures ranging from the Incredible Hulk to Neil Diamond. So like I said, I'm not the most fashionable guy. Still, I find it quite puzzling that in a society of trendiness and modern fashion, outdated concepts such as racism and sexism still exist at large.

Recently, I've stumbled upon several news headlines that have not only caught my eye but have convinced me that these detrimental and prejudicial concepts still haunt us in a day and age when social progress is supposed to be at its peak.

In late January, I glanced upon a headline in The Atlanta Journal-Constitution that read, "Whites Only Basketball League Announced." I thought this surely had to be a joke. Not since the days of Jackie Robinson and the Negro Leagues in the 1940s has athletics been segregated by race.

When you treat a woman in court differently than you would treat a man simply because she's a woman, that's called gender inequality and sexism.

Alas, it was no joke. The All-American Basketball Alliance, which kicks off its first season in June in Augusta, Ga., states that, "only players with both parents of Caucasian race are eligible to play in the league."

Not even a few days later, I happened upon a news story from the Telegraph Journal with the headline, "Attack on boyfriend included frying pan and a kitchen knife," with the subheading reading, "Court: Rothesay woman avoids jail time and still lives with the victim."

Once again, I hoped what I was reading was a sick joke. Unfortunately, it wasn't. A woman from New Brunswick, Canada, was given a mere one year probation with no jail time for an incident where she beat her boyfriend with a frying pan and stabbed him multiple times with a kitchen knife. The article also states that, "there is evidence of drug and alcohol use that contributed to the violence." When asked about the case afterwards, the judge admitted that he is "doubtful" the sentence would be viewed lightly if the gender roles were reversed in the incident. But the judge left the situation alone, as he "didn't want to rock the boat."

Am I the only one that finds it ironic that, in a society so advanced, examples of socially senile tendencies such as racism and sexism take place right in front of our eyes?

Whenever I go out wearing a plaid jacket, there's always countless people who see it and say, "Wow, plaid? That's so 90s." It doesn't really bother me at all, but what does bother me is no one questions blatant cases of sexism and racism this way. When one sees that an all-white basketball league is being started, does no one stop and say, "Segregation in sports? That's so 1940s." And when one sees that a male and female are being treated markedly different simply based on their gender in a court of law, does no one stop and say, "Legal gender inequality? That's so turn of the 20th century."

These are the sorts of things that landmark social figures like Martin Luther King Jr. and Susan B. Anthony saw decades ago as outdated social policies. When you don't let people into your basketball league based solely on race, that's called racism, even though the league's commissioner Don Lewis claims that "there's nothing hatred (sic) about what we're doing."

When you treat a woman in court differently than you would treat a man simply because she's a woman, that's called gender inequality and sexism. When someone beats and stabs someone in an alcohol-fueled rage, we lock that person up because they've proved beyond a reasonable doubt that for the time being, they are a dangerous person, regardless of which sexual organs they happen to possess. While this particular case obviously favors a female, it only serves to cater to the attitudes and environments that objectify women on a completely separate social plane than men. When society gives the nod to unequal treatment based on gender or race in the legal world and in the recreational world, it only makes it that much easier to allow gender and racial inequality in the professional, political and social spheres as well.

As the judge inadvertently points out in his hindsight referral to the New Brunswick case, the main reason these sorts of socially archaic policies still thrive is because no one is willing to "rock the boat." When it comes to questions of plaid jackets and shaggy unkempt jeans, people are quick to question the fashion sensibility of the wearer, yet where is the questioning of the racism and the sexism that still plagues our supposedly advanced and progressive society?

It's time to rock the boat. Let's make negative social prejudices unfashionable once and for all.

Dave Coffey is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at dtcoffey@student.umass.edu.

Join the conversation. Write for Ed/Op. Let your voice be heard!

This week introducing Photo-Ops at: dailycollegian.com/category/blogs/ed-op

See something you don't like? Don't tweet it, write a letter to the editor!

Send letters to the editor, column submissions and columnist applications to editorial@dailycollegian.com.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 9, 2010

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Cirque Dreams illuminates Mullins' stage

By Lindsay Orlov
Collegian Correspondent

A visually stunning hybrid between a Broadway musical and a traditional circus show, Cirque Dreams Illumination came to the University of Massachusetts' Mullins Center stage for a two-hour performance on Sunday night, leaving audience members both laughing and gasping in wonder.

The plot of the show – which acted as more of a suggestion than as a coherent narrative – followed a singing news correspondent inspecting the lives of the everyday citizens in her home city. In Cirque Dreams Illumination, however, the citizens and the city itself were anything but ordinary: the policemen were a pair of acrobats; women who twist their bodies in unimaginable directions became stoplights and street signs; the local break dancers doubled as contortionists; and the neighborhood hobo was also a clown.

The story took place beneath an elevated train, with graffiti on the walls and a shoeshine station near the stairs to the train stop. As the reporter travelled through her day, the audience was taken on a journey into ordinary city life, seen through a lens of dream and illusion.

The opening number of the show introduced the city's characters. A young woman danced ballet across the stage, followed by three agile admirers: a sailor, a soldier and a naval officer. A dashing couple waltzed and tangoed in one corner of the stage, changing costumes behind a silk curtain in the blink of an eye. In the next scene, a construction worker was called in to repair a downed wire; while doing repairs, he free-balanced on a rope, doing handstands, somersaults and cartwheels while five feet in the air.

The show then shifted to a construction scene, featuring the four contortionist women, dressed in caution tape, creating shapes with their bodies while hanging from the frame of a cube suspended 15 feet above the stage.

The next musical number featured the news correspondent singing about how busy the city is, and the stage swam with activity. Unicyclists swerved through the stage as the girl and her followers danced, the hobo clown played tricks on people, and all manner of construction workers, painters, and business men flipped, twisted, and flew across the stage in all directions. When the hobo clown pulled an imaginary plug on all of the action, everybody froze and a contortionist break dancer took center stage, surrounded by his crew of fellow street dancers in masks and colored sweat suits.

The show continued, with the sailor balancing and doing handstands on three, then four, then five stacked chairs. A 911 call brought the firefighters and acrobat police onstage to question bystanders.

Before intermission, the clown invited four audience members onstage to direct them in a hilarious production of love and betrayal. Instead of yelling at the impromptu performers, some of whom were timid with directions, the clown communicated purely by expressively using a silver whistle.

After intermission, the hobo clown and a man in a suit paired up to become a midget, dancing to radio tunes, including songs by the Dropkick Murphys and Michael Jackson. The break dancer rode onstage in an imaginary car with the contortionist women as wheels and continued to dance with them as they became traffic symbols. A train conductor swirled across the stage inside of a large silver hoop, the hobo clown slides across the stage with a bathtub.

The mood darkened for a period as the ballet dancer and her true lover performed around the bathtub brought in by the clown; her lover danced on a rope suspended above the bath to slow, soothing music. The tempo increased again for an acrobatic number featuring three men seemingly made of trash and three ladies in dresses of trash as backup dancers.

The show ended with an explosive finale of the news reporter's cameraman balancing large metal corkscrews on his head, with a human 'camera' doing tricks at the top.

These acts happened in a lightning quick manner that made the entire show seem like a surreal dream sequence. The experience was blended together in an awe-inspiring act of incredible human feats and metallic, urban color, and images. The city of Cirque Dreams Illumination threw the idea of "normal" out the window and left the UMass audience with a feeling of having traveled to an imaginary time and place that exists only in the mind.

Lindsay Orlov can be reached at lorlov@student.umass.edu.

Contortionists and acrobats were just a few of the featured performers during the Cirque Dreams Illumination extravaganza, whose talents were suspended before an amazed audience at the Mullins Center on Sunday night.

MATTHEW GARDNER/COLLEGIAN

The dancers in the Cirque Dreams Illumination production were illustrating the plot of a female news correspondent observing the lives of those who inhabit the town around her through songs, stunts, and animation.

MATTHEW GARDNER/COLLEGIAN

Battle for Chile featured in Food for Thought Books' documentary screening

By Brendan Murphy
Collegian Correspondent

Food for Thought bookstore in Amherst is hosting a four-part epic movie series chronicling the saga of the violent 1973 United States-sponsored coup d'état in Chile every Wednesday this month at 7 p.m.

The "golpe de estado," as it is known in Latin America, has been funded and supported by the CIA and involves the overthrow of the popular democratically-elected socialist President Salvador Allende.

On September 11, 1973, the combined Chilean armed forces rebelled against the government, which was chosen by the people in an open and peaceful election, and replaced by a brutal military junta headed by one of the most infamous dictators in history, General Augusto Pinochet. Through policies of torture, kidnapping, and murder, he brutally crushed any opposition within the country and employed strict censorship on free speech and forms of media.

Pinochet ruled Chile from 1973 until1990, and died in 2006 while waiting to stand trial for over 300 charges, including human rights violations, tax evasion and embezzlement.

Part I of the documentary, shown on Wednesday, was titled "The Insurrection of the Bourgeoisie" and covered the various tactics employed by the rightist opposition following the surprise election of leftist officials in the congressional elections in March, 1973. Early numbers reported by the media predicted a sweeping victory by the right-leaning candidates; the chief opponents of President Allende. By the time the ballots closed it had shown that the left had gained seats within congress, trumping the two-thirds majority held by the right prior to the election.

Chilean government is structured similarly to the U.S. government, with an executive, legislative and judicial branch. Congress also needs a two-thirds majority to pass legislature measures, much like our system but not necessarily to remove cabinet members or deputies from their posts. With the loss of the right's majority, Chile prepared to enter a legislative era of stalemate.

Not many foresaw the events that were about to unfold at the time, and the lengths at which the right was willing to go to undermine their socialist president and derail his domestic agenda.

Allende, who was president of Chile from 1970 until 1973, was the first democratically-elected Marxist of a state in the Americas. His ambitious domestic agenda included nationalization of some of Chile's most profitable industries, such as copper mining and banking, and government administration of key public welfare programs such as health care and education.

One of the main goals of his administration was to provide employment for citizens and improve the socio-economic status of some of Chile's poorest citizens. This conflicted with the interests of the United States, who had lost revenue from the private sector upon nationalization of copper mines.

At the time of his election, America was in the midst of the Cold War and also sought to prevent the spread of communism at any cost. The U.S. instituted an embargo on trade with Chile, much like the one still imposed on Cuba to this day. President Nixon also authorized a $10 million budget to attempt to unseat Allende through "parliamentary trickery," but this proved to be unsuccessful after the March election. The secondary plan included funding a military coup, which ultimately resulted in the death of Allende during a shelling and bombing of the presidential palace.

"The Insurrection of the Bourgeoisie" opens with the infamous scene of the assault on the national residence, followed by footage from the streets of the election fervor nine months earlier. On the ballot were congressional seats and a referendum on whether to impeach the president two years after the installation of the embargo.

Although basic supplies such as toilet paper and cooking oil were scarce and rationing had begun, popular support for his socialist policies remained strong. The people voted to keep Allende in office.

According to one of the voters interviewed in the documentary film, "dreams were shattered" after America ceased trade relations. The goal of the right, funded largely by the U.S., was to starve Chile and exhaust food reserves. They even sabotaged crop production and organized strikes aimed at crippling the business sector.

The domestic economy came to a crawl when employers and wealthy business owners incited strikes within the copper and transportation industries.

These measures ultimately failed. Through all their efforts, support for Allende and his socialist policies remained strong, and he was kept in power. The Chilean armed forces, who received training and aid from the U.S., threatened to break away and announce sovereignty if Allende "violated the constitution," which can at times be a wholly subjective matter.

Part I of featured film series ends with a preliminary rebellion by a right wing breakaway group of the armed forces that is ultimately quelled. "The Insurrection of the Bourgeoisie" ends on a somber note – the cameraman who recorded all of the footage from the first installment is shot dead in the streets by military personnel. It is a bone-chilling ending that will sear into the viewer's mind for a long time to come.

Part II of the "Battle of Chile" will be shown tomorrow at 7 p.m. at Food for Thought Books and will document the actual coup and seizure of government by the military junta.

Brendan Murphy can be reached at brendanm@student.umass.edu.

Super Bowl ads lack creativity and humor

By Garth Brody
Collegian Staff

The Super Bowl has come and gone, but we can still remember our favorite moments. If you're looking for play-by-play highlights, go check out the sports section. Instead, let's take a look at the real highlights of Sunday night – those thirty-second filmic masterpieces, the pinnacles of consumer culture, the few, the proud, the Super Bowl ads.

GoDaddy.com continued its proud tradition of putting Danica Patrick – and maybe one or two other full-breasted women – in a tank-top, and then suggesting that she might not have the tank-top if you went to their website. Oh, and they sell domain names, by the way.

FloTV's Will.i.am remix of "My Generation" was almost as depressing as The Who's the halftime show performance. Why oh why did his vocals have to replace Daltrey's after the first line?

E*Trade's baby-financier-on-a-webcam campaign stopped being funny a while ago. It officially became infuriating Sunday night when the baby's girlfriend asked if "that milk-a-holic Lindsay" was over, as the aforementioned "milk-a-holic" floated into frame, somehow several feet closer to the webcam than the finance baby at the keyboard and exclaimed "MILK-A-WHAT?" And then America cringed.

Michelob Ultra, we are to understand, is a beer for Lance Armstrong and other hyper-determined übermensch world-beaters whose life's soundtrack is "Song 2" by Blur. We would have been more psyched about this, but then we remembered that it is a beer and Lance Armstrong probably doesn't drink beer.

Coca-Cola tried to go with a guaranteed connection with the viewer by using "The Simpsons." A word of advice, Coke – don't use Mr. Burns and Milhouse as your main Springfieldites if you want to warm our hearts.

Intel capitalized on Pixar's popularization of sad robots, stuffing Wall-E's adorable pathos into Eve's rounded white chassis. The result was Jeffrey. We might remember him for about a week and a half.

Dr. Pepper rented KISS (and their diminutive doppelgangers) for a particularly uninspired joke, extended to its utmost. "A little kiss of cherry flavor!" One wonders how much money was spent on the realization of that pun.

Teleflora.com's marketing team decided that the most effective way to sell us flowers was to show us a wilted bouquet yelling in a grimy Brooklyn accent about cigarettes and dead people. Things are in order.

Motorola gave us Megan Fox in a bathtub. The rest was an advertisement for either the Internet or the destructive power of the libido. Anyways, Megan Fox in a bathtub – thanks Motorola.

HomeAway.com had Chevy Chase reviving his Clark Griswold character for a shoddy imitation of the Vacation series, or at least a trailer for the imitation. The clip in its entirety is apparently on the site, but the trailer is quite enough, thanks.

Snickers continued its campaign to make candy into a meal, using Betty White as a human metaphor for how bad at football you will be if you do not eat Snickers.

Vizio's representation of Internet on your TV – a bunch of robot arms dropping things like Tay Zonday and that "dramatic chipmunk" into a black pit – made the product a lot more frightening than appealing.

Bridgestone's Mad Max (sort of) spoof assured us that in the future, we will value our tires over our supermodel wives. Prepare yourselves.

Taco Bell furthered Charles Barkley's tragic descent into cultural garbage by having him read a Seussian ode to their new value meal, inexplicably accompanied by a hip-hop beat and cherub cheerleaders.

Denny's gave us scary-looking chickens and a lot of blood-curdling screams. Breakfast, anyone?

The Census Bureau needs to be advertised apparently, so they threw together a bunch of comedic improvisers and had them act awkwardly, because kids think that awkward is funny these days. Do you trust the government yet?

Doritos seemed to go with the first three ideas that got tossed out at the marketing meeting: "Doritos in a Coffin!" "Dorito Samurai!" "Angry kid likes Doritos!" "Let's go home!" Ok, the little kid slapping his mother's date was pretty funny, but still.

Dockers presented us with a simple choice – be a man and stand in front of dirty bricks in their beige slacks and a white T-shirt or march around an idyllic field with a bunch of other dudes in sweaters and sing heartily about your lack of pants. You can keep your khakis, Dockers.

Dodge wins the award for most insidiously effective in the night-long trend of attacking your masculinity and suggesting their product as a means to defend it. In their ad for the Charger, we cut from one sad-looking man to the next, and the voiceover lists the compromises that he will make for his spouse ("I will carry your lip balm") Finally, a slow zoom on the last man's eyes cuts to a zooming Dodge Charger, and he tells us "because I do this, I will drive the car I want to drive." This car, Dodge tells us, is "man's last stand."

Dove's William Tell Overture ad for their line of men's care prod-

See SUPERBOWL on page 6

Jazz evolves through to a new Flava in NoHo

Flava Evolution, the jazz quartet made up of University of Massachusetts students and alum, performing at Bishop's Lounge in Northampton last year. The group accompanied diners at The Sierra Grille on Sunday night.

By Manish Garg
Collegian Correspondent

The subtle but important art form known as jazz doesn't appear in the mainstream anymore; it is simply not a part of the modern culture of pop and rock music that most people are used to these days. Music from rock groups like the Beatles, Pink Floyd, Led Zeppelin and more modern groups such as Coldplay, Metallica, Dave Matthews Band and others have been dominating the music scene since the 1960s.

However, this hasn't stopped the instrumental quartet known as FlavaEvolution from bringing its clear passion for jazz to the world through skill and dedication. It is clear that these musicians have studied their respective instruments their entire lives; they seem to live, eat, sleep, and breathe music.

During Sunday night's performance at the Sierra Grille in Northampton, FlavaEvolution displayed exactly what it is capable of.

Saxophonist Frank Newton used four different instruments during the performance, including two saxophones and two clarinets. Matt Schumer, another saxophonist, played various kinds of saxophones during the show, as well. Paul Olesuk played trombone and David Piechi used an upright bass for the duration of the show.

All four members played as if their instruments were simply extensions of their bodies, performing complicated jazz riffs that seemed to come to them as easily as breathing or walking.

Another unique aspect of the band is that it does not use any special percussion to add to its sound. Any percussion needed was performed either by clapping or by using instruments, and the music still gave a strong beat that made listeners bob their heads or get up and dance to it. It was impossible to sit still while listening to the performance.

Sunday's concert began without any opening or introduction. As soon as the band was ready, it kicked off a song by Leonard Bernstein called "Some Other Time." After that, the group gave the audience a unique introduction: every time one member of the band said "FlavaEvolution" the rest of the band would repeat "FlavaEvolution" in chorus. This was funny and interesting at first, but quickly became a nuisance as the performance wore on.

Antics aside, the first few songs were slow and generic, generating little interest, as if they were played only to get the audience accustomed to the sound.

The group then performed a song called "Love for Sale" by Cole Porter. This was the first song that really indicated how much skill and passion the musicians could emit. This song strung together a strong swing beat, a very interesting set of melodic gymnastics and amazing solos by every member of the group.

The only other song in the first half that inspired similar interest to "Love for Sale" was "Stir Crazy", which was written by Newton himself. This song started with a long and fast-paced bass solo and later blended in the rest of the instruments, as each band member performed nicely-done solos.

The second half of the concert promised a more open repertoire of songs that displayed the passion and enthusiasm the band members had for the music they performed. This set included songs like "Computer Love" by Zapp and Roger, "Getaway" from Earth, Wind & Fire, and even a suite that included Britney Spears' "Toxic".

Jazz is a very difficult form of performance; years of training, practice, and patience go into understanding its subtle paradoxes and nuances. It is a musical form that often goes understated and underappreciated for all the hard work performers put into preparation and practice, often placed in the category of background music.

FlavaEvolution is a unique blend of styles that uses some amazing talent, innovative techniques, with an undying passion for music to battle the preconceived notions of jazz. They have been a band for almost a year, and continue with strong performances while having fun with their audience in a modern world dominated by pop culture.

Manish Garg can be reached at mgarg@student.umass.edu.

Who needs football with ads this dull?

SUPERBOWL from page 5

uets, following the life's journey of one man, put an interesting spin on the nightlong struggle to emasculate us. The message was ultimately the same, but given the traditionally feminine image of skin care products, the ad challenges men to be so comfortable in their masculinity that they can abide such a feminized brand.

However, not every advertisement was physically sickening. Here's a rundown of the ones that gave us a chance to brush the vomit from our teeth:

Emerald Nuts and Pop Secret teamed up for the most entertaining visual hilarity a crowd of very excited people watch a very excited dolphin tamer throw nuts and popcorn at very excited human dolphins albeit with the biggest let-down of a punch-line ("Awesome + Awesome =Awesomer"). The shot with the dolphin man flipping through the fire ring made it all worthwhile.

Audi's eco-fascist "Green Police" ad made pretty clever use of a pretty Cheap Trick, but was perhaps a bit over-enamored of its premise. Thirty seconds too long, Audi.

Google gave us a Parisian love story in search keys, from "did you mean: cafés near the Louvre" to "how to assemble a crib." It served more as a reminder of the Internet's usefulness than anything else, but it was still pretty neat.

CareerBuilder.com's underwear-only "casual Fridays" ad may have gone a little overboard with the pudgy office worker skin, but it definitely got the point across.

truTV's "Punxsutawney Polamalu" struck a pleasantly absurd chord with its tiny Pittsburgh Steeler and its jowly old town crier announcing "six more weeks of football." Here the ad's message was skillfully unscathed by its silly premise.

Cars.com's Timothy Richman was a more tasteful and better thought-out version of that Dos Equis "Most Interesting Man in the World" guy, who is basically a reworked series of Chuck Norris jokes. Still, the advertisement works mostly because he births a Bengal tiger.

Volkswagen tried to convince us that the "punch buggy" game should be played with every one of their cars. It shouldn't, but Stevie Wonder punching Tracy Morgan was a real treat.

Boost Mobile's parody of the "Super Bowl Shuffle" may have been based entirely on a pretty tired premise, but the main dude riding up on a power chair before advising the viewer to spend their savings on "a decent spray tan" was enough to elicit an honest laugh.

Doritos gave us three duds, but the one with the anti-bark collar switcheroo (mean man, clever dog, Doritos as fulcrum) provided some deliciously selfish comedy.

Coca-Cola's sleepwalking safari ad was undeniably fun to watch. It was a classy commercial fantasy with all the magic and earnestness (but secretly disingenuousness) we love about Coke's ads.

Budweiser went about four for six this year, providing their usual high caliber of big-budget, bite-size hilarity. One ad constructed a house out of Bud Light cans. The rock music and the laughter made the product fun, but the resultant chaos and destruction as the house was quickly disassembled by partygoers revealed the ad's real humor. Another one for Bud Light basically took the old "yazzzaaaaaa" formula and revamped it with auto-tune. The sense of bewilderment from the characters without the vocal effect completely sold the thin-but-goofy premise. Also there was T-Pain. A Bud Light parody of "Lost" may have been a bit out of place on CBS, but it felt just right for us. Fake Kate finds the downed plane's radio equipment, but some guy finds the plane's Bud Light. The guy wins, and raucous partying ensues. Bud Light's raucous partying theme continued with a group of astronomers celebrating the end of the world. When the asteroid turns out to be a space pebble, the partying intensifies. Life goes on, more beer, more partying! Yay!

Likely the night's best ad involved a Budweiser truck and the concerted effort of a town populated by (we can only assume) alcoholics. The image of a fully loaded beer truck rolling slowly over a human bridge was only topped by the chorus of the appropriately rousing "Stripes" theme music.

But the real winner Sunday night wasn't Budweiser, or even that other team the one that didn't have Peyton Manning. The crown, or trophy, or whatever, goes to those scrappy local advertisers lucky enough to snag a spot on the biggest ad night of the year.

Car dealers, law offices, pest control you are the reason television is worth watching, and we salute you.

The rest of you mega-corporations need to find a shallower well to drop your millions into. We hear the Internet is pretty popular with the kids these days.

Garth Brody can be reached at gbrody@student.umass.edu.

Beer commercials seemed the most prevalent of those shown during the 2010 Super Bowl, such as this house made out of Budweiser cans. Very few of this year's advertisements delivered in humor or originality, leaving television viewers wanting more.

See what you missed from the Cirque Dreams Illumination show...

check out our photo coverage at
DailyCollegian.com

Mix up your morning and take a breakfast break on us!
UMass Amherst students, staff, faculty, alumni, and friends are welcome!
MARK YOUR CALENDAR!
Morning Mixer in Memorial Hall
WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 10, 2010
&
THURSDAY, APRIL 15, 2010
8:30 - 10:30 a.m.
Start your day off right with complimentary bagels, fruit, coffee and assorted juices.
Receive a FREE 5-minute chair massage.
And...
Enter the drawing for a FREE UMass Amherst duffle bag of goodies!
UMass Amherst Alumni Association
Sponsored by the UMass Amherst Alumni Association, Bruegger's Bagels of Amherst, and Pierce Bros Coffee.
UMassAlumni.com • You were. You are. UMASS.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
Need to spread the word?
Reach more than 18,000 readers every day!
IT'S CHEAPER THAN YOU THINK!
On-Campus & Local Business Ads for $10
per column inch
R.S.O. Ads for $6.70
per column inch
CONTACT PAMELA:
thecollegian@gmail.com
413-545-3500
or stop by our office in the Campus Center basement

Merrimack claims first win at Lawler in decade

HOCKEY EAST from page 10

the Hockey East website, www.hockeyeastonline.com.

Any player that competed in the conference from the 1999-2000 season to the 2008-2009 season is eligible to be voted for. The Hockey East All-Decade Team will be announced during the 26th Annual Hockey East Championship tournament at TD Garden in Boston on March 19-20. Fans also have the opportunity to vote for All-Decade teams for individual schools as well as their favorite Hockey East teams.

Warriors win in third

Merrimack overcame UMass-Lowell with a 3-1 victory at Lawler Arena on Saturday night. Merrimack improved to 10-15-0 overall and 7-11-0 in conference play. Lowell, ranked 18th in the country, sits at 14-12-2 overall and 8-9-2 in Hockey East play. With the victory, the Warriors improved to 10-2 at home and defeated the River Hawks for the first time at Lawler Arena since Nov. 12, 2000, snapping a 13-game winless streak.

Chris Barton and Ryan Flanigan netted third period goals to clinch the victory, with both scores coming within a 60-second span of each other. Barton scored his 17th goal of the season and ninth in the last seven games. Flanigan scored a minute later sneaking the puck between the Lowell goaltender's pads, while Stephane Da Costa assisted on both of them.

The River Hawks' lone goal came in the second period, when David Vallorani recorded his ninth score of the season. The Warriors defense was the story in the final period, killing off seven power-plays. Goalkeeper Joe Cannata, making his first start since Jan. 22, saved 20 shots, including 11 in the third. Merrimack's power-play, ranked second in the country, was mildly effective on the night going, 1-for-4 on the evening.

Merrimack will face a talented Vermont team for a double-header at the Gunderson Fieldhouse, while Lowell will face red-hot Boston College at Tsongas Arena at UMass Lowell on Friday.

Michael Counos can be reached at mcounos@student.umass.edu.

Chris Braswell goes to block UMass' Terrell Vinson in a game on Jan. 30 at the Mullins Center. The 49ers were down at halftime to Fordham, but came back to win the game.

UMass-Lowell, seen here against UMass, fell to Merrimack 3-1 on Saturday night. Lowell is ranked 18th in the country with an 14-12-2 record and 8-9-2 record in Hockey East.

First place up in the air in A-10

By Scott Cournoyer
Collegian Correspondent

With the Atlantic 10 Conference Tournament just over a month away, the weekend was filled with down-to-the-wire thrillers, and a major upset could change the landscape drastically for the conference seeding.

Dayton improved their conference record to 5-3 with a suprising victory over second-ranked Xavier Saturday afternoon. The Flyers were beaten by out-rebounded, as forward Chris Wright had a game-high 9 boards. The Flyers, averaging 38.2 rebounds per game, had 42 against Xavier, 12 of which were offensive. Xavier forward Dante Jackson went 3-of-8 from beyond the arc, and now has a 3-point shooting percentage of 42.9 for the season. With the win, Dayton improves to 16-6 on the season, winning their last two games by 17 or more points in those contests. The loss snaps a four-game winning streak for Xavier. Over the last 11 games, the Musketeers have gone 9-2.

Charlotte gets past Rams

With the top spot still hanging in the balance, Charlotte traveled to Fordham Saturday to play the conference's worst team.

To their surprise, the 49ers were not the superior team on the court in the first half, trailing the Rams at half-time, while missing three free-throws. Fordham hung with the 49ers late into the second half, but Charlotte was too much for them to handle. Fordham forward Chris Gaston put in a season-high 32 points, going 14-of-17 from the free throw line. Charlotte guard Derrio Green had a team-high 24 points, going 5-of-9 from three-point range. The loss puts Fordham at 0-9 in conference play, while Charlotte stays atop the ranks in the Atlantic 10.

Despite a top 20 position in the Associated Press poll, Temple has been fighting to stay in conference games, resulting in a 5-3 A-10 record. Richmond continued to state their case for a top 25 vote Saturday with a win at home against the nationally-ranked Owls.

Spiders pull off upset

Despite the efforts of Temple forward Lavoy Allen and his 19 rebounds, the Spiders converted more points both in total shots made and from beyond the three-point line. Richmond guard Kevin Anderson had 29 points in the contest two points shy of a season-high. Richmond was on fire offensively, knocking down 57.8 percent of their field goal attempts, which was over 10 percentage points higher than their season average (.440). Despite out-rebounding Richmond in the second half, the Owls were not able to convert second-chance points and free throw attempts, ultimately losing, 71-54.

Richmond improved to 19-5 on the season, tying Rhode Island for third place with a 7-2 A-10 record. With the loss, Temple has dropped two of its last four games.

Mitchell, Spears win

The A-10 Player of the Week Honors were announced Sunday afternoon, with Saint Louis guard Kwamain Mitchell and Charlotte forward Shamari Spears winning this week. Spears scored 15 points and brought down 12 rebounds in Charlotte's victory. Mitchell helped the Billikens win a highly-contested battle against La Salle, scoring 28 points in the 68-65 win. Fordham forward Chris Gaston took home the Rookie of the Week award, scoring a career-high 32 points and grabbing 12 rebounds, as Fordham fell to Charlotte 77-72 Saturday.

Flyers, 49ers meet

Dayton hopes to continue their run this week, as they face conference-leader Charlotte at home tomorrow. The Spiders travel to URI to see who ultimately emerges as third-place holder in the conference. Both teams will go into the matchup with four-game winnings streaks on the line.

Scott Cournoyer can be reached at scournoy@student.umass.edu.

Club hockey moves to regional playoffs, team awaits opponent action to push the Minutemen towards victory, as defender Sean O'Sullivan sent the puck into the back of the net.

CLUB HOCKEY from page 10

On a momentous occasion such as senior night, UMass wanted to keep its winning ways going. Bryant, who finished third in the NECHA East, proved to be too much to handle, as the Bulldogs (7-4-0) hounded the Minutemen 7-4.

Leonard returned to the goalkeeping position for the showdown, letting in seven goals, while saving 21 pucks from passing the line.

With the last of UMass' home games in the books, the Minutemen went on the road looking to secure the NECHA West. The two games left to play were against Westfield State and Keene State, two teams that UMass had defeated earlier in the season.

The game against the Owls (4-8-0 NECHA West) ended 4-2 in favor of the Minutemen. Forward Kevin Joyce earned a pair of goals (11 on the season). Powers meanwhile earned two assists, which brought his total for the season to 15. Joyce has two game-winning goals this season.

Looking to end its season on a high note, UMass downed the other flock of Owls (4-7-0 NECHA West) by the same score of 4-2. Goolsby and forward Chris McKenna each finished their regular season in a strong way, notching a goal, and each had an assist.

The club hockey regular season is now over for the Minutemen, with playoffs starting on Feb. 27. UMass won the NECHA West division title after securing victory over both Westfield and Keene.

With the NECHA regular season still not over, the Minutemen await to find who they will compete against in the regional playoffs. Behind them in the NECHA West standings are Connecticut, Western Connecticut, and Vermont.

Herb Scribner can be reached at hscribner@student.umass.edu.

Personalities in sports

The Daily Barometer
(Ore. State Univ.)
College News Network

In men's sports, every athlete has his own unique personality. Some are quiet, some are controversial and some are outgoing, but which type works the best to make a successful player? Does their personality really have something to do with the way they play?

I think it's safe to say that the most popular athletes are the ones that go out of their way to make sure the world knows who they are a true self-promoter. Let's call this group of players our "Mr. Socials."

These athletes are my favorites to follow: they are the definition of entertainment. Whether it's live on-air, during a game or on Twitter (my personal favorite), they always have something to say sometimes good and sometimes bad.

We can all agree the leader in being a Mr. Social out there has got to be Oregon State's very own Chad "Yes, I seriously changed my name to my jersey number" Ochocinco. First off, the man is a Twitter monster he tweets more than Miley Cyrus and Amanda Bynes.

He makes that site so much money, he owns part of the company now. We all know about Chad's on-field antics. People watch Bengals games to watch him; they want to see what he'll do after each score. I mean for goodness sake, Ochocinco literally plans his touchdown celebrations. Even with all this, is Chad still a great receiver? There is no doubt about it.

The second Mr. Social is one of my favorites: Lebron "The King" James. On the court, Bron-Bron loves the glory. He relishes being the center of attention at all times. It even starts in warm-ups, where he shoots trick shots to wow the fans that came early. James takes showboating to a brand new level. His emphatic dunks absolutely warrant celebrations and James is no stranger to on-court antics. He laughs, dances, talks trash and throws chalk (water bottles, too).

James displays every emotion on his face; it's really something unique. When James is in town, people pay big money to go see him people, some of whom may not be regular basketball fans, just want to see him do and say crazy things.

Off the court, Lebron is just as out in the open. He talks about parties he plans to attend, puts himself in flashy places wearing flashy gear and is someone who searches for cameras. Does it work for him? Is he productive during games? You bet he is.

And then there are the quiet, keep-to-themselves players. Let's tag them with "Mr. Hideaway." They don't talk much. They go to work, practice, play and that's it. These guys don't have social networking sites and they don't let people into their personal lives. All you hear about them is that they work hard and enjoy their jobs. Are they boring? Yes. Are they successful? Yes.

My prime Mr. Hideaway example is Kobe Bryant. (I will admit now that I think Bryant is hands down the best player on the planet and therefore this paragraph is biased it had to be said). Currently, you only see Bryant on the court. He shows up, plays the game and goes home. There's no after-party, there's no social networking, it's just basketball for him. There's a reason why this paragraph is short and it's because when Bryant doesn't have a basketball, he is boring.

Compare this to Michael Jordan (chalkboard scratching sounds), possibly the greatest athlete ever, who was more a Mr. Hideaway than a Mr. Social. With six NBA championships, Jordan had endorsements, zillions of dollars and the right to do whatever he wanted. He was the center of the sports universe not because he wanted to be in the spotlight, but because his game spoke for itself which gave him the glory he deserved and in my mind the glory that really means anything at all.

Ultimately, I think an athlete wants to be known for how they play their sport. The people with the championships are the ones who did nothing but focus on making their game better, rather than their image.

I challenge you to make your own opinions in regards to athletes and their personalities. I encourage you to decide which character type you like best and which you think leads to more success: Are you more for a Mr. Social or Mr. Hideaway?

If you were a professional player, what kind of a person would you be? These are the questions.

Disney college program
Magic. Experience. PAID INTERNSHIP.
Attend our recruitment presentation and discover why the Disney College Program is an opportunity you just can't miss!
University of Massachusetts Amherst
Thursday, February 11 @ 6:00 PM
Friday, February 12 @ 12:00 PM
Campus Center: 804-08
Recruiting for the Walt Disney World® Resort near Orlando, FL and the Disneyland® Resort in Anaheim, CA
Apply online prior to attending the presentation or if you are unable to attend, view an E-Presentation Dream it. Do it. Disney.
For more information or to get started, visit our Web site:
disneycollegeprogram.com
EOE • Drawing Creativity from Diversity • ©Disney

Brees, Saints bring championship to N.O.

The Daily Titan
(Cal. State Univ., Fullerton)

Last night the Saints defeated the Indianapolis Colts and won their first Super Bowl championship, making franchise history in Miami at Sun Life Stadium.

Professional analysts and football fans alike anticipated an outstanding game and the two teams did not disappoint.

It seemed as if the Colts were going to start the game during the slow first quarter, taking the lead with a field goal eight minutes in.

At the end of the first quarter, Colts quarterback Peyton Manning threw for a touchdown to wide receiver Pierre Garcon followed by an extra point by kicker Matt Stover to put the Colts in the lead at 10-0.

The Saints altered the course of the game by taking control in the second quarter. In the 10th minute of the second quarter, Saints kicker Garrett Hartley put his team on the board with a 46-yard field goal.

With five seconds left in the half, Hartley nailed a 44-yard field goal, tacking another three points on the scoreboard.

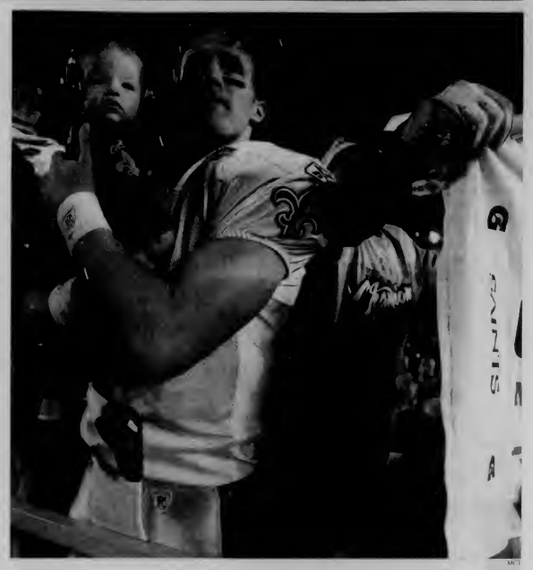
The Saints ran 26 offensive plays to the Colts' six that the Colts completed. At the end of the second quarter, it appeared as if the Saints picked up their game after a slow start.

The Saints lined up to kick off to the Colts at the beginning of the second half. The kickoff turned out to be a surprise onside kick, recovered by the Saints. That was the first pre-fourth quarter onside kick in the history of all Super Bowls. Six plays later, the Saints were able to take the lead with a 16-yard touchdown by quarterback Drew Brees to running back Pierre Thomas.

Beginning third quarter, the scoreboard read 13-10 after Hartley's extra point. A touchdown by Colts running back Joseph Addai added an extra point to the score, and a field goal by New Orleans left the Saints trailing 17-16 by the end of the quarter.

As the fourth quarter began, the Colts drove the field and on fourth and two, a Manning pass to wide receiver Reggie Wayne for a 14-yard gain to the Saints 36-yard line. An ineffective three downs forced the Colts to set up for a 51-yard field goal. The kick by Stover was no good, which left the Colts ahead by only one point.

The Saints took advantage, and tight end Jeremy Shockey drove the ball back for a touchdown. After the touchdown, the Saints attempted a two-point conversion that was ruled incomplete.



A challenge was requested by Saints Head Coach Sean Payton to review the play. The ruling was overturned and the Saints were granted the two points, leaving the Colts trailing by seven at 24-17.

As the Colts began to charge the field to gain possible momentum, Manning threw the game's only interception, which corner back Tracy Porter ran back for a touchdown. With Porter's touchdown and another extra point by Hartley, the score was 31-17 in favor of the Saints. The Saints kicked the ball back to the Colts with a little over three minutes remaining.

The Colts ran the kick off back to the 25-yard line and continued to charge the field with a succession of no huddle plays and shotgun formations. The Colts brought the ball all the way down to the New Orleans three-yard line. As Manning tried to score another touchdown, the Saints – even with a poorly rated defense – managed to stop the Colts from inching closer to the lead.

Fourth and goal at the Saints five-yard-line. Manning threw his last throw of the game that was ruled incomplete. On the last play of the game, Brees downed the ball that led to the clock running out and the end of Super Bowl XLIV.

Brees was named the game's Most Valuable Player as he completed 32-of-39 passes for 288 yards and a pair of touchdowns with no interceptions for the Super Bowl victory.

Drew Brees, holding his one-year-old son, led the New Orleans Saints to their first Super Bowl victory in franchise history. Brees was named the Most Valuable Player after throwing two touchdowns.

Lions coach Joe Jones squared off against his brother, Yale basketball coach James last Saturday. The Bulldogs defeated the Lions, 79-64.

Sibling rivalries intense

Columbia Daily Spectator
Caitlyn Newman

Anyone who has a sibling will tell you that the competition between brothers and sisters can be intense. In everyday situations, such as fighting over control of the remote, this sibling rivalry becomes nothing more than a petty argument. However, when siblings face off against each other as athletes, the situation gets more complex, as they must balance their own desire to win with the desire to see their sibling succeed. It is through this internal struggle that sibling competition becomes the ideal form of good sportsmanship.

If you need an example of a bit, this is true, just talk to the Columbia men's basketball coach, Joe Jones. On Saturday night, Jones faced off against his brother, the coach of the Yale men's basketball team, James Jones. The weekend matchup, which at first glance appeared to be out of the twilight zone, was a perfect example of sibling competition at work. While each coach was 100 percent focused on giving his team the best chance at winning the game, there were other forces at play as well.

"You know, when we lose, there's a part of me that's happy for him that he's won a game [illegible] It's like this thing that you can't explain unless you're in it," Joe Jones said. For most athletes, the sight of the opponent celebrating in victory is sickening, but this is not the case for Jones. After a game against Yale, regardless of the outcome, Jones is never completely happy or defeated. His relationship with his brother prevents his emotions from reaching the extremes, which is exactly the point of good sportsmanship. Children are taught at an early age to be humble and respectful in both victory and defeat. However, most athletes forget this message because it is incredibly difficult to remain calm and collected in a world that thrives off of emotion. What you end up with are athletes that alternate between the emotional extremes. If you need a guide to good sportsmanship, just turn to the Joneses of the world: the Manning brothers, the Williams sisters, the Barry brothers.

At this point, it's easy to find fault with my examples by pointing out that all of these duos are professional players or college coaches. In these cases, it's fair to argue that the siblings paint an overly positive picture to the media in order to avoid controversy. While it is true that sibling rivalries pose problems, the idea that brother and sister athletes display the truest form of good sportsmanship holds true even in amateur play.

I have competed with my brother at everything imaginable, from getting good grades to playing basketball. During the moments of competition, such as playing one-on-one, I tried my best to crush him (the little brother has to learn his place, right?). However, just as Jones pointed out earlier, I was never completely happy in victory or angry in defeat. I won't try to claim that I am a good sport. I don't like seeing the other guy win the trophy, and I don't necessarily want to shake his hand after a hard game. But when I compete against my brother, I'm as good a sport as I will ever be, and that's saying something.

If you've read this column expecting a solution to the grave problem that is unsportsmanlike conduct, then you're going to be disappointed. All I've provided is something to strive for – the ideal. Who knows, maybe you can get everyone to act like siblings by singing "Kumbaya" or something. Whatever the solution may be, the point is that siblings have figured out something that the rest of the sports world needs to pick up.

Banking for the EGeneration

We work here and bank here too!

eGeneration banking is delivered by eGeneration bankers like Cara and Mike.

Check out mycoolbank.com today!

Get great info, open accounts online and get awesome stuff like eChecking*, eStatements, Online Banking and Bill Pay. It's easy for you to choose your style of banking. There's even online live chat.

*$10 minimum deposit to open eChecking Account. No minimum balance required to maintain account. Other bank's ATM surcharge fees that are charged to the account during current statement cycle will be refunded on the last business day of the current statement cycle. Accounts closed or changed to another product during a current statement cycle will not receive a refund of the other bank's ATM surcharge fees.

EASTHAMPTON SAVINGS BANK
My Bank. My Future.
mycoolbank.com | 413.527.4111
Belchertown | Easthampton | Hadley | Northampton
South Hadley | Southampton | Westfield

Find ESB on facebook

Member FDIC

Crazy about Sports?
Then come write for the Collegian
Contact Jeffrey R. Larnard
Sports@DailyCollegian.com

Information Meeting
Wednesday, February 10
5:00 PM
Goodell 508
UMASS Amherst
PEACE CORPS
Life is calling. How far will you go?
Peace Corps
www.peacecorps.gov
800.424.8580

COMICS

WE WANT YOUR COMICS!

Questions?! Comments?!
E-mail us: comics@dailycollegian.com
Friend us on Facebook: "Collegian Comix"

SUDOKU

	2	1		6
9		6		5				3
5	3					7
					9
		9	2					8
			4			2
				3				5
6						4	1
8	7		5			6

PUFFTON VILLAGE
APARTMENTS AVAILABLE
Excellent location!
1/2 Mile from UMass
Spacious Apartments!
1, 2, & 3 Bedroom Townhouses
All rents include: heat, hot water, and cooking gas!
On site laundry, off street parking.
Basketball and Tennis Courts.
Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

Saturday Morning Breakfast Cereal by Zach Weiner smbc-comics.com

The war against women was lost quickly.

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20 - Feb. 18
Doing your part to help the environment does not include castrating a live bull.

pisces Feb. 19 - Mar. 20
You are only as young as the artists that you listen to. I guess this explains your fascination with the Kid's Bop CDs.

aries Mar. 21 - Apr. 19
Never take the last slice of buffalo chicken pizza. You will lose something that you hold dearly twice a week.

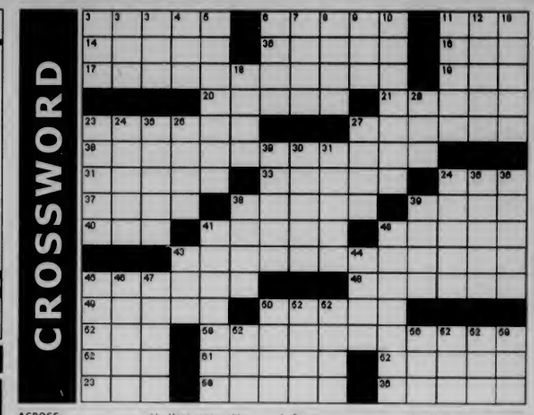
taurus Apr. 20 - May. 20
If Oscar Wilde can make it big, then shouldn't anyone with an appreciation for fine china?

gemini May. 21 - Jun. 21
Every county in the state needs their own A-Team. Tryouts are weekly and the only prerequisite is that you have a sweet catch-phrase.

cancer Jun. 22 - Jul. 22
Listen! What have your parents told you about ping pong balls and sensitive surfaces? Need they remind you what happened last time?

leo Jul. 23 - Aug. 22
Sarah Palin has finally done this country a good deed by proving that crib sheets can get you far in your career.

virgo Aug. 23 - Sept. 22
It is about time that the Doritos marketing team realized that their product is also a weapon for homeless people.



libra Sept. 23 - Oct. 22
A certain batch of Super Bowl ads are once again reminding us that the U.S Census is simply annoying.

scorpio Oct. 23 - Nov. 21
Peyton Manning hates losing almost as much as he hates germs transferred in a sportman-like handshake.

sagittarius Nov. 22 - Dec. 21
The one person in the world that annoys you shall henceforth be called "nub-tub".

capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 19
People do not want to see you eat casually at the DC. Show the world how a pimp eats a steak.

CROSSWORD

ACROSS
1. Farewell
6. A Rocky Mountain state
11. Feline
14. Actors who communicate entirely by gestures
15. Hue
16. A lyric poem
17. Applied
19. Wordplay
20. Lariat
21. Noblemen
23. Barely adequate
27. Rich in decorative detail
28. Looked into
32. Stalks
33. Marked by excessive enthusiasm
34. Wood-cutting tool
37. Makes a mistake
38. Mayhem
39. Couch
40. Drench
41. More reasonable
42. Spanish for "Mister"
43. Incursion
45. The underside of a structural component
48. Decrees
49. Crunchy
50. Confronted
53. How long something has existed
54. Clarification
60. Friend
61. Readjust
62. Spoon-shaped vessel with a long handle
63. Terminate
64. Saucy
65. A type of shovel

DOWN
1. French for "Friend"
2. Faint or poorly lit
3. Elf
4. Snake-like fish
5. Incapable of functioning properly
6. Freezes
7. Puts on clothing
8. Male singing range
9. Till
10. Dictated
11. Dried meat of the coconut
12. Grownup
13. Taut or rigid
18. Marketplace 22. Also
23. Hoarder
24. French for "Between"
25. Avoid or turn away
26. Precious stones
27. Relating to the ear
29. Pertaining to modern day Persia
30. Judge's hammer
31. Terminate before completion
34. Relating to audible sound
35. Underway
36. Alerts
38. Handle of a weapon
39. Anagram of "Seat"
41. Marksmen
42. Shoes
43. Contingencies
44. Tall woody perennial grass
45. Erect leafless flower stalk
46. A keyboard instrument
47. A tract of open land
50. Bother
51. Cards with just one symbol
52. Metropolis
55. Meadow
56. Faucet
57. A mountain on Crete
58. Aged
59. Born

Valentine's Day Special!
$20.00
Put your personalized Valentine's Day message in a heart!
To Run Friday Feb. 12
$15.00
$10.00
E-Mail t[illegible].com, Call 413.545.3500, or stop by our office in the Cam[illegible]er Basement for placement.

Off The Wall Games
Magic The Gathering
Discount role-playing games, Collectible card games (CCGs), Miniature war games and board games, fun for everyone!
Hours: 10-10 Wednesday-Sunday, 12-10 Monday, Closed Tuesdays
WARHAMMER 41 Russel St (Village Barn Shops) Rt. 9, Hadley 413-585-8451

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necessary. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

FOR RENT

Hobart Condos 3 bedrooms; hardwood floors, study in basement. Cable & Phone in all bedrooms & study. NOW SHOWING for June & September. NO FEES www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7979

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 Bedroom Apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug, or Sept. First Come, First Serve. Get Them While They Last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop By Or Call 549-0600

TUTORING SERVICES

Math, Physics, Chemistry, Stats & GRE. Call John 413-584-8643 JBoid42@yahoo.com.

SERVICES

Pregnant? Want to talk? Call birthright 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 Hour hotline 1-800-550-4900 www.birthright.org

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSTUESDAY

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 9, 2010

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The UMass swimming and diving team are gearing up for their fourth-straight A-10 title Feb. 17-20 in Buffalo, N.Y. Members of the team competed in the New England Invitational over the weekend.

UMass gearing up for A-10 Championships

By Jeffrey Engmann
Collegian Staff

In approximately a week and a half, the Massachusetts men's swimming and diving team will attempt to win an unprecedented fourth-straight Atlantic 10 title. But as the race gets closer, the Minutemen continue to simply prepare themselves one day at a time. The A-10 Championships will be held in Buffalo, N.Y., on Feb. 17-20.

"As long as you've done the work, there's no such thing as too much rest," said UMass men's coach Russ Yarworth.

The Minutemen didn't compete in the New England Invitational over the weekend, and will go into the A-10 Championships with more than two weeks since their last meet. Throughout the season coaches Bob Newcomb and Yarworth have stressed that the vigorous schedule, which is composed of dual meets and invitationals against strong programs out of the conference, are ultimately preparation for the Minutemen for the conference championships. Nevertheless, UMass hopes the time off will help rejuvenate their bodies and keep them sharp, as they remain focused on their ultimate goal.

The Massachusetts womens swimming and diving team had a strong showing in the race, finishing fourth in the meet, which was also held in Buffalo last year.

Six members of the Minutewomen competed in the New England Invitational over the weekend. The invitational was held in Chestnut Hill, Mass., and featured several schools from the Northeast. Swim programs from Keene State College in New Hampshire, as well as Providence College and Bryant University in Rhode Island, and host Boston College competed in Saturday's meet.

The Minutewomen took advantage of the opportunity to hit the water and performed well. Sophomore Dorothy Polatin had a very strong day, as she emerged victorious in the 500 yard freestyle. She did so in impressive fashion, defeating the second-place finisher by nearly six seconds, while also placing third in the 200 yard freestyle event.

The first event of the day was the 200 freestyle relay, with the quartet of senior Ashley Dress, freshman Erin Phinney, Lauren Mark and Dorothy Polatin finishing second with a time of 1:46.55. The team was slightly more than two seconds behind first place finisher BC. In the 100 yard breaststroke, freshman Lauren Mark finished forth with a time of 1:10.22. Freshman Danielle Sekurski competed in the 200 women's butterfly event and placed fifth.

Several of the Minutewomen who competed in the race on Saturday will be instrumental to the team next season, as they will attempt to fill the spots of five graduating seniors.

Jeffrey Engmann can be reached via email at jengmann@student.umass.edu.

Black Bears beat UNH twice, Fans participating in HE voting

By Michael Coupos
Collegian Correspondent

Maine had a productive weekend with two vital wins over conference-leading New Hampshire.

The Black Bears improved to 14-9-3 on the season with the win and 11-6-2 in conference play. With a Massachusetts loss to Boston College, Maine moved into a tie with the Eagles for second place in the Hockey East.

Brian Flynn of the Black Bears scored a pair of goals in the 6-3 win Saturday night against the Wildcats. UNH had the game in control with a 2-0 lead going into the intermission courtesy of John Henrion and Stevie Moses, who each had first period goals. Maine responded in the second stanza with two goals within a minute of each other to knot up the game at two, with Flynn and Robby Dee both scoring off of rebounds. The Black Bears ended the period with another strike to the back of the net when Theo Anderson snuck a the puck by UNH goaltender Brian Foster to give Maine their first lead going into the third period.

Joey Diamond gave the Black Bears a two-goal advantage with a power-play goal, but New Hampshire quickly responded when Bobby Butler and Paul Thompson teamed up to find Phil DeSimone for his eighth goal of the season and cut the deficit to one. Flynn got his second goal on a breakaway, making the score 5-3, and an empty netter sealed the 6-3 victory.

Maine outshot UNH 40-30, while goaltender Scott Darling had an impressive game, stopping 27 shots. Foster made 34 saves in net. Maine returns to action this weekend against Boston University. New Hampshire will host Providence on Friday night.

Fan voting to play part

Hockey East Commissioner Joe Bertagna announced last Wednesday that fans will be able to vote for the All-Decade team online. Voting, which is sponsored by Torpso Hockey, will be available until March 9 on

See HOCKEY EAST on page 7

Phil DeSimone of UNH tries to score against UMass in a game earlier this season. DeSimone faired better against Maine, scoring his eighth goal of the season, but the Wildcats fell to Maine, 6-3.

Junior Sean Busch won the pole vault record over the weekend while setting a new UMass record. This week, Busch took fifth place in the Giegengack Invitational.

Medley finishes strong
Boone, Doyle, Roa impressive

By Michael Wood
Collegian Staff

Traveling to Yale University over the weeked for the Giegengack Invitational, the Massachusetts track and field teams turned in another solid performance.

On the men's side, the Minutemen qualified two members for the New England championship, beginning with sophomore Daniel Wu in the team's first event Friday afternoon. Wu won the long jump with a distance of 22-06.5 feet, qualifying for the NEC's while giving his team a strong first victory to start off the weekend.

Following Wu on Friday was the distance medley relay team, where Josh Boone, Joseph Doyle, Scott VanderMolen and Jonathan Pierce combined for a fifth place finish. Their combined time of 10:04.74 was good enough to qualify them for the Eastern College Athletic Conference championship. UMass coach Ken O'Brien was pleased with how his team performed heading into the second day of competition.

"We had some nice performances right out of the blocks," O'Brien said. "This weekend is a pretty good psychological and emotional jolt for the kids, and they reacted pretty well to it. Dan was great out of the gate, and the medley team turned out a great effort."

On Saturday, the Minutemen were led by senior Andrew McCann, who captured 10th place in the 3,000-meter run. Finishing in a time of 8:32.89 minutes, McCann missed qualifying for the New England championship by .89 seconds.

Another strong finish for UMass came from junior Sean Busch, who last week won the pole vault event while setting a school record in the process. This week, Busch took fifth place in the pole vault, reaching a height of 15-03.00 feet.

"We did a good job," said O'Brien. "With so many different schools than normal, it was nice to see they guys hold their own out there. We're right where we need to be right now."

Also competing in the invitational, the women's track and field team was impressive in their performances on both days.

Leading the way for the Minutewomen was the distance medley relay team of Karen Roa, Michelle Jenssen, Gina Perno, and Courtney Baldwin. The four runners combined for a UMass record 11:49.37, while finishing second in the event. They improved on their previous ECAC qualifying time and beat the previous school record by four seconds.

Jenssen later went on to qualify for the New England championship with her seventh place finish in the 400-meter run. Jenssen, a member of the 4x400-meter relay as well as the distance medley, also helped Brittany Bakanowski, Erika Unger, and Deanna Julian finish third in the 4x400-meter relay on Saturday, with the foursome combining for a time of 3:57.91.

Both teams will be competing for the fifth-straight week this Friday when they travel to Boston for the annual Valentine Invitational.

Michael Wood can be reached at mewood@student.umass.edu.

Club hockey wins title

By Herb Scribner
Collegian Staff

After a strenuous season on the ice, the Massachusetts club hockey team captured the Northeast Collegiate Hockey Association's west division title on Saturday against Westfield State Next for the Minutemen is the NECHA playoffs, which began on Feb. 27 with regional's.

It's been a long road for UMass (19-8-0, 9-2-0 NECHA West) since returning from the winter break with the NECHA playoffs just around the corner.

The Minutemen suffered an 11-4 loss to New York in their first game at the Mullins Center practice rink. The game against the Violets (12-14) showed little offensive production from the Minutemen, as well as a defense that couldn't find its way around the ice.

Scoring for the Minutemen during the game was senior forward Alec Goolsby, who before the break was on an offensive tear not only for UMass, but in the conference. Goolsby scored his 18th goal of the year, nearly double the amount he scored in the 2008-2009 season. Goolsby has 22 points on the year, good for eighth in the conference, and has also notched two game-tying goals, putting him in a tie for first in the conference.

Also netting a goal for UMass in its loss against New York was forward Danny Amao who matched his single goal in the game with a quick assist that helped the Minutemen provide a little more offense.

UMass' lapse in defensive pressure could be seen in the switch between goalies in the game. Freshman Joe Iadarola split time with senior Mark Leonard during the game, with Iadarola letting up six goals amid the 35 shots taken at him. Leonard stopped 11 scores, but also allowed five goals.

After a heart-breaking loss to the Violets, the Minutemen continued their home stretch when they competed against Western Connecticut Bouncing back against the Colonials (7-4-1 NECHA West), UMass found its way to the net while protecting their own in a 4-2 victory.

Similar to earlier in the season, Goolsby netted a goal for the Maroon and White along with fellow graduate student forward captain Reed Powers.

Iadarola got the nod in net and was impressive, allowing two goals in the 28 shots taken.

Northeastern came to the Mullins Center a week later attempting to knock-off a highly-motivated Minutemen side. Unfortunately for the Huskies (8-3-0 NECHA East), UMass worked hard to secure their 4-3 victory.

Goolsby produced offensively again for UMass in the thrilling match between state rivals. This time for the senior captain, it was from a different angle, as Goolsby had two assists during the game.

Amao found his way to the net again in the contest, along with forwards Julian Maleski and Michael Hartlett. Even the defense got in on the

See CLUB HOCKEY on page 7

Senior Alec Goolsby led the Minutemen to victories over Westfield State and Keene State over the weekend, as the Minutemen grabbed the NECHA west title.

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

HIGH: 36 LOW: 18 www.DailyCollegian.com THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 11, 2010

Gay marriage ban hits federal court
UM prof. testifies in landmark marriage case

By Michelle Williams
Collegian Staff

Over the past decade, seven state courts have ruled that denying gays and lesbians the right to marry is a violation of the state constitution. In 2004, the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court voted to allow gay marriage, with Chief Justice Margaret Marshall commenting that the Commonwealth's constitution "forbids the creation of second class citizens" and that "the right to marry means little if it does not include the right to marry the person of one's choice."

Across the country in California, many residents were allowed the same rights for a brief period, beginning in 2004, when San Francisco Mayor Gavin Newsom and other city officials began issuing same-sex marriage certificates, which allowed more than 4,000 couples to marry in the area.

That changed during the state elections of 2008, however, when a constitutional amendment titled Proposition 8 was passed in California. The amendment added the clause "only marriage between a man and a woman is valid or recognized in California" to the state constitution.

Following the passage of Proposition 8, protesters quickly organized against the amendment, filing suit to block it in court. On May 26, 2009, the Supreme Court of California defended the voter-approved same-sex marriage ban in a 4 to 3 vote. The judges also decided at that point in time to allow the 18,000 gay couples wed prior to the ban to remain officially married.

On Jan. 11, a case called Perry v. Schwarzenegger was brought to the federal court level at the U.S. District Court for the Northern District of California, the ninth district, and will decide whether to allow Californians the right to marriage, regardless of gender.

Perry v. Schwarzenegger is a federal case filed by two same-sex couples, Kristin Perry and Sandra Stier of Alameda County and Paul Katami and Jeffrey Zarrillo of Los Angeles, who were denied the right to marry by county registrars, against the state of California, and will decide whether Proposition 8 violates the equal protection clause of the 14th Amendment of the U.S. Constitution, which declares, "No state shall deprive any person of life, liberty or property without due process of law; nor deny to any person the equal protection of the laws."

This case has been brought to the U.S. district court-level by lawyers Theodore Boutrous, David Boies and Theodore B. Olson, the latter two being best known for representing opposing parties in the 2000 election case between George W. Bush and Al Gore. Representatives for both sides called historians, political scientists and other experts to the stand for testimony, including University of 2008 saw the passage of Proposition 8, the California constitutional amendment prohibiting same-sex marriages, which has generated large protests such as these in San Francisco.

See MARRIAGE on page 3

UMass reorganizes federal research cash

By Alex Roche
Collegian Staff

In an attempt to acquire additional federal research revenue, representatives for the University of Massachusetts Michael Malone, the vice chancellor for Research and Engagement, and Tom Milligan, executive vice chancellor for University Relations, have announced a reorganization plan which also seeks to strengthen University Relations in Boston and with local community leaders.

The recently approved proposal was first introduced in March 2009 and is geared towards interdisciplinary programs.

The goal is to centralize the large proposals such programs receive, as well as to collaborate with other universities and colleges, something Malone said will help UMass build stronger relationships with other institutions. Malone said that the reorganization will help coordinate the different schools under one umbrella subject.

In an effort to reassure UMass students, Malone said that the reorganization of research money will not affect tuition or fees in any way. Malone said it is a plan which will help integrate UMass with other schools by building relationships, as well as improving research activities and relations in the Boston area.

Malone said that he wants to add the capability in the University Relations office to work with big proposals, mostly ones over $1 million. Malone added that the reorganization will help make dealing with these proposals run more efficiently and said he hopes this will help the faculty work more efficiently. He also wishes to entice faculty members to stay at the University, rather than accepting outside offers.

According to Malone, improving the way the faculty

See RESEARCH on page 3

VC candidate speaks about future priorities

By Cameron Ford
Collegian Staff

Dr. Kevin E. Charles, the assistant vice president of student and academic services at the University of New Hampshire, held a public forum Tuesday evening to discuss his plans for the future should he become a vice chancellor at the University of Massachusetts.

The session was one of two Charles held that day; the first was restricted to students only, with the later public forum welcoming everyone. He was the last of the four candidates for the position of vice chancellor of student affairs and campus life to hold such sessions over the past week.

Approximately forty people turned up for the public session at 4 p.m. in the Campus Center basement, most of whom appeared to be UMass faculty and staff, along with a handful of students and Amherst residents.

Charles received his B.S. in Health and Physical Education from East Stroudsburg University in Pennsylvania, later going on to earn an M.S. in Health Education and a D.Ed. in Higher Education, both from Pennsylvania State University. Copies of his resume were handed out at the session, revealing that he has worked at a collegiate level since 1982. Charles started out working for the residence hall programs at Penn State, eventually moving up to managerial positions with health services and student affairs at Penn State, Western Kentucky University, and UNH. Now he hopes to add UMass to that already lengthy list.

After introducing himself, Charles informed the crowd about his motives for applying for the position, as well as the aspects of his credentials that set him apart from the other three candidates.

"I'm applying for the position because it's a step up for me," he said. "Unlike the other candidates, I'm not a sitting vice chancellor. I do have one year of experience as an interim vice, and so I've been around the table and I've been in that role, but the job is so different at that point; it's about maintaining the status quo until new leadership comes in. So that's what I did for that year [2003]... and from that point on I had decided that what I'd like to do is to move to a vice chancellor position.

"I'd love to stay in New England," he went on. "I liked Kentucky, and I'm from Pennsylvania so of course I'll always love Pennsylvania, but New England is really special. But it has to be the right professional opportunity as well, and this looks like it. [UMass] looks like a university on the move. It looks like a university with the potential to do some new things, and also looks like a university that is very challenged, especially with finances."

Charles has certainly had some experience with that. In 2009, the University of New Hampshire was able to turn a small profit on their once-indebted operating revenue after several rounds of layoffs, tuition and fee increases, and other cost-cutting measures.

Indeed, Charles worked quickly to stamp out any doubts that he was unsuited to deal with such unprecedented challenges, stating that it was "extremely exciting" for him to possibly take on those challenges again in the future.

Charles also highlighted his plans for increasing student enrollment and retention rates, the "fundamental principle" being "to go where people are," spreading the reach of UMass' sphere of influence.

"Having a one-on-one conversation is much more powerful than having a brochure on hand. When you do recruit students, there has to be a support system in place for retainment purposes."

Charles also revealed some of his priorities for the near future when prompted during a subsequent question and answer session.

"I think that I would put my number one priority as having an engaged, involved, vibrant student body that is connected to the offices and services that I am responsible for in a way that is unprecedented," he said. "I

See CHARLES on page 2

Dr. Kevin E. Charles spoke on Tuesday regarding what his objectives would be if he received the vice chancellor of student affairs position.

Snow dud ...

MATT ROCHELEAU/COLLEGIAN

University officials closed campus Wednesday after weather reports predicted more than five inches of snow. Most areas only received a dusting of the white stuff, however, including the Minuteman statue.

ARTS & LIVING
Old Hearts for Haiti
The Young at Heart Chorus performs live tonight at the FAC for the "Stand with Haiti" benefit concert.
SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS
Different look, same goals
This season's seniors will look to lead the UMass lacrosse team to the top of their new conference and back into the NCAA tournament.
SEE PAGE 8

EDITORIAL & OPINION
Collegian columnist Leigh Greaney pokes at the power of proverbs in American society.
SEE PAGE 4

DailyCollegian.com
Get a first look at the UMass tennis, lacrosse and softball teams in our online spring sports preview.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXX
ISSUE 18

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
413-545-3500
Fax 413-545-3699
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF William McGuinness
MANAGING EDITOR Matt Rocheleau
MANAGING WEB EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
BUSINESS MANAGER Daniel Jette
PRODUCTION MANAGER Michael Sarkes
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Kirsten Swenson
ADVERTISING MANAGER Michael Tortorici
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Amanda Joinson
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Shayna Murphy
COPIES EDITOR Andrew Witts
EDITORIAL EDITOR Alyssa Creamer
NEWS EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS EDITOR Jeffrey R. Larnard
PHOTO EDITOR Matthew Harrison
IT MANAGER Victor Jacek
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Matt Zolnierz
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Nicole Jacinto
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Norman Provost
CLASSIFIED MANAGER Katelyn Tamilio
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Justin Gagnon
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Elyse Horowitz
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Cal Stannell
ASSISTANT COPIES Domonic Mei
ASSITANT EDITORIAL Benjamin Moriarty
ASSITANT EDITORIAL Michael Phillis
ASSITANT EDITORIAL Matthew M. Robare
ASSISTANT NEWS Samuel Butterfield
ASSISTANT NEWS Jenn Heshion
ASSISTANT NEWS Chris Shores
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jay Auer
ASSISTANT SPORTS David Beinich
ASSISTANT SPORTS Adam Miller
ASSITANT PHOTO Maxwell Sparr
ASSITANT PHOTO Samantha Webber
SENIOR PRODUCER Sara Cody
SENIOR PRODUCER Pete Rizzo

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded as 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1996. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

PRODUCTION CREW
on staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Sam Butterfield

COPY EDITOR
Chelsea Dugan

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Sarkes

Candidate Charles holds final forum

CHARLES from page 1

don't think it's unrealistic for an institution like [UMass] to say that we're going to have the best student affairs organization, at least in New England.

"I would also like to know that the Living and Learning Communities…are thriving and that we've got great faculty involved in them, and that everything is being assessed.. that finances may be challenging, but we're managing them because we've got the right tools, and more importantly the right people. And I think everybody will be generally happy with what we're doing. That would be my vision."

How will he know if everyone is happy? Charles stressed the importance of campus-wide questionnaires and surveys, citing a 90 percent response rate at UNH.

"Focus groups are a big part of what we do [at UNH]…ranging from focus groups on health issues to focus groups of RAs saying how all their residents perform," he said.

When asked what he felt his biggest non-financial challenges would be, Charles said that assessing his new work environment would be the most significant.

"As with any new job, there are fundamental challenges. One is who is there, and what they think: Is there a culture, a history in the organization that supports positive and forward thinking, or is there one that says we ought to maintain the status quo? What's typical is that there's someone who's involved in that, so I think it's a challenge to assess that and make sure that the leader of that organization is making clear that there probably will be some things that need to change over time."

Cameron Ford can be reached at cford@student.umass.edu.

COLLEGIAN FILE PHOTO

The PVTA has installed extra bike racks on some buses, one of the many ways it has tried to limit the number of cars commuting to campus.

UM Transit's green work earns it an "A"

By Laura Lovett
Collegian Staff

Plentiful, efficient transportation, student involvement, and a green initiative have earned the University of Massachusetts' transit system an "A" in the 2010 college sustainability report.

Director of UMass Transit Al Byarn said the primary reason for earning the grade was "the large usage from the student population," adding that "it's free and easy to use, the only thing you have to do is look up the bus schedule."

UMass' transport is a part of the Pioneer Valley Transit Authority's (PVTA) Five College network, which means transportation is free to all students and faculty members of Smith, Amherst, Mount Holyoke, Hampshire and UMass. However, the system is not exclusive to students, faculty and staff, with the PVTA helping many citizens of Amherst and the Pioneer Valley get around each day.

The ridership on the PVTA buses has significantly increased in the past year, rising 6.86 percent, and now carries 14,000 to 16,000 passengers a week, according to numbers in the report. The transit system makes it more accessible for students to take advantage of the opportunities offered by the Five Colleges, helping many students take classes at different colleges.

According to Byarn, in the future months, UMass Transit hopes to increase service "if the economy improves."

Despite the top grade, some students are still reluctant to use the bus system.

"I have never used [UMass Transit]," said UMass student Emily Gonsalbes. "I have just never gotten around to figuring it out."

The bus schedule is posted online at the PVTA website, pvta.com, but some students suggested they are unwilling to go through the effort of understanding the multitude of bus routes.

"It was only difficult when I didn't know how to read the bus schedule," said Rachel Leavitt, a UMass freshman. "But, it is pretty easy to use, once you figure it out."

Some members of the faculty also use the PVTA system, hoping to avoid the fees and chaos of parking on campus.

"[The PVTA] is very convenient," said Thomas Moor, a computer consultant who takes the bus from Sunderland to get to work at UMass everyday. "It comes right to the end of my street."

According to Byarn, UMass Transit has taken on a green initiative in the past year with success. The University is attempting to use cleaner fuel to power their buses, and also make it esser to walk and bike to the campus rather than driving in. "We are always looking for alternative, cleaner fuel to use," he said.

Currently, the campus buses use ultra-low sulfur diesel fuel, one of the cleanest available fuels for buses.

For their efforts providing viable alternatives to single-occupancy vehicles on campus, UMass Transit was awarded the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency's Commuter's Choice Award in 2006.

Many academic departments are involved in the transit system, according to Byarn. Computer Science researchers have recently worked installing a tracking system into PVTA buses, which will eventually allow riders to track buses' locations in real time online.

"We have been working with the engineering department for years," said Byarn. He expressed hopes to expand student involvement, and continue the strong connections already made in various academic departments.

The PVTA has long made use of the school's large student work force, which is one reason it scored high on the sustainability report card. 90 percent of employees are UMass students, including 50 student bus drivers.

"Our student work force is excellent," said Byarn. "They are our bread and butter."

'Going green' remains a popular notion among the student body, according to Byarn.

"I think the [green initiative] is very important to the students, it is critical to their futures to begin saving energy," he said. "Going green should be ingrained in every lifestyle."

Environmental protection is key to many students using the bus system, Leavitt said.

"It is a lot better to take the bus than have everyone coming on to campus with their own cars polluting the air."

"This is a move in the right direction for the PVTA," said Molly Flynn, a UMass freshman and member of MASSPIRG. "Becoming more environmentally friendly sends the right message; that the PVTA cares about more than just transporting people."

However, others like Moore said that environmental protection is not a top priority when he steps on the bus.

"On a scale of one to ten, environmental safety is about a two or a three," he said.

Byarn hopes to carry UMass Transit's progress into the future.

"We are working on new ideas everyday," he said. "We are currently in preliminary discussions to get new hybrid buses for the school."

Laura Lovett can be reached at lelovett@student.umass.edu.

AMHERST COLLEGE
Andrew W. Mellon Post-Baccalaureate Curatorial Fellowship at the Mead Art Museum 2010-12

The Mead Art Museum at Amherst College is pleased to accept applications for its second Andrew W. Mellon Post-Baccalaureate Curatorial Fellowship, a highly competitive, grant-funded full-time position from summer 2010 to summer 2012 open to recent Five College graduates of exceptional promise from any academic major. Fellows undertake substansive collections' research; organize a small exhibition; and produce a publication. To learn more, and to apply on-line before February 19, 2010, please visit https://jobs.amherst.edu.

Amherst College is an equal opportunity and encourages women, persons of color, and persons with disabilities to apply. Amherst is committed to increasing diversity, and candidates who believe they will contribute to that goal are encouraged to apply.

GARDASIL.
[Human Papillomavirus Quadrivalent (Types 6, 11, 16, and 18) Vaccine, Recombinant]

INTERESTED IN GARDASIL?
GARDASIL* IS WIDELY AVAILABLE AND MANY PRIVATE INSURANCE PLANS* COVER IT.

TALK TO YOUR CAMPUS HEALTH CENTER OR OTHER HEALTH CARE PROFESSIONAL.

You are encouraged to report negative side effects of prescription drugs to the FDA. Visit www.fda.gov/medwatch or call 1-800-FDA-1088.

While your insurance company may reimburse for GARDASIL, your eligibility for coverage and reimbursement for GARDASIL depends on your individual insurance benefit. You can contact your insurance company for details on coverage for GARDASIL.

MERCK

Gay marriage moves towards highest court

SMCTV

Same-sex marriage advocates are hoping that California's Proposition 8 will be struck down in the U.S. District Court case Perry v. Schwarzenegger, which could ultimately serve as a national test case.

MARRIAGE from page 1

Massachusetts Professor Lee Badgett.

A professor of economics, Badgett has studied gender and sexuality issues since the early 90s. This past summer her book, "Money, Myths, and Change: The Economic Lives of Lesbians and Gay Men," was published, and has provided much of the current statistical and analytical data on sexual orientation discrimination and family policy. During the trial, Badgett cited statistics from Massachusetts, a state that has allowed gay marriage since 2004, to show that divorce rates of heterosexual couples have not been affected.

Badgett became involved in the trial after Boies and Olson requested she speak on her recently published works. Her book documents the economic benefits of same-sex marriage, noting that "if you don't let gay couples get married, they don't spend money on weddings and other expenses. It is a loss to the state."

Badgett long ago became involved in the initiative for equal marriage rights, and the issue has deep roots in her own life.

"I was always someone interested in the civil rights movements," she said. "I thought that the issue of the general principle of equality is one that our country is built on."

As a lesbian herself, the issue of equal marriage rights is personal to Badgett.

"Being a lesbian made me closer to the issue, but even if I hadn't been, I still believe that I'd be involved anyways," she said.

Other activists for LGBT rights believe that the issue of gay marriage affects everyone, regardless of which coast one lives on.

Gary Lapon, the leader of the Western Massachusetts Equality Across America group, feels the results of this case could easily affect other states.

"If Proposition 8 is overturned in the courts, it would set an important precedent," said Lapon. "It would be a big step forward, possibly something approaching a Brown v. Board of Education decision, depending on the wording of the decision."

Lapon also fears the inverse decision and its potential national implications.

"If Proposition 8 stands, we could lose marriage equality here," he said. "And as long as the Defense of Marriage Act stands, same sex couples are denied over 1000 federal benefits that are granted to married heterosexual couples, so marriage here is still separate and unequal."

One option states have considered and sometimes trended towards is civil unions. These allow for same-sex couples to have the legal benefits of marriage, but aim to gain more support by not using the word "marriage." Yet for many, to be allowed anything less than the rights of a heterosexual married couple is not true equality.

"A civil union for gay couples, while heterosexual couples can marry, is still enshrining inequality into the law," said Lapon.

Such opinions have been documented in Badgett's data. Citing Massachusetts statistics from 2004, Badgett said, "37 percent of gay and lesbian couples got married in the first year. In states that only allow civil unions, the numbers are between 10 and 12 percent."

Testimony in the trial concluded Jan. 27, although the battle between the two sides is far from over. Both continue to present their points through the media as they await the decision of Chief Judge Vaughn R. Walker. A decision is expected to come at its earliest in March, though no definite date has been set. Walker, who tried the case without a jury, stated in a press conference that he would study the evidence and other briefs presented by both sides before hearing final arguments.

Even after Walker reads his decision, it is expected the case will continue until it reaches the United States Supreme Court.

Michelle Williams can be reached at mwwilli@student.umass.edu

University looks to reorganize and expand research funding works will ultimately improve the atmosphere in which they are working, and will also benefit the students of UMass. Malone said that thanks to this reorganization, students will be able to receive high quality scholarships to help finance the rising costs of higher education.

RESEARCH from page 1

According to UMass student Nelly Adamietz, "It's a great and efficient way to better our college. I think that the fact that it will help students with scholarships as well makes it even more appealing."

Sharon Kennaugh, director of state government relations for UMass' University Relations, said she will be working towards achieving the goals set forth by the reorganization plan with the Constituent Relations, a new office located in downtown Boston.

Ed Blaguszewski, director of news and information for the UMass News and Media Relations office, also discussed the importance of having representatives in Boston.

"It will be helpful to have a spot in Boston to articulate what the campus is working on and what our needs are," Blaguszewski said. "One of the goals of having relations in Boston is to establish federal relations and help make the University become more competitive. It is an effective way of getting out there and putting our best foot forward." Blaguszewski also added that reorganizing the University's research revenue will help UMass identify new funding opportunities, which he stated was the main goal of the reorganization as making an impact in Boston will help UMass become a top research university.

Patricia Phelan, a UMass student said "Establishing a place in Boston will be crucial in helping the University generate ties with business owners and federal offices. I'm interested to see the effects of the reorganization."

Tom Milligan, executive vice chancellor for University Relations, further expressed the importance of having a presence in Boston. Milligan stressed that besides having relations with federal offices, UMass will, more importantly, build relationships with local businesses, and the Boston community. Milligan added that in the Boston offices there will be fundraisers and a public affairs department, which will be involved in the state legislature.

Many alumni live and work in the local communities in and around Boston, making visibility there crucial to the success of this reorganization.

Alex Roche can be reached at aroche@student.umass.edu.

Career fair goes on despite snow

MATT ROCHELEAU – COLLEGIAN

UMass students interested in finding job placement after graduation visited the Career Fair in the Campus Center Auditorium Wednesday. The Summer, Co-op and Internship fairs begin today at 10 a.m.

Editor's Note:

The date for the Summer, Co-op and Internship fair was published incorrectly in Tuesday's paper. That fair will be held today, regardless of any potential weather-related delays or cancellations to other University events, from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. in the Campus Center.

For more information on the career fairs, visit http://www.umass.edu/careers/calendar/fairs.

— Collegian News Staff

Lincoln Real Estate
25 N Pleasant St • 413-253-7879 • www.amherstlincolnrealty.com
PROVIDING THE BEST OFF CAMPUS LIVING EXPERIENCE
24 HOUR MAINTENANCE
SAFE APARTMENTS
FRIENDLY STAFF
TWO GREAT LOCATIONS:
AMHERST CENTER AND HOBART LANE
WE START SHOWING APARTMENTS
FEB. 3RD FROM 11:30AM – 4:30PM M-F

UMASS AMHERST
United States Census 2010
IT'S IN OUR HANDS

Join the Portrait of America Road Tour: Tell Us Why You Count!

Educating the nation about the 2010 Census, the Portrait of America Road Tour is the largest civic outreach campaign in U.S. history.

Portrait of America is travelling for 1,547 days, across 150,000 miles, and will be seen by an estimated 18 million people.

Become part of history!
Portrait of America is coming to UMass Amherst on

Friday, February 12, 2010.

Stop by the Campus Center Concourse from 12 noon - 2 pm or the Mullins Center from 6 - 7 pm and contribute your story and photo.

Tell us why you count!

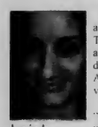
THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN



EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 11, 2010

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself"
- Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Judging a culture

Leigh Greaney

A great way to get a snap-shot of a culture is to look at its proverbs. These paradigms have helped map out a set of morals for centuries and have defined what is legitimate to believe. As Americans, we've got some really virtuous ones to attach to our brand.

We've got some uplifting ones, like, "Don't cry over spilt milk," "Gold is where you find it," and, "From little acorns mighty oaks do grow." We've even got some good advice ones, like, "If you can't ride two horses at once, you shouldn't be in the circus." Who could forget this one, "Leave well enough alone."

Some are funny, like, "In God we trust; all others pay cash." Some are serious (and borderline rude), like, "Put up or shut up." Some are even peacefully sexy, like, "Make love, not war."

However, some encapsulate American materialism, ignorance and other negative cultural traits. These bad eggs have leached into society to the point where they aren't seen as opinion, but as facts of life. People deem the thoughts instilled by these cliches to be natural since generations have passed them down as acquired knowledge.

These culturally poisonous faux factoids are well-known, yet don't present themselves as mentally dangerous. The proverb "ignorance is bliss" is a good example. It implies that a lack of knowledge results in a gain of happiness. The more a person knows, the more they have to worry about. Child-like naivete becomes an object of value, whereas scholarly notions of reality are taught to make a person pessimistic and unhappy.

Where is the love for education? Where is the value in opening up your eyes to seeing the world around you?

Where is the drive to make things better? Isn't bliss better when shared? It's much easier to share knowledge than to share ignorance, and much better for the world.

Here is another one: "Praise makes a bad man worse."

Really? What about confidence? Doesn't praise promote confidence? Doesn't confidence improve peoples' morale and ability to produce good quality work? Without praise, the only reward for hard work comes in the form of flat, green pieces of paper with dead presidents and quotes about God plastered on them. Maybe this bad man in question really just needs a pat on the back and he won't be so bad anymore. Maybe his Mom never hugged him enough?

A lack of praise doesn't shrink a bad ego; it only strengthens the desire for tribute.

These culturally poisonous faux factoids are well-known, yet don't present themselves as mentally dangerous. The proverb, "Ignorance is bliss," is a good example.

When forms of admiration only come in the form of cash, you get proverbs like this: "A poor man is always behind." So a rich man is always ahead? This hierarchy, when put into black and white, cannot only cause too lustful a material desire, but can also cause mental oppression among less fortunate people.

How much money you have in your pocket may put you behind some things, like payments or other menial monetary things, but it doesn't put you lower on the ladder of human worth. Money isn't everything. You can't be in front or behind of some things in life, you're just a part of a whole.

Poor or not, people are scattered all over a multitude of scales for all that life contains. Labeling a person for how much they're worth in dollar signs takes away a person's worth in wisdom and virtue. There are a lot of people ahead on morals who don't have much else to give but their knowledge of experience.

The vague nature of the word 'behind' and its relation to the proverb's meaning is seen in many other traditional American sayings, such as "boys will be boys." So what will they be exactly? They'll be their gender? They'll be a sex organ? That sounds tough.

When a mom has to come down into the basement where her third-grader is pelting his friend in the face with a BB gun and has to scream at him to spare his mortal enemy of losing an eye, it wouldn't be culturally shocking for her to go upstairs to a half-laughing husband who claims, "Boys will be boys!" In context, what that argument means to say is: Boys will rough each other up ruthlessly.

It is non-descriptive and generates stereotypes. If a little girl was to bite her friend's hand for stealing her mood ring, would her mother say, "Oh, girls will be girls!" to the mood ring thief's mother? Doubtful.

One proverb echoes through America as a silent threat. It would appear that it has only good, wholesome intentions in educating; however, this is a lie. "A dog is a man's best friend," would seem like an endearing, animal-loving and sweet statement. But, what is actually being said deserves further thought.

This proverb seeks to prove how important the relationship is between a pet and his/her owner. It shows the companionship between owner and pet in such a way that it personifies dogs, giving them human like qualities.

Like best friends, dogs are seen as trustworthy, dependable, loved, special and capable of having bonded attachment. It not only shows the kindling of man to animal, but it also displays what qualities best friends should have.

In a more practical sense, it shows society in a negative light. If man's best friend depends on him for everything, for instance food and shelter, doesn't talk back and is considered property, then what does that say about friendship? It enforces power complexes and hierarchy.

These same hierarchal ladder rungs that our culture has taught us to sit on, as demonstrated by many proverbs, are the same we stand on. If we're ever going to learn how to climb the ladder as high as we can, we're going to have to start thinking about the lessons we are taught, and not just as they are, but with full spectrum of thought.

Leigh Greaney is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at lgreaney@student.umass.edu

Why race is important

Shane Cronin

Last week, one of my teaching assistants held extra office hours for a paper due the following week. Aside from being obsequious, I sought genuine guidance on the assignment. I sat patiently for the two students ahead of me to finish with the T.A., who were there for, presumably, the same reasons. Quarters being tight as they often are for T.A.s, I couldn't help but overhear the conversation which transpired between one of the students and the aide.

"The terms 'people of color' and 'colored people' have two different connotations," the T.A. explained after skimming the student's first draft.

The student apparently used the phrases interchangeably in her paper unaware that 'people of color' is a term of empowerment, starkly contrasting 'colored people,' both a derogatory and antiquated expression. The T.A. gently admonished the student, who quickly apologized for the mistake, referring to a lack of certainty in racial phraseology. No harm done. Right?

Did I brand the student as a flagrant racist because of the mix up?

No. I have no doubt that it was an innocuous error. However, I found the ignorance on display cause for reflection.

I immediately thought back to the front page story the Collegian printed last week about affirmative action ending in the college admissions process nationwide.

The article cited a recent study conducted by Jessica Howell, an economics professor at California State University, Sacramento. Here were some of Howell's findings: race-neutral college admissions standards would cause a two to four percent decline in the enrollment of blacks and Latinos; among the top ranking universities, that figure more than doubles.

A similar study appeared in the Boston Globe this week which found Asians are statistically held to higher standards in terms of SAT scores when applying to colleges.

Next time you're walking to class take a good look around. You'll see that UMass can't afford a depletion in its already lean minority constituency.

Affirmative action has been a hot button issue since its inception during World War II. It has affected the racial make-up of numerous institutions from the federal government to public transportation and schools.

UMass enrolled 863 African American students during the fall 2009-2010 academic year. It enrolled 770 during the academic year a decade prior.

The University finds itself in abundant company. So what does all this have to do with the student who misused 'colored people?'

That is an average growth rate of fewer than ten black students per year enrolled. Those figures don't strike me as being particularly "affirmative."

I do not bring these statistics to your attention to single out UMass.

The university finds itself in abundant company. So what does all this have to do with the student who misused 'colored people?"

I'm going to make a bold statement: white people, my experience has led me to conclude, do not often socially integrate with people of color. I include myself in this regard.

Think of the people with whom you eat your meals, who your roommate is, who you sit next to in class, who your professors are, who the people are holding the red Solo cups beside you in your Facebook pictures. We surround ourselves with the people with whom we most closely identify. This is true for most everyone.

In addition, white people aren't forced to think about skin color: White is white. It is the societal referent on which everyone is judged.

It won't factor into purchasing a car, or taking out a loan, renting an apartment, or applying for a job. Quite frankly, the difference between 'people of color' and 'colored people' is unimportant to many whites.

When I think of the term "colored people," I think of the famous (or should I say infamous) photo from the Jim Crow era depicting a black man drinking from a dingy "colored" water fountain. Next to it stands a well-maintained "white" fountain. Within the black community, "colored people," is still sometimes used as a term of endearment. Many oppressed groups have "taken back" words and phrases which pejoratively refer to them and have breathed new life into them, so to speak. Thus, expressions such as "colored people" can possess esoteric meaning when applied within the context of the black community. But outside of that realm the term reverts to its racist roots.

Don't be "that kid." The student I witnessed last week in the T.A.'s office was embarrassed by the semantic mistake. But I'm quite sure the student isn't the only person on campus who's erred in that manner.

Schools need to do more to promote a culture of cognizance and hold students to a high standard. Just as we are taught to use MLA format when writing scholarly papers, or use pencils in math, we should be inculcated with the principle that a preposition can make all the difference in the world.

Colleges need to increase minority enrollment. How can they even consider "reversing" affirmative action when it hasn't had the chance to kick in?

Shane Cronin is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at scronin@student.umass.edu.

Improving the ISB area

Nick Milano

Last week, I began looking into different ways the University of Massachusetts may be able to reinvigorate its campus community. Of course, there is much school spirit already, but it is just as obvious that more could be done.

In talking with a few readers after writing last week's column, I received some criticism about the idea that the University needs to improve its community feel; many students are quite happy with UMass the way it is now.

While some may feel this way, I base my thinking on the fact that it is impossible to ever be completely satisfied with something. What determines mine and I am sure many people's outlook is that what is good can be made great, what is bad can be made good. This is not selfishness or ingratitude towards what we have, but merely a desire to improve the world around us.

As a UMass student, my world most often involves the University campus, decisions by the University's administration and ways that the University can become a top-flight, nationally revered institution.

It seems the University, in its effort to ease the transition from high school to freshman year, may have lost its grasp on the University-wide community. In trying to make Southwest a quieter and more friendly living area, it has sent thousands of freshmen into Southwest's freshmen-only dormitories. These freshmen halls, in every part of campus, promote a singular community, not one of UMass as a whole.

The Isenberg School of Management (SOM) seems to be an entity all to itself. There are strong relationships within SOM, but business students often seem a distant part of the UMass community. It is with this point of view that I felt new ideas could form, breaking down these barriers and creating a more vibrant UMass campus from which all students and faculty would benefit.

My second idea for an alternative way to push community sprung from daily walks from Worcester Dining Commons to class after breakfast. For those who have not yet checked out the new Integrated Sciences Building (ISB), they are missing out on one of the nicest and newest academic buildings the campus has to offer. Clean, brightly lit and modern, ISB is an impressive addition for science majors. The most striking feature of ISB, for me however, is outside the building.

As a UMass student, my world most often involves the University campus, decisions by the University's administration and ways that the University can become a top-flight, nationally revered institution.

Between where the building forms an elbow, there are two rows of cement cut into the side of the hill. Looking up onto a small slope as Orchard Hill beckons in the background, one cannot help but feel it would be a great stage for a musical performance, or any kind of performance.

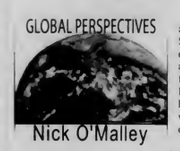
Once the weather gets warmer, why not hold performances or concerts by either school groups or independent groups?

The school's offerings of such events are tightly constrained to regular plays and concerts held in the Fine Arts Center or the Mullins Center. Sure, the University offers its spring concert and brings other acts to the Mullins Center during the year, notably Jay-Z this year, but these are either catered to a small minority on campus or to such a large audience that the concert could just as well be at a regular venue, not in a University gym.

Why not seek out groups who want to perform and host them outside the ISB in its mini and natural amphitheater?

Make it a fundraiser, advertise it, just do something new and different. Showcase a movie outside against the giant backdrop of ISB with students allowed to relax on the hill. Granted, this would not work except for a few months in the spring and fall, but it would be something new and refreshing.

As a college town right next door to Northampton, Amherst must be surrounded by plenty of bands that would want to hang out and play some music on random nights. Tucked into the corner of the ISB, acoustics would form naturally, students could grab a seat on the grass and just relax. For an event to be successful, it does not need to attract throngs of students, but I know UMass-grown cover bands like the Sticky Bandits would appreciate any chance to play.



One might ask what the point of trying to have concerts or performances outside the ISB is, when they are held in the FAC or on certain parts of campus like Bowl Weekend up on Orchard Hill.

These events are either badly marketed or put on distinctly for one particular part of the campus. A series of performances tied with a serious attempt at spreading the news, even just cards in the DC's, might do wonders for bringing students from all parts of campus to one central location for some music, a theatrical performance or a fundraiser. Again, the logistics might be out of hand; preventing drinking, getting the administration to go along with it, but it is just another of those out-of-the-ordinary events which might mix things up for the UMass community.

Nick Milano is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at nmilano@student.umass.edu.

Superbowl in Ireland

GLOBAL PERSPECTIVES

Nick O'Malley

For three and a half hours Sunday night, everybody was an (American) football fan. Even if they had no idea what was going on.

At Captain America's, a crowded comic book hero-themed restaurant in downtown Cork, Ireland, though, knowledge of the game made little difference.

That night, Munster rugby jackets were replaced with NFL jerseys as football changed definitions.

Sure, most people cared about the just-finished Arsenal-Chelsea game in the long run.

But when the New Orleans Saints emerged from the tunnel to take the field for Super Bowl XLIV, the eruption from the crowd showed that the patrons there were anything but apathetic.

Whether it was the karaoke stage crammed full with bodies in front of a giant projection screen or several tables of Irish singing both "America the Beautiful" and "The Star Spangled Banner" in inebriated dissonance, the Irish showed up most sports crowds you'd see back in the States.

Whether it was the karaoke stage crammed full with bodies in front of a giant projection screen or several tables of Irish singing both "America the Beautiful" and "The Star Spangled Banner" in inebriated dissonance, the Irish showed up most sports crowds you'd see back in the States.

That, and drinking songs beat "Yankees suck" chants any day. And I hate the Yankees.

The feeling inside of Captain America's was a constant fluctuation of familiar and foreign. It's one of the strangest feelings when abroad.

You feel the comfort of one place, yet you're constantly reminded of the fact that you're not home.

Making fun of Peyton Manning is great, but I still couldn't text my buddy the J-Mann about his stupid commercials.

Even the broadcast itself had more differences than expected.

While Americans were being bombarded with commercials (the one time a year when this is a good thing), the European carrier of the game, Sky Sports, cut to the studio.

At this point, I was subjected to the expert analysis of a low-level college wide receivers coach and a former tight end for the London Monarchs (a former team in the now-deceased NFL Europe).

These little differences made little difference to most of the crowd. They were just pumped for the game.

"People have asked me why I have this jersey.

And I just say 'who cares? It's the NFL,'" said an alcoholically stoked fan donning the jersey of Frank Gore, running back for the San Francisco 49ers.

Throughout the venue one could see that a sprinkling of NFL jerseys showcased a hodgepodge of teams, with the New England Patriots and New York Giants being the most common.

Conversations with other fans were short and to the point, though.

Most exchanges with European fans during the Super Bowl consisted of yelling out the name of the player or team whose apparel they were wearing and then yelling. Crude, but effective.

During halftime, Sky Network showed a feature on the hectic affair that is Media Day at the Super Bowl, which occurs the Wednesday before the Big Game.

Sure, the only players that the European networks could get were a backup offensive lineman, a kick returner and a backup cornerback, but no one cared. It was (American) football.

While I was fortunate to be sitting with a large group of American students at the event, I was the only one with extensive football knowledge (What do you mean you didn't know Marques Colston went to Hofsta University?), and the only guy at the table.

As my friend Jared pointed out early in the night before retiring early because of a fever, a good deal of the patrons were "girls in shiny dresses who are just there to take pictures of themselves."

But between each photo session, they could sure cheer, producing classics like, "Why is he so good? He's a mother[]er," and, "No cheers, f that, they suck."

Even I was drawn away from the game when our group was sidetracked and distracted by a more pressing contest: When (and with whom) would the promiscuous girl of the group nearby make out with one of the three Irish lads hitting on her?

The eventual winner drew cheers and multiple high fives. Although most people were simply celebrating the event, globalization reared its American-corporate head once again.

Even in a city that is obsessed with rugby, hurling and football (both the Gaelic and European varieties), the NFL still has fans.

Funny story: The first guy I talked to in an Irish pub was, of all things, a huge Patriots fan with whom I had a long conversation about Tom Brady and Wes Welker.

Oddly enough, the second guy I talked to in an Irish pub told me that "Tom Brady is rubbish."

Irish smack talk: It's a deep burn.

Seeing people embrace a foreign game as their own is an amazing thing.

Imagine what these people do when they watch a sport they actually like.

Nick O'Malley is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 11, 2010

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Warm winter mixers chase away chill

By Andrew Sheridan
Collegian Staff

Winter is a pain in the derriere. From shoveling walkways in the mornings to waiting in the cold for buses, and shuffling on foot from class to class, the bitter New England winter is enough to make you want to hibernate.

But there are upsides. In addition to the seasonal hallmarks of snowfall and the flu, the darkest months bring with them their own set of steaming-hot boozy beverages, sure to warm our insides and breathe life into our seemingly frostbitten extremities. With the assistance of a few quality taste testers, here's a list of delectable pick-me-ups that may just help cure those winter doldrums.

The most commonly known cold weather drink is Irish coffee, and with its fame comes an amazing variety of recipes. Everything from schnapps to sambuca has been added to this caffeinated concoction in the name of giving it an extra kick, but not all of them are winners. While whiskey is the most famous coffee additive, it isn't highly recommended. It's strong kick and often potent spice blends cut through all but the strongest brews. Cognac is an improvement, as its sweeter flavor mixes better than whiskey's spice, but when it came down to it, our testers overwhelmingly preferred simple Irish cream. This classic Emerald Isle liquor provides both the creaminess and the sweetness that coffee craves, making it a match made in Dublin.

Another popular winter warmer is hot chocolate - a childhood favorite that grows up fast with the proper additions. Chocolate's versatile flavor makes it great for mixing, and its thickness allows it to pack more punch without tasting too alcoholic. Schnapps seem to be a logical choice, and both the raspberry and peppermint varieties blend well. After some experimentation, however, our testers decided on equal parts brandy and Irish cream as the mix of choice.

Perhaps the simplest to prepare out of all hot drinks, apple cider and spiced rum are a natural pair. While some sort of cider is available at any grocery store, the local stuff is the always best, and Amherst's own Atkins Farm brand is hard to beat. However, a word of caution on this mix, as it may pair a bit too well. The spicy cider hides the rum's bite so easily that an unsuspecting consumer could easily drink himself under the table in no time.

If calories are no object, then hot buttered rum may be the drink for you. Combining melted butter, boiling water, brown sugar, vanilla ice cream and dark rum, this concoction is winter's boozy answer to the hot fudge sundae. It may take a bit of time to prepare, but the overall impression is a bit like warm vanilla eggnog and fills you up nicely.

Mulled wine is a solid option for those who dislike hard alcohol but still want to warm their insides. This hot wine mix can be found in one form or another in many different cultures, but the general idea is always the same: fill a pot with red wine, sweeteners and spices, bring to a simmer, and enjoy. One particularly good variation uses merlot, brandy, honey, lemon peels, cinnamon and cloves, with the overall effect being a rich and often sleep-inducing draught. The beautiful thing about mulled wine is that it is prepared in large batches, making it well-suited for parties and gatherings of cold, thirsty people.

The last drink on the list is the Hot Toddie, a classic flu cure and general treatment for the winter chills. Combining boiling water, lemon juice, honey and bourbon, this drink is simple, yet surprisingly potent. It may sound like a recipe for warm lemonade, but a mug of this woodsman-like drink will put hair on your chest. That is not to say that it is not delicious - tasters enjoyed the flavor across the board - but as with most bourbon whiskey drinks, it takes a certain type of person to fully appreciate.

So next time you come home from salting your driveway or building a snowman, don't curse the winter winds and sub-zero temperatures. Instead, put on a pot of water or heat up some coffee, crack open the liquor cabinet and enjoy the intoxicating warmth of the season's liquid treasures.

Bottom's up.

Andrew Sheridan can be reached at asher11@student.umass.edu.

When the cold winter winds are too much to handle, try adding a little liquor, such as brown rum or brandy, to your favorite warm drink. Not only will it taste delicious, but it might be enough to chase away your winter doldrums.

Vancouver to host historic Olympics

By Kate MacDonald
Collegian Staff

While many people think the Olympic Games are outdated in today's fast-paced world, there are many unique events coming up at this month's Vancouver Olympic Winter Games. From the culturally significant opening and closing ceremonies to unusual sports, finding something compelling about the games is hardly a tall task.

Though the Summer Olympics had their foundation in ancient Greece thousands of years ago, the Winter Games are relatively new, beginning in 1924.

This winter, they come to Vancouver, Canada, where the games will open Friday, Feb. 12. Since the games' launch, many different events have been dropped and added, paving the way for a wide assortment of contests. Each sport promises something for everyone.

Among the first events is the biathlon. Somewhat confusing, it consists of 10 men's and women's races of varying lengths, in which all biathlon athletes compete.

During the races, biathletes stop in intervals, take a rifle off their backs, and shoot at targets. Adapted in 2006, it now includes a mass start for the sprint race, providing more thrills, as participants attempt to stay standing while trying to fall over each other's skis.

Curling is similar to shuffleboard or bocce on ice. One member of the two to four person competing team pushes a 40-pound curling stone down their lane, while another races ahead, sweeping the ice to make for a smoother track and longer ride. The goal is to get the stone between two lines and close to a "button." Though it seems very simple, it is interesting to watch.

For the romantic at heart, ice dancing can be quite the event. There are no lifts or fancy tricks in ice dancing; it is more like ballroom dancing on ice. Music is played, and the passion is potent; an ice dancing event can make for a romantic evening. It can also be rather exciting and competitive. American duo Tanith Belbin and Ben Agosto are serious contenders after their success at the Turin Games.

However, ice dancing is not the only event in the rink. Figure skating is where many of the big name contenders are seen. Though it has the reputation of being a feminine sport, viewers can appreciate the both beauty and strength it takes to complete many high speed, high flying moves.

The three snowboarding events are sure to be among the most watched affairs of the 16-day games. The most interesting will he the snowboard cross, in which the athletes race down a course all while hurling over jumps and ramps. Besides that, these events are all fairly predictable.

Finally, probably the oddest and most interesting event is the skeleton. Named for the sled on which the riders lie facedown, the unique competition involves an athlete laying on the sled and hurling down an ice track at about 80 miles per hour.

What makes it even more high octane is the fact that there is no braking or steering mechanism present.

At the root of the Olympics is a sense of worldwide athleticism and camaraderie. Athletes participating in these and other exciting sports such as hockey, ski jumping and speed skating are playing to win medals for their home nations - to garner a sense of national pride.

Even if healthy competition on an international scale is not always an appreciated aspect of the Olympic Games, viewers can expect thrills and learning experiences from watching these sporting events.

An exciting respite from a dreary winter season, the 21st Winter Olympiad, beginning Friday at 6 p.m., is sure to be exhilarating and stirring for viewers across the world.

Kate MacDonald can be reached at kaitlynm@student.umass.edu.

Snowboarding is just one of many competitions planned at the upcoming Winter Games, to be hosted in Vancouver. Back in 2006, USA's Tyler Jewell maintained his cool while participating in the event.

Hearts in for Haiti

Benefit concert to raise awareness, medical supplies for stricken country

COURTESY TOUCHATHEARTCHORUS.COM

The Northampton-based Young at Heart Chorus is one of the musical acts performing at tonight's "Stand with Haiti" benefit concert.

By Andrew Cogan
Collegian Correspondent

A combination of local and student performers will take the stage to raise funds for the Haiti relief effort tonight at a benefit concert hosted by the University of Massachusetts.

Proceeds from the "Stand with Haiti" benefit concert will go directly to Partners in Health (PIH), a non-profit healthcare organization based in Boston, Mass.

PIH has been working on the ground in Haiti since 1985, developing a model for community-based health care designed to treat infectious diseases and provide basic medical services to impoverished communities. Over the last 20 years, PIH has expanded its efforts to nine different countries, becoming a leader in providing accessible healthcare in many of the world's poorer areas.

Following the devastating earthquake on Jan. 12, PIH immediately launched "Stand with Haiti," a campaign to raise money and recruit qualified medical professionals to assist in the relief effort.

At the time of the disaster, PIH's Zanmi Lasante project in Haiti was one of the first responders to the crisis. The Zanmi Lasante team will be assisting the Haitian Ministry of Health, by designation of the World Health organization, to run medical operations at the public University Hospital in Port-au-Prince, the island nation's capital.

Funds raised by the concert will help PIH purchase basic medical supplies that are in desperate short supply.

"They don't have the supplies they need But there's a lot of Haitian health professionals, doctors, nurses, aides who would like to [do their job], but to do that you need the supplies," said Dr. Paul Farmer, a cofounder of the organization, in a recent blog post on the PIH website. "You have to have the basics. Gauze, plaster or other casses. You have to have the equipment that you need. Anesthesia, pain medications, antibiotics. And that's what some of my medical colleagues are asking us for, supplies."

Tonight's concert is part of a larger campaign by the University to mobilize the campus in support of the Haiti relief effort. The Division of Student Affairs and Campus Life and the International Programs Office (IPO), as well as other campus organizations, are all working together to coordinate fund raising events and collect donations.

Student groups such as the UMass Step Team and the DooWop Shop will be among those lending their talents to "Stand Up." Perennial local favorite the Young at Heart Chorus will also be in attendance, as will songsters Erin McKeown, Joe Velez and Creacion and a slew of other performers. Musical acumen is not a prerequisite for performing at the benefit. Haitian American poet Lenelle Moise, whose spoken word album "Madivinez" won the Patchwork Majority Radio Album Award for Best Solo Album in 2007, will appear at the event.

With a diverse range of highly talented performers, tonight's show is a must see for anyone who wants to experience a first-rate concert, and also wants to help a good cause.

For those who are unable to attend the "Stand with Haiti" benefit concert but still want to contribute to the relief effort, donations can be made to Partners in Health at http://www.standwithhaiti.org/haiti.

The concert begins at 7 p.m. in the concert hall of the UMass Fine Arts Center. Tickets for the event will cost $20 for students, and will cost $10 for youth under 17-years-old. Tickets can be purchased at the box office and online at www.umassfac.com, or by calling 545-2511.

For more information on the concert visit the Fine Arts Center website at www.fineartscenter.com.

Andrew Cogan can be reached at acogan@student.umass.edu

Romp through the City of Lights 'With Love'

Energetic Travolta dominates, self-referential humor bombs

By Brendan Murphy
Collegian Correspondent

"From Paris With Love" may be the first entertaining wide-release action movie to come out this year. As action abounds, the film's tongue-in-cheek script hits all of the right marks, sweeping a viewer along for an explosive ride through the dark crevices and seedy environs contained within the City of Lights.

Jonathan Rhys Meyers ("The Tudors") stars as James Reece, an aide to the U.S. Ambassador in France. Although his life has all the trappings of white collar drudgery, he moonlights as a low-level CIA agent. His next assignment, in order to move up in the world of the CIA, is to assist special agent Charlie Wax (John Travolta) in stopping a terrorist attack on Paris.

Hilarity ensues from the moment Travolta enters the movie. Wax is attempting to bring a duffle bag full of energy drinks into France but is stopped by customs; he then proceeds to swear at the customs agent and belittle him for being French, but all this is artifice to distract customs from looking into what he is really carrying in the energy drink cans: his beloved gun.

Travolta's over-the-top performance as an experienced, wise-cracking, shoot-'em-up kind of agent is what makes "From Paris With Love" memorable. The script, penned by Adi Hasak and based on a story by Luc Besson, is written so that the viewer laughs with the movie and not at it. Bald and sporting a goatee, Travolta's Howie Mandel-esque new age appearance is a little tough to swallow – especially for viewers who have grown accustomed to his familiar visage – but once viewers adjust, it's easy to sit back and enjoy the show.

The beginning scenes move sluggishly until Wax appears. Most of the opening scenes are structured around the development of James Reece, who struggles to find a balance for his jobs with the embassy and the CIA. His engagement to his French fiancé (Kasia Smutniak) further complicates things. As "From Paris with Love" progresses, Reece serves as a counterbalance to Wax. Stiff, straight-edged and yet still a man who plays by the books, Reece presents a perfect foil to the older though higher-flying persona Wax exudes.

Director Pierre Morel, who collaborated with Besson on last year's "Taken," weaves the film through the underworld of Paris. As the body count piles up for Wax and Reece, their attempts to thwart the efforts of drug dealers and take down terror cells from Chinatown to the Parisian slums keep the film within familiar action movie terrain, harkening back to Morel's past films which include "The Transporter" and 2004's "District 13."

During one particularly compelling scene, the duo is about to enter an inner-sanctum of the Chinese drug dealing underground when Reece asks Wax, "How many more do you think there are?"

"Based on the last census? About a billion," replies Wax. Sharp quips like this are peppered throughout the movie's dialogue, which is scarce considering Morel's main focus seems to be on the action sequences.

The film manages to throw a few curveballs into the equation which could throw viewers off their guard. Popcorn action movies like these don't often have clever turns, but "From Paris With Love" is a rare exception. The acting is also fairly fluid throughout; Travolta and Meyer have a chemistry which makes this film fun to watch.

Like any movie out there, though, "From Paris" has its share of drawbacks. In a shameless self-referential nod to his previous role in "Pulp Fiction," Travolta explains how every man has his vices, and a "royale with cheese" is his. The famous line – which comes from what is arguably Travolta's best movie and the heyday of Travolta's career – seems out of place. The movie's sequence of events can be choppy, too. One minute they're snorting blow on the Eiffel Tower and the next they're picking up prostitutes in a back alley.

With "From Paris," reality suffers in the name of good fluff; the film is one of those movies where the good guys always hit their targets, and the bad guys almost always miss.

"From Paris With Love" is like James Bond meets Steven Seagal's "Under Siege," with a twist of comedy. The movie is rife with gratuitous violence and plenty of explosions. The script is designed to make the viewer laugh, but is not so corny that it's uncomfortable or painful to watch. The filmmakers do a great job keeping the viewer entertained through the movie's entirety of 92 minutes. This movie is underrated, and will probably make its way to DVD overlooked in the box office. Chalk it up to the pitfalls of a popcorn action flick.

Brendan Murphy can be reached at brendanm@student.umass.edu.

Veteran director Pierre Morel revisits familar settings with "From Paris with Love," starring Jonathan Rhys Meyers ("The Tudors") and John Travolta ("Pulp Fiction"). Although at times witty, the film's reliance on recycled puns proves detrimental.

MFA IN EMERGENT MEDIA

The future is in the eyes of the innovators.

Create. Collaborate. Innovate.

Are you ready to write the next chapter of the digital revolution? Champlain's residential Master of Fine Arts (MFA) has been designed for a select group of individuals who are ready to explore the bounds of their own creativity, develop the skills to master the technology, and flourish in a collaborative environment. Envision your future with us.

AUGMENTED REALITY EXPERIENCE
An Individualized Interactive Web Experience

To learn more about our MFA in Emergent Media, visit our augmented reality experience at emergent.champlain.edu

1876 CHAMPLAIN COLLEGE Graduate Studies

Now Accepting applications
MFA.champlain.edu

WARHAMMER

Off The Wall Games

WARHAMMER 40,000 MAGIC The Gathering

Discount role-playing games, Collectible card games (CCGs), Miniature war games and board games, fun for everyone!

Hours: 10-10 Wednesday-Sunday, 12-10 Monday, Closed Tuesdays · 41 Russel St (Hampton Village Shops) Rt. 9, Hadley 413-586-5451

UM looks to replace seniors

By Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

Replacing seniors in any college sport can be difficult when they play important roles on the team. It's especially difficult when one of them was considered to be among the best in the nation.

The Massachusetts softball team looks to continue its success as one of the best teams in the country, despite losing the team's best pitcher in Brandice Balschmiter, along with three other starters.

However, UMass coach Elaine Sortino feels confident that the players who didn't play much last year will fill in the holes left by the graduated seniors and continue making the No. 20 Minutewomen good enough to make the NCAA Tournament. Here is a look at the 2010 roster.

Infielders
Freshmen: Teea Rogers, Christine Della Vecchia, Tawny Palmieri
Sophomores: Kyllie Magill, Stephanie Mayne
Juniors: Audrey Boutin, Meghan Carta
Seniors: Sarah Reeves, Jessica Serio, Whitney Williams

Sortino hasn't quite figured out how she's going to use all her freshmen, but they all have the ability to play multiple positions and are good enough to contribute immediately. She believes the addition of Rogers and the appearance of Palmieri will make the infield defense even better than last year's.

Palmieri came to UMass last season, but ended up redshirting because of the team's depth. However, with the loss of Whitney Mollica at third base, Palmieri should get plenty of chances to prove herself on the field.

The look of the infield is very familiar, with three returning All-Conference players in Magill, Reeves and Williams.

Williams and Magill should pose match-up problems as lefty hitters once again with their batting averages and experience. Magill (.316) has the infield's highest returning batting average as a sophomore and had a crucial role in bringing in runs, with 31 runs batted in during the 2009 season.

The biggest difference for the Minutewomen will be in strategy. Rather than focusing on beating teams with their power, Sortino hopes to use more of a small ball approach and use her team's speed to bring runners along.

"I think our team overall has more speed and probably will show more small stealing, slapping stuff because of our personnel this year," Sortino said. "I think we'll have more of a unilateral attack."

She will most likely rely on Magill, who was successful on the base-paths with 10 stolen bases in 13 attempts.

Williams also provides another reliable hitting option at shortstop with her .304 batting average and team-high .454 on-base percentage. She is considered one of UMass' most patient hitters, as she drew 28 walks last season.

Outfielders
Freshmen: Cyndil Matthew
Sophomores: Katie Bettencourt, Stephanie Mix, Jordan Storro
Seniors: Jill Andrews, Carly Normandin, Michelle Libby

UMass may not be hitting pitches over the wall as much as last year, but that doesn't mean it won't be competitive.

The Minutewomen lost their top power hitter in Samantha Salato (.287, 19 home runs), but this year, the outfield will be under the leadership of Normandin. The senior made the Player of the Year watch list after finishing 2009 with a .403 average, 10 home runs, 37 RBIs and 21 stolen bases, as well as winning the Atlantic 10 Player of the Year award.

While she has the ability to hit home runs and steal, Sortino will be looking for Normandin to lead the young outfield with her speed.

But she is not the only one expected to have a significant contribution this season.

Sortino believes all three of her sophomores will do well this season despite having little playing experience. She said the reason for their lack of playing time didn't have as much to do with their skill as much as it was the fact that Salato and Davina Hernandez were so valuable.

"There have been freshmen that nobody has seen out there yet because the other [players] were so good and so experienced," Sortino said.

This year, Matthew, the team's only addition in the outfield should see plenty of playing time because of her speed. So far, Sortino has been so impressed with her speed, that she calls her the fastest player on her team since former Second Team All-American Candice Molinari played for the Minutewomen.

The centerfielder finished with 98 career stolen bases in 113 attempts.

If Matthew is even close to fulfilling that comparison, she will at least give opposing pitchers something to worry about, other than an offense that can still drive in runs.

Pitchers
Sophomores: Sara Plourde
Seniors: Bailey Sanders

Balschmiter might not be on the mound this year, but Sortino believes the two players who were behind the Second Team All-American have almost as much talent.

Although Plourde (6-1, 1.83 earned run average) did better than Sanders (1-3, 3.08 earned run average) in 2009, she isn't necessarily going to be the team's No. 1 pitcher.

"I feel like they're both A/B, B/A," Sortino said. "I don't know that you can make that kind of prediction. It's too soon and too close to call."

Sanders doesn't have the same power that Plourde has, but has the experience and ability to defend her position. She also has more of a presence on the mound with a 6-foot-2 frame.

Before Plourde came into the mix, Sanders made at least 20 appearances in her freshman and sophomore years with a combined 21-9 record and 151 strikeouts.

However, Plourde was quite effective herself in her first year at UMass.

She made the A-10 All-Rookie Team and threw five complete games with two shutouts, including a one-hitter against Saint Joseph's on April 10. In the second start of Plourde's career, she threw a no-hitter March 22 against Dayton.

Regardless of who gets more of the starts, Sortino feels her team's pitching will continue to be one of UMass' strengths in 2010.

Adam Miller can be reached at amiller@dailycollegian.com.

Senior Carly Normandin finished the 2009 season with a .403 average, 10 home runs, 37 RBIs and 21 stolen bases.

Freshman guard Freddie Riley has seen his minutes increase due to sophomore guard David Gibbs' broken foot. Riley is averaging 9.7 points per game, starting in place of Gibbs for two games so far.

Riley, Correia stepping up

By Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

There are some times when a player's contribution to a team goes beyond a stat-line.

David Gibbs is one of those players.

The sophomore guard averaged 2.6 points and 2.4 assists per game, while averaging nearly 20 minutes a game as a starter before breaking his left foot Feb. 2 in practice. While it might seem like the Massachusetts men's basketball team could manage without a player who doesn't put up big numbers, it's Gibbs' defense that has been missed by the Minutemen.

"He's probably one of the best defenders we have on our team," freshman Freddie Riley said.

Gibbs was in the top five on the team with 13 steals, and typically defended the opposing team's best player.

Since Gibbs is out for the remainder of the season, those defensive responsibilities have gone to guard Javorn Farrell, who now has five starts with the Minutemen.

His new role has been far from easy. Farrell had to defend top scorer Jordan Crawford on Xavier and an experienced Keith Cothran on Rhode Island.

On Feb. 3 against the Musketeers, Crawford was quiet for most of the night until hitting back-to-back 3-pointers in the final four minutes to give the Musketeers a commanding lead over UMass.

Gibbs' absence has shown more than just on the defensive end.

"Our turnovers have gone up a little bit," UMass coach Derek Kellogg said. "We were a little thin at the point guard spot as it was, never mind the fact that he was starting for us."

Kellogg has mixed up his lineups quite a bit, with guard Ricky Harris occasionally starting at point guard, something he experimented with during the beginning of the season when the Minutemen played Michigan State on Nov. 28.

Allowing Harris to play point guard gave Riley and Farrell more opportunities. However, Kellogg said before practice that when there are multiple freshmen on the floor, it can be difficult to be as successful as he wants.

"At times, we've had three or four freshmen on the floor at the same time, which at times is not so beneficial to us," Kellogg said.

Riley (9.7 ppg) started both games in Gibbs' absence and is averaging 8.5 ppg since moving into his new role.

"I feel like I've done an okay job, but I feel like I can do better," Riley said. "I'm just learning right now."

Junior Gary Correia is starting to see increased minutes, as well, after considering the idea of transferring last season due to a lack of playing time. He considered leaving for Boston University until Kellogg dismissed Connecticut transfer Doug Wiggins from the team and approached Correia about staying with the Minutemen.

Before Gibbs got injured, Correia saw his role increase, and now has to perform in that position with a thin pool of guards available. Correia said before practice that he appreciates having a chance to step up more, but not at the expense of losing a player for the rest of the season.

"I'm not happy in the manner in which [getting more minutes] came in, where we're losing someone who's a valuable part of our team," Correia said. "But playing is something everyone wants to do, but hopefully, by me playing more and everyone raising their game, can result in some wins."

This season, Correia has become more of a coach on the floor, and helps bring experience to a young Minutemen squad. While the losses have been frustrating at times, the junior doesn't have any regrets about staying in Amherst because of the team's potential.

UMass has been in several close games against competitive teams, including the win over Memphis and the close loss to the Musketeers. Now, Correia believes it's just a matter of the younger players realizing that potential and growing up.

"I feel like going down the stretch, we'll be able to string some wins together," Correia said.

Adam Miller can be reached at amiller@dailycollegian.com.

Delta Xi Phi
Multicultural Sorority, Inc.

We are a national organization that strives to transcend the Sorority stereotype to create a unique sisterhood
Based on unity in diversity.

Sisterhood · Friendship · Advancement of Women Through Higher Education · Community Service · Increasing Multicultural Awareness

ΔΞΦ

Do you have the same ideals?
Then you may be a diamond in the rough!

Tuesday 2/16	4:30PM Informational Campus Center	Friday 2/19	11AM Informational YKCC
Wednesday 2/17	6PM Informational Campus Center; 7PM Baking Treats Social Johnson	Saturday 2/20	6PM Multicultural Potluck DXP sisters will cook dishes from their Cultures to share with Ladies interested in becoming sisters!
Thursday 2/18	6PM Informational followed by Mocktails & Game Night YKCC	Sunday 2/21	1PM Eric Carle Museum Arts & Crafts Meet in front of Johnson

Visit us at www.umass.edu/rso/dxp
Please contact us at iotadxp@gmail.com
For more info or an application

LIQUORS 44

JAMESON IRISH WHISKEY $24.99 750ML	ALL FLAVORS $23.99 1.75L	Captain Morgan SPICED RUM $27.99 1.75L	Captain Morgan LIME BITE NEW $21.99 750ML	Seagram's Seven Crown NEW DARK HONEY $19.99 750ML	Tanqueray STERLING VODKA $19.99 1.75L	Grand Marnier $29.99 750ML
Tanqueray GIN $33.99 1.75L	BELVEDERE VODKA $28.99 750ML	Jose Cuervo SILVER & GOLD $19.99 750ML	BAILEYS Original Chocolate Mint & Caramel $23.99 750ML	80° $20.99 1.75L	KetelOne VODKA $36.99 1.75L	Seagram's Seven Crown $18.49 1.75L

AVAILABLE ONLY AT THE HADLEY LOCATION

Please visit us at www.liquors44.com
Visit us at our other locations: NORTHAMPTON · 238 King St. HOLYOKE · 44 Lincoln St.
FULL REDEMPTION AT ALL LOCATIONS
NOT RESPONSIBLE FOR TYPOGRAPHICAL ERRORS
DON'T DRINK & DRIVE
MA SALES TAX NOT APPLIES

With Schneider, Balise gone, Godoi, Hayes and Smith lead of the ESPNU Warrior Classic, and is the only nationally televised game on the Minutemen's schedule.

M LAX from page 10

Three out of the five conference games are away, and more importantly are in places that UMass is not used to traveling.

"We're going to travel to different places, and anytime there is a change and people feel that change, it creates a lot of anxiety for people who have never been there before," said Cannella. "They like familiar settings, they like familiarity, but in my opinion, we're leaving one great conference and going to another great one."

With the graduation of Doc Schneider, Tim Balise, Jim Connolly and others, the Minutemen also have a lot of leadership to replace. The Minutemen are bottom-heavy in terms of class, and consist of six seniors, nine juniors, 12 sophomores and 12 freshmen.

Captains Bobby Hayes, Diogo Godoi and Ryan Smith will try to bring the team together as leaders, but will have help from the coaching staff.

"We create a leadership council," said Cannella of the process. "Every senior is on that, along with select juniors, sophomores and freshmen, and we try and bring those guys together and foster a good relationship with the team and the coaches. We make sure people are connected from the seniors all the way down to the freshman."

One thing that UMass does have working for it is where that experience is located. The team returns Godoi, Greg Anderson and Travis Tripucka on defense, as well as defensive-minded midfielders Steve Zorkers, Ryan Liebel and Casey Rahn.

UMass' success last year brings high expectations for this year's group. Even though they lost in the first round of the NCAA tournament to Princeton, the Minutemen are working hard to do better than last year.

"I think they know what we're working on and what we're pushing them towards," Cannella said.

Cannella, who is entering his sixteenth year as UMass' head coach, has plenty of accolades on his fact sheet. Cannella holds a 131-84 record in his time in Amherst, and points to the success his teams have had as his motivation.

"You watch them mature, fight, run, lift, practice, cry and laugh, and all those things to me sitting behind this desk, that's the least fun of it. The best part of it is to be out there on that field and get excited about playing lacrosse."

Neil Carroll can be reached at nacarroll@student.umass.edu

Inexperience for Minutemen

ROSTER BREAKDOWN from page 10

Mahle, a highly touted recruit out of West Genesee High School in Camillus N.Y., was impressive in the second half of UMass' first scrimmage against Saint John's on Jan. 30.

"Those guys have done a really good job, they've been competing all year," Cannella said. "Timmy [McCormick] probably has a little bit more experience, and when push comes to shove, that might push him over the top, but again, they're still competing."

McCormick is more experienced in the clearing game, and is familiar with the defensive sets the Minutemen like to use, so it won't be a surprise if he gets the starting nod.

Both are big athletes who have dropped a considerable amount of weight to get into playing shape, and the presence of Schneider should pay off for both Mahle and McCormick, regardless of whomever is the starter against SHU.

After backing up Schneider last season and playing in six games, transfer Mael Walkowiak has switched and made the transition to the defensive midfield for UMass.

Defense

This unit, anchored by captain and 2009 All-American Diogo Godoi, should be just as impressive as last season. Along with sophomore Greg Anderson and Travis Tripucka, the group that was sixth in the NCAA in man-down defense (12 goals on 58 chances) should be strong in the clearing and transition games. Add three-year starters and skilled midfielders Casey Rahn and Steve Zorkers into the mix, and the Minutemen might come away with the most athletic, high-energy defensive unit in the CAA.

"Most of our critical mass, most of our experience is on that side of the ball, and again, that type of experience, you can't do without it," Cannella said.

Sophomore Tom Celentani and freshman Jake Smith should also see extended time on close defense.

Midfielders

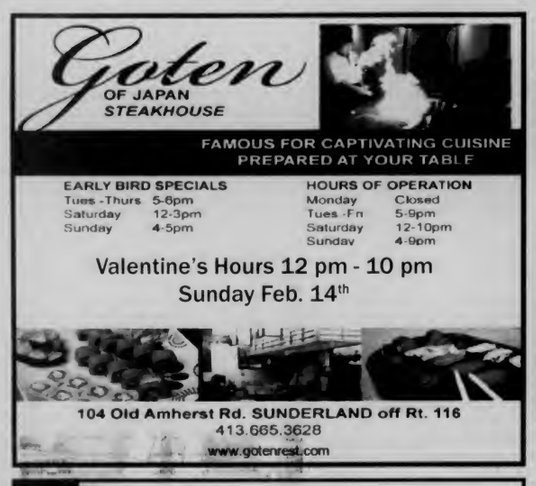
Senior captain Bobby Hayes, who led the team in assists in 2009, looks to rub off on some of his younger teammates with the losses of Evan Blum, Rory Pedrick and Reale.

The only other significant experience this unit has comes from Ryan Hantverk, Ryan Marcus and Anthony Biscardi, who all looked strong against the Red Storm in the scrimmage. But, even with the inexperience, there is a lot of talent, including freshman Colin Fleming and sophomore Anthony Toresco, who will take a lot of faceoffs for the Minutemen.

With the help of the defense, the midfield will rely on Hayes to step up and be the leader in order for UMass to be successful in the transition game as well as the offensive attack.

"You talk to the guys about shooting at a higher percentage, between 30 and 40 percent, and if you get to that range, you're going to score probably in the teens, and that should get you over the hump when it comes to winning and losing," Cannella said.

Attack

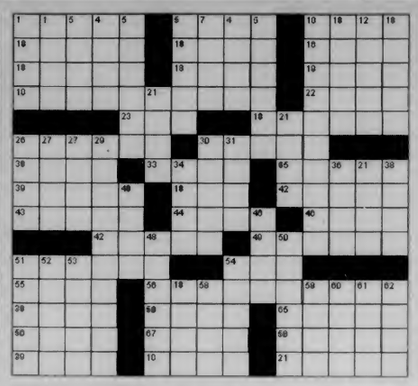


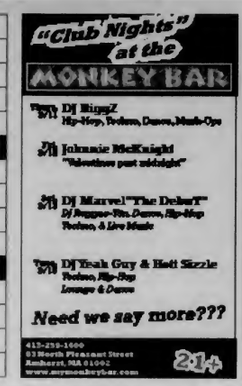
Even with senior Ryan Smith named a captain, the attack's most seasoned player is sophomore Art Kell, who started all 15 games in 2009, scoring 11 goals and notching three assists. Smith will look to join Kell, as well as redshirt junior Ryan Liebel and freshmen Kyle Smith and Will Manny in the attack in hopes of generating as many goals as a year ago. In order for that to happen, Cannella wants his team to get to the goal on one fake instead of three fakes, to get open looks and to finish accurately, no matter who is the opposing goalkeeper.

"It's a young group, we kind of have to pry them along, and those guys again have included everybody in this. I think everybody knows that they own this, and I think if that message gets through, especially from our seniors, and everyone comes prepared, they will do a heck of a job," Cannella said.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu.

Redshirt senior defenseman Diogo Godoi will lead an inexperienced UMass team in 2010. The Minutemen leave the ECAC behind and will compete in the CAA for the first time.

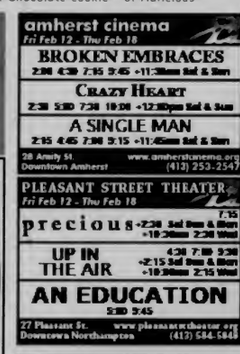




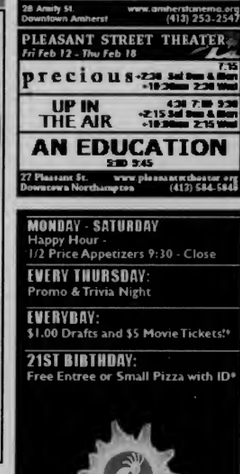
COMICS

WE WANT

Questions?! Comments?!
E-mail us: comics@dailycollegian.com
Friend us on Facebook: "Collegian Comix"



ACROSS
1. Cyphers
6. Propelled oneself through water
10. Hurt
14. Warning
15. Anagram of "Mean"
16. Double-reed woodwind
17. Tropical vine
18. Bright thought
19. Adjoin
20. Ominously prophetic
22. A thorny flower
23. Deception
24. A celebration of the Resurrection
26. 4 pecks
30. A deep ravine
32. Pearly-shelled mussel
33. Not our
35. Beginning
39. Territories
41. Orange pekoe or Earl Grey
42. Crystal-lined stone
43. Move very slightly
44. Part of an archipelago
46. Fizzy drink
47. Construct
49. Minister
51. Rug
54. Strike
55. Chocolate cookie
56. Whirlybird
63. In the center of
64. Computer symbol
65. New Zealand native
66. Music with lyrics
67. Talk
68. Metal bar
69. Tall woody plant
70. Mats of grass
71. Stop



DOWN
1. Young cow
2. Hodgepodge
3. Beloved
4. Coastal raptor
5. Horse barn
6. Malicious
7. Dry riverbed
8. Ends a prayer
9. Inadequate
10. Throaty harshness
11. Monastery head
12. Awaken
13. Almost 40 inches
21. Greasy
25. All excited
26. A device that emits light
27. A Central American sloth
28. A region of southeastern Pakistan
29. A motley assortment of things
30. Visitor
31. Verbal
34. Auditory
36. Carbon black
37. Cocoyam
38. Rip
40. Arid
45. Very imposing or impressive
48. Morals
50. Nuclear
51. Seashore
52. Knight's "suit"
53. French for "Queen"
54. Clues
57. Reflected sound
58. Burden
59. Sheet of glass
60. Roman robe
61. God of love
62. Ritual

SUDOKU

	6	2				9
			2	1	7			4
						3
	3
		5			6			7
2						4
5		6		2				3
7		1	9			2		5
				8			4

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necessary. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

A GREAT JOB! Spend your summer in a lakefront cabin in Maine. If you're looking to spend this summer outdoors, have fun while you work, and make lifelong friends, then look no further...CAMP MATAPONI, a residential girls camp in Maine, has female/male summertime openings for Land Sports, Waterfront (samm crafts, skiing, life guarding, WSI, boat drivers), Ropes Course, Tennis, H.B. Riding, Arts & Crafts, Theater, Cooking, Gymnastics, Dance, Videography, Group Leaders and more! Top salaries plus room/board & travel provided. Call us today at 1-561-748-3684 or apply online at www.campmataponi.com

EMPLOYMENT

Positions available for talented/energetic/fun-loving students as counselors in team/individual sports, Waterfront/Pool activities, and specialty activities including dance & gymnastics. GREAT SALARIES, room/board/travel. 6-19-8/14. Prepare for an unforgetable summer. For information and to apply: www.danbee.com: 1-800-392-3752. Interviews on-campus for Summer-Camp Jobs Fair 2010, Thursday 2/11, from 10-3 in Campus Center

FOR RENT

28 Stockbridge St. 4 bedroom house- 2 baths, living room, eat in kitchen, pantry, laundry, finished basement, yard, 2 car garage, 1.5 mi to campus! $2,575/Mo+ www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 Bedroom Apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug, or Sept. First Come, First Serve. Get Them While They Last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop By Or Call 549-0600

TUTORING SERVICES

Math, Physics, Chemistry, Stats & GRE. Call John 413-584-8643 JBoid42@yahoo.com.

SERVICES

Pregnant? Want to talk? Call birthright 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 Hour hotline 1-800-550-4900 www.birthright.org

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Montreal Party Weekends From $89 Complete. Montreal Express.Net MontrealBlowout.com 781-979-9001

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20 - Feb. 18
Michael Vick's laziness put him in a life of crime and puppy blood. Let us all hope that it does not happen with you.

pisces Feb. 19 - Mar. 20
Your recent string of poor choices reflect the filmography of M. Night Shyalamalamadingdong.

aries Mar. 21 - Apr. 19
Your problems cannot be solved by your fists but they can be solved with an Inspector Gadget decorder pen.

taurus Apr. 20 - May. 20
The universe bends to your will. I3

gemini May. 21 - Jun. 21
Try eating a hamburger today. Now pretend that your hamburger is eating your head. This is your brain on drugs.

cancer Jun. 22 - Jul. 22
I guess you will never know what the "in" crowd does with three tons of peanut butter and multiple viewings of Free Willy.

leo Jul. 23 - Aug. 22
Damnit, Johnson! This is a place of business, not your run of the mill hussy outlet!

virgo Aug. 23 - Sept. 22
Start your day off on the right foot. Are these instructions really THAT hard to follow?

libra Sept. 23 - Oct. 22
One of your biological forests now has some alien inhabitants. Thorough inspection is an understatement.

scorpio Oct. 23 - Nov. 21
For once the students of UMass actually make out well with a bad call from the administration.

sagittarius Nov. 22 - Dec. 21
No matter how hard you tweet, no one will ever see you for the estranged peacock that you are.

capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 19
Don't just stick to your good old tricks this Valentine's Day. Go all out and buy your loved one the face you always wanted to see.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSTHURSDAY

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 11, 2010

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Different look, same goals for UM

Team moves to CAA, opens season Friday

By Neil Carroll
Collegian Staff

Last year, a strong core of seniors carried the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team back to the NCAA tournament for the first time since 2006.

This year's team however, knows that it again, has something to prove.

"The senior group every year has a lot to prove," said UMass coach Greg Cannella. "They have to get out there and play, and prove that this team is an NCAA caliber team, because that is what we want to be. They've got a tough chore ahead of them, but they've been able to handle what's come to them so far."

The team has a very different look since it last took the field, and also will be playing in a different conference. UMass was realigned from the Eastern College Athletic Conference into the Colonial Athletic Conference during the offseason, and will face a swath of new opponents for the first time in a number of years.

"The change of conference is great," said Cannella. "One of the best things that comes with the CAA is the conference championship. At the end of the year, regardless if you're first, second, third or fourth, you have a chance at getting the automatic qualification, at winning the conference and getting into the tournament that way."

The new conference consists of Drexel, Hofstra, Towson, Penn State and Delaware. UMass has had success against programs like the Pride and UD in the past, but is not as familiar with its new conference as it was with the ECAC.

"The difficulties are that we don't know a lot about those teams," said Cannella. "So we have to learn a lot about them this year. Certainly we will learn more and more as we go on, and we'll get to know the teams and what they like to do and how they play."

The conference schedule begins Mar. 27 against Hofstra, and is only interrupted by a game between UMass and Georgetown at UConn on April 24. The game against the Hoyas will be part

See M.LAX on page 8

BRIAN THURER/COLLEGIAN

Senior captain Bobby Hayes will look to get the Minutemen back to the NCAA tournament. Hayes led the team in assists last season, and provides experience to a young midfield unit.

New goalie, offense for Cannella and company

By David Brinch
Collegian Staff

A young offense, an experienced defense and a new goalkeeper between the pipes defines the 2010 Massachusetts men's lacrosse team.

But for UMass coach Greg Cannella and the rest of the Minutemen, if all goes the way they want it to, the team could reach their second-straight NCAA tournament birth in their new conference, the Colonial Athletic Association.

UMass lost 70 goals with the graduation of attackmen Tim Balise and Jim Connolly last season. As a result, Cannella brought in seven freshmen in the midfield and attack to help rebuild the offense, while relying on the defense to anchor the team.

"I think with all the new faces, there's no complacency, and I don't think there's any room for it, I don't think they know any better," Cannella said.

Despite his team's recent success, Cannella knows his squad must not get ahead of themselves, and must do the little things correctly in order to win games.

"The one thing I see with this team is that they are going to grow from week to week here, and we need that growth if we want to have any shot of getting to the NCAA tournament this year, for sure," Cannella said.

Here's a look at the 2010 Minutemen by position, as they open their season Friday against Sacred Heart.

Goalkeepers

Losing All-American, Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference Goalie of the Year and Tewaaraton Trophy nominee Doc Schneider to graduation won't be easy for the Minutemen.

Luckily for redshirt sophomore Tim McCormick and freshman Steve Mahle, Schneider is now an assistant coach with the Minutemen, while former faceoff man Joe Reale is also helping out the team.

"It's great to have them, those guys are UMass guys through and through," Cannella said. "They love doing this; that's why they are doing it, because the message that they send is the same message we've sent for 16 years here."

As a backup to Schneider his freshman year in 2008, McCormick played in two games while making four saves, but sat out last season to regain three years of eligibility.

See ROSTER BREAKDOWN on page 8

Minutemen try to halt skid

UMass heads to Pittsburgh for A-10 rematch with Duquesne

By David Brinch
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts basketball team hopes their match-up with Duquesne Thursday night has a more successful ending than last season's first round of the Atlantic 10 tournament.

The Minutemen (8-15, 2-7 A-10) saw their season end in 2009 at the hands of the Dukes (12-11, 3-6 A-10), 91-81 in the opening round of the conference tournament, and will look to end a three-game skid in Pittsburgh, Pa., a place where they have won three games in a row.

UMass also fell to the Dukes in a regular season A-10 contest back on Feb. 25 of last season by a score of 94-77, despite setting a school record for most 3-pointers made (16).

The Minutemen are coming off a 93-85 road loss to Rhode Island Saturday, and have won just one A-10 game away from the Mullins Center.

"They're [Duquesne] a team that's started to play a little bit better as of late," UMass coach Derek Kellogg said. "They're a team that has had some injuries, and with the loss of their point guard last year, they have a young point guard who's starting to feel his way."

The Dukes are coming off a two-game road trip with a 76-60 loss to Temple and a 70-63 victory over George Washington.

The Dukes started their A-10 schedule with four straight losses to Richmond, Saint Louis, Dayton and the Rams, before winning against St. Bonaventure, Saint Joseph's and GW.

"It's two teams in a similar position that really are playing a similar style," Kellogg said. "We've played great in spurts, as they have, and there have been other times where both teams haven't played so well, so, it's going to be a test of who's going to take care of the basketball, who's going to take better shots, and really play their game in the 40 minutes."

The Minutemen had 21 turnovers against the Rams, including 17 in the first half, despite senior guard Ricky Harris scoring a season-high 32 points.

Redshirt junior Anthony Gurley added 15 points, while forward Sean Carter added 11 points and eight rebounds, and freshman forward Terrell Vinson contributed 10 in the loss.

With his performance, Harris moved to fourth on UMass' career scoring list with 1,760 points.

Junior forward Dumian Saunders led the Dukes with 27 points against the Colonials, and had 18 against UMass in their first meeting last season.

"He's a great player, he's athletic and strong, and he plays hard for the whole 40 minutes, and I think that's his best trait," Kellogg said.

Saunders leads the A-10 in rebounding and steals, with 12.4 rebounds per game and 2.7 steals per game respectively, and is also 11th in scoring with 15 points per game. He is also ranked third in the nation in double-doubles (17) and third in rebounds.

Along with Saunders, the Dukes are led by junior Bill Clark, who averages 12.9 points per game, and is tied with Saunders for the team lead with 52 career double-digit scoring games.

As a team, the Dukes are third in the conference in rebounding offense, behind the Minutemen, who are first.

"We're going to try to take care of the ball," Kellogg said. "We've really improved in a lot of areas, rebounding the ball, defensive toughness, intensity, but we need to improve on the turnovers and transition game."

UMass is 33-23 against the Dukes all-time, including winning four of the last six meetings.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu

JEFF BERNSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

Redshirt junior guard Anthony Gurley had 22 points in UMass' 91-81 loss to the Dukes in last seasons' A-10 tournament.

Senior shortstop Whitney Williams looks to lead UMass back to the A-10 championship and NCAA Tournament.

Minutewomen poised for 23rd A-10 title

By Geena Lombardi
Collegian Staff

Picked as the No. 1 team in the Atlantic 10 and favorites to win a 22nd championship, the Massachusetts softball team feels stronger than ever going into the 2010 season.

UMass coach Elaine Sortino attributes higher fitness, a better defense and a shift from power hitting to speed as positive factors to help her team get closer to a national championship title.

The Minutewomen (41-10, 16-2 A-10 in 2009) also rank No. 20 in the National Fastpitch Coaches Association Top 25 Preseason Poll, representing the only team from the Northeast region. The high rankings and even higher standards set by the 2009 team only motivate UMass to perform better this season.

"It's something that we embrace wholeheartedly," Sortino said. "We like being a front runner, we like being chased, we like people taking shots at the back of our head and our feet. We're used to it, and I'd rather be ahead than chasing."

The Maroon and White ended the 2009 season with a loss to Washington, the eventual NCAA champion. UMass lost 6-1 in the 15-inning rematch.

While some teams may be set back by a disappointing end to a season, the Minutewomen gained what Sortino calls, "mental fortitude" and received confidence from putting up a strong showing against this year's No. 1 ranked team.

"To have felt that, and our ability to hold on and be unwilling to relinquish that game, no matter what, was a test to the kind of mental fortitude that our team will benefit from forever," Sortino said.

A transition from power-hitting to speed is a positive change Sortino expects from her team. With the loss of Samantha Salato, who set a UMass and A-10 record with 19 home runs last season, and the addition of freshman Cyndil Matthew, who Sortino will rely on for her speed, Sortino feels this year's squad is more of a small ball team than one with power.

The losses of playmakers to graduation, such as Salato, third baseman Whitney Mollica, outfielder Davina Hernandez and four-time A-10 Pitcher of the Year Brandice Balschmiter, is also something Sortino feels her team has become accustomed to and will not negatively affect the upcoming season.

"I feel like at UMass we always have our A team and B team, where we put somebody else in and the game isn't disrupted by the change in personnel. That's really, really important in a game like ours," Sortino said.

Second-year captain Carly Normandin, who brings a .403 batting average and .727 slugging percentage, is someone Sortino looks at to provide leadership through example for the three true freshmen, Matthew, Christine Della Vecchia and Teea Rogers.

Starting the season on Feb. 12, UMass will travel first to Miami to compete in the Florida International Combat Classic, where it will face Southern Illinois, a promising team currently receiving votes from the NFCA. The NFCA Leadoff Classic is next on the schedule, where the Minutewomen will travel to Columbus, Ga., and face its first real challenge against No. 9 Missouri. The Southern Florida Under Armour Invitational in Clearwater, Fla., and the San Diego Classic II in San Diego will round off non-conference play for UMass.

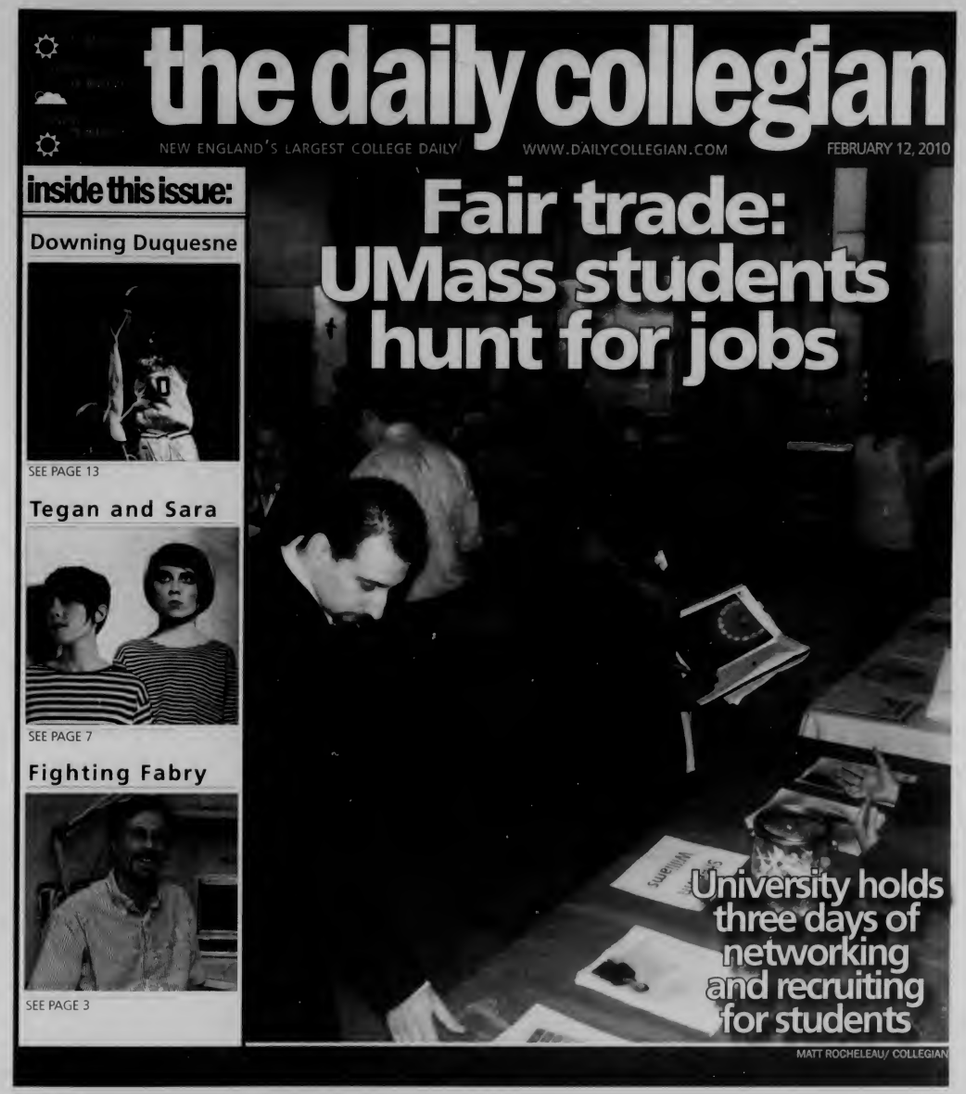
A sixth straight A-10 Championship will not come easily to the Minutewomen, as they expect to play a constantly improving conference starting March 28 with a double-header against George Washington.

"I think the conference is going to be formidable, I really do," Sortino said.

The A-10's second-best team, Charlotte, brings back pitcher Emily Jeffrey, who was second behind Balschmiter with a 1.39 ERA last season, and is described by Sortino as a great pitcher for the 49ers. Offensive threat Serena Smith also returns with 59 hits and a .364 batting average.

Fordham, ranked No. 3, is another team to watch, with the return of Samantha Pellechio, who had 45 runs batted in last season along with 10 home runs. Jen Mineau will also bring experience to the Rams after a freshman season pitching 181.1 innings and a strong 1.93 ERA.

"Fordham will always be strong. They have a great offense, good pitching; they're solid," Sortino said.



Temple and Rhode Island were also mentioned by Sortino as teams expected to improve with the return of second-year coaches Joe DiPietro and Erin Layton looking to improve their inaugural season records.

Out of the 51-game regular season, UMass will play 16 games at home. The Minutewomen also look to defend its title when it hosts the A-10 Championship at the UMass Softball Complex.

"I feel very, very excited about this team," Sortino said. "It's young and it's going to be nice to see some new names put some smiles on peoples' faces."

Geena Lombardi can be reached at glombard@student.umass.edu.

For coverage of the Women's basketball game against Temple, pick up tomorrow's issue of the Daily Collegian.

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN

CXX
ISSUE 19

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief William McGuinness
Managing Editor Matt Rocheleau
Managing Web Editor S P Sullivan
Business Manager Daniel Jette
Production Manager Michael Sarkes
Night Supervisor Kirsten Swenson
Advertising Manager Michael Tortorici
Advertising Production Amanda Joinson
Arts & Living Editor Shayna Murphy
Comics Editor Andrew Witts
Editorial Editor Alyssa Creamer
News Editor Nick Bush
Sports Editor Jeffrey R. Larnard
Photo Editor Matthew Harrison
IT Manager Victor Jacek
Asst. Business Manager Matt Zolnierz
Assistant Advertising Nicole Jacinto
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Distribution Manager Norman Provost
Classified Manager Katelyn Tamilio
Asst. Arts & Living Justin Gagnon
Asst. Arts & Living Elyse Horowitz
Asst. Arts & Living Cal Scannell
Assistant Editorial Benjamin Moriarty
Assistant Editorial Michael Phillis
Assistant Editorial Matthew M. Robare
Assistant News Samuel Butterfield
Assistant News Chris Shores
Assistant News Jenn Heshion
Assistant Sports Jay Asser
Assistant Sports David Brinch
Assistant Sports Adam Miller
Assistant Photo Maxwell Sparr
Assistant Photo Samantha Webber
Assistant Multimedia Sara Cody
Assistant Multimedia Pete Rizzo

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED. OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE. BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
ON STAFF TODAY

NIGHT EDITOR
NICK BUSH

COPY EDITOR
ELIZABETH TRAN

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
MICHELLE ABBASCIANO

Careers collide at job fair

UMass hosts 3 career fairs

By Anna Meiler
Collegian Staff

MATT ROCHELEAU/ COLLEGIAN

Students mingle with representatives of various businesses such as Aflac, pictured here, at Wednesday's campus-wide career fair, held in the Campus Center.

Despite dire economic straits and a job market with more layoffs than openings, many University of Massachusetts students made the rounds at several career fairs held on campus this week.

Many UMass students who attended the ALANA career fair, the Campus-Wide fair or the Summer, Internship and Co-op fair felt extra pressure to take advantage of the opportunity this year, due to the current tough job market and the overall feeling that a bachelor's degree may no longer hold as much weight as it once did.

Many of the students perusing the vendors, dressed up in suits with resumes in hand, said their main motivation for attending this year's fairs was because of the weakened economy and raised competition in the job market.

"Because of the economy, it's hard to find jobs through job searches. This is a good opportunity to meet people who are actually hiring," said Brittany Page, a senior architecture major at UMass.

Chris Lamborghini, a senior, marketing major said, "I felt that I had to get out here because these companies are looking to hire. It's easier when they're looking for you."

Students and vendors at all fairs noticed that many students in attendance were planning to seek a master's degree rather then enter the job market immediately after college.

"With the economy down, you need more than a college degree. That used to be special, but it's getting more competitive," said Kevin Morrison, a sophomore at UMass.

Lamborghini, who attended the Campus-Wide career fair, said many students he talked to were pursuing graduate school and that if he doesn't find a job by fall, he will feel likely do the same.

"If there are no jobs in your field, you go on to the next level," he said.

Many students who attended the Summer, Co-op and Internship fair said they too felt pressured by the economic times to seek internships because such experience adds value to the seemingly dwindling value of a college degree.

Many of the recruiters agreed and said companies are much more likely to hire students who have completed internships than those who haven't.

"I know that in order to get a job, I need an internship," said Hannah Moriarty, a sophomore, communications and English major.

But, to Moriarty's dismay, many companies are less likely to offer paid internships like they used to.

Moriarty has opted to join the Peace Corps for two years after college and then pursue a master's because she feels the economy will be stronger then, the Peace Corps will give her $6,000 upon completion, and the experience will make her more marketable to companies.

"It's more of a sure thing when you join because not a lot of people do it," she said.

Vendors also noticed that the tough economy is making students more open-minded about career choices and more willing to explore job opportunities outside their field because of the difficulty of obtaining a job.

"With the economy being the way it is, there is a wider range of candidates to choose from," said Charles Branche, a financial analyst at Financial Partners.

Colleen Rondeau, a store manager at Kohl's, said she has seen more students considering retail because they can't find jobs within their majors and because the retail business doesn't require experience.

Students and vendors also noticed a decrease in the number of companies which attended this year's career fairs compared to past fairs.

"There are fewer companies here now, which might be a sign of economic times," said Joe Margaitis, an area rental manager for Enterprise.

"Of course there are not as many (recruiters) as when the economy is booming," said Ginger Goldsbury, associate director of career services at UMass, who organized the campus-wide career fair.

"The only thing I can say is that I was really pleasantly surprised with how many vendors came," she said.

On the master's versus job search debate, Goldsbury felt students should pound the pavement for employment.

"If you have a master's you have more education, but less experience and you're more in debt," she said. "The bottom line is to try really hard to find work."

Anna Meiler can be reached at ameiler@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
COLLEGIAN

Need to spread the word?

Reach more than 18,000 readers every day!

IT'S CHEAPER THAN YOU THINK!

On-Campus & Local Business Ads for $10
per column inch

R.S.O. Ads for $6.70
per column inch

CONTACT PAMELA:
thecollegian@gmail.com
413-545-3500
or stop by our office in the Campus Center basement

UM researchers fight Fabry disease

Team uncovers how enzyme mutates, becomes disease

By Ellie Goerlach
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts department of biochemistry has given the medical community an important key in the understanding and treatment of the rare genetic disorder Fabry disease. Dr. Scott C. Garman and a team of researchers have published new findings on the causes of Fabry disease in the Journal of Biological Chemistry.

Fabry disease is a rare genetic disorder caused by a mutation in an enzyme called alpha-galactosidase (alpha-GAL), which inhibits the enzyme's ability to break down a lipid called globotriaosylceramide (GL-3 or GB-3). The accumulation of GL-3 usually begins in childhood, called early-onset or classic Fabry, but there have been some cases where patients showed no symptoms until adulthood, or late on-set.

Symptoms of Fabry disease can include, but are not limited to: a burning or tingling in the hands and feet, skin lesions, high blood pressure, cloudy corneas, heart anomalies, fatigue and a lack of or (in rare cases) excessive sweating, according to the Fabry disease support Web site fabry.org. If the disease is left untreated it can be fatal. The extreme build-up of GL-3 leads to kidney failure, heart disease, heart failure and stroke.

For many people living with Fabry disease, the diagnosis is a shock. People suffering from early-onset Fabry disease can go for years suffering with burning pain in the hands and feet without anyone noticing something is wrong until years later, when their kidneys begin to fail.

For many people, being diagnosed with Fabry disease has severely limited their activity. Some are unable to maintain vigorous physical activity of any kind because of their body's inability to sweat, causing high fevers. People with kidney failure may need to stay on renal dialysis for the rest of their lives. For people living with Fabry disease there are several medications prescribed to manage the symptoms.

The treatment for Fabry disease is enzyme replacement therapy and is extremely expensive. The severity of symptoms and the toll it takes on a person's life vary from case to case, but something all cases share is the impact the diagnosis has on the patient's family. If one person in a family has it, there's a better-than-average chance that someone else does too.

The mutation in the alpha-GAL enzyme is passed on in families via the X chromosome, and not everyone who carries the gene develops the disease. Fabry disease is more common in men who inherit the gene from their mothers. A man with Fabry disease can pass it on to his daughters, but not his sons. A woman with Fabry disease has a 50 percent chance of passing it on to her children.

Fabry disease is still quite rare and has been detected in approximately 1 in 40,000 people, but the numbers are increasing. According to UMass researcher Dr. Garman, the numbers could be as high as 1 in 4,000.

"Frequency is going up because methods of detection are getting better," he said.

Dr. Garman, of the department of biochemistry, headed a research project which has made an enormous leap forward in the understanding of the mutation in the alpha-GAL enzyme which leads to the development of Fabry disease, along with other lysosomal storage diseases.

Starting in 2004, Garman led a research team made up of two UMass graduate students, Abigail Gucc and Nathaniel Clark, technician Eric Salgado and several colleagues from research institutes in Sweden and Russia. Garman said he mostly supervised the work and gave a great deal of research's credit to the students in the lab.

"They are the ones who are doing the work," said Garman.

The purpose of the research was to essentially map the structure and movement of the alpha-GAL enzyme atoms in order to pinpoint the mutations which lead to Fabry disease. The researchers in Sweden and Russia worked together to create a synthetic molecule mimicking the structure and movement of the alpha-GAL enzyme. The difference was that the synthetic enzyme contained a substrate called para-nitrophenyl-alpha-galaetose (pNP-alpha-Gal) which allowed the team at UMass to slow and stop the motion of the molecules in order to create three-dimensional images of each stage in the enzyme's function.

The images created by Garman's team have proven to be instrumental in furthering the understanding of how this enzyme works. This is important not only to clinical research of Fabry disease, but in other research as well. The process occurring in the alpha-GAL enzyme "applies to a huge number of other proteins," said Garman. There are roughly 2000 other proteins which perform a similar function, not only in humans but in plants and animals, as well.

Because of the research performed by Garman's team, the medical community now has a better understanding of the structure of the alpha-GAL enzyme, which could be critical to advancing the knowledge and treatment of debilitating conditions like Fabry disease.

Ellie Goerlach can be reached at egoerlac@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY UMASS EDU

Dr. Scott C. Garman of the department of biochemistry has published new research in the Journal of Biological Chemistry which may play a key role in understanding Fabry disease.

UMASS AMHERST
United States Census 2010
IT'S IN OUR HANDS

Join the Portrait of America Road Tour:
Tell Us Why You Count!

Educating the nation about the 2010 Census, the Portrait of America Road Tour is the largest civic outreach campaign in U.S. history.

Portrait of America is travelling for 1,547 days, across 150,000 miles, and will be seen by an estimated 18 million people.

Become part of history!
Portrait of America is coming to UMass Amherst on

Friday, February 12, 2010.

Stop by the Campus Center Concourse from 12 noon - 2 pm or the Mullins Center from 6 - 7 pm and contribute your story and photo.

Tell us why you count!

S G A

NOMINATIONS FOR PRESIDENT, TRUSTEE, AREA GOVERNMENT

February 16th to March 1st

Pick up @ 420 Student Union, SGA Office
The Elections Commission
electionscommission@stuaf.umass.edu
http://blogs.umass.edu/ecsga

Economist invests in Isenberg speech Thurs.

By Noah Steinberg-Di Stefano
Collegian Staff

The economic crisis in which America finds itself embedded has many questioning how we got into this situation and, more importantly, what the best course of action to get the economy back on its feet may be. Yesterday afternoon, students filed into a lecture hall in the Isenberg School of Management in the hopes of finding some answers to the pressing dilemmas of this financial crisis.

Prominent economist, chairman of MFS Investment Management, Harvard Business School senior lecturer and author Robert Pozen was on campus Thursday to offer his take on the problems which led to the financial downturn and the steps which need to be taken for the nation to recover. Speaking to a crowd of about 60 students and a handful of Isenberg faculty, including associate dean Mark Weinberg, Pozen's lecture, "The Global Response to the Financial Crisis: Can we avoid a repeat?," outlined the irresponsible decision making by lawmakers, bankers and consumers alike that has driven the country into financial turmoil.

Pozen's newest book, "Too Big to Save: How to fix the U.S. Financial System," has been hailed as the most detailed and comprehensive breakdown of the economic crisis to date. In the lecture, Pozen drew directly from his book, presenting his take on the three issues he believes were the most controversial in today's financial debate: government bailouts, executive compensation and mortgage security.

In 2009, the United States government spent $1.6 trillion bailing out nearly 700 companies. While Pozen believes the bailout was necessary in some instances, such as AIG, which he said would have lead to an economic implosion, he said he feels 95 percent of the bailouts were entirely political, and a result of government officials who cracked under pressure.

"When the government decided to bailout all of the big companies, the smaller ones who didn't matter as much wanted a piece of the action as well, and the government wanted to be fair so we gave them what they wanted," he said. Pozen suggested future bailouts should follow a very narrow and carefully calculated rationale, assisting only companies whose failure would lead to global repercussions.

Prior to becoming the chairman of MFS Investment Management in 2004, a firm which manages more than $200 billion in assets worldwide, Pozen spent five years as president of Boston-based Fidelity Management & Research Co., the investment advisor to Fidelity Mutual Funds. During his time as president, Fidelity's assets nearly doubled. With over 20 years experience in investment management, Pozen has been very critical of how the government has handled the performance bonuses for company CEOs. He suggests extending the period for executive performance bonuses in order to ensure that they are performance based rather than guaranteed salaries.

"Any idiot can increase profits in the span of one year," he said. "All the current system does is encourage short-sighted thinking and irresponsible investments with big payoffs."

Another troublesome issue for economists is the high rate of inflation and increased national debt. Pozen cited the fragile yet interconnected relationship between the United States and China, and what that means for consumers who want to help nurture the economy back to health. For the currency imbalance to level out, Chinese people need to consume a lot more and Americans need to save a lot more. According to Pozen, the average Chinese family manages to save 25 to 30 percent of their annual income while American families are currently saving only 5 percent of their income annually. In order to fix this problem, Pozen says the American consumer is going to have to go through a transformation on how we choose to use our income. Pozen said responsibility to keep the inflation rate under control lies entirely with the Federal Reserve, and he is confident that Federal Reserve chairman Ben Bernanke will figure out the problem and fix it.

After about an hour-long lecture, Pozen spent 20 minutes or so fielding questions from the audience.

Ultimately, the tone of his lecture was based on a quote that he began with from fifteenth-century Italian philosopher Niccolo Machiavelli, "Never let a serious crisis go to waste." Although America is by no means out of the woods and there is certainly a great deal of work to be done, Pozen hopes those with the power to make a difference will share the insights he expressed in his book and learn from the mistakes in order create a stable future economy.

Noah Steinberg-Di Stefano can be reached at steinber@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY WIKIMEDIA COMMONS

Robert Pozen, a distinguished economist, spoke at the Isenberg School Thursday.

Romance is the best cure for a cynical heart

Scott Harris

It seems like more and more people these days are cynical about Valentine's Day. More than a handful of couples I am friends with are not celebrating the holiday at all. I have heard all of the arguments.

I understand that many people believe that it is a fake holiday invented by evil, conspiratorial greeting card companies to pad their profit margins with empty platitudes on paper stock and cheap chocolate. And it does certainly seem like florists try their best to become the plant versions of Wall Street bankers around this time of the year.

But I have a different opinion: Valentine's Day is one of my favorite holidays.

The origins of Valentine's Day are actually somewhat amusing. In the late 1700s, a British magazine published a list of generic love poems for people struggling to find ways to express themselves to their significant others.

At the same time, Britain began reducing their postage rates, as they taxed the colonies more heavily. In a matter of thirty or so years, the practice of mailing a poem to your lover became standard fare. By the mid-1800s, 1 billion pounds were being spent on sending valentines. From there, Valentine's Day spread worldwide.

And I am glad that it did. I think what makes a lot of people cynical is that most are not poets, and even if you are captivated by love wholly and completely, not everyone has the words to say to express those feelings.

Everyone is under-romanced. This is a shame, because I really believe that people are at their best when they are trying to express their love for their significant other.

I am one of those people. So what we do is go out to our local Hallmark store, find a meaningful but impersonal card with flowery message and gift it like it was our own.

There is not a lot of thought that gets put into that, no matter how many bouquets of roses one wraps around it. Plus, with the busy and hectic schedules we live through, there are just not enough hours in the day to come up with something extravagant. Obviously, the British were just lazy.

So, we are starting to understand Valentine's Day as a day of hollow gestures instead of what it should be.

But our busy schedules are exactly the reason why we should be celebrating Valentine's Day more intently. Everyone is under-romanced.

This is a shame, because I really believe that people are at their best when they are trying to express their love for their significant other. Even the most annoying of people (some might say that I fit into that category) can suddenly become heartfelt.

It is inspiring to see how creative people can get, how people pull obscure inside jokes and turn them into expressions of grandeur. And there is no question that everyone enjoys being romanced.

Valentine's Day gives us a golden opportunity, more than perhaps any other holiday, to become that person. If you are taking time out of your day to plan some elaborate gift or adventure for a lover in the middle of July, someone might ask you to put it down in favor of some work deadline. But leading up to Feb. 14, people understand why you are doing what you are doing.

This weekend, it really is worth everyone's time to put some effort into Valentine's Day.

Not to sound like some freshman Sociology major, but I honestly think that our lives would be much better if we could find a way to open the lines of communication and make sure that our significant others know, maybe just for one day out of all our busy days, that they are still number one.

Don't be cynical. Cards and flowers, they are standard affair so do not skip over the Hallmark store, but this is definitely the perfect time of the year to spend the time to plan something extravagant. Good luck.

Scott Harris is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at smharris@student.umass.edu

Being single on Valentine's Day no reason to pout

Manish Garg

Did you know that in China there is a holiday called Single's Day?

Apparently it happens on November 11 (because of the four 1's in the date), and is quite popular amongst college students.

Of course, in America people want to celebrate Valentine's Day; cherishing the joy and fertility of loving someone, and dedicating time and effort to make them happy while celebrating every moment shared as a loving romance.

It's either that, or just having another excuse to spend a night with someone doing what we hormonally driven humans normally do (yes, women too, don't deny it).

But where does that leave the increasingly large amount of singles that have to spend that notorious day alone?

According to singlesday.com and unmarriedamerica.org, 90 million people in America are currently single, and will be on Valentine's Day as well.

The general consensus for most singles' advocating websites tends to be that singles should use the time on that day to celebrate the freedom of being wild and spontaneous.

Reality check: being single hurts!

It hurts even when it's not Valentine's Day.

Everyone wants to feel like someone loves them, even if they hide it under the skin of "being free."

Being in a serious relationship gives the partners a sense of belonging and security that one can't find anywhere else, not in one's job or one's hobbies, or even from casual dating and sex.

Yes, being single is fun at times when it's done right; but having a significant other changes people's lifestyles and builds an emotional strength that a lot of people would give anything for.

On Valentine's Day, American culture displays giant reminders that couples have the security and belonging that single's don't; the loneliness is amplified by 2746.083915 percent or something around there.

It's like being kicked to the ground and made fun of, "I have a girlfriend and you don't, that sucks. Me and my boyfriend are going out, what are you doing all by yourself?"

Reality check... being single hurts! It hurts even when it's not Valentine's Day. Everyone wants to feel like someone loves them, even if they hide it under the skin of "being free."

It's downright insulting at times.

As I said earlier, however, not everyone feels that way. Some people do find ways to enjoy being single on February 14, by partying with friends, distracting themselves or simply not caring and doing whatever they do on a normal day.

It is possible to do all of these things, it just takes a ton of focus and integrity to do so, and websites alone don't make it happen.

One single day out of the 365 in the year should never cause such a variety of emotions to happen all at once.

People have lives to live; one doesn't want to be distracted by a date on the calendar telling one that one is single and lonely while others are happy and secure.

A holiday shouldn't cause so many people to go into depression while telling others that they're supposed to love their partner that one day over any of the other days of the year.

By its very nature, Valentine's Day is a sensitive holiday. The concept of love is something that has puzzled so many for so long. It is said to be purely mythical and imaginary, and yet its pursuit really does affect our lives.

A break up can demean one's outlook on life, causing one to give up healthy habits for harmful ones and making one negatively affect everyone around them.

At the same time, a new relationship can increase one's productivity in life, make one livelier and healthier, and generally make one want to smile and make others smile more.

As a final word on this topic, most of the time it gets lonely and painful for singles on Valentine's Day, but it really is only one day in the year. Everyone feels lonely; one idiotically emotional day shouldn't change anything.

Manish Garg is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mgarg@student.umass.edu.

POINT-COUNTER-POINT

"Freedom rings where opinions clash." - Adlai E. Stevenson

Moral quandry over in-state tuition

Help the legal students first

Eli Gottlieb

The United States of America, according to the Pew Hispanic Center, contained about 11.6 to 12 million illegal immigrants in 2006. According to the Massachusetts New Americans Agenda, 16.4 percent of Massachusetts income-tax filers were immigrants of any status in 2009, and 912,310 people out of the entire population of Massachusetts are immigrants (of any status) according to the same report. The Internal Revenue Service, according to the Congressional Budget Office's "The Impact of Unauthorized Immigrants on the Budgets of State and Local Governments," estimates that about 6 million illegal immigrants pay state, local and federal income taxes each year – about half. A new legal proposal in the Massachusetts state legislature would grant in-state tuition here at the University of Massachusetts Amherst to the non-citizen children of illegal immigrants who live in Massachusetts - note that children of illegal immigrants with US citizenship already count as having Massachusetts residency.

I have to make a convincing argument against this proposal. For once, I get to write a counterpoint with which I agree. After all, I'm an out-of-state student and in my opinion illegal immigrants have no better claim to Massachusetts citizenship or social aid than I have.

Why not extend in-state tuition to the half of illegal immigrants who pay their taxes? Relatively simple: it creates an incentive for illegal immigrants to migrate into Massachusetts from other states, thus further burdening the state budget and the University budget when they already suffer the strain of the recession.

In addition, remember an old Bedouin proverb: "I against my brother, I and my brother against my cousin, I and my brother and my cousin against neighbors, and all of us against the foreigner." Morally, one ought to help those who are close and kin to oneself before those far away and unrelated.

This does not mean that one should refrain from helping, but it does mean that while the majority of UMass out-of-state students pay $30,000 a year to attend the state ought to focus on lowering tuition for everyone or at the very least on helping fellow Americans, citizens and legal residents, before passing a feel-good band-aid law that helps the tiny proportion of UMass students and prospective students who are non-citizen children of illegal immigrants. That may play nicely with the "we are the world" crowd during flush economic times, but right now all things monetary have gone down the tubes.

Massachusetts ought to help its many student-cousins from New Jersey and New York – who remain ineligible for the tuition subsidy given to those from Vermont, New Hampshire, Maine, Connecticut and Rhode Island – before it helps complete foreigners who don't even have the legal clearance to live in the United States that our honest international students have.

This all may sound cruel or callous, but look at what has happened with the American health care system. Decades ago the public was convinced to take pity on the old and the poor by passing Medicare and Medicaid. Having done so, they decided that they had mostly solved the health care problem.

In my opinion, extending in-state tuition to illegal immigrants out of the state budget, instead of passing true reforms that would lower tuition for everyone, will result in much the same situation. As noted by the College Board, "Published tuition and fees at public four-year colleges and universities rose at an average annual rate of 4.9 percent per year beyond general inflation from 1999-2000 to 2009-10, more rapidly than the 3.0 percent and 4.0 percent of the previous two decades."

Our tuition and fees at UMass have risen and are rising much too fast, and we can't afford to implement social aid policies that will cost the state and University scarce dollars while holding us back from the complete reform we really need to liberate today's college and university students from semi-permanent indebtedness and dependence on financial aid.

Neither can Massachusetts solve the problems of illegal immigration with a feel good law. If America as a whole really wants to fully handle this issue, we first ought to police our borders better and re-open an immigration process more like Ellis Island than like the Whitmore Administration building. Ending American policies that hinder development in other nations, such as the "War on Drugs," would certainly help, and so would cracking down on the employers of illegal immigrants to stop the exploitation of immigrant labor.

When we really want to lower the cost of coming to UMass, we need to end the student loan industry (it's a moral hazard), nationalize state universities (given how much money flows from the federal government to UMass already, not much of a jump) and finally tear down the wall between UMass's renovation budget and UMass's general expenses budget. Even to start with a moderate reform, there is no reason that the federal government should talk about taking on student loans itself while not shifting some money from imperialistic war spending to subsidize m[illegible]tion for all American students, no matter the [illegible]en which we hail.

Eli Gottlieb is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at egottlie@student.umass.edu.

A fair chance at the future

Pedro Galvão

Before I set a foot on campus, I knew that I had to leave UMass within a year.

Administration officials had repeatedly, and mistakenly, informed me that due to my non-immigrant visa and my parents' impending international move, I would lose my in-state status. It did not matter that I graduated from a Massachusetts high school, or that, as I would later find out, once you have in-state status you don't lose it unless you leave the University. Administration officials repeatedly confirmed that once my parents left the state I would have to pay out-of-state tuition, a prospect I could not afford. But I am considered lucky; for many, even a year is too costly.

Most undocumented students who graduate from Massachusetts' high schools don't stand a chance at paying out-of-state tuition.

Though they pay the sales tax that helps keep the Commonwealth running and their parents often work dangerous and unregulated jobs, undocumented students are flatly denied a chance at a higher education because out-of-state tuition is simply an unaffordable prospect.

Not allowing these able individuals a chance at higher education is bad public policy. According to the Massachusetts Department of Education, Massachusetts spent roughly $10,000 per pupil in 2008.

If these students completed four years of high school they represent an investment of at least $40,000 and an even higher sum if they attended elementary school.

Though these students represent a tremendous financial investment on the part of the state, they are unable to achieve higher education.

A study by the Census Bureau found that college graduates stand to earn nearly $1 million more in their lifetimes than high school graduates. That additional revenue does not only mean additional tax dollars but also a boon to Massachusetts' high-tech and highly skilled industries.

"What part of illegal don't you understand?" is the slogan often used to justify measures against the undocumented.

But most of the students who would make use of Massachusetts' in-state tuition have been brought to the United States by their parents when they were too young to make the conscious choice to come. These, often bilingual, students have spent the bulk of their lives in United States. Their countries of origin are as familiar to them as a study abroad program is familiar to a typical college student.

Currently eleven states allow undocumented students to pay in-state tuition. Among them are the liberal bastions of Texas, Oklahoma and Utah. The sky did not fall when the undocumented were given a chance at higher education; in fact, studies have found that undocumented students with a degree are likely to be allowed a path to legalization through periodic changes to immigration law.

In its landmark ruling of Plyler v. Doe allowing undocumented students the right to a free state education, the Supreme Court wrote that undocumented students, "already disadvantaged as a result of poverty, lack of English-speaking abilities and undeniable racial prejudices … will become permanently locked into the lowest socioeconomic class."

Denying students who want to learn and contribute to the workforce a fair chance is wrong. Undocumented students won't simply drop everything and go "home." Rather they will be stuck in menial positions or worse, join the organizations that do not reject them, such as gangs.

In my own adopted state of Washington, undocumented students are allowed in-state tuition at state colleges and universities. The bill's proponents included Republican State Senator Mike Hewitt, the legislative leader of the Washington State Republican Party and Republican State Representative Maureen Walsh. If these legislators who represent a conservative, republican, rural district can vote for a better future for these students, why is it that a state that prides itself as one of the nation's most progressive adopt policies that are fundamentally regressive?

Pedro Galvão is a former UMass student and SGA senator. He is currently a senior at Whitman College in Walla Walla, WA.

Happy 201st birthday Charles Darwin. That's a lot of candles.

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

arts&living

YOUR WEEKEND GUIDE TO ART, MUSIC, FILM & CULTURE — ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

RUBBLEBUCKET

The funky New England natives jam their way into the Iron Horse Music Hall this Saturday

PG. 9

COURTESY RUFUSWAINWRIGHT.COM

Rufus Wainwright IV, known for his beautiful rendition of Jeff Buckley's "Hallelujah" on the "Shrek" soundtrack, will perform on Saturday night.

Calvin hosts Wainwright

By Angela Stasiowski
Collegian Staff

Remember that song? The one that Leonard Cohen penned and Jeff Buckley made famous?

The song is "Hallelujah," a gorgeous ballad of biblical allusions and secular lust that has been covered by many, but matched by few.

Now think back a couple years to that standout cover performance that was prominently featured on the "Shrek" soundtrack. Undeniably heartfelt, this piano-based cover made the soundtrack a double-platinum selling record.

Now you know the youngest Rufus Wainwright.

Wainwright will perform a set of his old-world meets modern-age piano ballads at the Calvin Theater this coming Saturday, Feb 13 at 8 p.m.

The vocal powerhouse is best known for his operatic pop ballads – technically complex, yet beautifully accessible.

From birth, Wainwright was destined to be a musical sensation. Father Loudon Wainwright III and mother Kate McGarrigle were highly influential figures of the folk music scene.

Though they divorced when Wainwright was scarcely older than two, the couple fostered passion for music in Wainwright.

At the beginning of his career, the young singer and pianist toured with his mother's band, aptly named the McGarrigle Sisters and Family. The band also featured Wainwright's famous sister Martha, who went on to develop a fairly extensive solo career of her own.

Wainwright was not entirely fulfilled by his family music business, however, and began performing solo shows at local clubs and bars.

At the beginning of his career, Wainwright was an underdog to say the very least, competing with the likes of Buckley for performances in New York's famous Sin-é.

His name caught flame in the Montreal club scene, and he was eventually signed to DreamWorks Records.

The songwriter's solo debut, a self-titled album featuring pared-down piano with Wainwright's strong, theatrical vocals, was released in early 1998.

Wainwright covers everything from unrequited love to religion in his songs, making for quite the varied set list.

The Canadian crooner is no stranger to the cinema either. He has recorded songs for an extensive list of films, including the aforementioned ogre love story, as well as "I Am Sam" and "Brokeback Mountain."

His cinematic resume also includes several acting performances, including a small role in "The Aviator."

Wainwright's cover of "Hallelujah" was not the songwriter's only tribute to the late Buckley. He penned the song "Memphis Skyline" in honor of the legendary performer, who met his tragic end in Memphis.

Wainwright has a myriad of other influences in addition to Buckley. His music is heavily perfumed with inspiration from Leonard Cohen and Judy Garland.

The singer-songwriter's respect for Garland was eventually translated into a 2007 tribute to the theatrical siren entitled "Rufus Does Judy at Carnegie Hall." It was his first widely released live album, and as his sixth album to date.

Wainwright also toured with such diverse artists as the Dresden Dolls, Cyndi Lauper and the Indigo Girls for the "True Colors Tour," which promoted gay rights.

Saturday's Calvin performance promises all of Wainwright's trademark spunk, trading piano for acoustic guitar to switch up the set list.

Valentine's Day weekend sets the perfect scene for Wainwright's music. Skip the flowers and the candy this year and let Wainwright serenade you and your sweetheart.

Angela Stasiowski can be reached at astasiow@student.umass.edu.

Twin duo kick off NoHo tour

By Ellie Rulon-Miller
Collegian Staff

Canadian indie rock sibling duo Tegan and Sara will be performing at the Calvin Theater in Northampton tonight. The night marks the first stop on their tour, which will take them to 26 cities across the country as they promote their latest album, "Sainthood." The album, their sixth to date, was released in October of last year.

The pair, who began touring with Neil Young and the Pretenders are known for showing significant evolution in their sound with each new record. They have also played with the likes of Rufus Wainwright, Cake, Cyni Lauper, Ben Folds, Death Cab for Cutie and Weezer.

While each of the sisters' music is based in indie-rock, they tend to introduce some different elements into their music with every release. The 2004 album "So Jealous" featured synths, in addition to their typical simple guitar, bass and drum lines.

"Sainthood" has a much more electronic-based sound than anything they have ever released before. This album also marks their closest collaboration thus far. Tegan and Sara, who are twins, have matured in their style not only in music, but in fashion. Their tastes have gone from hipster-punk to a much sleeker, more refined look. They have all but ditched their mullets, and look down-right chic with the edgy bobs displayed in their promotional photos.

Though they have long fought their twin image, the two sisters have begun to embrace it as they evolve. Tegan and Sara have also drawn much attention over the fact that they're both lesbians, and have played in the True Colors Tour in 2008.

The downside of the duo's new sound however is, with the exception of their singing, their latest music sounds more manufactured and fake. They have very clearly employed the use of a drum machine, and seem overwhelmingly dedicated to electronic sounds.

Their lyrics do not disappoint, though. They remain honest, cute and catchy – in true Tegan and Sara style.

Tegan and Sara will be performing tonight with Holly Miranda and Steel Train. Holly Miranda has an almost too laid-back, mellow sound, and a lot of her songs sound eerily similar. Steel Train's music features a garage rock sound sprinkled with piano and vocal stylings that set them apart from your cookie-cutter garage rock band.

All in all, this show promises to be an entertaining one. Tegan and Sara's live sound varies dramatically from their studio recordings, and they tend to sound much better onstage, with their performance complimented by their back and forth bantering.

Tegan and Sara, Holly Miranda and Steel Train will perform tonight at the Calvin Theater at 8 p.m. This show has been labeled "sold out" on a lot of online concert resources. However, in a last stitch effort to see the incredible sister duo, it would definitely be worth it to go and see if there are any tickets available at the door. The listed price for door tickets is $38.50.

Ellie Rulon-Miller can be reached at erulonmi@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY TEGANANDSARA.COM

Hailing from Calgary, Canada, Tegan and Sara will kick off their U.S. tour tomorrow at the Calvin Theatre in support of their latest album, "Sainthood."

Snuggle up with your sweetheart with these top 10 flicks

Nora Drapalski
Collegian Staff

"What movie should we watch?" It's a great moral dilemma. Do you pick the sickeningly sweet chick flick starring Leonardo DiCaprio, thinking she'll appreciate your thoughtfulness? Or, do you opt for your favorite pathetic action movie about transforming robots, praying that she'll like it because of Shia LeBouf? Well, to ease your worries and aid you in your quest to find the "perfect movie" for Valentine's Day, we've rounded up some modern love stories that should tickle both of your fancies (so to speak).

Adam

"Adam" does not fit the stereotypical model of a romantic movie. The lead is unsociable and withdrawn, and the story does not conclude the way you'd expect. So, why watch "Adam" on a day dedicated to love and romance? Answer: It is a quirky drama that you and your partner will love as you squirm in discomfort at the subject of the film, clutch your sides in pain at the awkward comedy, and sigh in contentment at the naïve love that arises between the two characters. If you're ready to push "Titanic" and "Gone With the Wind" to the side and try something new, add "Adam" to your playlist this Sunday. You won't be disappointed.

Meet Joe Black

Dark romance more your cup of tea? "Meet Joe Black" features a young Brad Pitt as Death himself, occupying the body of a mortal man as he comes to Earth to take Anthony Hopkins away (and maybe take a wife, while he's at it). Pitt is adorable as he discovers the wonders of being human — mmm, peanut butter. Of course, it can't end too well when the woman he is pursuing is the daughter of the man whose life he's snatching. In the meantime, Hopkins must deal with the knowledge of his looming death, and the little time he has left. "Meet Joe Black" is a bit morose, but Pitt's endearing performance is one of his more memorable, so if you have the time, check it out.

The Last of the Mohicans

While it may not be the first thing that pops into your head when someone says "romance," "Last of the Mohicans" is, at its core, a love story. You have forbidden love, a guy who sacrifices himself to save the woman he loves, and a man who can't bear to live after the woman he loves kills herself. Of course, the bloody, action-packed sequences give the guy something to enjoy in the movie, but it's definitely a great film, perfect for both romance and action tastes.

Kate and Leopold

Meg Ryan and Hugh Jackman in a movie about a Duke who travels more than 100 years into the future to visit modern New York? Count me in. While it may be horribly cheesy — of course the Duke will fall in love with Meg Ryan — Kate and Leopold is a romance novel brought to life. It is refreshing, though, that the lead is a strong, independent woman who is on her way to being promoted to an executive in her company. And the character of Leopold is a gentle hero who has come to sweep the modern woman off her feet to become his wife. If guys can get through it, Kate and Leopold is a cute romantic comedy made for this holiday.

Cozy up with your honey this Valentine's Day while watching one of the greatest love stories of all time, "Pride and Prejudice," starring Kiera Knightly and Matthew Macfayden.

Ever After

When bad things happen, they usually come in threes. Unfortunately, for Danielle de Barbarac, played by Drew Barrymore in the 1998 film, this universal law seems to be true. First, her dad dies. Then, she's forced into servitude by her two stepsisters and evil stepmother. Finally, a creepy old man pursues her in the hopes that she will marry him. Fortunately for this Cinderella, her Prince Charming is only a stone's throw away. While it may be a bit ridiculous — Want! Is that Da Vinci?! — "Ever After" is certainly a romantic comedy that is sure to please couples on Valentine's Day.

Beauty and the Beast

Who can deny that the "tale as old as time" is one of the purest forms of love? Recalling the myth of Cupid and Psyche, "Beauty and the Beast" is a story about love crossing the boundaries of societal differences and disfiguring curses to transform a hideous beast into a handsome prince. Does it depict the Stockholm Syndrome? Yes. Does it encourage sexist gender roles? Gaston certainly thinks so. But as a classic Disney film of the 1990s, it is a love story so many girls have fallen in love with. So men, before visiting your lady this Sunday, please pick up at least a single red rose. Trust me, she'll appreciate it.

Sabrina

No, not the Teenage Witch. Harrison Ford, Greg Kinnear and Julia Ormond star in this film about a love triangle featuring two rich brothers and the daughter of their chauffer. The story — boy likes girl, girl likes boy's brother, girl is torn between the two — is unoriginal, but it doesn't take away from the warm fuzzy feeling you get when you see Harrison Ford struggle as the jealous older brother trying to impress the young woman he fancies.

And if you favor a flashback to the 1950s, check out the original starring Humphrey Bogart and Audrey Hepburn. Full of male superiority and weak, simpering women, it's a classic for those who prefer the more stereotypical, misogynistic type of romance. But, for those seeking a more modern romantic film, take a look at Ford's puppy dog eyes in the 1995 version and you'll be lost.

10 Things I Hate About You

Bickering couple? Check. Nerdy boy pining after popular girl? Check. Modern take on a classic Shakespearean comedy? Check. Heath Ledger? Oh yes. Seriously, with so many things working for it, how could "10 Things I Hate About You" go wrong? Answer: It can't. Let me count the ways in which I love thee.

Pride and Prejudice

Let's face it — no one can write a romance quite like Jane Austen. And luckily for us, Keira Knightley and Matthew Macfayden teamed up to bring this literary classic to life in the 2005 Focus Features production. Darcy's rough manner and love for Elizabeth has wooed many hearts, although his stalker tendencies (remember that scene where he follows her at the ball?) may spark a few giggles from the less romantic. However, with a man who has inspired the phrase, "I'm waiting for my Mr. Darcy," "Pride and Prejudice" must be considered one of the top 10 movies to see on this holiday of love.

The Princess Bride

Perhaps the most well-known, and most quoted, romantic comedy of the late 1980s, "Princess Bride" is the perfect movie for Valentine's Day. It combines action, romance, comedy and mystery in a delightful story that at once both pokes fun at the typical fairy tale and enthralls both men and women, young and old. For couples looking for a laugh on their Valentine's Day, there's nothing better.

So when Valentine's Day rolls around this Sunday, take a few hours and check out at least one of these movies. Nothing says romance quite like cuddling on a couch (or bed) and watching a modern classic. So while you prepare your plans for this upcoming Sunday, in true Fezzik fashion, the only thing left to say is "Have a Happy Valentine's Day!"

Nora Drapalski can be reached at ndrapals@student.umass.edu

Rubblebucket set to funk up the Iron Horse

By Tappan Parker
Collegian Correspondent

As their name implies, Rubblebucket (formerly Rubblebucket Orchestra) includes more than just a guitarist, drummer and singer. But beyond the number of instruments involved, any similarities to a classical orchestra disappear abruptly when the stage lights go down. Formed in 2007, the band fuses wind, percussion, strings and vocals to create a sound that has been described as everything from trip-rock to psychedelic afrobeat, with a little funk on the side. Rubblebucket is truly one of a kind.

The ensemble is set to play at the Iron Horse in Northampton this Saturday, Feb. 13 at 10 p.m.

Rubblebucket consists of eight members in its horn and wind ensemble, backing up the vocals of lead singer Kalmia Traver. Occasionally, the band has guest artists on its tour, who jam with them on stage.

Having produced two albums to date, the band has garnered praise from several media outlets. So far they have been named "Best Band of 2008" by Seven Days Vermont, a title previously held by Phish in 2003 and 2004. After winning Relix Magazine's Jam-Off Competition in the same year, the band has built up quite a reputation; a reputation it will hopefully live up to this coming Saturday.

The afrobeat meets rock jam band has been inspired by bands like the Talking Heads, Bjork, Fela Kuti and Portishead, but Rubblebucket brings an energy to their music that is new and refreshing, leaving the listener with a smooth aftertaste that soothes the soul.

Rubblebucket's debut album, "Rose's Dream," was released in 2008 and, as a result of its success, was quickly followed by their second album, "Rubblebucket," in October of last year. Deli Magazine of New England gave the new album a glowing review, following its release, mentioning the ensemble's "vibrant soul of a funk band, magical vocals, spirit-possessing percussion that makes your feet move before your head tells them too and unique lyrics of poetic grade."

The band first came together when trumpeter Alex Toth and vocalist/saxist Kalmia Traver met percussionist Craig Myers in what has been called by the band "an unforgettable jam session/party in Burlington, VT's Hood Plant." This night inspired the trio to start, as Toth describes it, "a big crazy band." And so Rubblebucket Orchestra was born.

Myers, whose drumming inspired the afrobeat rhythm commonly associated with the band, studied West African percussion for 10 years before the epic jam session.

Trombonist Adam Dotson eventually joined Toth, Traver and Myers when Toth met Dotson at a Fourth of July parade in Cambridge, Mass.

Eventually the crew was joined by drummer, guitarist and keyboardist Dave Cole, keyboardist Darby Wolf, bassist Mark Stewart and guitarist Ian Hersey.

Better bring your dancing shoes — This is going to be one wild show.

Rubblebucket will be playing on Saturday at the Iron Horse in Northampton, Mass. Doors open at 10 p.m. and tickets are $10 in advance and $13 at the door.

Tappan Parker can be reached at rtparker@student.umass.edu

Rubblebucket use afro-beat, jam, funk sounds in their energetic performances. The New England natives are slated to play the Iron Horse this Saturday.

DIY: Steampunk style on the cheap

By Ellie Rubin-Miller
Collegian Staff

Remember the scene at the end of "Back To The Future Part III," where Doc returns to the 1980s on a really cool train? Do you remember how cool he and Carla's clothes looked, a perfect combination of Victorian, old western, and futuristic styles?

This is a classic, widely-recognized example of the steampunk style. The style has its roots in 1970s literature, and has been gaining momentum and commonality in fashion, movies, and books ever since, while developing into a culture all its own.

The most basic way to describe steampunk is "if the future existed in the past." Fashion accessories include a lot of clock gears and brass. Clothing is old-fashioned in its most basic form, but spiced up with top hats, jewelry, and the biggest staple in steampunk fashion: goggles. There is a plethora of tutorials online which explain how to make these aviator-style goggles out of the most basic materials.

The king of the steampunk movement has got to be Jake von Slatt, an eastern Massachusetts resident who has completely immersed himself in the culture, converting everyday things such as computers and buses into beautiful steampunk versions of themselves.

Von Slatt has done it all in the world of steampunk. He has converted a bus into an RV in the style; etched the packguard on his Stratocaster, upgraded an old computer with bronze embellishments, a guitar amplifier; etched designs into jewelry, and even more projects.

One of the simplest ways to give something you own a steampunk look is a simple paint job. One of the coolest steampunk items you can find on the internet are converted water guns and Nerf guns. Unfortunately, this is not a paint job you could give your Nerf guns if you are planning on taking part in Humans vs. Zombies later this month, as the rules of the game say that your weapon must actually resemble a toy, anything too realistic could get you arrested.

For the simplest steampunk paint job, step one is to simply cover your object of choice with a layer of black spray paint. Make sure you let it dry before proceeding to the next step, and you may want to consider a second coat of paint.

Next, use different colored "rub and buff," available at craft stores, on the edges of the weapon to accent its angles. Use bronze, gold, and silver to stay true to the steampunk style.

This is the most basic way to give an object that "future in the past" appearance. What makes this project all the more fun is that most water guns and Nerf guns look futuristic already; it's just not noticed because of the way they are colored. The steampunk paint job adds a whole new level of "badass" to the giant barrels on your HVZ guns.

Steampunk style centers around the concept of the future existing in the past, featuring goggles, gears and lots of brass.

It's also easy to add subtle steampunk attributes to your daily look. It's easy (and cheap) to make earrings, rings and necklaces using old watch and clock parts; all you need to do is buy or use an old watch, carefully open it up, take out one of the inner components and fasten it to a fitted ring, string on a necklace, or stick to a pair of earrings.

In my own daily wardrobe, I wear a steampunk locket, a birthday gift purchased from Etsy.com. Etsy is loaded with awesome, cheap, DIY steampunk jewelry and clothing, if you don't feel like you have the creative flair to make your own.

Keep a weather eye on the horizon for steampunk to gain momentum in mainstream culture, as it is getting more and more popular with each passing day. Sometimes going back to the future never gets old.

Ellie Rubin-Miller can be reached at erubinmi@student.umass.edu.

CINEMARK
For advance tickets & showtimes visit
cinemark.com
or call 1-800-FANDANGO + Exp Code 1118#
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
FIRST MATINEE SHOWTIME (7 DAYS A WEEK) $5.00
ADULT MATINEE BEFORE 6PM $6.25 • STUDENT $7.00 (WITH ID)
AVATAR - REAL D 3D ($2.75 SURCHARGE) [PG13] 110 440 810
◆ PERCY JACKSON & THE OLYMPIANS: THE LIGHTNING THIEF [PG] 115 410 655 940
◆ THE WOLFMAN [R] Ⓓ 120 235 350 505 620 735 850 1010
◆ VALENTINE'S DAY [PG13] 105 200 355 450 645 740 935
◆ DEAR JOHN [PG13] 130 425 720 1005
◆ FROM PARIS WITH LOVE [R] Ⓓ 435 730 1025
EDGE OF DARKNESS [R] Ⓓ 150 440 725 1015
IT'S COMPLICATED [R] Ⓓ 405 1000
LEGION [R] Ⓓ 1030pm
SHERLOCK HOLMES [PG13] 100 705
THE BOOK OF ELI [R] Ⓓ 920pm
TOOTH FAIRY [PG] 145 420 650
UP IN THE AIR [R] Ⓓ 140
WHEN IN ROME [PG13] 155 445 710 955
◆ NO PASSES-NO CLASSIC SUPERSAVERS

Delta Xi Phi

Multicultural Sorority, Inc.

We are a national organization that strives to transcend the Sorority stereotype to create a unique sisterhood

Based on unity in diversity.

Sisterhood

Increasing Multicultural Awareness

Friendship

Community Service

ΔΞΦ

Advancement of Women Through Higher Education

Do you have the same ideals?

Then you may be a diamond in the rough!

Tuesday 2/16	4:30PM Informational Campus Center	Friday 2/19	11AM Informational YKCC
Wednesday 2/17	6PM Informational Campus Center 7PM Baking Treats Social Johnson	Saturday 2/20	6PM Multicultural Potluck DXP sisters will cook dishes from their cultures to share with ladies interested in becoming sisters!
Thursday 2/18	6PM Informational followed by Mocktails & Game Night YKCC	Sunday 2/21	1PM Eric Carle Museum Arts & Crafts Meet in front of Johnson

Visit us at www.umass.edu/rso/dxp

Please contact us at iotadxp@gmail.com

For more info or an application

UMass heads to Boston for Valentine Invitational

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Sprinter Andrew O'Donnell runs with the baton during a team relay last year. The Minutemen's next race will be this weekend at the Giegengack Invitational.

By Michael Wood
Collegian Staff

With a week to go until the Atlantic 10 Championship, the stakes are high in Boston's annual Valentine Invitational on Feb. 12. This two-day meet is the last opportunity for the Massachusetts track and field teams to train and prepare for the championship meets which are rapidly approaching.

The men's team is coming off the two-day Giegengack Invitational last week in New Haven, Conn. In the event, the Minutemen qualified for the Eastern College Athletic Championship in two events. The distance medley team, consisting of Josh Boone, Joseph Doyle, Scott VanderMolen and Jonathon Pierce, placed fifth and qualified with their time of 10 minutes, 4.74 seconds. That mark was also the best time recorded by the Minutemen in the distance medley this season.

Also qualifying for UMass last weekend was jumper Daniel Wu. The sophomore took first place in the long-jump event and set a personal best with his mark of 22 feet, 6.25 inches.

Men's coach Ken O'Brien said that while this weekend is certainly important, it also offers a chance to prepare and try different athletes in their second or third best events.

"At this point in the season we've evaluated and we pretty much know where we expect people to place," O'Brien said. "Now we start polishing up on second and third events and refining our skills even more. Things are going to pick up now and we have to be ready for that. I think the guys are doing a great job of preparing so far."

The Minutemen will travel to Boston with 15 members qualified for the New England Championship and five members preparing to compete in the ECAC Championship. O'Brien says that although he is happy with his team's progress this season, he expects them to step up even more in the coming weeks.

"We have to be on top of our game," O'Brien said. "After this week there is no room for error."

The Minutewomen are also in competition this weekend as they will travel to Boston and compete in the same Valentine Invitational.

In New Haven, Conn. last weekend it was the distance medley relay team that took center stage. The squad, which consisted of Karen Rua, Gina Perno, Courtney Baldwin and Micelle Jenssen set a UMass record and won the event with their time of 11:49.3.

With the win, the team went up in the distance medley standings and now ranks first in the A-10.

Standing out even more among that relay group was Michelle Jenssen. Competing in more than just the distance medley relay, Jenssen placed in three separate events including the distance medley, 4x400-meter relay and the 400-meter run.

This versatility and success earned her the A-10 Rookie Performance of the Week, the first of her career. This is the third consecutive week that a UMass athlete received the award.

Consistent performances from the freshmen on the team also helped stabilize the Minutewomen this season, and that depth is something that will pay dividends in the A-10 tournament and beyond.

With three school records and five top five all-time marks already recorded this season, UMass has been quite successful thus far, and will look to continue that success this weekend in Boston.

Michael Wood can be reached at mcwood@student.umass.edu

BU coughs up 4-point lead, loses to Vermont

By John Barone
The Daily Free Press (BU)

For extended stretches of Tuesday's game, the Boston University men's basketball team showed exactly why the coaches of the America East Conference tabbed it as the preseason favorite to win the league.

Then, with victory just seconds away from BU's grasp, the University of Vermont pulled the rug out from under its rival's seemingly special night.

Senior forward Marqus Blakely capped a 21-point, 12-rebound performance by assisting on the go-ahead basket with 9.4 seconds left in regulation, and the Catamounts eked out a 76-75 win over the Terriers before a crowd of 968 at Agganis Arena.

Junior forward John Holland poured in a game-high 29 points and senior guard Carlos Strong added 19 for BU (13-12, 8-5 AE), which has lost eight of its last nine meetings with Vermont (18-8, 9-3).

"They exeeuted down the stretch. We didn't," BU coach Patrick Chambers said. "We were trading baskets and not getting stops, and you can't do that against one of the best teams in the league. We need to learn from this and not put our heads down."

BU called a timeout after Blakely hit junior forward Evan Fjeld for a backdoor layup that put Vermont on top. But with four seconds remaining, senior guard Corey Lowe dribbled the ball off his left foot and out of bounds before the Terriers could attempt a final shot.

"I told him to keep his head up and not worry about it," Chambers said of Lowe, who walked off the court in tears after the game. "That's life. He needs to learn from it and move on."

"We played hard. That's all I can say," Strong said. "We just made a few mistakes."

Trailing by as many as 11 points in the first half, BU trimmed Vermont's advantage to 38-32 at halftime on the strength of a 29-14 run.

When the Terriers emerged from their locker room, they did so as the explosive offensive unit America East opponents fear most.

Holland and Strong combined for 30 points in a second half that featured six lead changes and 60 percent shooting from BU. Strong's lay-in at 13:10 gave the Terriers a 48-46 edge, their first advantage since the game's opening minute.

"Offensively, BU's talent is ridiculous," Vermont coach Mike Lonergan said. "There's a reason why they were picked to win it."

The Terriers assumed a four-point cushion of 75-71 on senior guard Tyler Morris' layup with 1:05 to play.

A double-teamed Blakely then dished out a pair of game-changing passes. The two-time conference Player of the Year set up senior guard Nick Vier's trey with 52 seconds left and, following a missed jumper from Holland, fed a cutting Fjeld for the decisive lay-in.

"I saw that one defender was on me and the other one was coming," Blakely said. "Evan did the right thing going to the basket."

"Our guys got tied up and we lost [Fjeld]," Chambers said. "We have to work on communicating."

Two of Blakely's three assists came in the contest's final 52 seconds.

"He's a very talented, unselfish player who does whatever it takes to win," Chambers said. "He's not a guy who just tries to get his on the offensive end. He's most effective when he's sharing the basketball."

Presented with one last chance to respond, the Terriers instead succumbed to another breakdown in execution. A harassed Morris brought the ball up the floor and found Lowe, who lost it in front of the BU bench.

"It's something we work on every day in practice. I don't know what happened," Chambers said. "We were running a back-screen for Tyler and he took the ball up. I don't know if Tyler thought the heat was on, but he gave it up. Corey got the ball, and I'm not sure how he got in that position."

Chambers didn't hesitate when asked if he considered Tuesday's loss a wasted opportunity or step forward.

"We missed a chance," Chambers said. "I thought that, with the way we were playing collectively as a group and the confidence we were gaining, we were the better team. I felt like all the pieces were almost together.

"I don't want to have moral victories. We're a Division I basketball team. You might do that stuff when you're younger, in high school. But on this level, we can't be satisfied with getting close. We've still got to win a big one."

Game notes:

Holland left the contest early in the second session after taking an elbow to the face from Fjeld. BU trainers treated the America East's leading scorer and he returned at the 14:24 mark, sporting a bandage on his nose.

Morris set a career high with seven assists.

The Terriers missed 7-of-16 free throws. Vermont scored 18 bench points to BU's six.

Off The Wall Games

Discount role-playing games, Collectible card games (CCGs), Miniature war games and board games, fun for everyone!

Hours: 10-10 Wednesday-Sunday, 12-10 Monday, Closed Tuesdays - 41 Russel St (Hampton Village Shops) Rt. 9, Hadley 413-586-5451

UM looks to rebound against Huskies

By Jeffrey R. Larnard
Collegian Staff

Last Friday's 7-1 loss to Boston College gave the Massachusetts hockey team few positives, if it gave any at all.

But moving ahead, the No. 18 Minutemen may look at this weekend's opponent as a positive: Northeastern.

At the beginning of January, the Minutemen fell in back-to-back games to Boston University, 7-3, and to New Hampshire, 7-2. The night following the loss to the Wildcats, UMass (16-11-0, 11-9-0 Hockey East) headed to Northeastern with a sense of focus after being embarrassed the night before.

The Minutemen left that night with a 4-1 victory over the Huskies (13-12-1, 8-10-1 HEA), and won another three in row to tie their longest winning streak since winning four to start the season.

Goaltender Paul Dainton bounced back in the contest, after giving up six goals to BU, by holding Northeastern to one goal and allowed five in the four-game winning streak.

Dainton and the rest of the Minutemen will look again for a similar focus this weekend and to bounce back from recent struggles with a home-and-home set with the Huskies starting tonight in the Mullins Center at 7 p.m. followed by another 7 p.m. contest Saturday at Northeastern.

JEFF BERNSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

Defenseman Justin Braun skates past a defender during a home game this season. The Minutemen have an important series against Northeastern ahead of them this weekend.

"We've done this before," UMass coach Don Cahoon said. "We came off a tough loss at UNH where we didn't play much better and there was a rejuvenated enthusiasm if you will and kind of a narrow focus put in place."

Friday's loss is seen as a mulligan to Cahoon, knowing that there is little he can take away from the loss, even a learning lesson.

"We can't be playing like that in any case and that's exactly what it was. It's got to be a mulligan, we can't dwell on it," Cahoon said. "There wasn't even enough in the game tape to even make it a productive learning lesson, it was just a real bad outing from A-Z."

Northeastern (2.65 goals per game) isn't quite the offensive powerhouse that BC (2.85), but Cahoon finds the Huskies to have a lot of similarities to the Minutemen and is not a team to be taken lightly.

"They are a lot like we are, they play real hard and they have a couple of kids who they rely on for their offensive production," Cahoon said. "They have a young goaltender who has been very good at times and other times has been suspect, so I think you just come out and take it shift by shift."

Although UMass used No theastern to get back on the winning track a month ago, it doesn't mean it can be taken lightly. While the Huskies currently sit in eighth place in the conference standings with 17 points, a weekend sweep would put them one point behind UMass who currently is in fourth place.

"We have to play at a pace and with conviction and that is something that has been hard pressed to find day-in and day-out," Cahoon said. "Playing with conviction is a big one for me. I think that is how you approach Northeastern."

Not only would a sweep by the Huskies be vital for them in moving up in the standings, it could also prove devastating to UMass. Behind the Minutemen is a three-team tie for fifth place between BU, Vermont and UMass-Lowell, all with 18 points. With the top four teams in the conference earning home ice in the first round of the Hockey East Tournament, the Minutemen sit in a highly coveted spot.

On the other hand, UMass is in a position to move up in the standings as well if it can bounce back against Northeastern as it did last month. Just two points ahead of the Minutemen in a tie for second place is BC and Maine, who each face tough competition this weekend. The Eagles play a home-and-home set with UML while the Black Bears play twice at BU, a team who has won three of its last four and seven of its last 10.

Jeffrey R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@dailycollegian.com.

JEFF BERNSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

Senior Will Ortiz positions himself for a shot during a game this year.

UMass to face NEC champs

By Ben Lambert
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts tennis team returns to action this afternoon against Long Island University at the United States Tennis Association Tennis Center in New York. The Blackbirds are the defending Northeast Conference champions and were selected by conference coaches to finish second this season.

They return four singles competitors from that squad, including NEC Player of the Year Selma Babic. Their record currently stands at 1-0, after a victory over Albany last weekend.

Last year, they ended up with a 10-8 overall record, including a perfect 3-0 mark in conference competition. This record included a 6-1 loss to UMass on Feb. 1st in Amherst. The Minutewomen cruised in the encounter, winning every doubles match on their way to victory. The only winner for the Blackbirds was Babic, who defeated junior Candynce Boney, 6-2, 6-4.

Boney earned measure of revenge though, as she teamed with senior Maude Lecluyse to defeat Babic and sophomore Dara Lahens.

Other notable winners for UMass included junior Kaitlyn Carpenter, who beat Ashley Harvey, 7-5, 7-6 (1) in the closest match of the day at No. 2 singles, and a victory for the team of Laura Danai and junior Tanisha Hodgson at No. 2 doubles. The match will feature a rematch from the Sept. 25 Eastern Championships as well, as Babic will face off with UMass No. 1 singles competitor Magdalena Ploch.

Babic defeated Ploch 1-6, 6-1, 10-7 in a hotly contested match last time out. Both players come into the match on hot streaks. Ploch has been dominant this year, posting a 4-1 record in dual match play. The only loss came against Yale and the No. 9 player in the northeast, Stephanie Kent.

Ploch was ranked tenth in the northeast in an Intercollegiate Tennis Association preseason poll, and was named the UMass Athlete of the Week in November for her work at the ITA Regional Championships. Ploch dispatched the No. 14 seed Annie Houghton of Army, who is a two-time Patriot League Champion.

She also knocked off the No. 3 seed from Harvard, Hideko Tachibana, 6-2, 6-2. Tachibana held a 12-0 record with three tournament titles going into that match. Babic was dominant last year in the NEC as Player of the Year, with a 16-1 mark in dual match play. Since she transferred from Clemson two years ago, Babic racked up 11 NEC Player of the Week awards.

This year, she was solid out of the block with five straight singles victories in tournament and dual match play. The Minutewomen are 1-1 coming into this match after splitting two contests against Yale and Siena this weekend.

After a 7-0 loss at the hands of the No. 44 Bulldogs, the Minutewomen bounced back with a 7-0 victory over the Saints. After their match against Long Island, UMass will return home to take on the St. John's at the Bay Road Tennis Club. The match will begin at 12:30 p.m.

Ben Lambert can be reached at wlambert@student.umass.edu.

JEFF BERNSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

Freshman Julie Comas volleys the ball back during a competition earlier this year.

UMass defeat Duquesne in overtime

UM shoots 40.8 percent in win

By David Brinch
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's basketball team finally did something they have wanted to do all season: win from behind on the road.

The Minutemen (9-15, 3-7 Atlantic 10) won their second conference game on the road this season in overtime, defeating Duquesne, 84-80 Thursday night.

UMass played from behind at halftime, erasing a 16-point deficit to come back outscore the Dukes, 44-41, in the second half.

Down 54-34 early in the second half, the Minutemen went on a 15-3 run with four 3-pointers, two from senior guard Ricky Harris, one by Anthony Gurley and another by freshman forward Terrell Vinson.

Redshirt sophomore center Sean Carter paced the Minutemen with 11 points and a career-high 19 rebounds, including a put-back dunk in the final seconds of overtime to cap the victory. Senior guard Ricky Harris had another impressive outing, adding 29 points on 10-of-22 shooting from the field and going 5-of-10 from beyond the arc. Redshirt junior guard Anthony Gurley had 20 points off the bench, while the Minutemen shot 46 percent from 3-point range and 77 percent from the line.

Junior forward Damian Saunders finished with 15 points and seven rebounds, as the A-10 rebounding leader turned the ball over three times against UMass.

The Dukes did not shot the ball particularly well, going 27-of-69 from the field and 8-of-24 from beyond the arc.

The Minutemen continued to dominate opponents on the glass, 60-33, but still struggled to hold onto the ball with 22 turnovers.

The 60 boards were the most secured by a UMass team since the 1996 Final Four team.

Saunders missed two field goals with under a minute left in regulation, as the Minutemen secured the rebound and brought the ball down the court.

Gurley launched a 3-pointer and missed, but UMass recovered and got two chances to end the game, but missed.

Harris hit two free-throws to give the Minutemen their first lead in overtime with under two minutes to play.

Along with Gurley, UMass had 29 bench points, while the Dukes had just 9. Freshman forward Sampson Carter had seven, and junior guard Gary Correia added a field goal.

This is the second overtime game the Minutemen have played this season, and their first victory of 2010. UMass fell to Richmond, 70-63, back on Jan. 13, for their first conference loss on the road.

The Minutemen snapped a three-game losing streak with the victory over the Dukes, after losing to Charlotte, Xavier and Rhode Island.

JEFF BERNSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

Guard Anthony Gurley takes the ball up the floor against Xavier during the Minutemen's 87-79 loss against Xavier on Feb. 3. UMass will play Saint Joseph's on Sunday.

UMass takes on Saint Joseph's at home on Sunday at the Mullins Center. It the Hawks, 87-80 back, on Jan. 27 for their first A-10 victory on the road, after they were in the midst of a five-game losing streak.

Harris and Vinson combined for 39 points in the victory, as the Minutemen used another key run in the second half to come away with the victory.

The Hawks are coming off a 56-52 loss to Saint Louis on Wednesday, and are currently tied with UMass at 3-7 in the A-10 record.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu.

Temple outshoots Minutewomen

By Neil Carroll
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's basketball team has clearly struggled to defend teams with a high 3-point shooting percentage so far this season. Although Temple did not shoot at a higher percentage than the Minutewomen coming into the game, the team lit UMass up from beyond the arc on its way to a 66-54 victory on Wednesday night in Philadelphia.

Shaqwedia Wallace did most of the damage against UMass, as she scored 22 points on 4-of-6 shooting from beyond the arc. However, Wallace was not the only sharp shooter in Wednesday's contest. The Owls shot a staggering 45 percent in 20 3-point attempts.

JEFF BERNSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

Freshman Jasmine Watson drives to the lane against a St. Bonaventure defender during UMass' 69-54 loss on Feb. 2. The Minutewomen play Dayton on Saturday.

While the Minutewomen shot 7-of-11 from 3-point land themselves, the team couldn't keep up with Temple's fast paced defense. The Owls held the Maroon and White to 37.3 percent shooting in the game – a characteristic that has been their trademark throughout the season.

The UMass scorers could not gain any room on offense and the team also lost the battle underneath the rim.

Even though the Minutewomen won the rebounding battle, 16-10, Temple pulled away thanks to second-chance baskets. The Owls had the advantage, 23-10, over UMass in that category because they kept the ball alive under the hoop.

Datienna Hill led all UMass scorers with 18 points on 7-of-10 shooting from the field. The game marked the first time Hill scored in double-digits since the last time UMass traveled to Pennsylvania – that game was a loss to Duquesne.

The senior was 2-of-2 from beyond the arc, and also improved her free-throw shooting percentage by hitting both free throws. Hill also helped out with five assists, four rebounds and three steals.

Jasmine Watson managed 10 points and five rebounds in the game despite heavy pressure from Temple's Jasmine Stone and Marli Bennett. Coming off of a 21-point game against Fordham, Watson drew a lot of attention and was constantly double-teamed in the post.

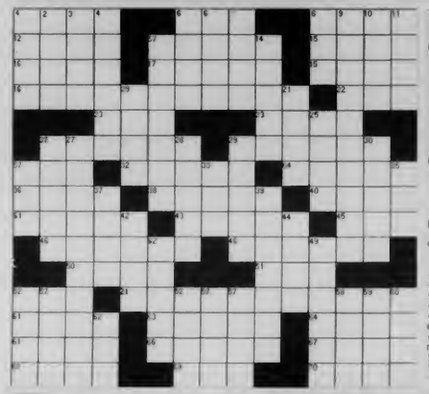
Temple's aggressive defense also held Kristina Danella in check. The sophomore scored two points on perfect from the free-throw line. She also had four rebounds, two assists and two steals.

UMass now drops to 9-15 overall and 3-6 in the Atlantic-10. However, the Minutewomen have a chance to improve their conference record over the weekend against Dayton.

The Minutewomen won against Fordham the last time they returned to the Mullins Center and will try to do the same this weekend. Heavy snow postponed Dayton's last game until Thursday, and the Flyers will come to Amherst off of a grueling road trip that lasted five days.

However, they are coming off a three-game winning streak with an 18-point average margin of victory during that stretch. Dayton (18-5, 6-2 A-10) beat its last opponent, 72-42, with Kari Daugherty coming off the bench to score 16 points in as many minutes.

The Flyers (71.3 points per game) have the second best offense in the A-10 with forward Justine Raterman (11.8 ppg) leading the team in scoring.



Dayton is a young team with mostly underclassmen, but is deep at the guard position. This season, the Flyers have used that to their advantage with 42.6 percent shooting – third best in the A-10.

If UMass hopes to have any luck against Dayton, it will have to clog up the middle with its size, and force outside shots.

Neil Carroll can be reached at nacarroll@student.umass.edu.

comics

CROSSWORD

ACROSS
1. History
5. Fifth note in do-re-mi
8. Radiate
12. Initial wager
13. Yearns
15. Achy
16. Honk
17. Sky-blue
18. Mix
19. Insalubrious
22. Any doctrine
23. Est. time of arrival
24. A river in Spain
26. Endeavor
29. Straighten out
31. Doctor group
32. Wireless telephones
34. Periods of discounted prices
36. Amount owed
38. Competitor
40. List of choices
41. Apportion
43. Big cat
45. Bro or sis
46. Give life-time employment to
48. Self-centeredness
50. Stiff hair
51. Pale
52. Get-up-and-go
54. Unworthy
61. Greek god of love
63. The 10th letter of the Greek alphabet
64. Found in skin lotion
65. Dwarf buffalo
66. Affirm
67. Depression
68. Give temporarily
69. Mesh
70. X X X X

DOWN
1. Maori club
2. Any minute
3. Put away
4. Leash
5. The physical magnitude of something
6. Burden
7. Protagonist
8. S
9. Unmoving
10. Colored part of an eye
11. Course
13. Discussion
14. Spermal fluid
20. Auditory
21. Wanes
25. 500 sheets of paper
26. Refine, as metal
27. A measure used in cooking
28. Best of the best
29. Practice
30. Fabric for jeans
31. American Dental Association
33. Fifty-six in Roman numerals
35. U-boat
37. Sound
39. Socks or stockings
42. Ballet wear
44. Lion sound
47. Hierarchy levels in the army
49. Overrun
52. Resound
53. Coastal raptor
55. Sunrise
56. Sword
57. Expectorated
58. Holly
59. Not a single one
60. Obtains
62. Unhappy

WE WANT YOUR COMICS

No seriously, you got those comics? I'll straight up hussle you for some comics!

E-mail: comics@dailycollegian.com

APARTMENTS AVAILABLE

PUFFTON VILLAGE

EXCELLENT LOCATION!
1/2 MILE FROM UMASS

SPACIOUS APARTMENTS!
1, 2, & 3 Bedroom Townhouses

ALL RENTS INCLUDE: HEAT, HOT WATER, AND COOKING GAS!

ON SITE LAUNDRY, OFF STREET PARKING.

BASKETBALL AND TENNIS COURTS.

OFFICE HOURS: 8AM TO 4PM MONDAY - FRIDAY
(413) 549-0145
WWW.PUFFTONVILLAGE.COM

SUDOKU

2					5		7	9
5								3
		7					1	6
					1	6
				6	4			2
	8		3				5
			8	9
		1					2
4		6				3

Pootie Tang

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"I have a love interest in every one of my films - a gun."

— Arnold Schwarzenegger

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necessary. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 Bedroom Apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug, or Sept. First come, First Serve. Get Them While They Last. www.brandywine-apts.com. Stop by or Call 549-0600

Hobart Condos 3 bedrooms; hardwood floors, study in basement. Cable & Phone in all bedrooms & study. NOW SHOWING for June & September. NO FEES www. amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7979

SERVICES

Pregnant? Want to talk? Call birthright 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 Hour hot-line 1-800-550-4900 www.birthright.org

TUTORING SERVICES

Math, Physics, Chemistry, Stats, & GRE. Call John 413-584-8643 Jbold42@yahoo.com

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Montreal Party Weekends From $89 Complete. montrealExpress.net MontrealBlowout.com 781-979-9001

Blood vs. Oil by David Wakman infinitymaze.com

SMBC by Zach Weiner smbc-comics.com

Domino's Pizza

Domino's 2 or More 2-Topping Medium Pizzas $5.99 Each

ORDER ONLINE at dominos.com (413) 256-8911

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20 - Feb. 18
This is the weekend for true love, not the weekly good old Saturday-Night-Fever-on-two packs-of-terrible-mistakes kind of love.

pisces Feb. 19 - Mar. 20
Those candy hearts not only have cute sayings on them but also a list of great medication to promote healthy lovemaking.

aries Mar. 21 - Apr. 19
It is time to break out the satin sheets and see which frat boy can slide to the other side of the bed without spilling their forty.

taurus Apr. 20 - May. 20
You will not have a truly happy Valentine's Day until you pay Santa Claus that dime bag of cookies you stiffed him on a few months back.

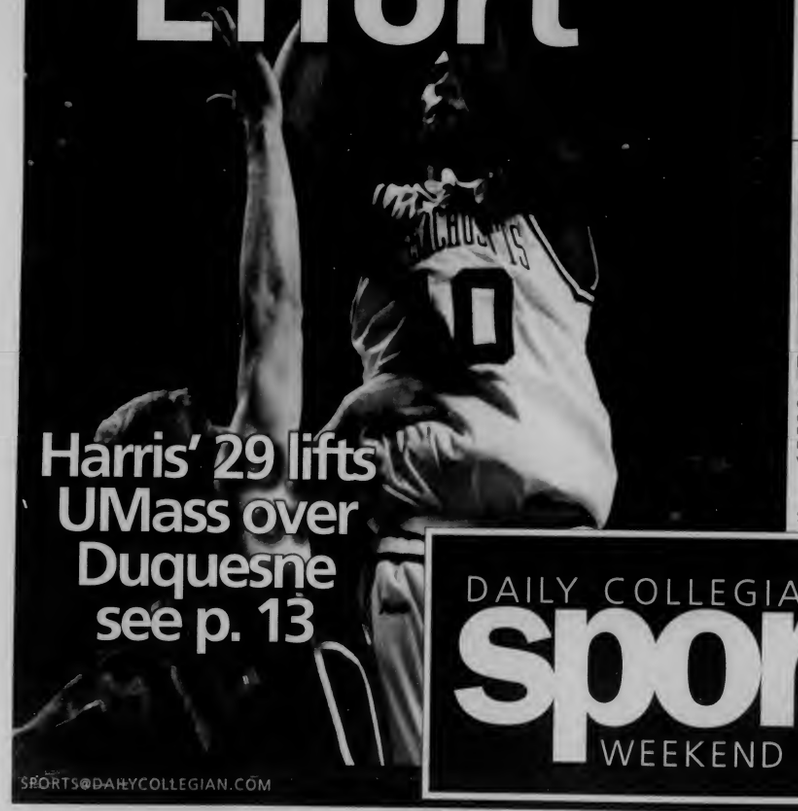
gemini May. 21 - Jun. 21
Bad things will happen if you go see Valentine's Day the movie. Taylor Swift's acting instantly causes jaundice and vomiting.

cancer Jun. 22 - Jul. 22
Keep in mind that Forrest Gump was a loveable diminished person and that eating from assortments of chocolates usually ends in pain.

leo Jul. 23 - Aug. 22
The only way that Natalie Portman will be your valentine is if you shave your head and make a gangsta rap that is better than hers.

virgo Aug. 23 - Sept. 22
Why should you pay for your loved one's gifts when you could pull a Winona Ryder and shoplift them all?

libra Sept. 23 - Oct. 22
Though exciting, bringing your date to the World Peanut Butter Eating Championship in East Springfield is frowned upon.



scorpio Oct. 23 - Nov. 21
No matter what, do not tell your friends about what is going to happen this holiday. Tell them you got tennis elbow.

sagittarius Nov. 22 - Dec. 21
Love not going so well this year? Stop wasting time when you could be putting a lot more effort into becoming the first American Jedi.

capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 19
If all those other lines do not work try this one: "Roses are red, violets are blue but no matter what you will always be the Ash to my "Pikachu."

Extra Effort

Harris' 29 lifts UMass over Duquesne

see p. 13

WOMEN'S HOOPS

The Minutewomen struggled to stop Temple from making shots as it torched its way to a 66-54 victory on Wednesday night. UMass' next game is on Saturday against Dayton.

SEE PAGE 13

HOCKEY

After getting downed by Boston College, 7-1, last Friday, the Minutemen hope to rebound against Northeastern this weekend. The Mass Attack came out with a 4-1 victory in two team's last meeting

SEE PAGE 12

DAILY COLLEGIAN sports WEEKEND EDITION

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Not Published

Holiday

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SNOW HIGH: 36 LOW: 25 www.DailyCollegian.com TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 16, 2010

Rte. 9 wreck hospitalizes 4

Engine dislodges from vehicle

By Matt Rocheleau
Collegian Staff

A serious head-on collision on Route 9 in Hadley last week separated the engine from one of the vehicles involved and hospitalized four people, including three who are believed to be University of Massachusetts students.

A Volkswagen Golf hatchback traveling eastbound on Rte. 9, or Russell Street, near the West Street intersection in Hadley crossed the center line and collided head on with a Ford F-350 pickup headed westbound on Tuesday at 7:21 a.m., police said. The hatchback's engine was detached from the vehicle during the collision and landed on Rte. 9, while the truck spun out of control, struck the curb and flipped onto its roof, officials said.

"You don't see something like that too often," Hadley Police Chief Dennis Hukowicz said referring to the hatchback's dislodged engine. "It just shows you what kind of impact [the two vehicles] must have had."

The hatchback's driver, Maxwell Rudenstein, of Sharon, Mass., and the vehicle's two passengers, Jacob Gilbert, also of Sharon, and Charles Young, of Pepperell, Mass., were all sent to Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton with non-life-threatening injuries, according to police. The three 21-year-olds are believed to be UMass students, according to names provided by police that match the names of students enrolled at the University; however that could not immediately be confirmed.

The pickup's driver, Dakota West, 18, of Hadley, was also sent to the Northampton hospital with non-life-threatening injuries, police said.

According to Hukowicz, Rudenstein told police he nodded off behind the wheel, which caused the hatchback to cross the center line into oncoming traffic.

Police referred questions regarding the condition of those involved to hospital officials who said on Friday afternoon they had no patient records for the four men, which likely means they have been released.

Drivers on Rte. 9 were temporarily rerouted after the accident, which remains under investigation, Hukowicz said.

Matt Rocheleau can be reached at mrocheleau@dailycollegian.com.

Mullins stands against violence

Men make pledge to end domestic abuse towards women

Led by Lieutenant Governor Tim Murray, over 50 men made a pledge to help end domestic violence against women. The ceremony was part of the 'White Ribbon Campaign' and was held at halftime during the UMass women's basketball game on Saturday.

By Chris Shores
Collegian Staff

Lieutenant Governor Tim Murray led over 50 men in a pledge to help end domestic violence during a special halftime ceremony at Saturday's University of Massachusetts women's basketball home game against Dayton.

The ceremony was part of the White Ribbon Campaign (WRC), a global movement, which consists of, according to its website, "men working to end men's violence against women." The White Ribbon Campaign website states that the WRC is the largest effort in the world of men to end domestic violence against women, and that since its creation in Canada 19 years ago, it has spread to 55 different countries.

All men were invited down to the court of the Mullins Center during halftime, and about 50 joined Murray on the floor, wearing a white ribbon, while others stood in the stands to make the pledge. Murray told the crowd that he was the chair of Governor Deval Patrick's advisory committee to end violence and sexual assault.

"Governor Patrick and I have worked hard with all of the different stakeholders in order to raise awareness around the issue of domestic violence," he said. "To the young men who are here, thank you for stepping up to the plate and leading by example."

Murray then instructed all men present to raise their right hand and make the following pledge:

"I pledge to be violence free; never commit, condone or remain silent about violence; challenge other men to recognize that they can be powerful without making others powerless and encourage all men to work together with women using their collective voices and resources to end violence not only at UMass, but in all our communities."

Murray then added, "Go UMass," and the crowd answered with appreciative applause.

Many of the men who took part in the pledge were part of an athletic team or fraternity. UMass sophomore baseball player Ben Hart said that they had decided as an entire team that they wanted to take part in the event.

See WHITE RIBBON on page 2

The Gun Show Loophole:

How a student bought a gun without a license

By Daniel Entrikin
Special to the Collegian

Editor's Note: Daniel Entrikin is a University of Massachusetts student working on a documentary about firearm legislation. He submitted this feature story, based on his own independent research, to The Collegian for publication. Both Entrikin and The Collegian welcome opposing viewpoints.

I bought a gun in October. I paid cash for it. I didn't show any identification. I told the guy my first name, and we shook hands. I put it in my trunk and drove off. I've been thinking about that day, especially in light of multiple firearms arrests recently on the University of Massachusetts campus.

On December 3, a UMass student from Virginia was arrested on campus with a loaded, unlicensed handgun, as well as drugs and an electronic scale, according to police.

I visited two New Hampshire gun shows last year. I bought a double-barreled shotgun... for cash only.

And less than two weeks ago, a man was arrested on campus with a loaded, unlicensed handgun, police said. The suspect also allegedly possessed drugs. The serial number on the firearm was filed off, making it untraceable, officials said.

I am a senior communication major at UMass, and am working on a film about gun laws. Those fliers around campus highlighting these incidents? Those are mine. I'm taking a stance on this issue, but I've been doing my homework. Here's what I've found:

Mass shootings are a far too common occurrence in the United States. In March and April of 2009 alone, such shootings claimed 53 lives, according to the Associated Press. It seems as if every other week the details of another terrible shooting emerge. After the Columbine tragedy, Americans have unfortunately become desensitized to the horrors of these events.

We are the most heavily armed nation in the world, with 90 guns for every 100 people, according to Reuters. The U.S. Department of Justice figures show that in 2005, 11,346 Americans died from gun violence.

Guns have a distinct role in our society, as they should. The Second Amendment protects the rights of citizens to keep and bear arms.

However, these rights are not absolute, and some citizens lose them. Persons convicted of a felony or involuntarily committed to a mental institution are among those that cannot legally own guns. Through the existing National Instant Criminal Background Check System (NICS), as well as mental health databases, licensed gun dealers legally must screen every buyer for prohibited status.

There is another way to buy guns legally. Private sellers, found in large concentrations at public gun shows, are not required by law to run background checks. They have no license or qualifications. Any legal gun owner can be a private seller. They need proof that you live in-state, and are of age to own a gun. That is all.

Consider a hypothetical scenario: I am an escaped mental patient. I want a gun. I cannot find a way to obtain a gun on the black market. A gang member would never trust me; my appearance is too suspicious. I know a visit to a gun store will uncover my mental health history and alert authorities.

See GUN SHOW on page 2

A screen shot from 'Loophole,' a documentary in the works by UMass student Daniel Entrikin. He said the "film will discuss American gun shows and the danger that private sales pose to public safety."

UMass pulls off win

Minutmen beat St. Joe's, win back-to-back

By Dan Gigliotti
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's basketball team employed an 11-minute defensive stand and held on down the stretch against Saint Joseph's to earn itself a 70-62 victory and its first back-to-back wins this year.

"I'm happy we got to come away with a win," UMass coach Derek Kellogg said. "Our guys fought through, started winning the 50-50 balls, rebounding a little better, and we had stretches where we played great defense."

Kellogg said he believes his team is starting to make strides and become more seasoned.

"We're growing up as a team, getting more mature," Kellogg said. "We're getting better in practice defensively, so that's carrying over to games, and my team's looking like they know what they're doing."

Up 19-14, with 10 minutes, 28 seconds to play in the first, the Hawks relinquished their lead when they were forced into 13 consecutive missed field goals and six turnovers. Following a 16-0 run, the Minutemen jumped out to a commanding 30-19 halftime advantage.

St. Joe's coach Phil Martelli complimented the UMass defensive effort.

"They were better defensively than they've been," Martelli said. "They were more active and energized."

The Minutemen defense held the Hawks to 36 percent shooting from the field, including 26 percent in the first half.

After carrying a scoreless drought into the locker room, St. Joseph's came out enlivened on the offensive end, getting off the scoring snide with a Garret Williamson (19 points) jumper 35 seconds into the period.Both teams traded baskets until the Hawks shaved the lead down to 38-32 with free throws and a Carl Jones 3-pointer just under eight minutes into the half. UMass extended its lead out to nine with a long-ball by guard Ricky Harris, who led all scorers with 27 points.

With 6:47 remaining, Harris gave the Minutemen their largest lead of the game, driving to the hoop for a layup and a foul shot, which proved to be their last field goal of the game.

Facing a 54-41 deficit, St. Joe's fought their way back within seven, outscoring UMass, 15-7, in the next 5:30 to cut the lead to five with 1:20 left.

Despite not scoring from the field in nearly the final seven minutes, the Minutemen clamped down to secure the win on the defensive end. Harris was pleased with his team's ability to win without scoring baskets.

"That's something that our coach stresses all the time," Harris said. "We showed some signs of that today. We got crucial defensive stops, we got rebounds, and we got to the free throw line, which is big for us."

Although they weathered the late attack by the Hawks, center Sean Carter still believes they could be more consistent.

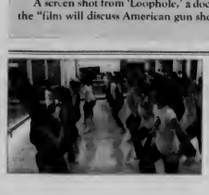
"We need to get to the point where we can play the whole game like that," Carter said.

Kellogg admired the overall grit of his team's play.

"We're playing tougher and it's evident by the ability to win a game when you don't play great or perfect," Kellogg said. "Defensively and on the boards is where we're really making strides." Carter's long stride pulled down 11 rebounds in Sunday's victory to help his team win a 44-35 advantage on the glass.

"I'm starting to attack the boards more," Carter said. "I'm being more active, not standing around and it's helping us a lot."

Anthony Gurley provided a spark off the Umass bench, contributing 15 points and nine rebounds in 26 minutes.



The Minutemen's consecutive wins are the first since mid-December. The team will look to string together three wins in a row for the first time this season on tomorrow at George Washington.

Dan Gigliotti can be reached at dgiglio@student.umass.edu.

Anthony Gurley drives to the lane against Saint Joseph's Garrett Williamson on Sunday.

UMass	70
SJU	62

ARTS & LIVING

Your exercise diary

Read how our correspondents ranked the newly-developed group fitness classes. Or better yet, go to the Recreation Center and find out for yourself.

SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS

Harris becoming complete player

Senior Ricky Harris is starting to make the most of his last year at UMass with his recent scoring surge.

SEE PAGE 8

EDITORIAL & OPINION

Sarah Gamsby is sick of society propagating anorexia and wants it to stop.

SEE PAGE 4

DailyCollegian.com

Go online now to see a video interview with men's lacrosse head coach Greg Cannella.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXX
ISSUE 20

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
413-545-3500
Fax 413-545-3699
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief William McGuinness
Managing Editor Matt Rocheleau
Managing Web Editor S.P. Sullivan
Business Manager Daniel Jette
Production Manager Michael Sarkes
Night Supervisor Kirsten Swenson
Advertising Manager Michael Tortorici
Advertising Production Amanda Joinson
Arts & Living Editor Shayna Murphy
Copies Editor Andrew Witts
Editorial Editor Alissa Creamer
News Editor Nick Bush
Sports Editor Jeffrey R. Larnard
Photo Editor Matthew Harrison
IT Manager Victor Jacek
Asst. Business Manager Matt Zolnierz
Assistant Advertising Nicole Jacinto
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Distribution Manager Norman Provost
Classified Manager Katelyn Tamilio
Asst. Arts & Living Justin Gagnon
Asst. Arts & Living Elyse Horowitz
Asst. Arts & Living Cal Scannell
Assistant Copies Domonic Mei
Assistant Editorial Benjamin Moriarty
Assistant Editorial Michael Phillis
Assistant Editorial Matthew M. Robare
Assistant News Samuel Butterfield
Assistant News Jenn Heshion
Assistant News Chris Shores
Assistant Sports Jay Asser
Assistant Sports David Brinch
Assistant Sports Adam Miller
Assistant Photo Maxwell Sparr
Assistant Photo Samantha Webber
Senior Producer Sara Cody
Senior Producer Pete Rizzo

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1907, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

PRODUCTION CREW
on staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Matt Rocheleau

COPY EDITOR
Chelsea Whitton

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Shaina Jackson

UMass Athletics teams up with others in Mullins Center pledge

WHITE RIBBON from page 1

"I think it's good to show support, and it's for a good cause," he said.

Ron Wallace, a freshman, also stressed the importance of the event.

"You go home [wearing] the white ribbon and people ask what it's about," Wallace said. "It raises awareness so that everyone will realize [about the event and domestic violence]."

It was the second year in a row that Murray led the event at the Mullins Center. The event was sponsored by the Center for Health Promotion at University Health Services, the Sport Management department, the Office of Fraternities and Sororities and the Everywoman's Center, with support from the Athletics department, according to a University press release.

Murray chairs the Governor's Council to Address Sexual Assault and Domestic Violence, the release states. University Health Services health educator Amanda Collings-Vann is a member of the Council.

The event concluded with an open invitation for the third annual "White Ribbon Day," which will be held March 2 at the State House in Boston.

Chris Shores can be reached at cshores@student.umass.edu.

JEFF BERNSTEIN / COLLEGIAN

Lieutenant Governor Tim Murray speaks to the crowd at Saturday's 'White Ribbon Ceremony.'

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
COLLEGIAN
Have an event coming up?
Need to spread the word?
for 70
each
On-Campus
Local Businesses
Ads for
You could see your ad here!
Best way to get to the campus community!
ON-CAMPUS ORGANIZATIONS & RSO'S CONTACT PAMELA:
thecollegian@gmail.com
413.545.3500
or stop by our office in the Campus Center basement

Film will question gun show safety

GUN SHOW from page 1

Instead, I visit a gun show in my home state, and with an ID, purchase a gun in a private sale. The same sale that is illegal at a gun store is completed easily and legally at a gun show.

You may be asking "Why should I believe you? This seems far fetched."

To answer this question, I visited two New Hampshire gun shows last year. I bought a double-barreled shotgun from another attendee for cash only. When he neglected to check my ID, he committed a federal felony. More undercover presence from the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms (ATF) at shows would make private sellers less likely to violate the law like this. The laws are often broken by private sellers, but a background check is still not required in such a sale, demonstrated in the majority of U.S. states.

I could have been a crack dealer with a felony murder conviction. I could have been schizophrenic. I could be a wanted terrorist on the national do-not-fly list. But, the seller didn't know, because he was not required to check.

A caveat: Do not think of imitating what I did. ATF agents are already undercover and felony firearms offenses carry serious prison sentences. I sought legal counsel long before I conducted this investigation. If I came into Massachusetts with that firearm, I would have committed a felony, and I could be in jail right now.

Suppose the December 3 campus suspect is convicted of felony gun possession. In his home state, he could buy the same handgun from a gun show with his prohibitive criminal record left unexamined.

The NICS system is as simple as a phone call. While not perfect, cross-database inquiries detect most serious issues that stop sales. Most of the failures of background checks are due to poor information sharing between agencies.

The Virginia Tech shooter bought a gun from a store and passed a background check because of a database failure, which the state of Virginia has since fixed. Though, privacy need not be an issue as the check can be issued on a pass/fail basis with no unnecessary details about the buyer revealed to the seller.

The background check system can easily accommodate private sellers. All they need to do is use it.

In the House of Representatives, The Gun Show Loophole Closing Act of 2009 (H.R. 2324) would require background checks for all sales at shows nationwide. Though, the legislation still awaits a vote. If the Act passes, an escaped mental patient would be red-flagged, referred to authorities and taken back into custody. Until it passes, that person can walk out of a show with a gun just as easily as an avid hunter with a clean record, or as I did. It is important to alert your Representatives of the importance of the Act being passed.

Mandatory background checks would present an inconvenience to law-abiding citizens that would save lives.

Support for the Act divides simply – anyone that can pass a background check should support this bill. If you can't pass a background check, or make money selling guns to people that can't, you should oppose it.

I have been researching this topic for some time now, for coursework and out of my own concern. My upcoming documentary "Loophole" will engage this important public safety issue in more depth.

In December, and again in February, the lax laws of other states put our campus in danger. Massachusetts has strict gun laws, and has essentially closed the loophole. However, that is severely undermined when easy access to guns is but a short drive away. According to the Boston Globe, firearms from New Hampshire gun shows are in high demand among gang members on the streets of Boston. Action on the federal level is crucial for abrupt change. Even in a bitterly divided political climate, selling guns to criminals and the dangerously mentally ill is something we can all agree is morally wrong.

I turned my weapon in to local police. I committed no crime. I chose to expose the loophole, rather than take predatory advantage of it. Unfortunately, I fear that not everyone makes the same choice.

HPV Fact #16:
It is estimated that each minute in the US, there is a new case of genital warts.
HPV Fact #8:
Guys can't get screened for HPV. So there's no way to know if a guy has the virus or is passing it on.
Why risk it
Visit your campus health center.
MERCK
Copyright © 2010 Merck & Co., Inc. All rights reserved. Printed in USA.
hpv.com
2105000409-01/10-GRD

– Community Clips –

Submissions for UPC's Battle of the Bands

UPC is taking submissions for their Battle of the Bands event. The winner will be the opening act for the UMass Spring Concert.

Mon Feb. 8 to Fri Feb. 26. Student Union Resource Room

Open Call for Artwork: "Home"

The Student Union Art Gallery is accepting work on the theme of "Home." This call is open to all UMass and Five College students.

Mon Feb. 8 to Sat Feb. 20. Student Union Art Gallery

UMass for Haiti Auction

The UMass Athletic Department is auctioning off memorabilia including game-worn jerseys of Haitian Native and future NFL Draft Pick Vladimir Ducasse to benefit Haiti relief. The proceeds raised by the auction will go to benefit the efforts.

Mon Feb. 8 to Tue Feb. 23. All-Campus

A Conversation with Congressman Barney Frank and Author Stuart Weisberg

Join us for a conversation with Congressman Barney Frank and author Stuart Weisberg as they discuss Congressman Frank's life and achievements.

Tue Feb. 16, 11:00 a.m. Student Union Ballroom

STEM Education Institute Tuesday Seminar

Allan Collins, Professor Emeritus, School of Education and Social Policy, Northwestern University, presents a lecture entitled "Rethinking Education in the Age of Technology."

Tue Feb. 16, 4:00 p.m. Hasbrouck 138

UMass Digest Celebrates Lo Chi Chih Nien Year

Celebrate the Chinese New Year in all of the dining commons.

Tue Feb 16, 5:00 p.m. All Dining Commons

Lecture: "Rubble Shock: How Terrorism Up City Neighborhoods Hurts America"

Professor Mindy Fullilove, Columbia University, speaks as part of the Heritage Center Colloquium Series.

Tue Feb. 16, 5:30 p.m. Thompson 102

Films Précious

Come see the blockbuster film Precious, about a young African American mother who discovers an alternative path in life and gets something most teens don't get - a chance to start over.

Tue Feb. 16, 7:00 p.m. Student Union Ballroom

When the Walls of Segregation Toppled: Fifty Years Since the Civil Rights Sit-ins

Fifty years ago, students led a sit-in movement that grew into the largest civil rights movement in the 20th century. Join a discussion of that movement and its relevance today.

Tue Feb. 16, 7:30 p.m. Campus Center 904

Morning Mixer

UMass Amherst students, faculty, and staff are invited to stop by the Morning Mixer and start your day off with a complimentary breakfast of bagels, fresh fruit, coffee and assorted juices.

Wed Feb. 17, 8:30 a.m. Memorial Hall

RefWorks Workshop

Learn to use RefWorks, a program that manages citations and creates quick bibliographies.

Wed Feb. 17, 1:30 p.m. Library, W.E.B. Du Bois Caliperi Room

The Environmental Institute Lecture Series "A River, A Place"

The Environmental Institute Lecture Series kicks off with the lecture "A River, A Place" by noted writer Stanley Crawford, Visiting Writer of the Master of Fine Arts Program in the English Department.

Wed Feb. 17, 3:30 p.m. Student Union Cape Cod Lounge

A Circle of Hope: Embracing the Precious Among Us

An open discussion and healing session with Dr. Aminata Njeri, President/CEO of the Leadership Group, about the various issues reflected in the award winning film Precious.

Wed Feb. 17, 7:30 p.m. Student Union Cape Cod Lounge

Phi Sigma Pi Information Session

Come learn about the best co-ed honor fraternity on campus.

Wed Feb. 17, 7:00 p.m. Campus Center 917

Massachusetts Multicultural Film Festival: Of Time and the City Listen to Britain

A film screening as part of the 17th annual Massachusetts Multicultural Film Festival: "Cinematic Cities."

Wed Feb. 17, 7:30 p.m. Isenberg School of Management 137

Piano Masterclass and Performance

A masterclass featuring works by Chopin and led by visiting pianist Roberto Plano.

Thu Feb. 18, 12:00 p.m. Bezanson Recital Hall

Documentary Presentations Black in America parts 1 and 2

CNN investigates the most challenging issues facing African-Americans.

Thu Feb. 18, 5:30 p.m. Malcolm X Cultural Center Lower Level Berkshire DC

Net Impact Movie Night

A screening of Food Inc., with special guest Kerry Manire from Brookfield Farm.

Thu Feb. 18, 7:00 p.m. Isenberg School of Management Room 137

Visiting Writers Series Presents Donald Antrim

A fiction reading by author Donald Antrim.

Thu Feb. 18, 8:00 p.m. Memorial Hall

Lecture: "Research Capacity Building – Perspectives from the National Research Foundation"

Isenberg Management Professor Mzamo Mangaliso '88 Ph.D. delivers this lecture as part of the Spring 2010 Operations Research/Management Science Seminar series.

Fri Feb. 19, 11:00 a.m. Isenberg School of Management 112

For more events, please see DailyCollegian.com

Tuesday, February 16
All DCs from 5–9 pm
CELEBRATE
CHINESE NEW YEAR
AUTHENTIC MENU
LION DANCE - LUCKY MONEY
(RED ENVELOPES 125 PER DC)
KONG HEE FATT CHOY MENU:
Hot & Sour Soup
Spring Rolls
Peking Duck
Suckling Pig
Steamed Pork Dumplings
Sticky Rice In Lotus Leaf
Sweet & Sour Pork
Stir-Fry Eight Flavor Bean Curd
Spicy Orange Chicken
Longevity Noodles
Shrimp with Cashew Nuts
Almond Cookies
Fortune Cookies
Mandarins
Green Tea
UMass Dining
YCMP
RMP
Ivy Restaurants

MFA IN EMERGENT MEDIA
The future is in the eyes of the innovators.
Create. Collaborate. Innovate.
Are you ready to write the next chapter of the digital revolution? Champlain's residential Master of Fine Arts (MFA) has been designed for a select group of individuals who are ready to explore the bounds of their own creativity, develop the skills to master the technology, and flourish in a collaborative environment. Envision your future with us.
AUGMENTED REALITY EXPERIENCE
An Individualized Interactive Web Experience
To learn more about our MFA in Emergent Media, visit our augmented reality experience at emergent.champlain.edu
CHAMPLAIN COLLEGE
Graduate Studies
Now Accepting applications
MFA.champlain.edu

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 16, 2010

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
– Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Pharmaceutical woes abound

Synta Pharmaceuticals' annual holiday soiree took place this past weekend in a Doubletree hotel ballroom off the Middlesex Turnpike in Bedford, Mass.

In spite of the tables crowned with expertly-folded napkins and Cellophane-wrapped truffles, however, the party hardly stacked up against those from years past. Instead of the usual State Street hotel with valet parking and an open whisky bar, employees found themselves lost down a dark road looking for Doubletree and a small abbreviated sign reading: "Synta Hlday Prty."

Evan Haddad

Upon arrival, guests found neither concierge nor coatroom. They received terse greetings in the form of two free drink tickets and an awkward shrug from co-workers.

In the end, the majority of companies in the multi-billion dollar biopharmaceutical industry produce, essentially, nothing.

Before dinner, guests lingered hungrily in the lounge over a sparse appetizer of cubed Swiss cheese and crackers, while black-vested waiters swooped in like opportunistic birds to snatch up empty Heinekens and bare toothpicks. No stuffed mushrooms or fried calamari were to be found at this year's party.

Synta employees mingled as comfortably as scientists could, eyeing the closed ballroom doors with an apparent indifference. But beneath the façade of Frank Sinatra and cocktail attire, a cautious reserve flouted in the air.

No one was saying it. But in everyone's mind loitered the memory of last year's holiday party. They remembered how Synta's ambitious 40-year-old Wall-Street millionaire CEO and company President Safi Bahcall heaped bloated praise upon their mood promising and belabored project, the melanoma drug Elesclomol.

That night, Bahcall relentlessly hammered into his audience how Elesclomol would pass phase-3 clinical trials and gain FDA approval. He promised how all Synta employees, big or small, were going to collect on the huge payday of a publicly marketable cancer drug.

And they remembered how just a few months after the party, suddenly Elesclomol's big clinical trial was suspended, 90 of 220 employees let go and the rest left wondering: what happened?

With stomachs full of wine and beer, Synta employees were finally ushered into the ballroom Saturday night and seated at snugly arranged tables encircling a large stage and dance floor. Hotel workers were hastily setting up a podium and PA equipment as guests unfolded their artfully placed serviettes and positioned them in their laps. The disc jockey quieted the blaring roar of the trumpets in Sinatra's "Chicago," and someone thumped the microphone on stage and said, "Check."

Synta employees were going to get some sort of answer.

A short olive-skinned man with curly black hair mounted the stage. As if he had been there many times before, he scanned the room with a friendly smile while coolly unfolding a few sheets of paper. Of course, he hardly needed them, as this man was Safi Bahcall.

He began with a characteristic statelness reminiscent of last year's address. Bahcall rightfully praised the resiliency of the biopharmaceutical company through the tough times ensuing the shutdown of Elesclomol. But as he drew towards a close, the words of the ambitious, if not quixotic, company president slipped slowly into the old rhetoric.

He said in a year, Synta would bounce back with other drugs, other trials and other investors, a feat that the chemists and statisticians present knew was just another unreachable dream.

"Synta enjoys a unique position in this industry," Bahcall said. "We are neither too small to innovate nor too large and bureaucratic to pursue those innovations."

Bahcall touched upon the specific setbacks of Elesclomol in the phase-three trial of last year, however, with calculated brevity.

"Biopharmaceuticals are about taking risks," he said. "If you look at the big players in the industry now, you'll see they share a common history: at one point, they were shut down in phase-3 but they didn't give up."

Synta isn't giving up either. In fact, last month the company offered 5,555,556 shares of its common stock at a price of $4.80 per share, totaling near $25 million in gross proceeds. That money will go into the company's financial lifeline, a carefully crafted, but limited budget.

More importantly, it's a sign that Bahcall's company has no intention of cutting its losses. In this strange industry, success often comes from a mixture of blind faith and uncompromising objectivity. Biopharmaceutical companies, like Synta, justify the layoffs, the stock trading and investments with the idea that they are working towards a humanitarian goal. And they are.

For every one drug approved by the FDA, 10 are shut down. In the end, the majority of companies in the multi-billion dollar biopharmaceutical industry produce, essentially, nothing. They push the frontiers of science and pay their employees with money made on promises. Sometimes their drugs work, sometimes not, because it's a high stakes game.

After digesting the speech and heavy cream sauce on the fish entree Saturday night, the guests hesitatingly peeled themselves off their chairs and onto the dance floor where Ol' Blue Eyes chimed on again in full swing. Gradually the floor filled, and the mood lightened. Who could tell if this party should be their last?

Evan Haddad is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at ehaddad@student.umass.edu.

Media not helping anorexics

A small collection of websites have gotten plenty of media attention in France, and courts have even banned their existence. These websites are "pro-anorexia" or "pro-bulimia" – created by women and men suffering from eating disorders. Instead of trying to get healthy, they embrace their underweight frames and openly celebrate them in cyberspace. They've even given nicknames to the disorders: Ana and Mia, respectively.

Lauren Vincent

A French court ruling made these websites illegal last year. Not surprisingly, the decision was met with controversy and free speech arguments. But in my opinion, this is not so much a free speech issue as a social problem. Why are they looking at outlawing the websites when they should be looking at why the websites exist in the first place?

Anorexia and bulimia are very dangerous eating disorders. Many young women and men have died from starving themselves. These are not new diseases; however, their prevalence has grown more and more common in the last century. And they are far more common in the Western world.

The media did not draw very much attention to eating disorders until Karen Carpenter's death in 1983. The 32-year-old singer, who formed the duo The Carpenters alongside her brother Richard, died of complications (heart failure) related to her anorexia, although she had been in recovery for years. Until then, eating disorders were seen as simple, private problems, and the only solution was to tell anorexic and bulimic individuals to just eat something. Obviously the problem is more complicated than that, but this court ruling is not treating it as so.

Designers and models have attempted to "speak out" against the whole ideal body type phenomenon. Jean-Paul Gaultier, a French designer, says that anorexia is a problem solved not by laws, but by understanding.

There is a much bigger problem here than sick people making websites for other sick people. The problem is that there even are sick people.

That may be true, but how much understanding is he doing by placing those same size zero models on the runway? The majority of runway and magazine models are underweight. I've even seen mannequins in stores that had the extra-small shirts clipped in the back because they were too big. And when was the last time you saw a size eight girl walking down a high fashion runway?

It's not surprising that these things happen when we get such conflicting messages and ideas from the media. While everyone is saying "love your body the way it is," they're choosing the same unrealistic bodies to represent women. If they do not love our bodies, it makes it hard for us to listen to that advice.

Therefore, the problem is not with the people behind these pro-ana and pro-mia websites; punishing them will not instantly cure them. The problem is with the fact that we live in a society where the media is encouraging us to get to this point.

The same problem exists with alcohol consumption. You can die from alcohol poisoning just as easily as you can from starving yourself. And yet there are alcohol advertisements all over the place, telling us to do harm to our own bodies as well. There are songs about getting out of bed and brushing your teeth with a bottle of whiskey. There are about 126 Facebook fan pages dedicated to alcohol, and another 500 plus dedicated to beer alone. And then when underage drinking becomes an epidemic, no one knows why.

There is a much bigger problem here than sick people making websites for other sick people. The problem is that there are sick people. The websites are just a symptom of our culture.

What can we do? First, instead of fining the site's creators, we could offer them help. Putting them in jail or making them pay heavy fines will not make them stop starving themselves.

Secondly, society needs to change. All body types need to be portrayed in magazines and ads, without calling to attention that these women are "plus-size." Dove has tried doing this already with their Campaign for Real Beauty, but not many others have followed suit. Tyra Banks gained weight and tried to make every woman feel comfortable at her weight on her talk show, but on her reality show America's Next Top Model, there is usually only one plus size or average, model out of twelve contestants. That may be what the industry wants, but maybe the industry shouldn't have so much power over a young woman's, or a young man's, self-image.

If banning pro-anorexia websites isn't stopping the presence of anorexia, there needs to be a better solution and it needs to be dealt with by everyone. Society created this problem; therefore, society needs to solve it.

Lauren Vincent is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at lvincent@student.umass.edu.

– Boo! That was the worst column I've ever read.
– It was terrible!
– Well, it wasn't that bad.
– Oh yeah?
– There were some parts I liked.
– Well, I liked a lot of it.
– Yeah, it was good, actually.
– It was great!
– It was wonderful!
– More!
– More!
– We should write one by e-mailing editorial@dailycollegian.com!

Children come first when disaster strikes

When the earthquake struck Haiti, it seemed as though it struck the United States as well.

The U.S. rushed to aid the people of Haiti by providing food, medical supplies and building shelters. According to the

Sarah Gamsby

United Nations Children's Fund, UNICEF, about 40 percent of the Haitian population are children ages 14 and under. With such a large population of children displaced, injured, separated or orphaned from their parents, it is essential that the Haitian government make sure they are as safe as possible. Children are the victims who should be the main concern of the public, and they are for many organizations such as UNICEF.

Unfortunately, there have been instances in the wake of the earthquake that are putting children in danger. One such incident occurred in the aftermath of the Jan.12 earthquake, when 33 Haitian children were kidnapped by 10 Christian Baptist missionaries from Idaho. This is a very serious international issue that could threaten the credibility of Christian missionaries from the United States.

At the Newman Catholic Center on campus, Father John Gawienowski agreed that the main concern is the children's safety. He believes you can never be too cautious, especially in circumstances like these recent events.

To assume that you could bring children across borders, even during a crisis such as this, seems irrational.

This careful consideration is especially important as there is a huge threat to the youth in Haiti. Sex trafficking and child slavery is expected to increase as a result of the earthquake.

According to The Atlantic magazine an estimated "quarter-million Haitian children are trafficked [into slave labor or the sex trade] within the country each year." This rate is expected to increase in Haiti.

Haitian children are more vulnerable than before because there are too many factors in the aftermath of the earthquake distracting the public from watching over the children's safety. Haiti's capital, Port-Au-Prince, is demolished and providing food, shelters and medical needs are the priorities of international agencies looking to help victims of the earthquake.

It is important for there to be officials who are assigned to keep track of the groups that are working with the children. This way there will be physical and verbal interactions between the government and the missionary groups. With a system in place, all the right paperwork will be completed and background checks will be far more thorough to ensure children are being placed in the right hands. This will hopefully prevent trafficking and keep innocent people out of jail.

Unfortunately, protocol was not followed by Laura Silsby's group. Earlier this month, Laura Silsby and the other nine missionaries were arrested and charged with one count of kidnapping. These charges could result in five to 15 years in prison. Haitian attorney Edwin Coq, who was recently dismissed from being the lawyer for the group of missionaries because of an alleged bribe he made to get the group out of jail, believes that Silsby lied to the group about having the necessary papers for adoption.

Coq believes that she took advantage of the "naïveté" of the other members. Coq said, "I'm going to do everything I can to get the nine out. They were naive. They had no idea what was going on and they did not know that they needed up their children because they believed their children would have a chance at a better life. There are many concerns over whether or not the Baptist missionaries had good intentions. To assume that you could bring children across borders, even during a crisis such as this, seems irrational. There is always protocol, and Silsby should have thought through her plans thoroughly before trying to take the children out of Haiti.

This incident is not a good example of Christian missionary work, but it is not the only example of relief efforts Christians are providing. There have been many groups that have gone down to Haiti and are making strides. Reverend Mark Driscoll of Mars Hill Church in Seattle and Pastor and James McDonald of Harvest Bible Chapel in Chicago went to Haiti in order to rebuild and restore sanctuaries and places of worship to use them as shelters. These churches will hopefully allow people to feel safe and establish a sense of community. It is vitally important for the global community to band together and offer aid and support to Haiti despite the economic woes of our time. Countries need to continue offering to Haiti what they can in order to help rebuild their country and keep the Haitian people safe.

But even with this aid, Haitian officials, volunteers and donors need to be suspicious. There are serious threats, especially to children, and people need to consider and evaluate these suspicions with due process and rationality.

Sarah Gamsby is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at sgamsby@student.umass.edu.

Join the conversation. Write for Ed/Op. Let your voice be heard! Tell the masses!

Introducing Photo-Ops at: dailycollegian.com/category/blogs/ed-op

See something you don't like? Don't tweet it, write a letter to the editor!

Send letters to the editor, column submissions and columnist applications to editorial@dailycollegian.com.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 16, 2010

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Your guide to becoming a UMass gym guru

Free classes, great workouts: exercise classes you should be taking

By Kaitlyn Bigica
Collegian Correspondent

Exercise routines can become dull and predictable as we engage in the uniform two-mile treadmill run or 30 minutes on the elliptical. If you're getting bored of your predictable workout routine, then it's time to do something about it. Make exercise enjoyable and fun as you dance, kick, spin or crunch your way to a fit body. Last semester, the University of Massachusetts opened its $50-million Recreation Center, along with nine sweat-inducing fitness classes.

Instead of sitting on the floor and doing crunches to the point of weariness, stop in for a 30-minute ABS-olute class. Targeting your core area and lower back, ABS-olute will tone your tummy with abdomen circuits, isometric abdomen workouts, stability training and push-ups.

"The music is always upbeat tempo, usually a remix of pop songs," said instructor Michael Russo. With popularity rising to an all time high, getting into this class requires students to "show up 30 minutes before and listen for an announcement to get a ticket."

If you're looking for a high-intensity class that will kick your gluts into gear, then Kickbox Boot Camp is the class for you. After recently receiving her third degree black belt in karate, instructor Meghan Trowbridge knows exactly how to teach her students martial arts basics. Although Trowbridge includes, "self defense maneuvers and personal protection awareness," during her class, don't be scared off by her martial arts experience – you don't need to be a black belt to take this class.

Trowbridge said, "It does not matter if you are a beginner or advanced because I have been trained as an instructor to work with all ages and levels." She also advised arriving 30 minutes before class to guarantee a spot.

With upbeat music and constant movement, instructor Jillian Isabelle invites all fitness levels to incorporate plyometrics, strength and core training into a one-hour fat-burning exercise.

"It's a high-intensity class with lots of jumps, leaps and squats," said Isabelle.

With 30-second intervals of quick bursts of energy, you'll surely be breathing heavily as you walk out the door. This class is perfect for those who want to improve their athletic performance or simply want to experience an intense cardio workout.

Students participate in the University of Massachusetts Recreation Center's exercise classes as a way of kicking the old workout routine.

Showcasing a variety of musical tastes, Cardio funk will have you dancing off your overindulgence at the dining commons with body-sculpting moves. This one-hour class includes interval training and aerobic fitness exercises. According to instructor Nicole Webb, "You can expect a lot of high-energy music, movement and fun from this class." Although Cardio funk is based on dance moves, Webb says there is, "no dance experience necessary just be ready to get a work out."

After a stressful exam or a bad week, it's time to blow off some steam. Cardio kickboxing allows you to kick and punch your stress out the door as instructors Eliza Shirazi and Erika Starr keep your feet constantly moving. This class uses "forms of martial arts and the basic jabs, uppercuts, hooks and so on.

"I put together routines that makes you sweat, sweat, sweat," Shirazi said. "Girls come in knowing they are getting a full work out, there is no need to run on the treadmill after."

Starr said students can expect to leave dripping in sweat, feeling more energized and motivated for the rest of their day.

"With music loud and strong, this class fills up quickly. The line takes up the entire hallway. It kills me when I have to cut off people, but full capacity is always reached," said Shirazi.

Don't let the sedentary bikes fool you; within the first few minutes of cycling you'll be breaking a major sweat. From the moment you mount the bike, your legs won't stop moving for a full hour as the instructors motivate you to work your hardest. You are in charge of the resistance knob and can either ease off or increase the weight that is added to the wheel of the bicycle. As instructor Jill Isabelle says during class, "It's as hard as you make it, but if you listen to me you can bank on burning 600-1,000 calories." There are only 27 bikes available in this class, so if you want to get in, you need to get there early.

Down to the core incorporates a stability ball to improve your balance and work your core. Focusing on your abdomen and lower back muscles, this class will leave your abs burning.

"Day after day I sit on the floor mat at the gym and do the same abdomen routine yet see no results. After being referred to the class by a friend, I finally felt the burn in my abs and wasn't bored after 10 minutes," said sophomore Lauren Hill.

Although beginners can take this class, advanced athletes will also find this explosive workout is a challenge.

After spending the day slouching over your desk in class, its time to fix that posture. Pilates uses a series of positions that align your spine, increase strength, flexibility and movement, and can relieve muscle aches.

Instructor Brittany Cohen says her class "is a mind-body workout. It involves core strengthening, lengthening, flexibility and balance." As for the music in this class you can expect to hear, "anything from Bob Dylan and Slightly Stoopid to U2 and Dave Matthews Band." If a student has a specific body pain, Cohen will show them "different exercises and stretches they can do to improve their condition."

With nine fitness classes to choose from, the time has come to retire your boring workout routine and exercise the fun way. No matter what level of fitness you are, there is a class targeted for you. With the increasing popularity of these classes it's important to get there early; just go to the front desk of the Recreation Center to ask for a pink slip and you'll have a spot in your desired class. Take advantage of the fact that these classes are free, and get over to the gym to kick, crunch and spin your way to that healthy body.

Kaitlyn Bigica can be reached at kbigica@student.umass.edu.

Join the Zumba workout party

By Lisa Linsley
Collegian Correspondent

Almost every afternoon and night of the week, 50 University of Massachusetts students dance, sweat and have fun to music such as KeSha's "Tick Tock," Pitbull's "I Know You Want Me" and LMFAO's "Shots." These students, primarily female, are engaging in a complete hour of calorie and fat burning, working on muscle resistance, and overall energizing their bodies while still managing to have a good time. This is what Zumba Fitness is all about.

Zumba is a workout program that fuses Latin rhythms with easy-to-follow moves. The Zumba motto, "ditch the workout, join the party" promises to make working out fun and encourages people to return each week with enthusiasm and passion.

The Zumba fitness program is known for mixing traditional Latin dance steps that are seen in the salsa, cha-cha and meringue with more contemporary hip-hop moves, and even belly dancing for some international zest. Unlike other dance-based fitness programs, Zumba classes do not mandate the participant to key in on counting steps, but rather to learn the moves and have fun. Zumba fitness is a full-body cardiovascular workout. The routines include big, fast arm movements, constant footwork, and of course, a surplus of hip shaking.

Zumba fitness programs have reached over 75 countries and are taught at over 40,000 locations with five million participants taking Zumba classes each week, according to a tally taken in July 2009 on Zumba.com. Zumba classes at the UMass Recreation Center are taught by either sophomore Emily McLaughlin or freshman Gaby Corbera, depending on which night or class attended. Both instructors use Latin music for many of the routines, but also include plenty of popular artists that a typical college student would be familiar with, such as Flo Rida, Daddy Yankee and Christina Aguilera.

"It's a really good cardio workout. It's really fun, I love that there are a lot of people in the class. It's high energy with lots of different styles," said senior Nicole Breivogel.

During a typical class, McLaughlin and Corbera briefly demonstrate the steps being taught to the group before the music begins, and everyone follows, generally catching on quickly.

"It's such good music, you don't need any experience. Literally, it's a party," said Corbera, who believes that people of any skill level can participate.

Some may stumble a bit in the beginning but will pick up and keep going, Corbera said. She begins class saying that her number one rule is "To not be shy because the more open you are, the more you get out of it."

The high energy in the room is one of the aspects that keeps people coming back to the classes each week. Dia Majumdar, a freshman, started going to Zumba towards the beginning of the semester and now goes almost every day.

"It's a lot of fun, high-energy, great music. The instructors are good about teaching the steps," said Majumdar.

Jackson Hall a freshman who attended the Zumba class because he loves to dance and heard it was fun said, "I usually run on the treadmill but this is a more fun alternative."

As a male, Hall is generally a minority in the class. However, both Corbera and McLaughlin are encouraging more men to join and hope that it soon becomes a 50:50 ratio.

Corbera said she became involved with Zumba fitness over a year ago and was trained as an instructor in New York City in November. Her interest in Zumba began when she saw a commercial advertising the program and enrolled in her town's YMCA to take classes, despite her mother's belief that the program was yet another health fad, Corbera explained.

Corbera has Spanish ancestry – she was born in Venezuela, and her parents are from Peru – and has found that getting involved with Zumba has helped her embrace her culture.

"Zumba gets you energetic about everything you do. It really changed my life, it's given me so much confidence," Corbera said.

McLaughlin and Corbera use different songs and incorporate different moves in their classes; however, the energy level is at a constant high with either instructor, and both teach routines that incorporate belly dancing and Latin dance basics. Corbera said that instructors are sent CDs and DVDs with new songs so that the class members and the instructors are never bored with the same music and routines.

Zumba class times are posted on the UMass Recreation Center website under Group Fitness Schedule. Zumba classes are offered every day of the week except Friday and Sunday and are offered in both the afternoon and evenings. Corbera and McLaughlin are in the process of planning a two-hour "Zumbathon" party that 100 people would be able to attend. They are anticipating holding the event the end of this month.

Lisa Linsley can be reached at llinsley@student.umass.edu.

The University dining commons will celebrate the Chinese New Year tonight with a specialized menu of Chinese cuisine, including the ever-popular fortune cookies.

What does "Confucius Say"?

By Tappan Parker
Collegian Correspondent

Sunday marked the Chinese New Year, and as a result there are bound to be a lot of fortune cookies eaten in celebration. Many people will crack open their oven-baked pastry to find grammatically incorrect predictions of the future. Some will inspire deep thought and others will inspire deep questioning as to what the fortune means in the first place.

So, in honor of the Chinese New Year, break out a pair of chopsticks and celebrate with the top 10 list of some of the funniest fortune cookies out there, all of which have been discovered by those truly on the quest for destiny.

10) "To truly find yourself you should play hide and seek alone."

This is clearly a piece of advice for when one is lost in the woods without any sort of GPS, map or navigation system: run off, hide behind a tree and you will know exactly where you are.

9) "It is most enjoyable to talk with you."

This fortune was discovered at the site of the murder of the world's first and only talking fortune cookie after its tragic death at the hands of an unidentified patron of Franklin dining commons. Crumbs were discovered on the table and one student, who remains unnamed, described it as "a tragic loss to fortune cookie community."

8) "Now is the time to make circles with mints, do not haste any longer."

It is a well-kept secret that there are many magical rituals involving mints in Chinese lore. That is, if you can abstain from eating them all first.

7) "Man who stands on toilet is high on pot."

Believe it or not, this was an actual fortune cookie in a real Chinese restaurant. Truly a profound statement.

6) "When the time comes, choose the one on the left."

Immediately after this cookie was cracked, the opener was presented with a choice between whether he wanted to keep his left or right hand. Too bad he was right-handed.

5) "Your tongue is your ambassador."

The best sex advice comes from pastries.

4) "Help! I am being held prisoner in a Chinese bakery!"

Has anyone else been seeing a lot of these lately at Worcester dining commons?

3) "Ignore previous cookie."

Enough said.

2) "A starship ride has been promised to you by the galactic wizard."

There are a surprising number of people who have gotten very excited when they found this inside their fortune cookie. The truth is, the galactic wizard has already promised this, people know that the starship ride is coming, and the cookie is just reassuring them. No need to get so hyper about it.

1) "…That wasn't chicken."

That would explain the funny taste…

Have a happy Chinese New Year and remember to enjoy your fortune cookie…in bed.

Tappan Parker can be reached at rtparker@student.umass.edu.

"Tool Academy 3" premieres, teaches joys of relationships

By Kate MacDonald
Collegian Staff

It's no coincidence that "Tool Academy 3" debuted on Valentine's Day. The VH1 show, now in its third year, serves as a what-not-to-do guide for young lovers everywhere.

In "Tool Academy," if someone has a particularly cocky, smooth talking, cheating and/or egotistical partner, they can secretly nominate them to the show, where they participate in a sort of boot camp with their significant other while taking part in therapy sessions and revealing experiences. It has a "Survivor"-like feel in that one "tool" is eliminated every week. Whoever makes it to the end wins $100,000.

This season, however, is a little different. While the past seasons of "Tool Academy" have featured only male contestants, this year, two women are literally and figuratively fighting for their love. Also present is the show's first homosexual pair, Courtney and Cheron, as well as the first married duo, Kevin and Jermika.

Also for the first time in the show's history, a particularly cocky "tool" eliminated himself from the competition, walking out on his girlfriend, as well as his opportunity of turning into a nice, normal person.

The program opens with a back story – the participants are going to Cancún Mexico, with the hopes of partying, hooking up with scantily clad men and women and competing in various fun contests. During a public meet and greet, almost all of the participants indicate that they're single.

One contestant of the show, Shawn, sums up the class of tools when he shouted like a frat boy that he was there to do three things, "get screwed, brewed and tattooed!"

Little do they know, their partners are watching all of this unfold thanks to hidden cameras, and providing their own embarrassing commentaries.

After viewers are introduced to the guys and girls, who are all given their own nicknames, such as "Surfer Tool," "Toolette" and "Looney Tool", they are given the opportunity to make absolute fools of themselves. That is, until the "Tool Academy" sign pops up and their jaws drop.

When they finally find themselves back in Los Angeles, they meet host Jordan Murphy who instructs them to go find their beds in the house they will be staying in for the remainder of the show. This becomes a physical challenge within itself, as contestants fight over where to sleep. The house filled with the partners of the tools, however, is more civilized, and no one needs to heat their chests to mark their territory.

The excitement of the show comes when the tools are reunited with their significant others, who enter the show like sad puppies with their tails between their legs. This is also their first introduction to their therapist, Trina Dolenz. Emotions are running higher than the tools' overly-gelled hair as they watch interviews that they thought their partners would never see. The truth comes out as most admit to cheating, but the collective thought is that they need to communicate more.

Communication becomes the central aim of the first physical task. The tools are chained up inside dog houses, which the very emotional "Teary Tool" Angelo astutely realizes is not simply literal. The partners must work to free their loved one while ignoring the taunts of the other tools, and the victor wins a date with their wronged partner.

While each couple, now separated back at their "tool" and "partner" houses, has to worry about who will be kicked off the show, one tool is thinking only of himself. Said jerk ends up pulling out of the competition, shocking everyone involved.

Therapist Dolenz consoles the jilted gal, while creating a show catch phrase, saying "Sometimes a guy's just a tool."

Viewers can look forward to next week's "Tool Academy 3," when fidelity becomes the focus of the episode. Some mates are slapped, others are shoved, while still others croon to their lovers in an attempt to win them back. Looks like it will truly be quality television.

"Tool Academy 3" does teach its viewers a good lesson. No, it's not that communication is the key to a good relationship, it's not that one needs to stay true to their partner. Airing on what is supposed to be the most romantic day of the year, it taught its single viewers that they could have it a lot worse – they could be pining after these idiots.

Kate MacDonald can be reached at kathrynm@student.umass.edu.

WANT TO WRITE FOR SPORTS?
Contact Jeffrey R. Larnard at
SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

S G A
02/16 to 03/01 NOMINATIONS FOR PRESIDENT, TRUSTEE, AREA GOVERNMENT 02/16 to 03/01
Pick up @ 420 Student Union, SGA Office
The Elections Commission
electionscommission@stuaf.umass.edu
http://blogs.umass.edu/ecsga/

Minutewomen struggle to stop balanced attack from Flyers

By Neil Carroll
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's basketball team's effort was not enough to beat Dayton on Saturday afternoon. The Minutewomen fell, 74-60, to the Flyers but rallied to within four points at halftime.

"I'm pleased with our effort from top-to-bottom," UMass coach Marnie Dacko said. "If you look at the effort we've had over the year, if we played with this effort eight games would be in the win column rather than the loss column."

The Minutewomen had three scorers in double-digits but still were not enough for Dayton's balanced attack.

Point guard Patrice Lalor sparked the Flyers' offense early on with 13 points in the game and went 3-of-4 from beyond the arc, but also had six rebounds, four assists and three steals.

Dayton	74
UMass	60

"This was a Dayton team that really turned it around a year ago," Dacko said. "They went to the NCAA tournament and really got their legs, and we're really close to that right now – in putting everything together."

UMass shot 42.3 percent from the field in the game, but could not battle Dayton's second-chance baskets. The Flyers had 27 points off of second-chance opportunities and also had 20 points off of UMass turnovers.

"They're always known as a great defensive team. They have great help," Kim Benton said of the Flyer's defense.

Datierra Hill led the Minutewomen in her second to last game at the Mullins Center with 15 points, four rebounds, and five assists. The senior was perfect on two free throws from the line and 6-of-11 from the field.

Kristina Danella and Jasmine Watson were tied for second on the team in scoring with 12 points each. Danella had five rebounds and went 3-of-7 from 3-point range, while Watson had seven rebounds and added six blocks.

Benton rounded out the UMass scorers in double-figures with 10 points on 4-of-7 shooting from the field to go along with five assists.

"We had a lot of good effort out there," said Benton about the game. "They just killed us on the offensive rebounds, and out-hustled us to some balls. Altogether I think our offensive effort was great, they just gave a little bit more."

Dayton's lead was narrowed to 35-34 with 16 minutes, 24 seconds in the second half because of a Kristina Danella 3-pointer. However, the Flyers then put on a 9-0 run over the next three minutes to give themselves a cushion.

"It came down to that last five minutes, they were just the grittier team," Dacko said about Dayton's push.

"They were hungrier, they pushed it inside and played a very physical game and that's something we have to learn from."

UMass allowed Dayton to get to the free-throw line 19 times in the game. The Minutewomen on the other hand had just eight opportunities from the charity stripe.

Justine Raterman also played big for Dayton. The forward had 12 points, seven rebounds and two assists in the contest and also went 2-of-4 from beyond the arc.

The Flyers outrebounded the Minutewomen, 40-30, a skill that UMass has been working on all season in practice.

"We've got to commit to rebounding and that has been our nemesis all year," Dacko said. "I think that we've got to commit to offensive rebounds and got to take fewer possessions away from our opponents."

Neil Carroll can be reached at nacarrol@student.umass.edu.

UMass takes season opener with 15-12 win over Pioneers

By Neil Carroll
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's lacrosse team escaped a third-quarter rally by Sacred Heart in the first game of the 2010 season and won, 15-12, in exciting fashion on Saturday.

"Our guys persevered," UMass coach Greg Canella said about the game. "They tied it up, and it's good to see how our guys handled the adversity in that game. Fortunately for us, we played well at the end and pulled it out."

UMass	15
SH	12

Unsportsmanlike conduct penalties on goalie Tim McCormack and defenseman Diogo Godoi with 10 minutes, 49 seconds remaining in the fourth quarter tested Canella's young team, and allowed Sacred Heart to stay in the game. Freshman goalie Steve Mahle was thrust into the UMass net cold, and the Pioneers capitalized on the man-up opportunities tying the score at 11 with 10:15 remaining.

"I think we were a little scared, including myself," said Canella. "Sacred Heart at home had a lot of momentum at that point in the game. We called a timeout, brought our guys in and said settle down, we have to stay out of the penalty box, and handle the ball."

Then the Minutemen offense fired back.

Goals from Art Kell and Ryan Liebel put UMass up 13-11, until Sacred Heart's Matt Ferrino brought the score within one with 5:58 to play. UMass freshman Will Manny stepped up just over a minute later and buried a goal off an Anthony Biscardi pass to secure the win for the Minutemen.

"It was a big goal for Willy and for the team," said Canella about the freshman's first goal. "In a spot like that, you have a freshman take that shot and finish it for you, it's a big play. It is great for his confidence, but we certainly needed it."

Biscardi had two goals and two assists on five shots in the game, but was not UMass' best offensive weapon. Senior captain Bobby Hayes was the leading scorer for the Minutemen with four goals on eight shots.

Hayes and the UMass offense was a big concern coming into the first game of the season, but responded by scoring 15 goals and putting up 55 shots in the contest.

Sacred Heart on the other hand was forced to compete with UMass' production with fewer opportunities. The Pioneers were held to 32 shots in the game, but still put up 13 goals against McCormack and Mahle.

McCormack was given the start in the cage and had a solid first half. But, the redshirt sophomore slumped in the third quarter, allowing the Pioneers to go on a 4-0 run and bring the game within reach.

The Pioneers were down 9-4 at halftime but came alive in the second half. Timmy Katz and Ferrino led the Sacred Heart attack with a hat-trick apiece against the Minuteman defense.

UMass' Kell had his first career hat-trick in the game with three goals and one assist on five shots on goal. In their first career starts Ryan Hantverk and Liebel both had two goals, and Hantverk added an assist.

On defense the Minutemen started Godoi, Greg Anderson and Tom Celentani. As a team the Pioneers turned the ball over a time, but UMass won 39 groundballs in the game.

Anthony Toresco and Greg Rushing split the faceoff duties for UMass and corralled 18-of-31 restarts at midfield.

UMass improves to 30-26-1 in season openers as a program, but more importantly is now 1-0 on the 2010 season.

"Any time you open up a season you want to start out 1-0," Canella said. "We faced a lot of adversity in the second half."

Neil Carroll can be reached at nacarrol@student.umass.edu

Midfielder Bobby Hayes gets himself in position during a game vs. Sacred Heart last year. Hayes made Second Team All-ECAC as a junior.

Banking for the EGeneration
We work here and bank here too!
eGeneration banking is delivered by eGeneration bankers like Cara and Mike.
Check out mycoolbank.com today!
Get great info, open accounts online and get awesome stuff like eChecking', eStatements, Online Banking and Bill Pay. It's easy for you to choose your style of banking. There's even online live chat.
mycoolbank.com | 413.527.4111
Belchertown | Easthampton | Hadley | Northampton | South Hadley | Southampton | Westfield
Find ESB on facebook
Member FDIC

The Daily Collegian asks, "Are you a SPORTS FAN?" THEN GO WRITE FOR THE COLLEGIAN!

COMICS

CITY FOOTWEAR
Students and Staff of the five Colleges Eligible for 10% of with ID
nike New Era Clarks Timberland
34 Pleasant Street · Northampton
413.341.5581

SUDOKU

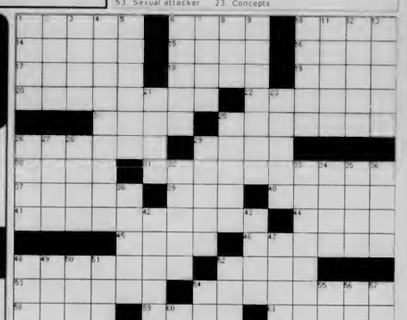
1					6			7
					7		4
						9	1
	4			7		1	3
			4	6
7		9			3		5
3				8			7
					9	8
2		7	3

WE WANT YOUR COMICS!
Put your comics in front of thousands of readers.
Questions? Comments? E-mail us: comics@dailycollegian.com
Friend us on Facebook: "Collegian Comix"

CROSSWORD

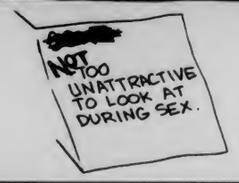
Ash Wednesday
February 17th
Mass Schedule:
8:00 a.m.
12:15 p.m.
5:15 p.m.
7:00 p.m.
9:00 p.m.
Newman Catholic Center

ACROSS
1. Garden bulb
6. Majestic
10. Information
14. Bowel cleansing
15. A Roman emperor
16. Cain's brother
17. Customize
18. Flower stalk
19. Hindu princess
20. Full and loud and deep
22. Feast or celebration
24. Travelled on a horse
25. A female deity
26. Tell on
29. No more than
30. A Central American sloth
31. Eyeglasses
37. It's a part of life
39. A boat built by Noah
40. Glide
41. Modification
44. Affirm
45. Corrode
46. Ancient ascetic
48. Bliss
52. Line of rotation
53. Sexual attacker
54. A charge for borrowing money
58. Weightlifters pump this
59. A river in Spain
61. Cowboy sport
62. Metal money
63. Incursion
64. Film critic Ebert
65. A friendly nation
66. Lack of difficulty
67. Catkin



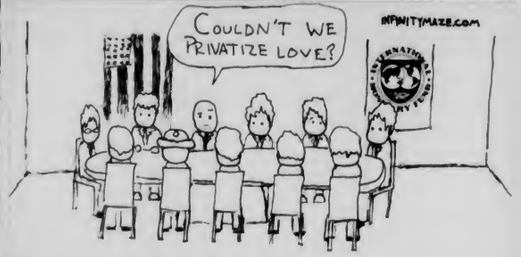
DOWN
1. Earl Grey and orange pekoe
2. Cancel
3. Not fat
4. Beg persistently and urgently
5. A detachment used for security
6. Come to pass
7. Animal friends
8. Anger
9. Solace
10. Challenged
11. Humiliate
12. Canvas dwellings
13. Assumed name
21. Lyric poems
23. Concepts
25. Tropical lizard
26. A type of volcanic rock
27. Freudian stage
28. Tight
29. Excellence
32. Sucker
33. A place of instruction
34. Not pre-recorded
35. Biblical garden
36. Arid
38. Wall hanging
42. Spartan
43. Immediately following in order
47. A range of mountains
48. Heath
49. A Christmas song
50. Mar
51. Thin and metallic in sound
52. An electrode
54. Colored part of an eye
55. Border
56. Caught in the act
57. Civil wrong
60. Sheep sound

PUFFTON VILLAGE
Excellent location!
1/2 Mile from UMass
Spacious Apartments!
1, 2, & 3 Bedroom Townhouses
All rents include: heat, hot water, and cooking gas!
On site laundry, off street parking.
Basketball and Tennis Courts.
Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com
APARTMENTS AVAILABLE



Show me your moves COMICS!
comics@dailycollegian.com

UMass... Cape Cod?
Take online classes anywhere this Summer
Registration begins March 15
Go to SPIRE or www.UMassULearn.net
UMASS AMHERST
Continuing & Professional Education



SMBC by Zach Weiner smbc-comics.com

I.M.F Roundtable by David Waksman infinitymaze.com

I.M.F. Roundtable

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20 - Feb. 18
The fur of koala bears brings about gore and medium vanilla bean coffees? Drugs are not the answer here.

pisces Feb. 19 - Mar. 20
Today will be the first day that you hear the words, "stop, I have pepper spray!"

aries Mar. 21 - Apr. 19
One should not lose this much sleep because in the fifth grade you chose Charmander as your first Pokemon.

taurus Apr. 20 - May. 20
Farmville has proven that even the most clueless city folk can take care of their farm with the sweat of their brow.

gemini May. 21 - Jun. 21
The word your looking for is "organism". As in, "oh my god that was one big organism!"

cancer Jun. 22 - Jul. 22
Unorthodox pedicure procedures do not include mayonnaise or tennis shoes. Perhaps Subway has what you are looking for.

leo Jul. 23 - Aug. 22
There is no need to cry because the Russian skater did not quite land their triple toe loop in doubles figure skating.

virgo Aug. 23 - Sept. 22
Doodling in class is very acceptable. However, Drew Brees' birthmark does not need to populate all of your notebook.

libra Sept. 23 - Oct. 22
The dollar store offers a great selection of items but the "Gospel According to R. Kelly" is the diamond in the rough.

scorpio Oct. 23 - Nov. 21
Write a full dissertation about how modern medical dramas often depict seizures in a false manner.

sagittarius Nov. 22 - Dec. 21
For all who did not vote in this past presidential election, Diddy does not forget a name or the face that matches it on Facebook.

capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 19
Your lifelong goals have been placed on the backburner. At least its chilling with other things on there like Dr. Dre's new album.

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necessary. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

A GREAT JOB! Spend your summer in a lakefront cabin in Maine. If you're looking to spend this summer outdoors, have fun while you work, and make lifelong friends, then look no further...CAMP MATAPONI, a residential girls camp in Maine, has female/male summertime openings for Land Sports, Waterfront (samm crafts, skiing, life guarding, WSI, boat drivers), Ropes Course, Tennis, H.B. Riding, Arts & Crafts, Theater, Cooking, Gymnastics, Dance, Videography, Group Leaders and more! Top salaries plus room/board & travel provided. Call us today at 1-561-748-3684 or apply online at www.campmataponi.com

FOR RENT

28 Stockbridge St: 4 bedroom house- 2 baths, living room, eat in kitchen, pantry, laundry, finished basement, yard, 2 car garage, 1.5 mi to campus! $2,575/Mo+

FOR RENT

www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 Bedroom Apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug, or Sept. First Come, First Serve. Get Them While They Last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop By Or Call 549-0600

TUTORING SERVICES

Math, Physics, Chemistry, Stats & GRE. Call John 413-584-8643 JBoid42@yahoo.com.

SERVICES

Pregnant? Want to talk? Call birthright 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 Hour hotline 1-800-550-4900 www.birthright.org

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Montreal Party Weekends From $89 Complete. Montreal Express.Net MontrealBlowout.com 781-979-9001

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSTUESDAY

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 16, 2010

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Harris becoming complete player for UMass

Senior Ricky Harris drives to the lane against a Xavier defender during the Minutemen's loss on Feb. 3. UMass coach Derek Kellogg called Harris the most valuable player in the Atlantic 10.

Senior guard earns praise from Martelli for strong work ethic

By Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

Saint Joseph's coach Phil Martelli said after his team's loss on Sunday that seniors have a "tattoo" at the end of the year that shows the record of their last season. Ricky Harris is a perfect example of someone who Martelli believes is not yet satisfied with that tattoo.

Harris has scored over 20 points in seven of the last eight games with a 24.6 points per game average on 48.9 percent shooting in that stretch. Sunday was no different as he finished with 27 points on 7-of-15 shooting in the Massachusetts men's basketball team's 70-62 win over the Hawks.

"Ricky Harris has embraced this thing as a senior," Martelli said of Harris's improved scoring. "As a senior, you can grab it by the throat and not let it get away."

Before his recent scoring burst, Harris ran into quite a few bumps early in the season. He sprained his ankle during practice and sat out against Grambling State on Dec. 11.

When Harris came back, he wasn't getting the lift in his shot, which negatively affected his shot. In his first two games back, he averaged 12.5 points per game.

No. 5's scoring eventually went up, but his shot wasn't going in. Between Dec. 19 and Jan. 13, he went 5-for-35 from 3-point range.

But after an 11-point performance on Jan. 16 against Temple, Harris has been going to the lane more and hasn't shot below 40 percent since the loss against the Owls.

Harris said his improved scoring has to do mainly with his comfort level and wanting to help UMass finish the season out on a good note.

"I feel like I'm more relaxed out there and the game is coming to me," Harris said. "I'm not having to go do stuff that I'm not capable of doing like forcing tough situations on myself."

His increased scoring numbers haven't just boosted his scoring average. It has also given the Minutemen (10-15, 4-7 Atlantic 10) help against a conference that is the most competitive it's been in years.

In the last three games, he scored over 25 points while boosting UMass to an eighth place tie in the A-10.

Harris's recent scoring surge is inching him closer to more UMass records. After recently passing Rashaun Freeman (1,744 points) on the all-time scoring list, Harris (1,816) needs 90 points to pass Lou Roe and 184 to become the third Minuteman to score 2,000 career points.

Although it is statistically unlikely that he gets to 2,000 points, if Harris can average 18 points over the next five games, he will become the third all-time scorer at UMass.

UMass coach Derek Kellogg said it wasn't just the scoring that has made the difference. He also believes that Harris turned into a more complete player over the course of the season.

"He's playing like a senior," Kellogg said. "Over the stretch where we've played better, I think he's been the most valuable player in the league."

Over the past few games, Harris's rebounding numbers went up and he's become a better defensive player. After the game, the senior captain said he's been working to improve defensively so that he can help his teammates out.

However, he believes his contribution to the team has been part of a two-way street, especially after the Minutemen lost sophomore David Gibbs for the season with a foot injury.

"I just applaud these guys because they come to practice every single day and work hard for me and the coaching staff," Harris said.

Adam Miller can be reached at amiller@dailycollegian.com.

February slump hurting UM

Minutemen on 3-game losing streak after weekend losses

By Jeffrey R. Larnard
Collegian Staff

A month and a half ago it was a question of whether the Massachusetts hockey team would have another January collapse.

With strong 5-4 record last month, the questions next year may be about the February collapse.

After consecutive losses over the weekend to Northeastern, a 2-0 loss Friday at the Mullins Center and a 6-3 decision Saturday at Matthews Arena No. 18 UMass fell in its first three contests of the month, and has lost five of its last six.

In their recent three-game losing streak, the Minutemen (16-13-0, 11-11-0 Hockey East) also fell from a tie in second place with Boston College in the conference to a tie with Boston University for fourth place. The Terriers, however, hold the edge over UMass, taking the season series, 2-1.

For the Huskies (15-12-1, 10-10-1 HEA) the weekend sweep jumped them to a point behind UMass and BU with 21 points.

Northeastern became the most recent team to hit UMass' goaltender hard as it beat the junior Paul Dainton six times on Saturday night. Dainton, who had 31 saves, has given up 18 goals in his last four games played, three of which he played from start to finish and another of which he played only the first period.

NU	2
UMass	0
NU	6
UMass	3

The Huskies Robbie Vrolyk got Dainton first, a little under six minutes into the game off assists from Drew Daniels and Greg Costa. Michael Marcou would tie the game up at one in the 17th minute of the period, but Northeastern scored four unanswered goals on its way to the 6-3 victory.

Vrolyk scored his second goal of the game and sixth of the season three minutes into the third period, as well as his third on the weekend.

Danny Hobbs cut the Huskies lead to three in the 12th minute of the final period off of James Marcou's 33rd assists of the season, but a minute later Wade McLeod added Northeastern's sixth goal of the game, and its third power-play goal. The Huskies finished the night 3-of-9 on the man advantage while the Minutemen would go 0-for-6 on the night and 0-for-9 on the weekend.

Dan Meyers got the start Friday night in net for UMass, allowing just two goals to the Huskies, but an anemic offense by the Minutemen gave the senior little support.

"I told the guys after the game that I wasn't as disappointed with the effort as I was with the result," UMass coach Don Cahoon said after Friday's game. "I thought we made a decent effort in terms of playing hard defensively and competing, we're just not real sharp offensively."

Meyers made 16 saves in the game while allowing two goals. The senior was first beat in the first period of Friday's game by David Strathman on the power play, and again in the third by Vrolyk. Meyers kept the Minutemen in the contest during the second period as he made six of his 18 saves in the period including stopping two one-on-one chances by the Huskies.

"Maybe we played good but we didn't play good enough. This time of year you need that little extra effort those dirty goals you need to do whatever it takes to find a way to score," Brett Watson said. "You're not going to win if you don't score."

Jeffrey R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@dailycollegian.com.

Goaltender Dan Meyers waits near the goal during a game this season. UMass is currently on a three-game losing streak.

Minutewomen finish 4-1 over weekend

Shortstop Whitney Williams makes a throw during a game last year. The Minutemen are 4-1.

By Geena Lombardi
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts' softball team started the season out strong going 4-1 at the Florida International University Combat Classic over the weekend.

The Minutewomen (4-1) faced Providence on Friday to start the season, showing impressive offensive play in a 14-3 victory over PC.

An unearned Katelyn Revens run, resulting from two UMass errors, gave the Friars (0-4) an early lead in the first inning.

Kyllie Magill tied the game at the bottom of the first with a solo home run, followed by a double from Sarah Reeves. A Michelle Libby single to left field drove in pinch runner Stephanie Mix, who scored from second base.

A Magill single and Reeves' second double of the game tacked on an additional two runs in the second inning.

UMass' offensive attack continued in the third inning, scoring six runs off of five hits. Whitney Williams singled to drive in Teea Rodgers, followed by a Magill two-RBI single. Back-to-back home runs by Reeves and Libby earned the final three runs of the inning.

Providence wrapped up its scoring at the top of the fourth inning from an Ava Pandiani double.

A double from Matthew, single from Libby and a third baseman error led to UMass' final four runs in the bottom of the fourth inning.

UMass coach Elaine Sortino felt this game showed the talent and depth in her team's lineup.

"I thought we did a great job at the plate and a decent job on the mound. We really hit the ball," Sortino said.

Bailey Sanders did not allow a run in the fifth inning, ensuring the Minutewomen victory. Sanders had a strong showing at the mound, allowing just three hits while striking out five.

Come from behind win

UMass came back from a 4-0 deficit in Saturday's first game behind dominating pitching from Sara Plourde in Like the 5-4 victory over Illinois-Chicago (3-2).

A leadoff triple and a Brooke Frydendall two RBI double started the inning for UIC. After a scoreless second inning, the Flames took advantage of an error by the Minutewomen and increased its lead by two with an Ashley Hewett double to left field.

The Minutewomen answered with a three run homer by Libby in the bottom of the third to bring UMass within one run of UIC.

The score remained 4-3 until the bottom of the sixth inning, when sophomore Katie Bettencourt singled to start off the inning, then proceeded to score from first base off of a Meghan Carta double to tie the game.

A single from Magill, double from Reeves and an intentionally walked Libby loaded the bases in the bottom of the seventh. Jessica Serio came in as a pinch hitter for her first UMass appearance, driving the ball towards the third baseman who mishandled the ball and allowed Magill to score the game winning run.

"It felt good being able to come from behind, it gave us confidence," Sortino said. "It was definitely a character builder."

Sortino recognized Plourde, who struck out 12 UIC players, for her strong performance on the mound.

"I absolutely give her a lot of credit," Sortino said. "It's nice to get 12 outs without having to make a play; it takes pressure off of the defense."

Untimely errors hurt UMass

UMass fell to Southern Illinois (3-2) in Saturday's second game, 12-2.

The Minutewomen took the lead at the top of the first inning after an error by the shortstop allowed Magill to score from second base. The Maroon and White scored again in the third inning from a Serio RBI single, however, they could not generate offense for the remainder of the game.

SIU took a 3-1 lead in the bottom of the first behind a double by Natalie Weissinger after Sanders walked three batters. The Salukis furthered its lead to 7-1 in the second inning with four runs that stemmed from five walks and two singles.

"I think it was a really tough game early in the season," Sortino said. "I left her [Sanders] out there because I thought she could get through it."

With two outs and one RBI for the Salukis, Rodgers made a costly error at third base that allowed a second run and kept the inning alive. A second error by left fielder Libby gave SIU two more runs. A final RBI in the bottom of the fourth gave the Salukis the only win over the Minutewomen in the classic.

"The two errors were extremely untimely, and we could have held them" Sortino said. "Defense is the name of the game, and we needed to finish it in the field."

Plourde sweeps day 3 in Miami

After inclement weather postponed the North Carolina State (2-2) game on Friday, the Minutewomen continued play on Sunday, claiming a 1-0 victory.

Bettencourt hit her first career home run in the bottom of the second on Friday, scoring the single run for UMass.

The game started at the bottom of the fourth inning on Sunday, with Plourde pitching the fifth inning for the Minutewomen and sweeping the Wolfpack.

In the Minutewomen's final game of the FIU Classic against its host, Bettencourt stepped up again for her team with a double in the fourth inning to take the lead.

Pinch runner Mix scored from first base, followed shortly by Bettencourt, who came around to score a second run due to an overthrown ball from the catcher.

The Golden Panthers (3-1) answered with a solo home run from Ashley McClain in the bottom of the fourth to bring FIU within a run.

The Maroon and White offense came alive again in the fifth inning, when a Reeves single drove in Matthew and Williams. Serio finished with a fly ball that allowed Magill to score a fifth run for UMass.

McClain hit a two-run homer in the sixth bringing the score to 5-3. However, Plourde struck out the final batter, her 15th of the game, in the seventh inning to give the Minutewomen the victory in Game 5.

"FIU is a very strong hitting team and we shut them down," Sortino said. "They're [UMass] starting to know who they are and that's the most important thing."

Geena Lombardi can be reached at glombard@student.umass.edu.

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY

COLLEGIAN

HIGH: 40 LOW: 26

www.DailyCollegian.com

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 17, 2010

Congressman gets frank with UM students

Barney Frank recounts a life in Boston politics

By Michelle Williams
Collegian Staff

On Feb. 16, the Student Union Ballroom located on the campus of the University of Massachusetts was filled with students, residents and constitutions eager to hear from guest speaker Congressman Barney Frank.

Three lounge chairs next to the stacks of Frank's new biography set the stage for the event, with UMass journalism professor Ralph Whitehead interviewing both Frank and the author of the biography, Stuart Weisberg.

The book, "Barney Frank: The Story of America's Only Left-Handed, Gay Jewish Congressman," is published by the University of Massachusetts Press.

Outside the double doors of the Ballroom were two UMass police officers, stationed to keep protestors from disrupting the event.

Immediately beyond the doors was a single protestor with a few more lingering outside of the Student Union building.

The protestors were members of a local 912 group, a project of T.V. personality Glenn Beck and a branch of the Tea Party movement with members predominately from the Pioneer Valley.

One protestor, who only identified himself as Keith, explained why he was protesting Frank's presence. "[Frank] is a left-wing liberal bent on the demise of the country. He blames the recession on the banks but needs to take the responsibility himself."

Another protestor held up a sign with a photo of Representative Frank behind bars dressed as a prisoner.

When asked why, he said that he had grabbed a pre-made sign, assuming it was there to grab the attention of passerby's.

Weisberg recounted how he gathered information for the biography from over 30 hours of interviews with Frank and 150 others.

This is the first published work to document Frank's life, from a working-class upbringing in Bayonne, N.J., to his undergraduate and graduate years spent at Harvard and his integration into Boston politics.

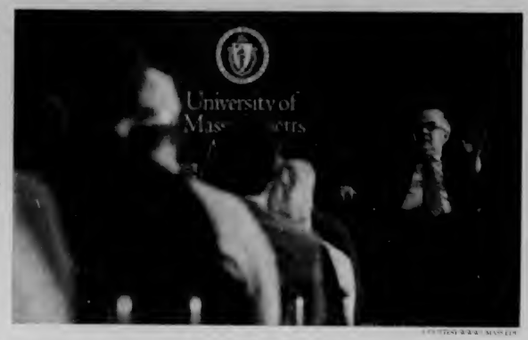
The book, which Weisberg said he needed to cut down 400 pages, analyzes Frank's experiences not only as a Jewish man but also as a homosexual man advancing into the national government.

When speaking about his childhood, Frank touched on the issues of prejudice he faced, "Though it is no longer an obstacle, when I graduated high school in 1971, being Jewish was an issue."

He spoke of how he could potentially be denied jobs, and how few CEO's and presidents of Ivy-league schools were actually Jewish.

In his first year in college, Frank admitted, "When I got to Harvard, I was overwhelmed."

Frank remained at Harvard for the completion of both his undergraduate and graduate degrees, though he said he left before he had finished his doctorate.



During such time, Frank became involved in local political campaigns in Boston.

In 1968, he left and became the Chief Assistant to then Boston Mayor Kevin White; a position that he said allowed him to be the connection between the people and those higher up in government.

Frank spoke of how he remained this position for three years despite the toll it had taken on his health.

Citing stress and long hours, Frank explained that he had become severely obese and unhappy while in this position.

When asked if he had considered running for mayor he explained that as Chief of Staff he had more power than any city mayor.

Despite the presence of some protestors, Barney Frank addressed the gathered crowd of 200 with highlights from his biography, "Barney Frank: The Story of America's Only Left-Handed, Gay, Jewish Congressman."

When running for elected office in 1980, Frank cites the backing of both the students of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and those of Boston University as the reason he won.

His campaign included posters complete with his photo and the slogan "Who's that with Barney Frank?"

During the campaign, the posters were continually taken by Boston University students and hung in the dormitories, which Frank said, was all apart of his team's strategy.

Frank represented 600,000 residents in a span of 29 towns, that extended from Newton and Brookline to New Bedford and Fall River.

Of his constituents Frank said, "I represented the Yuppies before we called them Yuppies."

As an openly gay, Jewish man, Frank said that he was surprised to have been elected.

Adding that he believed his appointment was the result of campaigning in an accepting district.

Having been in politics for over 30 years, Frank spoke of a time when there was middle ground in Washington.

He attributed the changes in policy to Newt

See FRANK on page 2

UMass professor Tom Roeper's presentation to the European Union, included the research conducted by he himself and his colleagues after studying the speech patterns of children in this South African school last August.

Linguistics professor presents speech pattern research to EU

By Megan Valcour
Collegian Correspondent

A University of Massachusetts professor delivered a lecture in Europe recently that summarized a four-year, multimillion dollar research program to determine whether a child has a speaking disability, or is actually just speaking with a different version of the language.

Thomas Roeper, a UMass linguistics professor, traveled to London to present the lecture to a European Union-sponsored conference titled "Let the Children Speak," from Jan.20 to Jan. 22.

During his talk, Roeper discussed the cooperative work that was done between a multitude of disciplines, nations and institutions of higher education.

The study began eight years ago with the brainchild of Roeper and his colleagues, Harry Seymour, a now-retired professor of communication disorders at UMass, and Jill de Villiers, a psychology professor at Smith College.

They developed the test in English, which de Villiers described as a "linguistically fair test that is neutral to dialects."

"It evaluates children without a dialectic prejudice," Roeper explained.

A prime example is African-American children, who are often misdiagnosed with speech disorders.

"But actually," said Roeper, "they're just speaking an African-American dialect of English."

The new test removes such an obstacle by using the very basics of language and sentence structure.

"It improves the nature of testing for communication disorders," said de Villiers.

The trio began to present their findings nationally, and were eventually approached by a representative of the European Union.

Over the past four years, the European Union has funded a multimillion dollar study based off of Roeper, de Villiers, and Seymour's original work that now encompasses language acquisition in over 25 European dialects.

In London, Roeper summarized the project from its origin in front of a diverse crowd.

"The organizers did a good job," Roeper said. "There were ambassadors from 20 different countries, and members of the educational hierarchy in England."

"There were parents and teachers, and even a grown person with a speaking disability," he added. "I was really impressed."

While the original three are no longer directly involved with the project, Roeper was well-versed in the direction that the EU-sponsored research was heading, which included studying the acquisition of certain dialects like 'Roma' (traditionally a gypsy language) and adapting the original English version of the test to fit in with a score of other languages.

There are certainly promising results.

"The whole idea is a good one," said de Villiers. "It really showcases the cooperation between disciplines like linguistics, communication disorders, psychology and education."

UMass student Stacey Hronowski, an English major, said she had a speech impediment when she was younger.

"I couldn't say my s's - and my name is Staeey. It was horrible," she said.

"I think that it's great if they can help anyone who has any kind of speech disorder," she added, "but I also think that while dialects are wonderful, and show off diversity, if it makes it hard for children to be understood, then the test should point that out."

Other students were also supportive of Roeper's work.

"Well, I don't know much about it, but I think it's great," said UMass student Katrina Turner, an English major who said she has taken a linguistics class in the past. "Anything that decreases prejudice is great."

Megan Valcour can be reached at mvalcour@student.umass.edu.

Social networking sites for the post-grad professional world

The popularity of Facebook on college campuses, has led some students to more professional social networking websites in the search of employment opportunities once their collegiate careers come to an end.

By Maggie Freleng
Collegian Staff

For many college students social networking takes a top-notch on the priority ladder.

So where does that leave a college student who wants to stay socially connected as well as organize their future career after graduation?

Social networking sites such as Monster.com and LinkedIn might offer the ideal segue into the professional world.

These websites are created with the sole purpose of facilitating job-hunting for employees and employers as well as helping people along with career building and social networking.

LinkedIn, is a free website designed for registered users to make a profile and create and maintain a list of contact people they know and trust in business, known on the site as "connections."

LinkedIn has over 500,000 groups on specialized subjects that people can join to share ideas and make new connections.

When a person makes connections of people they know or would like to know, the list of connections can be used in a number of ways to advance one's career path.

Connections can help people find jobs and recommend business opportunities.

Employers can list job openings and members can search companies or positions they may be interested in working.

When searching a company on the website, information which is provided can include the type of company, its size, male to female ratio, common job titles and a list of past, present and former employers.

A person is also able to look at the job description and the job skill requirements among other features.

If you are interested in the job you have the option to apply immediately and upload a resume directly to the website.

According to Lisa Hamel, banking center manager in charge of hiring at the Amherst Bank of America, said that more and more companies are using sites like Monster.com, Job Finder and LinkedIn because networks like this help firms to cut the cost of hiring headhunters to search for employers.

It also allows companies to sort between good and bad candidates much faster and efficiently than traditional recruitment processes.

Hamel said that Bank of America uses these websites, particularly Monster.com, to search for employers.

She said that she hires a headhunter but the entire process is much easier because these websites are specifically designed to find employees with the best qualifications.

Sam Giugli, a junior English major at UMass, said that he believes that social networking sites like LinkedIn are really important because, "you are able to see the requirements of a company and they are able to see your skills and right away find out if you are a good match without having to initially waste time going out and being disappointed."

Maggie Freleng can be reached at mfreleng@student.umass.edu.

ARTS & LIVING

Film Fest looks at urban England

The Massachusetts Multicultural Film Festival will screen two films, "Of Time and the City" and "Listen to Britain" tonight at 7:30 p.m.

SEE PAGE 4

SPORTS

Minutemen look to keep winning

After wins against Duquesne and Saint Joseph's, the Minutemen look for its third-consecutive victory tonight when it faces George Washington.

SEE PAGE 8

EDITORIAL & OPINION

The University of Cork has a similar reputation to UMass Amherst as a party school, but columnist Nick O'Malley describes the differences.

SEE PAGE 4

DailyCollegian.com

Go online to see season previes of all of UMass' spring sports teams.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXX
ISSUE 20

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
413-545-3500
Fax 413-545-3699
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF William McGuinness
MANAGING EDITOR Matt Rocheleau
MANAGING WEB EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
BUSINESS MANAGER Daniel Jette
PRODUCTION MANAGER Michael Sirkes
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Kirsten Swenson
ADVERTISING MANAGER Michael Tortorici
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Amanda Joinson
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Shayna Murphy
COPIES EDITOR Andrew Witts
EDITORIAL EDITOR Alyssa Creamer
NEWS EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS EDITOR Jeffrey R. Larnard
PHOTO EDITOR Matthew Harrison
IT MANAGER Victor Jack
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Matt Zolniert
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Nicole Jacinto
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Norman Provost
CLASSIFIED MANAGER Katelyn Tamilio
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Justin Gagnon
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Elyse Horowitz
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Cal Scannell
ASSISTANT COPIES Dominik Mei
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Benjamin Moriarty
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Michael Phillis
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Matthew M. Robare
ASSISTANT NEWS Samuel Butterfield
ASSISTANT NEWS Jenn Heshion
ASSISTANT NEWS Chris Shores
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jay Asser
ASSISTANT SPORTS David Brinch
ASSISTANT SPORTS Adam Miller
ASSISTANT PHOTO Maxwell Sparr
ASSISTANT PHOTO Samantha Webber
SENIOR PRODUCER Sara Cody
SENIOR PRODUCER Pete Rizzo

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Massachusetts Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967. The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 4:30 p.m.

PRODUCTION CREW
on staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Jeffrey R. Larnard

COPY EDITOR
Hannah McGoldrick

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Nick Guarino

After discussing his experience in politics, Congressman Frank fielded questions from students, which included concerns about the cost of public higher education and opposition to his own congressional appointment.

Frank debates partisanship, politics amidst some protests

FRANK from page 1

Gingrich, who changed the conversations from those of Regan, who had once said, "after 6 p.m. we're all friends", and would also call the opposing party corrupt and immoral.

Frank suggested this as the reason for the partisanship between the parties now, and why constitutions call politicians sell-outs when attempting to compromise.

Increasing the tension between the political parties, Frank suggested that it is because the parties receive their information from different sources.

Frank said, "People are almost in a parallel universe; they're not getting a common set of facts. Everybody's talking to people who agree with them."

He then elaborated that the people who include themselves in the right tend to get their information from FOX news and talk shows while the left gets majority of their information from the internet.

During a 30 minute question and answer section, a PHENOM member asked Frank to sign his petition for increases in funding for public higher education, which the congressman eagerly agreed to sign.

Adding that the issue over the rising costs of public higher education was an important issue which needs to be addressed.

The next person at the microphone angered with the housing crisis called for Frank's resignation to which he responded that his speech was not a question but an angered proclamation, and added, "your side is run by a demented felon" to loud applause from majority of the audience.

To respond to the right-wing student, Frank explained that he had supported a bill in the House of Representatives to decrease foreclosures, in order to help Americans who were losing their homes do to unemployment not sub-prime mortgages.

Following questions, Frank sold signed copies of his book for discounted event rates.

Michelle Williams can be reached at mwillia@student.umass.edu

Author's tale relives civil rights struggle

THE DAILY IOWAN
VIA COLLEGE MEDIA NETWORK

The late 1940s saw plenty of social change, including the beginning of the end of segregation and discrimination.

It was the concept of this cultural upheaval that put the wheels in motion for author Jeffrey Copeland's account of the 1948 Shelley v. Kraemer case in Olivia's Story.

The U.S. Supreme Court ruled that courts could not enforce racial contracts on real estate. Shelley v. Kraemer, Copeland said, was one of the most important legal decisions made in Ameriea's history.

"I can clearly remember the discrimination going on when I was a kid," he said. "Things were changing, but there was still a lot of work to be done."

Feeling the need to go beyond the legalese of the trial, he presents the humanity behind what happened. As a native of St. Louis, where the case originated, the compulsion was even greater. For Copeland, narrative nonfiction allows him to get inside a character and express certain voices and actions.

A career as department head and professor of English at the University of Northern Iowa is also reflective of Copeland's humanitarian edge. Kenneth Baughman, an assistant professor of English at UNI, said Copeland is quite sensitive to the "human dimensions of situations" and "not at all slavish to bureaucratic constraints."

Olivia's Story takes on the perspective of Olivia Merriweather Perkins and the efforts of her and several others to challenge the covenant of segregated neighborhoods. Taking on the role of leader, Perkins had a naturally strong, kind, and giving demeanor.

Copeland's mission was to make sure her voice in the book was just right, which meant numerous interviews with her friends, family, and former students. Not only was he delighted by what he discovered, but he received the same reaction from each interviewee with regards to Perkins.

"Olivia was one of the most beautiful people I have ever heard of in my life," he said. "I never once heard a bad thing about her – she was universally loved and admired."

Sorting through personal accounts and legal jargon was an arduous process, with a year devoted to research and interviewing.

Though the opportunity to speak with those involved was a respite of sorts from dry official documents, it was more than crucial to making sure the story was accurate.

In addition to the historical importance of Olivia's Story, the idea of making monumental sacrifices for one's beliefs is something Copeland said he hopes resonates with readers.

The work of a few people led to influence the lives of many, particularly in this case, rings true of George Santayana's famous remark, "Those who cannot remember the past are condemned to repeat it."

UMass is a BIG campus, and we need your help covering it.

Know of something that's happening? Want to see an event get news coverage? Let us know!

Go online and head to DailyCollegian.com and click "Submit a Tip."

HPV Fact #13:

About 2 out of 3 people will get genital warts after having any kind of genital contact with someone infected.

HPV Fact #11:

You don't have to actually have sex to get HPV—the virus that causes genital warts.

Why risk it

Visit your campus health center.

MERCK
Copyright © 2010 Merck & Co., Inc. All rights reserved. Printed in USA

hpv.com
2105004(40)-01/10-GRD

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 17, 2010

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
– Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Party school policies

The longer I study over here at University College Cork, the more I end up seeing it as Ireland's version of the University of Massachusetts.

Both have large student populations.

Nick O'Malley

UMass has upwards of 20,000 students while UCC has just over 18,000. Both are widely known public universities. Both are cheap schools when compared to those around them. UMass costs just under $20,000 in-state, while UCC will run Irish students roughly €1,650 ($2,244) in fees (yeah, we're getting screwed). Most importantly, though, both are trying to shake off the image of being a party school.

UMass' struggle with the "ZooMass" image are well known. With the highly publicized riots and reputation for large amounts of parties, most people consider UMass the predominant party school of the area since being ranked as one of the top 10 party schools in the country on Princeton Review a few years back. The University of New Hampshire has been ranked more recently, yet the reputation lingers.

UCC now faces the same problem as it tries to shrug off its identity of the crazy party school in the middle of the city that keeps the neighbors up all night. That challenge became even greater last week with the passing of RAG Week.

What's RAG Week? Depending on who you ask, it's one of two things. If you are a student, it's still called RAG Week, the highlight of the social calendar where the campus turns into a party during the day (and drink), and the students go out at night to clubs and house parties (and drink).

While UMass simply stops there and expects college students to abide by laws that they're socially motivated to break, UCC actually gives students something else to do.

If you ask a faculty member of high-ranking member of the Student Union, it's Raise & Give Week, the highlight of the social calendar where the campus turns into a charity fundraising party during the day (still with class, kind of), and the students go out at night to drink privately and responsibly.

UCC Student Union Irish Officer Seán O'Sé described it pretty well, calling it a "carnival atmosphere" on campus and made sure to mention the fact that most events on campus raised money for Haiti relief, hospices and a local children's hospital.

Most UMass students over here had heard stories about RAG Week. We'd heard about how students would get pulled aside and told to chug a beer for charity. We'd been told specifically by advisors from the UMass International Programs Office to not try and keep up with the Irish students during RAG Week – they'd drink us under the table.

It's similar to what incoming freshmen hear before coming to UMass, particularly if they're in-state. But on arrival, there's a different scene: All the higher ups are threatening to crack down on drinking, riot police show up for every championship game, you are in fact not automatically invited to parties every weekend.

Such was the case at UCC. Just like the "please don't riot" e-mails the chancellor sent out during the MLB playoffs, UCC students were getting the "please don't drink too much" e-mails. Even the Cork police department was involved, taking out a half-page in the university's student paper reminding students that drinking alcohol in public would result in a €63 ($85.68 for you Yanks) on-the-spot fine.

It's the same sort of crackdown message that campus police send out every weekend: "We know what you're doing, your neighbors all hate you, it's illegal, please stop."

While UMass simply stops there and expects college students to abide by laws that they're socially motivated to break, UCC actually gives students something else to do.

This is where RAG Week comes in.

There is a stark difference in the atmosphere created when the administration wants to improve its image. Being compliant at UMass means staying in and playing video games or going to the movies, being compliant as UCC means participating in pizza eating competitions, head shavings and body waxings for charity, throwing sponges at people, watching lube wrestling, dunk tanks, a silent disco, a nearly naked mile and then drinking legally at one of the two campus pubs.

The two different approaches produce two different results. One campus has a bad reputation, an overbearing police presence, students forced to chug a handle of vodka in their rooms with no supervision. The other leads to the whole campus community being able to hang out in pubs, drink socially and raise money for charity.

Am I advocating lowering the drinking age? Not really, the actual implementation of a change would be impractical and the initial consequences would be negative. That, and RAG Week's been around since UCC first opened.

What I am complaining about is that there is nothing legal to do in the Amherst area, if you're under 21, that is. The first week I was at UCC, I had the chance to go bowling for free, have the cover charge waived at a club and was offered a free pint on the school's dime. UMass students will occasionally get free t-shirts sponsored by Big Y.

Let's look at it this way. This past week, I heard that Amherst got blanketed by snow and blasted with arctic colds while students stayed in, made Pop Tarts and played video games. In Cork? We had vendors set up in the middle of campus selling venison burgers, donuts and chili and I was in (and won) a pizza eating competition for free.

Tough break, UMass.

Nick O'Malley is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu. For pictures of RAG Week and more, go to DailyCollegian.com.

Waiting in line is not great exercise

Amanda Joinson

After a long day of classes one can imagine the last thing students would want to do is spend another hour fighting for leg room in a classroom that's way too hot and filled with sweat-soaked bodies.

But everyone seems to be doing just that at the University of Massachusetts' recreation center.

The group activities at the recreation center are a hit if you haven't heard already.

The only problem is that university officials in charge of the functioning of the recreation center do not know how to respond to its group activities' surprising popularity.

Their idea of a response to an overload of interested participants is to send the avid gym-goers on a wild goose chase around the gymnasium to receive one of the 'golden tickets' into class.

Apparently, according to an e-mail sent last week from UMass administrators in charge of the recreation center, this method of having students find tickets to group activities is the only way to efficiently monitor how many people are allowed in a class and give a fair chance to the undergraduates on campus.

Well they are wrong – there are so many alternatives, and they have chosen the most outrageous option available.

People are attending Cardio Kick Boxing, Zumba and Pilates because they are interested in working out without spending an hour on a treadmill like a hamster in a cage.

The classes give students a chance to do something active besides the routine workout including cardio machines and weights which often leave students feeling like robots.

The best part about it is that these group activities are a fun way to improve your strength and overall flexibility. They might just maybe even shed a few of those extra pounds you picked up from all the chips and beer you consumed at the Super Bowl party.

When obesity is one of the biggest concerns of society and the rates of obesity are the highest they have been in years, the recreation center obviously needs a new approach to allow students to enjoy these group activities. The worst thing that can be done to these students is to deny them from a class they would enjoy.

The 'golden tickets' being given out are discouraging students from participating in the future due to the fact that most classes are already overloaded to the point that students have to shuffle around cautiously to get an effective workout. Luckily for them, I have a solution such as creating more class times. Whoa! What a concept.

Students who choose to be active in this arctic weather should not be denied exercise opportunities because of space constraints.

Here's the plan. There are four classrooms in the recreation center so why not use them all day? Right now, classes are sporadically in a random room. How about simultaneously fill the classes by placing Zumba in one, Yoga in another, Cardio Kick Boxing in a third and might as well throw in some ABS-olute training in the final room.

Then, run the rotation of classes all day. Have a class in every room at all times. Not only does this work for people that have class until seven and cannot make it to the fight for the 'golden ticket' but it might lessen the crowds of people running to the gym at night.

This would allow everyone a fair opportunity to get involved in something that may have been missing out on.

Wait there's more! An even better idea is put some of these classes in those ancient buildings no one has visited since the opening of the recreation center. Anybody remember Totman, Boyden and what about Curry Hicks? What could possibly be going on in those fitness centers but just open space waiting for people to fill it?

People can only play so much basketball, and honestly, who has more right to the space –basketball team of eight or a group of 30, anxiously waiting to participate in an hour long full-body workout?

Understand there is no fancy lighting, overhead music or a view of the valley, but Totman or Boyden can easily get the job of hosting group activities done.

One last idea is that there should be sign ups online. Not only is this easier for students, but the university would be able to view patterns in who is enrolling and possibly even survey to match time slots. They would have a constant monitor and maybe from that go as far to create a gym class for credit.

Students who choose to be active in this arctic weather should not be denied exercise opportunities because of space constraints, there are tons of open areas on campus.

Students who want to receive a full body workout through one of these group activities should be able to do so. Sometimes these classes are the only things that get people moving, and there should not be any excuses as to why they cannot participate for the lack of space.

There is a better way to respond to the popularity of the group exercise; they just need to work on it. As for now we can excuse the university, but sooner or later someone will have to take a different course of action.

Amanda Joinson is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at ajoinson@student.umass.edu.

Cash will have students thinking "SMART"

Yevgeniya Lomakina

"Top producer of Fulbright students." "Among the top twenty public universities in the United States." "[O]ne among the top public National Universities." Sounds like the University of Massachusetts in Amherst? Sure, it does.

The Chronicle of Higher Education, Newsweek International and U.S. News and World Report all rank UMass highly among other public universities. UMass slowly but steadily makes its way into the headlines; the university and the surrounding area have recently received generous media attention.

The university's homepage often boasts of new and incredible distinctions. MSN.com and Hotels and Travel Reservations site recognized Amherst as one of the best college towns in America. UMass enjoys a favorable public opinion, and thus far it would seem like the attention that the university is getting is positive.

But students are well aware of another, less glamorous reputation of their campus. No need to name names or point fingers. Yet nearly every incoming freshman has a story to tell of the rowdy atmosphere witnessed on the campus; such rumors spread like wildfire and have a much more prevailing effect than the tabloids.

The desire to sustain positive newsworthiness of the campus drives Chancellor Robert Holub's intention for the "SMART Branding Initiative."

According to a release, "based on extensive research on the public perceptions of UMass Amherst," said Holub, "themes were created that address misconceptions about the campus and emphasize institutional strengths."

The competition for future students is fierce. As a public research institution, UMass competes with private ones, such as Boston University or Harvard. That is why public perception is crucially important. Aside from future alumni, fiscal resources also depend upon the university's stance in the public sphere.

The contest winning video will be an expression of a "distinct student voice," though one may wonder whether that voice is made louder by the expected prize.

The "SMART Branding Initiative" includes the creation of a new image for UMass. This process is entitled "branding," but not in the familiar sense of the word. The University Relations homepage provides a specific definition, citing that "branding" is the process during which UMass will be presented to the public within a consistent set of settings, both visual and verbal, in order to change the public's perception of the university.

"Branding" is "not a logo," but a procedure that is only complete when the faculty, students and even future alumni acquire "the same association and image" upon hearing the words "the University of Massachusetts, Amherst."

A part of this on-going project calls for the direct participation of the students. A video contest, the announcement of which has adorned the UMass Amherst homepage since Feb.1, is currently underway.

The guidelines are simple. The video must be one to three minutes in length and provide a "unique insight into the life on campus," incorporating the themes of "intelligence, inspiration and imagination."

All current undergraduate and graduate students are encouraged to participate; individual and group submissions are also accepted. Students are to send their mini Blockbusters to the University Relations at 390 Whitmore Administration Building by 4 p.m. on the March 1 deadline. More information and other details about the video contest may be found at www.umass.edu/umhome/video-contest/.

Winning videos will be announced in March, and the video will be featured on the UMass website, YouTube and other promotional materials.

Aside from fame, one must not overlook another equally appealing aspect of the contest: money. Cash prizes vary from $500 for first place, $300 for second place and $150 for third place.

Providing financial compensation is an effective way to ensure student participation, because college students are always on the lookout for more cash. But is the clinging of coins an appropriate call to arms?

Why does it take a profit-promising contest in order for the students to consider changing the public's opinion of their school? Why has UMass' reputation remained imperfect for so long?

When one disregards the sea of maroon that floods the campus, when the proud cries "Go UMass" quiet down, one is able to understand that the university deserves a better public opinion.

The contest winning video will be an expression of a "distinct student voice," though one may wonder whether that voice is made louder by the expected prize. One may only hope that this is not the sole reason for student participation.

So get out your camera phones, your iPod nano cameras, or any other video recording device, and go forth and produce that promotional video that will make everyone proud to attend the UMass Amherst.

Yevgeniya Lomakina is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at ylomakin@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS LIVING

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 17, 2010 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Film Festival looks at urban England

Tonight, the Massachusetts Multicultural Film Festival will screen two movies, "Of Time and the City" (pictured) and "Listen to Britain," starting at 7:30 p.m. in the Isenberg School of Management Auditorium.

By Lindsay Orlov
Collegian Correspondent

The Massachusetts Multicultural Film Festival is once more bringing audiences a sampling of some of the most dynamic films from around the world tonight at 7:30 p.m. in the Isenberg School of Management Flavin Family Auditorium (room 137). This event is free and open to the public.

Now in its 17th year, the Massachusetts Multicultural Film Festival is focusing on the theme of "Cinematic Cities." Throughout this spring semester, the Festival will be showcasing films that explore the powerful, reciprocal connection between cities and cinema. The films to be showcased include newly restored documentaries and silent films, international co-productions and recently award-winning films from multiple countries, including Afghanistan, Jamaica, France, Brazil, Germany, Portugal, Italy, Israel, the U.K. and the U.S. The festival has 13 events, from Feb. 3 to May 5, in which audiences can investigate and experience the connection between cinematic urban storytelling and cultural debate and development.

This week, the festival screens two films that look at urban life in two of the United Kingdom's most diverse cities. The first is "Of Time and the City," an ode to post-World War II Liverpool directed by Terence Davies. Davies grew up in Liverpool as a Catholic, working-class, gay individual and uses this 2008 documentary skillfully to reunite his past with the present. "Of Time and the City" is both a eulogy and a love song to the city of Liverpool that explores the permeating and permanent effect a city can have on its citizens, as well as the effect time can have on a city's changing skyline, according to the film's website. This documentary, commissioned to celebrate the city of Liverpool as the 2008 European City of Culture, received rave reviews at the 2008 Cannes Film Festival. "Of Time and the City" won Best Non-Fiction Film from the New York Film Critics Circle Awards for its lyrical style, acerbic wit and cultural commentary.

Along with "Of Time and the City," the Massachusetts Multicultural Film Festival is screening "Listen to Britain," directed by Humphrey Jennings and Stuart McAllister. Produced in 1942, this classic documentary was the inspiration for Davies' "Of Time and the City" and has an introduction to the film by Davies himself in the version being screened on Wednesday. "Listen to Britain," an allied propaganda film funded by the U.S. and designed equally for British and American audiences, was nominated for the inaugural category of Academy Award for Documentary Feature in 1942, according to the British Film Institute. Jennings' films, including "Listen to Britain," portray the heart wrenching entirety of England's ground zero experiences during World War II, including the bombings, the food shortages, and most of all the everyday perseverance of the people of England as they survived from one day to the next for years on end.

The paired screening of "Of Time and the City" and "Listen to Britain" artistically captures a country in turmoil and in growth, in one of its worst periods of hardship and in its evolutionary struggle towards modernity. More information can be found at the Massachusetts Multicultural Film Festival website, www.umass.edu/film.

Lindsay Orlov can be reached at lorlov@student.umass.edu.

UMass shows its support for Haiti

Last Thursday night, UMass hosted the Haiti Benefit Concert at the Fine Arts Center. The show featured a variety acts such as the Young@Heart Chorus and the proceeds from the concert benefited the non-profit health insurance company Partners in Health.

By Andrew Cogan
Collegian Correspondent

There is something about the shared experience of live music and dancing that erodes national borders, negates the separation of geographic distance and translates across cultural and linguistic boundaries. In times of crisis, these divisions are momentarily forgotten when people remember that besides their country and their culture, the people in need are also human. Music often serves as the impetus for sympathy and interconnectedness. In doing so, it channels itself towards alleviating the scourge of poverty, disease and natural catastrophe.

Such was the phenomenon that occurred Feb. 11, in the concert hall of the UMass Fine Arts Center, where residents of Amherst and surrounding towns, along with students from the Five Colleges, gathered for the Stand up for Haiti Benefit Concert.

Produced to raise funds on behalf of Partners in Health, an international non-profit healthcare organization, the concert was a central place for nearby communities to come together and contribute not only their money, but also their thoughts and prayers in the hope of making a contribution to relieve the people of Haiti.

The concert featured performances by several UMass student associations and music ensembles, supplemented with stellar local and national talent. The night was kicked off by a couple of dance numbers performed by the Haitian American Student Association and the South Asian Student Association dance teams, whose passion and energy set the thoughtful-yet-optimistic tone for the rest of the evening's performances.

Next to take the stage was Steve Tracy, an associate professor of African American Studies at UMass. He showcased his undeniable mastery of the harmonica and the blues. His arresting performance recalled several characteristics of Jimi Hendrix, injecting his songs with massive volume swells that reverberated around the concert hall like feedback. Of the many sounds he coaxed from his instrument, one even resembled the percussive effects of a wah-wah pedal on muted guitar strings that Hendrix used in songs such as "Voodoo Child (Slight Return)." A particular standout from his performance was an emotional rendition of Amazing Grace.

Following two solid performances by UMass Jazz Ensemble I and smooth Latin-jazz group Creacion, the concert was elevated to another level by Los Angeles a cappella group Sonos. The sextet composed of Jessica Freedman, Rachel Bearer and Katherine Hoye, along with Ben McLain, Chris Harrison and Paul Peglar, graced audiences with their innovative a cappella arrangements of seminal popular and indie songs, whose imaginative reinterpretations were expressed with daunting vocal prowess.

After Sonos performed, the curtains closed and the spotlight was shifted to a podium in front of the stage where Haitian-American Poet, Lenelle Moïse stood up to give a dramatic and impassioned recitation of several poems concerning the disaster in Haiti. The brief respite from the music was welcome as it offered a moment for thoughtful reflection. It presented a reminder to the audience that while they were enjoying the evening's entertainment, people in Haiti were clinging on to survival as they grieved for lost loved-ones, and struggled to rebuild their nation. She touched on several key themes, including the history of economic exploitation at the hands of other nations, like the United States, that sunk Haiti into the depths of poverty and amplified the horrific consequences of the earthquake.

Virginian folk-rock singer-songwriter, Erin McKeown, shifted the concert back to its musical focus. Charismatic and engaging, she delivered her songs with haunting lyricism. Her voice meandered over the words as if she were reading poetry tinged with subtle hints of melody. For her final song, she called upon the audience to assist her by humming back-up vocals, accentuating the theme of togetherness expounded throughout the concert.

After McKeown, instrumental jazz quartet FlavaEvolution performed, led by saxophonist Frank Newton, the Interim Program Director at the FAC who also produced the night's concert. Continuing the theme of audience participation, FlavaEvolution invited concert-goers to sing the vocal hoop together as part of the quartet's final song.

Martin Sexton, a folk singer-songwriter from Syracuse, NY, injected the show with a heavy dose of personality and charisma; his engaging stage presence never diminished even when he forgot the words to his own song. Singing with only his guitar, Sexton fused folk, rock, blues, country and other genres to create a musical medley further enhanced by his exceptional vocal range.

The final performers to take the stage were the internationally acclaimed Young@Heart Chorus from Northampton, Ma. featuring talent no younger than 70 years old. Youthful exuberance was certainly not lacking as they brought the concert to a climactic finale, with McKeown and Sonos joining them on stage. Their emotionally rousing performance ended the show on a fittingly optimistic note, highlighting the success of the concert at raising funds and bringing the community together in observance of the crisis in Haiti.

Though the struggle in Haiti wears on, the Stand for Haiti Benefit Concert was a successful step forward in the effort to relieve Haiti from the devastation after last month's earthquake.

Andrew Cogan can be reached at acogan@student.umass.edu.

Another love story based on Nicholas Sparks book, "Dear John" is rushed and as usual, does no justice to the original work. Channing Tatum stars alongside Amanda Seyfried.

'Dear John': Your pretty cast can't even save you

By Kate MacDonald
Collegian Staff

Valentine's Day came a week early this year, as swooning girls everywhere brought their significant others to see Lasse Hallstrom's "Dear John." With yet another sappy Nicholas Sparks adaptation, bright and shining Amanda Seyfried and a shirtless Channing Tatum, what's not to love?

A whole lot, in fact. "Dear John" begins with Tatum ("Step Up," "She's the Man") flinging himself off a pier in South Carolina to save Savannah's (Seyfried) purse. This show of youthful bravado wins the college girl over and romance ensues.

A continuing theme of the movie, what follows next is very rushed. Within two weeks, coinciding with her spring break, the pair manages to fall deeply in love. Viewers are able to find out a bit more about the main characters such as his reputation as a bad boy, how protective her friends are over her and how he was raised. They even meet each others families.

Enter Richard Jenkins as Mr. Tyree, John's father Jenkins, an actor whose resume is full of supporting roles ("Step Brothers," "Cheaper By the Dozen"), really shines in his role in "Dear John." He excels in playing an emotionally devoid, potentially autistic father trying to hold on to the best memories he has, those of his son as a young boy. Scenes showing his kinship with Savannah follow, creating a sweet undertone.

That sweetness goes right out the window when John must return to his tour. Again, the plot is rushed as the audience sees the pair's relationship attempt to withstand the obstacle of distance through the mail. The turning point in the movie is prominent: 9/11.

As the nation suffers through a devastating attack, not much of this emotion is shown on screen. What is presented, however, is Savannah's hesitancy to continue with the relationship as John decides to reenlist. This is one of the only times where Tatum actually shows emotion, and he does it well.

What's a girl to do? Move on with her life at college, or remain loyal to a guy who will be gone indefinitely? Savannah has an important choice to make someone will suffer either way.

While Savannah sticks by John in the beginning and makes her final decision, "Dear John" is peppered with beautiful cinematography. Many scenes in the film could easily fit in with a Travel Channel program focusing on the Carolinas. Although the romance is obviously the focus of the movie, cinematographer Terry Stacey was able to ensure that the setting would not just become a backdrop.

Though Tatum seems to be stiff through out most of the movie, the romance is obviously there between his and Seyfried's characters. While the two week-long romance between Savannah and John is unbelievable, had the producers (or author) chosen to stretch it out a little longer, the film itself would have been a lot better.

"Dear John" is far from an Oscar nominated movie. That said, it is not a terrible film. It is the sort of movie one would watch on a rainy day spent with a boyfriend or girlfriend if nothing else is on, and no one would be disappointed. But for all the hype and love for the book, the movie just did not measure up. The fast pace mixed with the choppy dialogue led to an overall mediocre film.

Kate MacDonald can be reached at kaitlynm@student.umass.edu

Rubblebucket rocks earthy grooves in Noho

By Tappan Parker
Collegian Correspondent

Saturday night, around 10 p.m., a few bass notes and snare hits could be heard outside the Iron Horse as the musicians inside rehearsed for their upcoming show, leaving the doors closed and teasing the eardrums of a crowded line that went halfway down the block. As soon as the doors were unlocked people rushed in to get a spot close to the stage in anticipation of the upcoming jam session.

But why were all these people there? Who could possibly bring so many people to the Iron Horse? It would have to be someone big, some phenomenal band. But who was it? The answer: Rubblebucket.

The event kicked off with opening band Tidwell's Treasure, a funk group from East Longmeadow. The band consists of members Emily Duff on tenor saxophone, Sean McMahon on vocals and guitar, Tim Jang on drums, and J. Witbeck on bass. With grooving songs such as "MuFu" (short for Mother Funker) and "Minton the Explorer," the band got the giant crowd moving and dancing almost as soon as they hit the stage.

The band demonstrated immense skill with licks that synced together perfectly and the music never got old or boring, as the group was constantly switching up the style. Tidwell's Treasure last song, "Al Needs a Haircut," where McMahon asked for "a little audience participation," even managed to get the crowd chanting "Haircut!" over and over again as the song went on.

Eclectic rock band Rubblebucket played a wild show last Saturday night at the Iron Horse in Northampton. As they typically do, the band attracted a large group of dedicated and enthusiastic fans.

But what really set the band apart from most opening bands was the funk tuba. You read that correctly: funk tuba. On the second to last song Witbeck quietly put down his bass and then pulled out a tuba, and proved that tuba has a solid place in the funk genre.

Tidwell's Treasure will be playing this Sunday, Feb. 21, at the Happy Valley Showdown Finals event, located at The Elevens in Northampton.

The opening band was rocking, the crowd was grooving, and the main event hadn't even started yet. Witbeck described playing for such a huge crowd as "staying at ease in a high and compact energy setting." They were the perfect opening band for Rubblebucket.

Then the lights went up, there was a brief rearranging of the people and instruments on stage, and the lights dimmed for Rubblebucket as they performed for their biggest Northampton crowd yet.

Within moments all attention was focused on the band as the bodies of both young and old swayed, heads bobbed and foots tapped. There was hardly a person there who wasn't moving in some way to the beat, the dance music that brings everyone together. In fact the band itself was alive with motion, grooving to the sounds and getting so into it that it was hard to tell whether the crowd was dancing more than the band.

The music that came from the stage was out of this world. The band is both trip-rock and psychedelic Afrobeat, yet that is only the tip of the iceberg. There is no one cultural influence on the band but rather a worldwide influence.

The influences on the band are western yet tribal, there is a hint of some very Middle Eastern rhythms yet this is offset by the distinctly Asian influence, and there are also definite Latin grooves as well. The sound live can only be described as a musical Aurora Borealis as the band constantly shifts its style yet maintains an earthy feel. Kalmia Traver, the lead vocalist and saxist for the band, described the sound as being a result of "globalization for music that has opened so many doors."

The band played quite a few songs from their newest album, "Rubblebucket," including "Bikes," which had a remarkable piece of skat from Traver that set the crowd cheering.

"November," another song from "Rubblebucket," was a crowd favorite with an amazing guitar verse and whistling and bird calls from Alex Toth, the trumpeter, and Adam Dotson, the trombonist.

Almost every song contained a solo at some point. Toth delivered powerful notes from his trumpet, Dotson delivered vibrant trombone tones. Guitarist Ian Hersey and bassist Russ Flynn also shredded for a bit during the concert. Every solo contained so much emotion from each member and everything came from the soul.

One of the major highlights of the night was a particularly powerful solo from Toth that he described as "transcending." The solo left Toth short of breath but he quickly recovered and continued playing.

But the best part of the concert was the debut of one brand new song, on top of a few others, "Came Out of a Lady," a birthday song of sorts. With a relatively simple yet catchy bass line and an incredibly fun horn line, the song caught everyone up in the fun, including J. Witbeck, who pulled out his tuba to join the band onstage as a special guest artist for the song, mimicking the bass beat.

Soon enough the Iron Horse was cheering on the whole band, who then proceeded to leave the stage and enter the crowd, horns and all, wandering around while still playing until they decided to get back on stage and end the song, and the show.

Traver, co-leader of the band alongside Toth, describes Rubblebucket as "the biggest project of my life," and Toth said, when asked about how far the band has come so far, "so much is coming together musically and fan base wise for us."

When asked about playing on stage, David Cole, the drummer, described it as "staying relaxed and calm in a very exciting situation" and advised any current musicians to "always keep improving."

It was sad to see the band leave the stage at 1 a.m., after an hour and a half long setlist but one thing is for certain: they will be back again soon.

Rubblebucket is definitely a band to keep your eyes and ears on. This is going to go somewhere. This is big.

Tappan Parker can be reached at rtparker@student.umass.edu

Don't make your girlfriend mad at you... WRITE FOR ARTS!

EMAIL arts@dailycollegian.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

Have an event coming up? Need to spread the word?

S.O. Ads for $6.70 per column inch

On-Campus Local Business Ads for $1[illegible] per week

You could see your ad here!

Best way to get to the campus community!

ON-CAMPUS ORGANIZATIONS & RSO'S CONTACT PAMELA:
thecollegian@gmail.com
413.545.3500
or stop by our office in the Campus Center basement

02/16 to 03/01 NOMINATIONS FOR PRESIDENT, TRUSTEE, AREA GOVERNMENT 02/16 to 03/01

Pick up @ 420 Student Union, SGA Office
The Elections Commission
electionscommission@stuaf.umass.edu
http://blogs.umass.edu/ecsga/

Off The Wall Games
WARHAMMER 40,000
MAGIC the Gathering
Discount role-playing games, Collectible card games (CCGs), Miniature war games and board games, fun for everyone!
Hours: 10-10 Wednesday-Sunday, 12-10 Monday, Closed Tuesdays - [illegible]

3's and boards fueling UMass

Minutewomen leading league with 160 3-pointers converted

BY STEVE LEVINE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A strong piece of the Massachusetts women's basketball team's game was nowhere to be found on Saturday, when it lost to Dayton, 74-60.

The Minutewomen (9-16, 3-7 Atlantic 10) average 1.5 more rebounds per game than their opponent this season, but were considerably outrebounded by the Flyers (20-5, 8-2 A-10) on Saturday. Dayton totaled 40 rebounds, with 17 coming on the offensive end.

"I think that these guys are very strong," UMass coach Marnie Dacko said. "They're one of the toughest rebounding teams in the conference averaging 15 offensive boards a game. We knew that coming in [to the game]."

The Flyers (15.2) rank second in the conference in both offensive rebounds with as well as in rebounding margin, where they have average of 7.2 rebounds per game more than their opponents.

Dayton's tenacity in the paint was more than UMass could handle.

"[Rebounding] is something that [Dayton] has made a concentrated effort on and that's something we also have to commit to and learn from," Dacko said. "We have the ability [to do the same], I think it's just a mental practice of going in and doing it every day."

The youth and relative inexperience UMass contains in the frontcourt could explain its struggles on Saturday. The top three rebounders on the team are sophomores Kristina Danella and Nicole Jones, as well as freshman Jasmine Watson. Combined, the trio managed two offensive boards for the game.

3-POINTERS NOT ESSENTIAL

UMass leads the A-10 with 160 3-pointers made on the season. Leading the way from beyond the arc is Danella and redshirt junior guard Megan Zullo, who account for 99 of them.

On Saturday, the Minutewomen were accurate from 3-point range, converting on 9-of-21 attempts. However, Dacko believes that anything converted from 3-point land can be considered a bonus.

"Our offense is really designed to get one on one in the post," she said. "[Nicole Jones], Danella and [Jasmine Watson] they have to get it inside and take it to people."

GETTING TO THE LINE

Another strength UMass possesses is its free throw shooting. As a team, the Minutewomen shoot 75 percent from the line, which is second-best in the conference.

Although UMass converted on 7-of-8 attempts (87.5 percent), the limited appearances at the line did not make enough of a difference in the final outcome. Dacko believes that it is imperative that her team gets to the line more frequently.

"If you're reluctant shooting [in the post], then you're not going to get to the foul line," Dacko said. "But if you get the ball and you're aggressive with it, then you're going to get to the line. We have to go at it, grind it out, get to the line and make teams pay."

Dayton made UMass pay from the charity stripe, who converted on 15 of its 19 free throw attempts.

Overall, Dacko was pleased with her team's performance against one of the best teams in the A-10.

"If we [always] play with this effort," she said. "Seven games would be in the win column rather than the loss column."

Steve Levine can be reached at slevine@student.umass.edu.

Harris leading UM to wins

REBOUNDING from page 8

guard Ricky Harris has had his most impressive stretch of his career. While averaging 29.4 points per game in the stretch, he is also averaging 27.4 points per game in his last five games, scoring at least 25 in four of them while averaging 50 percent shooting from the floor.

The Minutemen have won two of their last three games, and are 3-3 in their last six contests. Harris is now second in the conference in scoring behind Xavier's Jordan Crawford with 19.5 points per game, while Crawford's average sits at 19.6. Harris has scored 469 points in 24 games this season, while Crawford has scored 470.

Against the Dukes, Harris had 29 points and six assists, and was named the A-10 Player of the Week. He followed that performance up with a 27-point effort against the Hawks, including two assists and two steals.

Harris is now the fourth on the career-scoring list in UMass history with 1,816 career points.

Against the Colonials last season, Harris led all scorers with 19 points, shooting 5-of-8 from 3-point range. The last time both teams met at the Smith Center, Harris had 20 points and hit five shots from beyond the arc in the win.

CAMBY TRADED

Former UMass player Marcus Camby was traded Tuesday from the Los Angeles Clippers to the Portland Trail Blazers for guard Steve Blake and forward Travis Outlaw. Camby, a member of the 1996 Final Four team and one of the best players in school history, is second all-time in blocked shots (336).

Camby won the 2006-2007 Defensive Player of the Year Award, leading the NBA in blocked shots per game.

This season, Camby is averaging 7.7 points per game and 12.1 rebounds per game, which is second in the league behind Dwight Howard.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu

JEFF BERNSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

Along with senior Ricky Harris, freshman Freddie Riley has led UMass in outside shooting this season, making 33.8 percent of his shots.

Minutemen take on George Washington

MINUTEMEN from page 8

ing as many as three freshmen at a time, senior Ricky Harris believes that the team is starting to come together and that is mainly because the younger players understand their roles.

"When you're out there as a freshman coming into college, everyone wants to come in and be Michael Beasley and Kevin Durant and it's been kind of hard for those guys, but now everyone's starting to understand their roles," Harris said of the freshmen's improved play following Sunday's win against the Hawks.

Recently, Terrell Vinson, Freddie Riley and Javorn Farrell have all embraced different roles on the team, and are starting to play on a more consistent basis.

Vinson is starting to become a more consistent rebounder, averaging 5.5 rebounds per game. Riley, who from the first day hasn't been shy about his confidence in his 3-point shot, is now the team's second-best shooter from beyond the arc (33.8 percent).

Farrell has been equally as important on defense, filling in for sophomore David Gibbs, who went down on Feb. 2 with a broken foot. His contributions as of late have helped the Minutemen put together some long runs defensively that allow the offense to get more scoring opportunities.

The most recent example was the 11-minute stand UMass had against SJU that allowed the offense to go on a 16-0 run. Tonight, coach Derek Kellogg is going to need his freshmen to continue that momentum against a team that gives even the league's toughest opponents a hard test.

Adam Miller can be reached at amiller@dailycollegian.com.

Men's and women's teams prepare for Atlantic 10 Championships in Buffalo

BY JEFFREY ENGMANN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Just two days after an emotional victory over Fordham on Senior Day, the Massachusetts men's swimming team's coach Russ Yarworth had the 2010 Atlantic 10 Championships in mind.

Yarworth has won several awards over the years, and the program has won a total of 11 A-10 Titles since they have joined the league. Nevertheless, he still had in mind how special it would be for seniors Michael Berthaume, Justin Brooks, Juan Moliere, Tim Smith and Andrew Willbrant to bring another title back to UMass.

"Their going to be a class that has a chance to go 4-for-4 in Atlantic 10 Championships and there's not a lot of classes that can do that," Yarworth said.

This weekend, the Minutemen and Minutewomen will head to Buffallo, N.Y. to compete in the 2010 A-10 Swimming and Diving Conference Championships.

The championships will take place in the Flicklinger Aquatic Center, and will be held from Feb. 17-20. In 2009, the Minutemen were able to capture their eighth conference title in nine years, while the Minutewomen also had a very strong showing as they finished in fourth place.

Several Minutemen will look to replicate their dominant performances of the past couple seasons, including Brooks, who will be going after his fourth-straight gold medal in the 1,650-yard freestyle event. Willbrant has won three years in a row in the 100-meter backstroke, and this weekend he will try to make it 4-for-4.

Moliere hopes to win his third straight in the 50-yard freestyle. Last season, he was able to capture first place with an impressive time of 45.33 seconds. Sophomore Jason Cook will look to capture his second-straight gold in the one- and three-meter diving events.

The Minutemen have been strong all season, as they hold a record of 6-2 in dual meets. The Minutewomen have also improved throughout the course of the season and hold a record of 4-4 in dual meets.

All year, however, Yarworth and Minutewomen coach Bob Newcomb have stressed that the meets are not to be judged by wins and losses, but instead are to help their teams prepare for the A-10 Championships.

Several teams will be looking to knock off the Minutemen. In last years meet, Mariusz Michalik of St. Bonaventure won his third-consecutive gold in the 200-yard breaststroke. Now, as a senior, he will look to win his forth-straight and help defeat the Minutemen.

Duquesne was picked to finish third in the conference earlier this season and will look to remain competitive this week. The Dukes are led by inspirational senior swimmer Chris Kobela, who will be competing in his first A-10 Championship since 2007, after he was diagnosed with Leukemia.

The Minutewomen are led by senior Elizabeth Walsh, who captured her first UMass Athlete of the Week award earlier this season. Walsh was a big part of the team's success in the championships last season and will have a prominent role in this year's meet.

This weekend, the Minutewomen will also rely on several underclassmen as they have done all season. Freshman Amina Meho will look to make her mark in several events, including the 50-yard freestyle in which she already holds the UMass school record.

The Richmond women's swimming and diving teams will be looking to capture an unprecedented ninth consecutive A-10 title in Buffalo. The team is led by senior Katie Sieben, who in last year's championship won a total of five events, including capturing first place in the 100-yard butterfly. In 2008, Sieben earned a spot in the Olympic trials in the event.

This season, Richmond has not been as dominant as it has been in years past, holding a 5-3 record overall in dual meets. The team picked to win the A-10 by the coaches prior to the season was Fordham, which was the runner up in last year's race.

Led by 2008-2009 A-10 coach of the year, Steve Potsklan, the Rams have gone 12-0 in dual meets and have done so by receiving significant contributions from a number of underclassmen. Freshman Brienne Ryan was awarded her sixth A-10 Rookie of the Week award just two Saturday's ago. Coincidentally, the unprecedented sixth award is the most ever by an A-10 swimmer. The previous mark was five and was set by UMass' Cristen Dexter in 2001.

Ryan has been consistent all season and excels in several events, especially the 50-yard freestyle and the 100-yard backstroke. As a freshman, Courtney Collyer was named a First Team All-Atlantic 10 swimmer, and has continued her strong swimming this season.

The championships begin Feb. 17 at 4:30 p.m.

Jeffrey Engmann can be reached at jengmann@student.umass.edu.

Mix up your morning & take a breakfast break on us today!

UMass Amherst students, staff, faculty, alumni, and friends are welcome!

Morning Mixer in Memorial Hall
8:30 - 10:30 a.m.
Rescheduled from last week

Start your day off right with complimentary bagels, fruit, coffee and assorted juices.
Today's flavored coffee:
Chocolate Macadamia Nut
Receive a FREE 5-minute chair massage.
And...
